The right of removal under the Judicial Code, § 31, formerly R. S. § 641, is authorized only upon petition setting forth infractions of the fourteenth amendment to the constitution previous to the trial and final hearing of the cause, and has no applicability to those occurring after the trial or final hearing has commenced. This section was drawn only with reference to state action, and has no reference to individual violations of rights; Virginia v. Rives, 100 U. S. 313, 25 L. Ed. 667. The right of removal under R. S. § 641, exists only in the special cases mentioned in it, and in the absence of the denial or inability to enforce in the judicial tribunals of the state the equal civil rights of citizens, does not embrace cases in which a right is denied by judicial action during trial, or in the sentence or mode of its execution; Gibson v. Mississippi, 162 U. S. 565, 16 Sup. Ct. 904, 40 L. Ed. 1075, where it was held, following Neal v. Delaware, 103 U. S. 370, 26 L. Ed. 567, that a removal was not authorized by the exclusion of negroes because of their race from service on grand juries.

A suit cannot be removed on the ground of prejudice or local influence, unless all the opposing parties are citizens of the state in which suit was brought, which state must also be other than that of which the petitioners are citizens; Cambria Iron Co. v. Ashburn, 118 U. S. 54, 6 Sup. Ct. 929, 30 L. Ed. 60; or under the act of 1887, where there is no separable controversy, and in such case the petition and affidavit must show facts, not mere conclusions; P. Schwenk & Co. v. Strang, 59 Fed. 209, 8 C. C. A. 92, 19 U. S. App. 300. Whether the controversy is separable will be determined from the allegations of the bill; Graves v. Corbin, 132 U. S. 571, 10 Sup. Ct. 196, 33 L. Ed. 462; and such case may be removed by the defendant having the separable controversy; Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Martin, 178 U. S. 245, 20 Sup. Ct. 854, 44 L. Ed. 1055. But one of several tortfeasors cannot remove on the ground of a separable controversy; Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Dixon, 179 U. S. 131, 21 Sup. Ct. 67, 45 L. Ed. 121.

If the petition is filed by the final hearing it is in time; Schraeder Mfn. Co. v. Packer, 129 U. S. 688, 9 Sup. Ct. 385, 32 L. Ed. 760. The motion cannot be made ex parte; Schwenk & Co. v. Strang, 59 Fed. 209, 8 C. C. A. 92; Lawson v. R. Co., 112 N. C. 396, 17 S. E. 169. The application is too late after a third trial in the state court; Fisk v. Henarie, 142 U. S. 459, 12 Sup. Ct. 207, 35 L. Ed. 1080; it may be at any time before the first trial; In re Cilley, 58 Fed. 980; Detroit v. Ry. Co., 54 Fed. 7. The matter in dispute in a case removed for prejudice, etc., must exceed the jurisdictional amount; In re Pennsylvania Co., 137 U. S. 451, 11 Sup. Ct. 141, 34 L. Ed. 738; Tod v. Ry. Co., 65 Fed. 145, 12 C. C. A. 521, 22 U. S. App. 707; Bierbower v. Miller, 30 Neb. 161; though it was at first a matter of some controversy whether the jurisdictional limit of amount applied to these cases, and there were decisions that it did not; Fales v. Ry. Co., 32 Fed. 673; McDermott v. Ry. Co., 38 Fed. 529, 3 L. R. A. 455; Frishman v. Ins. Co., 41 Fed. 449. In such case the defendant should obtain an order from the federal court for the removal, file that order in the state court, and take from it a transcript which should be filed in the federal court; Pennsylvania Co. v. Bender, 148 U. S. 255, 13 Sup. Ct. 591, 37 L. Ed. 441. All issues of fact upon petition for removal for prejudice or local influence must be tried in the circuit court; Burlington, C. R. & N. Ry. Co. v. Dunn, 122 U. S. 513, 7 Sup. Ct. 1262, 30 L. Ed. 1159.

In cases under R. S. § 643, the jurisdiction of the state court is taken away only after the petition for removal is filed in the circuit court and a writ of certiorari or of habeas corpus cum causa issued and served; Virginia v. Paul, 148 U. S. 107, 13 Sup. Ct. 536, 37 L. Ed. 386.

The jurisdiction of the federal court must rest on that of the state court from which it was removed; Zikos v. R. & Nav. Co., 179 Fed. 893; and hence by removal the federal court cannot acquire jurisdiction of a cause of which the state court was without it; R. J. Darnell, Inc. v. R. Co., 190 Fed. 656; as where the action was to enforce rights under the interstate commerce acts, the state court, being without jurisdiction of the subject matter, the federal court could not acquire it by removal; Auracher v. R. Co., 102 Fed. 1; Sheldon v. R. Co., 105 Fed. 785; that the state law requires questions of law and fact involved to be brought into a state court by appeal instead of by process does not affect the right of removal; Terre Haute v. R. Co., 106 Fed. 545.

To be removable the cause must be one of which the federal court might have exercised original jurisdiction; Ex parte Wisner, 203 U. S. 449, 457, 27 Sup. Ct. 150, 51 L. Ed. 264; In re Winn, 213 U. S. 458, 29 Sup. Ct. 515, 53 L. Ed. 873; Canary Oil Co. v. Asphalt & Rubber Co., 182 Fed. 663; Anderson v. Sharp, 189 Fed. 247; Younts v. Tel. & Tel. Co., 192 Fed. 200; Waterman v. Ry. Co., 199 Fed. 667; but though the action was not originally cognizable in the federal courts, controversies therein may arise between the parties which would present grounds for removal; West Virginia v. King, 112 Fed. 369.

Proceedings in a probate court to determine whether the property of a deceased person is separate or community property, cannot be removed to a federal court, though the opposing parties are citizens of different states. The federal courts have no jurisdiction of proceedings for the administration of decedent's estates, either original or by removal; Clark v. Guy, 114 Fed. 783; and see EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS; and they will not interfere with the custody of the estate of a deceased person by the state probate court in which proceedings are pending for administration; In re Foley, 80 Fed. 949. But a suit for a claim against the estate of a decedent is within its jurisdiction; Amer. Baptist Home Miss. Soc. v. Stewart, 192 Fed. 976, and is removable although the claim was originally filed in the probate court; Schneider v. Eldredge, 125 Fed. 638. A suit before a justice of the peace who, under the state constitution, is clothed with judicial powers, is removable if the other elements of jurisdiction concur; Katz v. Mfg. Co., 150 Fed. 684.

A proceeding by mandamus to compel the register of the transfer of stock may be removed; Washington Imp. Co. v. Ry. Co., Fed. Cas. No. 17,242; but not one on a plea which raises the issue of title to an office; State v. Johnson, 29 La. Ann. 399; nor an action in the nature of quo warranto to determine the title to office of presidential electors; State v. Bowen, 8 S. C. 382. Suits by attachment may be removed; Barney v. Bank, 5 Blatchf. 107, Fed. Cas. No. 1,031; ejectment suits; Ex parte Turner, 3 Wall. Jr. 258, Fed. Cas. No. 14,245; a bill in equity to reform an insurance policy; Charter Oak Fire Ins. Co. v. Ins. Co., 6 Blatchf. 208, Fed.

Cas. No. 2,623; a suit to annul a will; Gaines v. Fuentes, 92 U. S. 10, 23 L. Ed. 524; a railway foreclosure suit; Scott v. R. Co., 6 Biss. 529, Fed. Cas. No. 12,527; a condemnation proceeding; Searl v. School Dist. No. 2, 124 U. S. 197, 8 Sup. Ct. 460, 31 L. Ed. 415; a suit against a marshal for trespass for goods taken on attachment; Bock v. Perkins, 139 U. S. 628, 11 Sup. Ct. 677, 35 L. Ed. 314; where the controversy involved the authority of the land department to grant a patent; Mitchell v. Smale, 140 U. S. 406, 11 Sup. Ct. 819, 840, 35 L. Ed. 442; a proceeding to seize and sell a vessel under a mortgage; W. G. Coyle & Co. v. Stern, 193 Fed. 582, 113 C. C. A. 450; a proceeding to condemn a right of way for a railroad; South Dakota Cent. R. Co. v. R. Co., 141 Fed. 578, 73 C. C. A. 176; a suit to compel an executor to assent to a legacy; Camp v. Field, 189 Fed. 285; an appeal to the state court from the decision of the state engineer by one desiring to appropriate water from a stream; Waha-Lewiston Land & Water Co. v. Irr. Co., 158 Fed. 137; a similar appeal from the award of commissioners to award damages for opening streets; Terre Haute v. R. Co., 106 Fed. 545; or a proceeding in a state court to assess such damages; Kirby v. R. Co., 106 Fed. 551; or to condemn private property for a public use; Fishblatt v. Atlantic City, 174 Fed. 196; of a municipality; Kansas City v. Hennegan, 152 Fed. 249; or of a corporation; Helena Power Transmission Co. v. Spratt, 146 Fed. 310; to recover a statutory penalty against a telephone company; Gruetter v. Tel. & Tel. Co., 181 Fed. 248; proceeding in garnishment after judgment; Baker v. Mill Co., 149 Fed. 612. But a proceeding in condemnation is not removable until by appeal to a court it has become a "suit"; Kaw Valley Drainage Dist. of Wyandotte County v. Water Co., 186 Fed. 315, 108 C. C. A. 393; but when exceptions to an award of benefits are filed in the county court which has judicial powers, it is a suit and removable; Drainage Dist. No. 19, Caldwell Co., Mo. v. R. Co., 198 Fed. 253.

Actions against national banks or receivers thereof are removable; Guarantee Co. of North Dakota v. Hanway, 104 Fed. 369, 44 C. C. A. 312; as also suits against or for the acts of United States officers; Woods v. Root, 123 Fed. 402, 59 C. C. A. 206; Bryant Bros. Co. v. Robinson, 149 Fed. 321, 79 C. C. A. 259; but to render such case removable the cause of action must have some connection with official duties; People's U. S. Bank v. Goodwin, 162 Fed. 937; and the mere fact that defendant is a United States officer and claims to have been acting under an act of congress is not alone sufficient; Stanfield v. Water Users' Ass'n, 192 Fed. 596; but a criminal prosecution for an assault committed in repelling an attack upon a possessor is removable under section 33 Judicial Code; Com. of Virginia v. De Hart, 119 Fed. 626.

A suit in equity which appears on the face of the bill to have the effect of obstructing or defeating the enforcement of a judgment of a federal court is removable as involving a federal question; Cornue v. Ingersoll, 176 Fed. 194, 99 C. C. A. 548. But when a proposition, claimed to raise a federal question, has been definitely decided by the supreme court, it ceases to be such within the removal act; Arkansas v. R. Co., 134 Fed. 106. It must appear from the pleadings that the case is one which involves a federal question, where its removal is sought upon that ground; Minnesota v. Securities Co., 194 U. S. 48, 24 Sup. Ct. 598, 48 L. Ed. 870. See FEDERAL QUESTION. A suit to recover a penalty for a violation of the rules of a state railroad commission, being of a criminal nature, is not removable; Arkansas v. R. Co., 173 Fed. 572; nor an action of mandamus, though under a statute damages may be recovered; Mystic Milling Co. v. Ry. Co., 132 Fed. 289; Kelly v. Grand Circle, Women of Woodcraft, 129 Fed. 830; nor a proceeding before a state board of control to determine water rights; In re Silvies River, 199 Fed. 495. An action of tort against several defendants for a conspiracy cannot be removed by a part of them; Ex parte Andrews, 40 Ala. 639.

A foreign attachment on which a suit in equity is brought to establish the claim and enforce the lien is removable on the ground of diversity of citizenship where the requisite facts appear; Craddock v. Fulton, 140 Fed. 426.

A motion under a state statute as to corporations, for executions against a stockholder, cannot be removed; Webber v. Humphreys, 5 Dill. 223, Fed. Cas. No. 17,326. Nor can an appeal under a state law from assessment of taxes; Upshur Co. v. Rich, 135 U. S. 467, 10 Sup. Ct. 651, 34 L. Ed. 196; or a writ of habeas corpus (under act of 1875); Kurtz v. Moffitt, 115 U. S. 487, 6 Sup. Ct. 148, 29 L. Ed. 458.

Where the suit is in its nature an equitable proceeding, it must proceed as such in the federal court, and in accordance with the rules governing equity cases in such court without regard to the system in the state court; Neves v. Scott, 13 How. (U. S.) 268, 14 L. Ed. 140; Green v. Custard, 23 How. (U. S.) 484, 16 L. Ed. 471. Where the suit unites legal and equitable questions of relief or defence, a repleader is necessary after removal; Sands v. Smith, 1 Dill. 290, Fed. Cas. No. 12,305; Partridge v. Ins. Co., 15 Wall. (U. S.) 573, 21 L. Ed. 229. The circuit court may issue a certiorari to bring in the record from the state courts. This was provided by the act of 1875 (18 Stat. L. 470) and not repealed by the act of 1887; but a certiorari is not an essential part of the proceeding and need only be resorted to if necessary to procure the record; Scott v. R. Co., 6 Biss. 529, Fed. Cas. No. 12,527. The circuit court may enjoin further proceedings in the state court: Aheel v. Culberson, 56 Fed. 329; French v. Hay, 22 Wall. (U. S.) 250 note, 22 L. Ed. 857, where it was held that the prohibition against injunctions by federal courts touching proceedings in the state courts has no application to such cases.

See Dillon, Removal of Causes (Black's ed.); UNITED STATES COURTS.

REMOVE. To move away from the position occupied; to displace. South v. Com'rs of Sinking Fund, 86 Ky. 190, 5 S. W. 567. To change place in any manner; to go from one place to another. First Soc. of Waterbury v. Platt, 12 Conn. 186.

REMOVER. In Practice. A transfer of a suit or cause out of one court into another, which is effected by writ of error, certiorari, and the like. 11 Co. 41.

REMUNERATION. Reward; recompense; salary. Dig. 17. 1. 7. See 1 Q. B. Div. 663.

RENDER. To yield; to return; to give again: it is the reverse of prender. See Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Hesser, 77 Ia. 387, 42 N. W. 325, 4 L. R. A. 122, 14 Am. St. Rep. 297.

A judgment is "rendered" when the court makes an order therefor; State v. Biesman, 12 Mont. 11, 29 Pac. 534.

RENDEZVOUS. A place appointed for meeting. Especially used of places appointed for the meeting of ships and their convoy, and for the meeting of soldiers.

RENDITION. See FUGITIVE FROM JUSTICE; EXTRADITION.

RENEW. To make again; as, to renew a treaty or a covenant. Daggett v. Daggett, 124 Mass. 151.

RENOUNCE. To give up a right; for example, an executor may renounce the right of administering the estate of the testator; a widow, the right to administer to her intestate husband's estate.

RENOUNCING PROBATE. Giving up the right to be executor of a will, wherein he has been appointed to that office, by refusing to take out probate of such will. 1 Will. Exec. 230, 231. It is usually done by writing filed in the probate office.

RENOVANT. Renewing. Cowell.

RENT (Lat. reditus, a return). A return or compensation for the possession of some corporeal inheritance. A certain profit, either in money, provisions, or labor, issuing out of lands and tenements, in return for their use.

The compensation, either in money, provisions, chattels, or labor, received by the owner of the soil from the occupant thereof. Jacks. & Gross, Landl. & T. § 38; Woodf. Landl. & T. 375.

It has been held that a rent may issue out of lands and tenements corporeal, and also, out of them and their furniture, in this case a dairy farm with its stock and utensils; Appeal of Vetter, 99 Pa. 52. See, as to furnished lodgings, 5 B. & P. 224; 5 Co. 16 b.

Some of its common-law properties are that it must be a profit to the proprietor, certain in its character, or capable of being reduced to a certainty, issuing yearly, that is, periodically, out of the thing granted, and not be part of the land or thing itself; Co. Litt. 47; 2 Bla. Com. 41.

At common law there were three species of rent: rent service, where the tenant held his land by fealty, homage, or other corporal service and a certain rent to which the right of distress was necessarily incident; 3 Kent *461; Keneg v. Elliot, 9 Watts (Pa.) 258; rent charge, which was a reservation of rent, with a clause authorizing its collection by distress; and rent seek, where there was no such clause, but the rent could only be collected by an ordinary action at law as by a writ of annuity or writ of assize. These distinctions, however, for all practical purposes, have become obsolete, in consequence of various statutes both in England and in this country, allowing every kind of rent to be distrained for without distinction. See Tayl. Landl. & T. § 370; FEUDAL LAW.

The payment of rent is incident to every tenancy where the relation of landlord and tenant subsists, except as to mere tenancies at will or by sufferance, where this relation cannot be said to exist. And no tenant can resist a demand for rent unless he shows that he has been evicted or become otherwise entitled to quit the premises, and has actually done so, before the rent in question became due. By the strictness of the common law, when a tenant has once made an agreement to pay rent, nothing will excuse him from continuing to pay, although the premises should be reduced to a ruinous condition by some unavoidable accident of fire, flood, or tempest; Fowler v. Bott, 6 Mass. 63; Bussman v. Ganster, 72 Pa. 285; Cowell v. Lumley, 39 Cal. 151, 2 Am. Rep. 430; Hallett v. Wylie, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 41, 3 Am. Dec. 457; Cook v. Anderson, 85 Ala. 99, 4 South. 713; Nonotuck Silk Co. v. Shay, 37 Ill. App. 542.

But this severity of the ancient law has been somewhat abated in this country, and in this respect conforms to the more reasonable provisions of the Code Napoléon, art. 1722, which declares that if the thing hired is destroyed by fortuitous events, during the continuance of the lease, the contract of hiring is rescinded, but if it be only destroyed in part, the lessee may, according to circumstances, demand either a diminution of the rent or a rescission of the contract itself. The same provision is to be found substantially in the Code of Louisiana, art. 2667, and in the act of the legislature of New York of 1860, c. 345, § 1. A somewhat similar provision is found in the laws of Minnesota; Laws 1883, c. 100; Roach v. Peterson, 47 Minn. 291, 50 N. W. 80. In South Carolina and Pennsylvania it was decided that a tenant who had been dispossessed by a public enemy ought not to pay rent for the time the possession was withheld from him; and in Maryland it has been held that where a hurricane rendered a house untenable it was a good defence to an action for rent. But these cases are evidently exceptions to the general rule of law above stated; Bayly v. Lawrence, 1 Bay (S. C.) 499; Fairman v. Fluck, 5 Watts (Pa.) 517. A tenant is not compelled to keep and pay rent for a house which, from defects in its construction, becomes untenable and unfit for habitation; Leonard v. Armstrong, 73 Mich. 577, 41 N. W. 695. Where land has been swept away or gained upon by the sea, the lessee is no longer liable for rent; Bac. Abr. 63; Rolle, Abr. 236.

The right of the lessor to terminate a lease for non-payment of rent will not give the lessee any right to avoid the lease or his liability for agreed rent; Lehigh Zinc & Iron Co. v. Bamford, 150 U. S. 665, 14 Sup. Ct. 219, 37 L. Ed. 1215.

The quiet enjoyment of the premises, unmolested by the landlord, is an implied condition to the payment of rent. If, therefore, he ousts the tenant from any considerable portion of the premises, or erects a nuisance of any description upon or so near to them as to oblige the tenant to remove, or if the possession of the land should be recovered by a third person, by a title superior to that of the landlord, the dispossession in either case amounts to an eviction, and discharges the obligation to pay rent; Gilhooley v. Washington, 4 N. Y. 217; 1 M. & W. 747; Hoeveler v. Fleming, 91 Pa. 322; Royce v. Guggenheim, 106 Mass. 201, 8 Am. Rep. 322; Scott v. Simons, 54 N. H. 426; O'Neill v. Manget, 44 Mo. App. 279; Richmond v. Cake, 1 App. D. C. 447. By retaining possession of premises in spite of such acts of his landlord as would otherwise amount to an eviction, a tenant waives his right to withhold the rent; De Witt v. Pierson, 112 Mass. 8, 17 Am. Rep. 58. The entry of a landlord upon demised premises for the purpose of rebuilding does not operate as an eviction, where it was with the tenant's assent, and not to his entire exclusion; Heller v. Ins. Co., 151 Pa. 101, 25 Atl. 83.

A tenant's liability for rent is not affected by condemnation of part of the leased premises; Corrigan v. Chicago, 144 Ill. 537, 33 N.

E. 746, 21 L. R. A. 212; but where the estate of both landlord and tenant in the entire premises is extinguished by condemnation, the obligation to pay rent ceases; Corrigan v. Chicago, 144 Ill. 537, 33 N. E. 746, 21 L. R. A. 212.

As rent issues out of the land, it is said to be incident to the reversion, and the right to demand it necessarily attaches itself to the ownership, and follows a transfer of the premises, and the several parts thereof, without the consent of the occupant. Every occupant is chargeable with rent by virtue of his occupation, whether he be the tenant or an assignee of the tenant. The original tenant cannot avoid his liability by transferring his lease to another, but his assignee is only liable so long as he remains in possession, and may discharge himself by the simple act of assigning over to some one else; Walton v. Cronly's Adm'r, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 63; Farmers' Bank v. Assur. Soc., 4 Leigh (Va.) 69; Streaper v. Fisher, 1 Rawle (Pa.) 155, 18 Am. Dec. 604; 11 Ad. & E. 403; Co. Litt. 46 b. When rent will be apportioned, see APPORTIONMENT; LANDLORD AND TENANT.

The day of payment depends, in the first instance, upon the contract; if this is silent in that respect, rent is payable quarterly or half-yearly, according to the custom of the country; but if there be no usage governing the case, it is not due until the end of the term. Formerly it was payable before sunset of the day whereon it was to be paid, on the reasonable ground that sufficient light should remain to enable the parties to count the money; but now it is not considered due until midnight or the last minute of the natural day on which it is made payable; Paul's Ex'rs v. Paul, 36 Pa. 272. This rule, however, may be varied by the custom of different places; Co. Litt. 202 a; Smith v. Shepard, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 147, 25 Am. Dec. 432. Under a lease requiring rent to be paid annually on a certain day for a year in advance, a tenant continuing in possession three months after that day is liable for the year's rent; Congregational Soc. v. Rix (Vt.) 17 Atl. 719. See FORFEITURE; RE-ENTRY; PAYMENT.

Interest accrues on rent from the time it is due, but cannot be included in a distress; Gaskins v. Gaskins, 17 S. & R. (Pa.) 390.

When rent is payable in money, it must strictly be paid in legal-tender money; with respect to foreign coin, the lessor may decline to receive it except by its true weight and value. Bank-notes constitute part of the currency of the country, and ordinarily pass as money, and are a good tender, unless specially objected to by the creditor at the time of the offer; Bank of U. S. v. Bank, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 347, 6 L. Ed. 334. Payment may be made in commodities, when so reserved. If the contract specifies a place of payment, a tender of rent, whether in money or in kind, must be made at that place; but, if no place is specified, a tender of either on the land will be sufficient to prevent a forfeiture; 16 Term 222; Livingston v. Miller, 11 N. Y. 80.

Under an income-tax statute, rent is to be treated as identical with land; Pollock v. Trust Co., 158 U. S. 601, 15 Sup. Ct. 912, 39 L. Ed. 1108. An assignment of rent must be in writing under the statute of frauds; King v. Kaiser, 3 Misc. Rep. 523, 23 N. Y. Supp. 21.

See DISTRESS; RE-ENTRY; GROUND-RENT; REPLEVIN; PAYMENT.

RENT CHARGE. A rent reserved with a power of enforcing its payment by distress. See RENT.

RENT ROLL. A list of rents payable to a particular person or public body. See RENT.

RENT SECK. A rent collectable only by action at law in case of non-payment. See RENT.

RENTE. In French Law. A word nearly synonymous with our word annuity. Rentes: Public funds.

RENTE FONCIÈRE. In French Law. A rent which issues out of land; and it is of its essence that it be perpetual, for if it be made but for a limited time it is a lease. It may, however, be extinguished. La. Civ. Code, art. 2750, 2759; Pothier. See GROUND-RENT.

RENTE VIAGÈRE. In French Law. An annuity. La. Civ. Code, art. 2764; Pothier, Rente, n. 215.

RENTS, ISSUES, AND PROFITS. The profits arising from property generally. This phrase in the Vermont statute has been held not to cover "yearly profits." Bruce v. Thompson, 26 Vt. 741.

RENTS OF ASSIZE. The certain and determined rents of the freeholders and ancient copyholders of manors. Brown.

RENUNCIATION. The act of giving up a right.

It is a rule of law that any one may renounce a right which the law has established in his favor. To this maxim there are many limitations. A party may always renounce an acquired right; as, for example, to take lands by descent; but one cannot always give up a future right before it has accrued, nor the benefit conferred by law, although such advantage may be introduced only for the benefit of individuals. The right to administer upon an intestate estate may be renounced.

For example, the power of making a will, the right of annulling a future contract on the ground of fraud, and the right of pleading the act of limitations cannot be renounced. The first, because the party must be left free to make a will or not; and the latter two, because the right has not yet accrued.

This term is usually employed to signify the abdication or giving up of one's country at the time of choosing another. The act of congress requires from a foreigner who applies to become naturalized a renunciation of all allegiance and fidelity to any foreign prince, potentate, state, or sovereignty whereof such alien may at the time be a citizen or subject. See CITIZEN; EXPATRIATION; NATURALIZATION.

RENOI. The act of a state in summarily reconducting foreign vagabonds, criminals, etc., to the frontiers of their own state. The act is justified by the fundamental right of a state to protect itself against undesirable immigrants from other countries. Chae Chan Ping v. U. S., 130 U. S. 581, 9 Sup. Ct. 623, 32 L. Ed. 1068. It differs from deportation or expulsion in that the latter consists of an order to leave subject to penalties, whereas renvoi is a forcible conducting of individuals out of the country. 1 Opp. § 326.

While a state has, by virtue of its independence and territorial sovereignty, a right to exclude aliens and to conduct them out of the country when they are found upon its soil, the right must not be exercised arbitrarily and without grounds, in such a way as to constitute a discrimination against the citizens of a particular nation apart from any moral or physical disqualifications on their part. Bouvé, Exclusion and Expulsion of Aliens in the United States, 3-21.

See DEPORTATION.

REOPENING A CASE. A court of equity, in the exercise of a sound discretion, has full power to reopen a case, and allow the correction of mistakes in testimony. To reopen a case is to permit the introduction of new evidence and, practically, try it anew; to rehear a case is to hear it again upon the same proofs and allegations. Such applications are not favored, however, and, when granted, must be based upon strong circumstances to justify a deviation from the general rule; Adams, Eq. 372; Coburn v. Schroeder, 11 Fed. 425; Schneider v. Thill, 3 Fed. 95. An application to reopen a case and take further proofs has been granted on condition that the moving party pay his opponent's counsel fee for the previous argument, where the new testimony appeared to be newly discovered, material, and not cumulative, and there was no great laches; Hake v. Brown, 44 Fed.

283. But an application to reopen and admit a newly discovered defence, after final hearing, will only be granted when it appears that such defence, if made at the final hearing, would have been effectual; Adair v. Thayer, 7 Fed. 920.

Reopening patent cases is to be discouraged when the grounds offered therefor pertain to matters of evidence which could as well have been produced at the hearing; Hicks v. Ferdinand, 20 Fed. 111.

See BILL OF REVIEW; REHEARING; NEW TRIAL.

REORGANIZATION. A term in common use to denote the carrying out, by proper agreements and legal proceedings, of a business plan for winding up the affairs of, or foreclosing a mortgage or mortgages upon the property of, insolvent corporations, more frequently railroad companies. It is usually by the judicial sale of the corporate property and franchises, and the formation by the purchasers of a new corporation, in which the property and franchises are thereupon vested, and the stock and bonds of which are divided among such of the parties interested in the old company as are parties to the reorganization plan.

In most of the states, statutes have been passed to regulate the purchase of corporate properties and franchises at judicial sales. They usually provide that the purchasers shall be, or become, or may organize, a new corporation in taking over the assets and franchises purchased, and have and enjoy the corporate rights and franchises of the former company.

Usually some of the security holders name a committee who formulate a plan of reorganization providing for the deposit of securities with the committee as agents or trustees for the owners; for the purchase of the property at the sale; and the organization of a new company upon the basis of a specified scheme of distribution of the new securities among those who assent to the plan. The securities are generally deposited with the committee with very full powers of control, under the plan, and usually with a certain power of modification of the plan under specified circumstances. When the new company has been formed, the new securities are issued to the assenting parties in accordance with the terms of the plan.

Where a reorganization is the only feasible method of protecting the relative rights of all parties interested in a large enterprise, and it can be done only by co-operation, courts of equity, in the absence of fraud or oppression, are disposed to aid rather than to thwart such schemes of reorganization; Central Trust Co. of New York v. Rolling Stock Co., 56 Fed. 7. They are to be promoted, because they are necessary to prevent great sacrifice and loss; Robinson v. R. Co., 28 Fed. 340.

The creditors of a mortgagor railroad company may fairly combine to purchase the property at a mortgage sale, and other creditors are not, by such combination, deprived of the right to bid at such sale; Kropholler v. Ry. Co., 2 Fed. 302. Courts will endeavor to carry into effect a fair plan of reorganization and will overlook merely technical defects in it; 11 Ch. D. 805. Such an agreement is not a fraud on non-assenting creditors and does not entitle them to claim their debts against the new company; Appeal of Pennsylvania Transportation Co., 101 Pa. 576.

Where a railroad company has issued several series of mortgage bonds, some covering all the property and some only a part, and become insolvent, and the principal of some of the mortgages was due and the company had a large floating debt, it was held that a decree foreclosing all the mortgages, entered by consent of the bondholders, would not be set aside on the petition of some of the stockholders on the ground that some of the mortgages were not yet due, as it was in the interest of the company to effect a reorganization which would secure and extend its bonded debt and reduce the rate of interest thereon and provide the necessary means to satisfy the floating debt; Carey v. Ry. Co., 45 Fed. 438.

Reorganization agreements must be carried out according to their terms. If they are not, the subscribers to them are not bound; Miller v. R. Co., 40 Vt. 399, 94 Am. Dec. 413; and the assenting security holders must also comply strictly with the agreement to which they have assented; Short, Ry. Bonds 857.

Where there was a compromise in which stockholders of a company were given the right to subscribe for stock in the reorganized company, upon terms specified in a circular addressed to the old stockholders, it was held, on proceedings by a stockholder who averred want of notice of the circular, that he had no right of action against the company, because the agreement was not made by the company or on its behalf, and that he could not complain of the terms of the agreement, as he was not a party to it; Thornton v. Ry. Co., 81 N. Y. 462. A reorganization committee is not a trustee for non-assenting bondholders; Bound v. R. Co., 78 Fed. 49, 23 C. C. A. 636.

Creditors who do not assent to a reorganization agreement are entitled to enforce payment of the purchase price paid at a foreclosure sale by the reorganization committee, for the purpose of discharging their claims. Creditors coming in under the plan thereby release their rights against the old company; First Nat. Bank of Chattanooga, Tenn., v. Trust Co., 80 Fed. 569, 26 C. C. A. 1.

Where a reorganization agreement provided that if stockholders neglected to pay the assessments within the period limited, the privilege of receiving the shares allotted to them should be ratably distributed among those who did pay their assessments, it was held that as soon as the default occurred on the part of a non-assenting stockholder, his interest became a vested right in the assenting stockholders under the plan. Likewise that an assenting bondholder who fails to deliver his bonds to the trustee under the agreement is debarred from any benefit therein; Carpenter v. Catlin, 44 Barb. (N. Y.) 75.

In an action against a reorganized railroad company for failure to deliver its stock in amount equal to the bonds and coupons of the old company held by the plaintiff, it was held that as the plaintiff had not exercised his option to come into the plan prior to the execution of the deed of the property to the new company, he was not entitled to the stock, and his only right was to take his share of the proceeds of the sale; Landis v. R. Co., 133 Pa. 579, 19 Atl. 556. The right to participate ceases when the property has passed to the new corporation; the rights of the security holders thereby become fixed, and a majority of certificate holders cannot then modify them; Dutenhofer v. Ry. Co., 60 Hun, 578, 14 N. Y. Supp. 558.

Where a statute required the consent of bondholders for foreclosure proceedings of a railroad property and such consent was given, it was held that outstanding bondholders would be regarded as consenting by reason of their silence during a protracted litigation; Barnes v. Ry., 122 U. S. 1, 7 Sup. Ct. 1043, 30 L. Ed. 1128.

A majority of bondholders cannot compel a minority, however small, to enter into a joint agreement with them; Canada Southern R. Co. v. Gebhard, 109 U. S. 535, 3 Sup. Ct. 363, 27 L. Ed. 1020; nor will equity, at the suit of the corporation, compel minority bondholders to accept new bonds for a smaller amount, without additional security, in aid of stockholders; Lake St. El. R. Co. v. Ziegler, 99 Fed. 114, 39 C. C. A. 431; but it is said that the relations of corporate bondholders are peculiar, and that the courts, in foreclosure proceedings, have sometimes considered them as analogous to those which exist among stockholders; Short, Ry. Bonds, § 27; and that this is especially true in carrying out reorganization schemes; id. See Shaw v. R. Co., 100 U. S. 605, 25 L. Ed. 757. An act for the reorganization of an embarrassed corporation which provides that all mortgage bondholders who do not, within a given time, expressly dissent from the plan of reorganization, shall be deemed to have assented to it, is valid; Gilfillan v. Canal Co. of Pennsylvania, 109 U. S. 401, 3 Sup. Ct. 304, 27 L. Ed. 977; and so is an act which provides that a majority of the bondholders, with equal opportunities to all, may reorganize a new corporation; Gates v. R. Co., 53 Conn. 333, 5 Atl. 695. The theory is that railroad property is pledged to public use and that this consideration is superior to the property rights of corporators, stockholders, and bondholders. See Canada Southern R. Co. v. Gebhard, 109 U. S. 535, 3 Sup. Ct. 363, 27 L. Ed. 1020. It seems to be eminently proper that, when the legislative power exists, some statutory provision should be made for binding the minority in a reasonable way by the will of the majority, and unless laws impairing the obligations of contracts are forbidden, there seems no reason that such provision should not be made as to existing obligations. In respect of embarrassed corporations, it would be a species of bankrupt act; Canada Southern Ry. Co. v. Gebhard, 109 U. S. 527, 3 Sup. Ct. 363, 27 L. Ed. 1020 (concerning a Canadian railroad). But in Northern Pac. Ry. Co. v. Boyd, 228 U. S. 482, 33 Sup. Ct. 554, 57 L. Ed. 931, it was held that reorganization contracts between bondholders and stockholders of a company financially embarrassed, involving the transfer of the property to a new corporation, cannot, even where made in good faith, defeat the claim of non-assenting creditors; nor is there any difference whether the reorganization was made by contract or private sale or consummated by a master's deed under a consent decree or even in the absence of fraud; any device, whether by private contract or under judicial sale whereby stockholders are preferred to creditors, is invalid; Northern Pac. Ry. Co. v. Boyd, 228 U. S. 482, 33 Sup. Ct. 554, 57 L. Ed. 931. Lurton, J., dissented upon the ground that any plan of reorganization which in any way includes stockholders of the reorganized company is not for that reason alone to be regarded as illegal, but that every case should stand upon its own facts. White, C. J., and Holmes and Van Devanter, JJ., concurred in the dissent.

Where a corporation mortgage vests certain powers of control in a majority of the bondholders, as to sanction a modification of a deed of trust; 55 L. T. N. S. 347; Hackettstown Nat. Bank v. Brewing Co., 74 Fed. 110, 20 C. C. A. 327; [1893] 1 Ch. 477, 484; to direct the trustee to purchase the mortgaged property at a foreclosure sale and to reorganize a new company; Sage v. R. Co., 99 U. S. 334, 25 L. Ed. 394; or to control the mortgagee trustee in beginning or discontinuing foreclosure proceedings; Elwell v. Fosdick, 134 U. S. 500, 10 Sup. Ct. 598, 33 L. Ed. 998; the courts will carry into effect the decision of such majority.

In Sahlgaard v. Kennedy, 13 Fed. 242, Treat, J., criticized the decree of foreclosure then before the court, for the omission of what he considered the usual clause in foreclosure decrees, viz., one permitting the minority bondholders to come in, after purchase, within a limited time, on equal terms with purchasing bondholders.

which the bondholders, according to their priorities, got more or less of their debt (100 to 30 per cent.), and the stockholders of the company the residue of the proceeds (16 per cent. of the par of their stock), was held fraudulent as against general creditors, although the road was mortgaged far above its value; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Howard, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 392, 19 L. Ed. 117; and the unsecured creditors could hold the new company; Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. Paul, 93 Fed. 878; St. Louis Trust Co. v. Ry. Co., 191 Fed. 632; contra, Carlisle v. Trust Co., 109 Fed. 177, 48 C. C. A. 275.

But where the plan gives stockholders an interest but does not include general creditors, it is not invalid unless the scheme is to give the stockholders that which should go to creditors; Paton v. R. Co., 85 Fed. 838. Such plan will be subjected to close scrutiny, if there are old creditors unprovided for; but the mere fact that stockholders are given some interest in the new security, while it may be indicative of fraud, does not render the sale fraudulent; actual fraud must be shown, and that property exceeding the mortgage debt had been placed beyond the creditors' reach; Wenger v. R. Co., 114 Fed. 34, 51 C. C. A. 660; and where a bondholders' plan permitted stockholders to take new stock, on the payment of a difference, it was not, for that reason, fraudulent if it deprive the creditors of no right; Farmers' L. & T. Co. v. R. Co., 103 Fed. 110.

The holders of preferred stock may not use it to make up the amount of their bid on foreclosure sale of the property; Continental Trust Co. v. R. Co., 86 Fed. 930.

Where the local managers and officers of an insolvent railroad company, holding a small portion of its bonds, of which a much greater portion was held by non-residents, got an order of sale and proceeded in a hasty and rather secret way to sell and buy it in at the lowest value for themselves, the proceedings were held invalid as against the bondholders, generally, and the stockholders; Jackson v. Ludeling, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 616, 22 L. Ed. 492.

In England, if some of the majority of bondholders are not acting in good faith, a reorganization agreement will not be sanctioned; 44 Ch. Div. 403. Secured creditors of a railroad company, after bringing the property within the jurisdiction of the court, will not be permitted, by any private arrangement with the company or otherwise, so to dispose of the property as seriously and unnecessarily to prejudice the unsecured creditors. They may not, for their own benefit or for the common interest of themselves and the debtor, place the surplus which may exist after the satisfaction of their own claims beyond the reach of the latter; Farmers' L. & T. Co. v. R. Co., 21 Fed. 264.

On proceedings by an unsecured creditor praying that the stock of a reorganized company, set aside in the reorganization agreement for the stockholders of the old company, should be sold and the proceeds paid to the holders of the floating debt, it appearing that the plan showed a due regard for the interests of all classes of creditors and stockholders, and that the bill did not show any injustice intended or done to the complainant, the bill was dismissed; Hancock v. R. Co., 9 Fed. 738.

Bondholders who decline, on request, to assent, and take no steps to protect themselves, have no standing in equity to set aside a foreclosure sale, if the transaction was fair; Wetmore v. R. Co., 3 Fed. 177. An unsecured creditor may be barred by laches from going against the new company; Wenger v. R. Co., 105 Fed. 796.

A bill praying that a reorganization of a railroad company be set aside and a new plan formulated, and for a receiver, was dismissed, it appearing that the plaintiff had her representative on the new board and had attempted to buy more of the new issue of bonds, although it was alleged that the new company was illegally organized, which fact was, however, known to the plaintiff; Matthews v. Murchison, 15 Fed. 691.

Where a reorganization of an English mining company, whose property was all in the United States, was carried on in England by the voluntary act of the English stockholders and not by the British courts, and was found to have been in flagrant violation and disregard of the rights of the American stockholders, it was held that no principle of international comity required that it should be sustained; Brown v. Silver Mines, 55 Fed. 7.

In Memphis & L. R. R. Co. v. R. Com'rs, 112 U. S. 609, 5 Sup. Ct. 299, 28 L. Ed. 837, it was held that a mortgage on a charter of a corporation made in the exercise of a power given by a statute, confers no right upon purchasers at a foreclosure sale to exist as the same corporation; if it confers any right of corporate existence upon them, it is only a right to reorganize as a corporation, subject to the laws existing at the time of the reorganization. The court said: "The real transaction, in legal effect, is nothing more or less, and nothing other, than a surrender or abandonment of the old charter by the incorporators, and a grant de novo of a similar charter to the so-called transferees or purchasers."

In Pennsylvania, under the act of April, 1861, the sale of a railroad creates the purchaser a body corporate, with all the rights, etc., of the old corporation. Irregularities in the organization are not necessarily fatal to the being of the new corporation, and will, at the most, enable the commonwealth to retake the franchise. It cannot be said that the franchises do not exist; Com. v. Ry., 52 Pa. 506.

Where foreclosure was brought on a railroad mortgage containing the usual clause that the trustee on request of a majority of the bondholders should bid at the sale, and reorganize on their account, it was held that the agreement enured equally for the benefit of the bondholders, and that each held his interest subject to the controlling power given to the majority; that, upon proper request from the bondholders, the court might direct the trustee to bid at the sale the amount of the principal and interest due on the first mortgage bonds and to proceed to execute the trust; Sage v. R. Co., 99 U. S. 334, 25 L. Ed. 394.

The pendency of a reorganization plan for the preservation of an entire railroad system may sometimes be reason for refusing temporarily an application on the part of the trustees of a divisional mortgage to be put in possession of the property covered by the mortgage to them; Short, Ry. Bonds 854.

In reorganization proceedings it is not necessary that notice of the terms of the plan nor of the legal proceedings be given to the stockholders in order to bar their rights if they do not assent; In re Eureka Basin W. & Mfg. Co., 96 N. Y. 49.

A reorganized corporation, to whom a receiver had turned over the assets of the insolvent company, succeeds to the rights of its predecessor including the claimed right to reform a deed; Williams v. American Ass'n, 197 Fed. 500, 118 C. C. A. 1.

See MERGER; MORTGAGE; NEWSPAPER; RAILROAD; RECEIVER; LEASE; VOTING TRUST.

REPAIRS. That work which is done to property to keep it in good order.

To restore to a sound state after decay, injury, dilapidation, or partial injury; State v. R. Co., 85 Mo. 263, 55 Am. Rep. 361; to be synonymous with "make and keep up"; 23 Ind. 281; and sometimes to mean replace; Beach v. Crain, 2 N. Y. 93, 49 Am. Dec. 369.

Tenantable repairs. Decorative repair is not included. Papering always, and painting, unless intended for the protection of the property, are decorative repairs. The obligation does not extend to repairing or restoring what is worn out by age, but voluntary waste is a breach of the obligation; 59 L. J. Q. B. 129.

What a party is bound to do, when the law imposes upon him the duty to make necessary repairs, does not appear to be very accurately defined. Natural and unavoidable decay in the buildings must always be allowed for, when there is no express covenant to the contrary; and it seems the lessee will satisfy the obligation the law imposes on him by delivering the premises at the expiration of his tenancy in a habitable state. Questions in relation to repairs most frequently arise between landlord and tenant.

In determining whether there has been a breach of a covenant to repair, regard must be had to the age and character of the premises at the date of the demise; and if the premises through their own inherent defects fall in the course of the tenancy into a particular condition, the result of their being in that condition are not breaches of a covenant to repair, however wide that covenant may be; [1893] 2 Q. B. 212.

When there is no express agreement between the parties, the tenant is always required to do the necessary repairs; Woodf. Landl. & T. 244; Mumford v. Brown, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 475, 16 Am. Dec. 440. He is, therefore, bound to put in windows or doors that have been broken by him, so as to prevent any decay of the premises; but he is not required to put a new roof on an old worn-out house; 2 Esp. 590. The landlord is under no implied obligation to make ordinary repairs; Medary v. Cathers, 161 Pa. 87, 28 Atl. 1012.

An express covenant on the part of the lessee to keep a house in repair, and leave it in as good a plight as it was when the lease was made, does not bind him to repair the ordinary and natural decay; Woodf. Landl. & T. 256. See Kramer v. Cook, 7 Gray (Mass.) 550. And it has been held that such a covenant does not bind him to rebuild a house which had been destroyed by a public enemy; Pollard v. Shaffer, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 210, 1 L. Ed. 104, 1 Am. Dec. 239; but where in a lease there is an express and unconditional agreement to repair and keep in repair, the tenant is bound to do so, though the premises be destroyed by fire or accident; Hoy v. Holt, 91 Pa. 88, 36 Am. Rep. 659; Dermott v. Jones, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 1, 17 L. Ed. 762; McIntosh v. Lown, 49 Barb. (N. Y.) 554.

Repair means to restore to its former condition, not to change either the form or material of a building; Ardesco Oil Co. v. Richardson, 63 Pa. 162. When a landlord covenants to repair, he is bound only to restore to a sound state either what has become decayed or dilapidated, or better, what has been partially destroyed; his covenant does not extend to improvements, nor to new buildings erected by the tenant; Cornell v. Vanartsdalen, 4 Pa. 364. See 1 Dy. 33 a.

In order to entitle a tenant to recover from his landlord for repairs made by the tenant upon the premises, he must show a contract with the landlord, express or implied, to pay for them; Powell v. Beckley, 38 Neb. 157, 56 N. W. 974.

As to the time when the repairs are to be made, it would seem reasonable that when the lessor is bound to make them he should have the right to enter and make them, when a delay until after the expiration of the lease would be injurious to the estate; but when no such damage exists, the landlord should have no right to enter without the consent of the tenant. See 18 Toullier, n. 297. A general covenant by a lessor to repair is construed to mean within a reasonable time after notice; Sieber v. Blanc, 76 Cal. 173, 18 Pac. 260. When a house has been destroyed by accidental fire, neither the tenant nor the landlord is bound to rebuild, unless obliged by some agreement so to do; Gates v. Green, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 355, 27 Am. Dec. 68; 1 Term 708. See LANDLORD AND TENANT; RENT; 4 Camp. 275; Co. Litt. 27 a; Fowler v. Bott, 6 Mass. 63; 1 Saund. 322; 2 id. 158 b.

REPARATION. The redress of an injury; amends for a tort inflicted. See REMEDY.

REPARATIONE FACIENDA, WRIT DE (Lat.). The name of an ancient writ which lies by one or more joint tenants against the other joint tenants, or by a person owning a house or building against the owner of the adjoining building, to compel the reparation of such joint property. Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 295.

REPATRIATION. The regaining nationality after expatriation.

REPAY. Repay does not necessarily mean to pay money. It has also the meaning of return, restore, etc.; Grant v. Dabney, 19 Kan. 390.

REPEAL. The abrogation or destruction of a law by a legislative act.

A repeal is express, as, when it is literally declared by a subsequent law, or implied, when the new law contains provisions contrary to or irreconcilable with those of the former law.

The power to revoke or annul a statute or ordinance is equivalent to the power to repeal it; and in either case the power is legislative and not judicial in its character; Shephard v. Wheeling, 30 W. Va. 479, 4 S. E. 635.

A statute is not to be deemed repealed merely by the enactment of another statute on the same subject. There must be a positive repugnancy between the provisions of the new law and the old, to work a repeal by implication; and even then the old law is repealed only to the extent of such repugnancy; Mersereau v. Mersereau Co., 51 N. J. Eq. 382, 26 Atl. 682; Cope v. Cope, 137 U. S. 682, 11 Sup. Ct. 222, 34 L. Ed. 832. This rule is supported in a vast variety of cases.

A law may be repealed by implication, by an affirmative as well as by a negative statute, if the substance is inconsistent with the old statute; Moore's Lessee v. Vance, 1 Ohio, 10; Adams v. Ashby, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 96; West v. Pine, 4 Wash. C. C. 691, Fed. Cas. No. 17,423; and a repeal by implication has been effected even where two inconsistent enactments have been passed in the same session; 2 B. & Ald. 818; or where two parts of the same act have proved repugnant to each other; 4 C. P. Div. 29; but this will be presumed only in extreme cases; 13 C. B. 461. A repeal by implication is not favored; the leaning of the courts is against such repeal, if it be possible to reconcile the two acts; Cook Co. v. Gilbert, 146 Ill. 268, 33 N. E. 761; People v. Gustin, 57 Mich. 407, 24 N. W. 156;

Cerf v. Reichert, 73 Cal. 300, 15 Pac. 10; Chamberlain v. State, 50 Ark. 132, 6 S. W. 524; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Oil Co., 204 U. S. 426, 27 Sup. Ct. 350, 51 L. Ed. 553, 9 Ann. Cas. 1075; [1892] 1 Q. B. 654; and a general law is not to be held as repealing a prior special law unless it clearly manifests such intention; State v. Frazier, 98 Mo. 426, 11 S. W. 973; Adams Exp. Co. v. Owensboro, 85 Ky. 265, 3 S. W. 370; Cook Co. v. Gilbert, 146 Ill. 268, 33 N. E. 761; Gowen v. Harley, 56 Fed. 973, 6 C. C. A. 190, 12 U. S. App. 574. General legislation must give way to special legislation on the same subject; id. 267. But where the constitution directs the legislature to pass general legislation, and a law is passed, which is complete and does evidently intend to provide a uniform system, no words of repeal are necessary; Chalfant v. Edwards, 176 Pa. 67, 34 Atl. 922.

The later of two clearly inconsistent and repugnant acts must prevail; Lyddy v. Long Island City, 104 N. Y. 218, 10 N. E. 155; State v. Howe, 28 Neb. 618, 44 N. W. 874; and is an implied repeal of the earlier; 29 Ch. D. 15; but not unless their provisions are clearly inconsistent; Gowen v. Harley, 56 Fed. 973, 6 C. C. A. 190, 12 U. S. App. 574; and where they can be read together without repugnancy, both should stand; Frost v. Wenie, 157 U. S. 46, 15 Sup. Ct. 532, 39 L. Ed. 614; and the burden is on the one who asserts that there is an implied repeal; 29 Ch. D. 15.

An earlier statute is repealed by a subsequent one only in those particulars wherein it is clearly inconsistent and irreconcilable with the later enactment. The leaning of all courts is against repealing the positive provisions of former statutes by construction, unless there be such a manifest and total repugnance between the two enactments that they cannot both stand. It is not enough that there is a discrepancy between different parts of a system of legislation on the same general subject; there must be a conflict between different acts on the same specific subject; Com. v. De Camp, 177 Pa. 112, 35 Atl. 601. Where the repealing act is unconstitutional and void, it will not work a repeal; Devoy v. N. Y., 35 Barb. (N. Y.) 264; State v. Thomas, 138 Mo. 95, 39 S. W. 481; Cooley, Const. Lim. 186; Campau v. Detroit, 14 Mich. 276; contra, Meshmeier v. State, 11 Ind. 489; and where part of an act was unconstitutional, but the repeal in part was valid, and they were separable, it worked a repeal; Equitable Guarantee & Trust Co. v. Donahoe, 3 Pennewill (Del.) 191, 49 Atl. 372.

Special legislation is not necessarily repealed by subsequent general legislation without words of repeal; McKenna v. Edmundstone, 91 N. Y. 231; Com. v. Macferron, 152 Pa. 244, 25 Atl. 556, 19 L. R. A. 568; Cook County v. Gilbert, 146 Ill. 268, 33 N. E. 761; L. R. 10 A. C. 68. To have that effect there must be express reference or necessary implication; 2 J. & H. 53; 10 App. Cas. 68; there may be a repeal without express words; Hudson v. Ely, 36 Okl. 576, 129 Pac. 11.

Where a statute amends a former statute "so as to read as follows" and restates it at length the prior act is not repealed and reenacted but is continued; Com. v. Kenneson, 143 Mass. 418, 9 N. E. 761; inconsistent provisions in the former, omitted in the later, act are repealed; In re Estate of Prime, 136 N. Y. 347, 32 N. E. 1091, 18 L. R. A. 713.

Where there is a general revision of statutes, clearly intended to be complete, it repeals prior legislation, though not repugnant and though the revision contains no words of repeal; Com. v. Mason, 82 Ky. 256; Stead v. Curtis, 191 Fed. 529, 112 C. C. A. 463; Pingree v. Snell, 42 Me. 53; Wakefield v. Phelps, 37 N. H. 295; Illinois & Mich. Canal v. Chicago, 14 Ill. 334; but only where the intent to repeal plainly appears; Clark v. Powell, 62 Vt. 442, 20 Atl. 597.

A new Constitution repeals all acts inconsistent therewith; Mannie v. Hatfield, 22 S. D. 475, 118 N. W. 817.

A statute purporting to cover an entire subject repeals all former statutes on the same subject, either with or without a repealing clause and notwithstanding it may omit material provisions of the earlier statutes; Terrell v. State, 86 Tenn. 523, 8 S. W. 212; Millay v. White, 86 Ky. 170, 5 S. W. 429; Little v. Cogswell, 20 Or. 345, 25 Pac. 727.

A statute will not repeal a prior statute merely because it repeals some of its provisions and omits others, or adds new provisions; the later act operates as a repeal only when it plainly appears that it was intended as a substitute for the first act; Chicago, Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. U. S., 127 U. S. 406, 8 Sup. Ct. 1194, 32 L. Ed. 180; and a previous statute will be held to be modified by a subsequent one, if the latter was plainly intended to cover the whole subject embraced by both, and prescribes the only rules in respect to that subject that are to govern; Tracy v. Tully, 134 U. S. 206, 10 Sup. Ct. 527, 33 L. Ed. 879.

Where a new statute expressly repeals the former statute, and the new and the repeal of the old are to take effect at the same time, a provision in the old statute which is embodied in the new is deemed to have continued in force without suspension; Fullerton v. Spring, 3 Wis. 667. But it has been held that where the new law does not go into effect until a time subsequent to that at which the repeal takes effect, such a provision is to be deemed repealed meantime; State v. King, 12 La. Ann. 593. But see Spaulding v. Alford, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 33.

As to what force should be given to portions of a statute excepted from repeal, see Endlich, Interpr. Stat.; Ex parte Crow Dog, 109 U. S. 556, 3 Sup. Ct. 396, 27 L. Ed. 1030.

A difference in the punctuation of similar statutes does not in all cases warrant a different construction, particularly when the printer is responsible for it, and not the legislature; Griffiths v. Montandon, 4 Idaho, 377, 39 Pac. 548.

Where an amendment changes the phraseology of a former act, it will be presumed that it was the intention to make a corresponding change in its meaning; U. S. v. Bashaw, 50 Fed. 749, 1 C. C. A. 653. Where a section of a statute is amended and afterwards such section "as amended" is repealed, the original section, and not the amendment merely, is repealed; State v. Burk, 88 Ia. 661, 56 N. W. 180. The amendment of a statute does not repeal it so that a subsequent statute, which professes to amend the original act, is invalid; State v. Bemis, 45 Neb. 724, 64 N. W. 348.

It is a general rule that when a penal statute punishes an offence by a certain penalty, and a new statute is passed imposing a greater or a lesser penalty for the same offence, the former statute is repealed by implication; Nichols v. Squire, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 168; Buckallew v. Ackerman, 8 N. J. L. 48; Ely v. Thompson, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 70; see Com. v. Duane, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 601, 2 Am. Dec. 497; Bacon, Abr. Statute (D); but subsequent statutes which add accumulative penalties do not repeal former statutes; 1 Cowp. 297; 6 Mod. 141.

At common law the repeal of a repealing act revived the former act; 6 Co. 199; Hastings v. Aiken, 1 Gray (Mass.) 163; Doe v. Naylor, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 32; Wallace v. Bradshaw, 54 N. J. L. 175, 23 Atl. 759; but not where there is a general law governing the subject and the act in question was a private act; In re Opening of Knox St., 12 Super. Ct. Rep. (Pa.) 534; and it has been held to have this effect, unless the language of the repealing statute or some general statute provides otherwise; U. S. v. Philbrick, 120 U. S. 52, 7 Sup. Ct. 413, 30 L. Ed. 559; but this rule is now altered in England by an act passed in 1880 and amended in 1889, and in many states this rule has been changed, as in Ohio, Louisiana, Kentucky, Wisconsin and Minnesota; and such an act applies only to absolute repeal and not where the repealed law merely engrafted an exception on a prior law; Pepin Tp. v. Sage, 129 Fed. 657, 64 C. C. A. 169; La. Civ. Code, art. 23. In some states, as Tennessee and Georgia, the substance of an act repealed or revived must be stated in the caption or otherwise, and in others, as Connecticut and Arkansas, a repealing or amending act must recite the law so amended sufficiently to show the effect of the amendment or repeal.

A repealed statute is as if it had never existed, except as to transactions which are past and closed before the repeal; 4 De G. & J. 557; but the repeal leaves all the civil rights of the parties acquired under the law unaffected; Taylor v. Rushing, 2 Stew. (Ala.)

160; Pacific Mail S. S. Co. v. Jolliffe, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 450, 17 L. Ed. 805. An action for penalties cannot be sustained when the statute inflicting them has been repealed before judgment; Norris v. Crocker, 13 How. (U. S.) 429, 14 L. Ed. 210; nor an action for the recovery of money paid in violation of law, under similar circumstances; Kimbrow v. Colgate, 5 Blatch. 229, Fed. Cas. No. 7,778.

When a penal statute is repealed or so modified as to exempt a class from its operation, violations committed before the repeal are also exempted, unless specifically reserved, or unless there has been some private right vested by it; Com. v. Welch, 2 Dana (Ky.) 330; In re Road in Hatfield Tp., 4 Yeates (Pa.) 392; Anonymous, 1 Wash. C. C. 84, Fed. Cas. No. 475; Attow v. Com., 2 Va. Cas. 382.

Under "Initiative and Referendum" provisions, the legislature may still repeal an act, however passed; In re Senate Resolution No. 4, 54 Colo. 262, 130 Pac. 333.

There can be no such thing as an unrepeatable statute; Com. v. Iron Co., 153 Ky. 116, 154 S. W. 931.

As to repeal by nonuser, see OBSOLETE.

Stat. 8 Edw. VII repealed 102 old acts that "are peut."

See REPUGNANCY; INTERPRETATION; STATUTE; REVISED STATUTES.

REPETITION. In Civil Law. The act by which a person demands and seeks to recover what he has paid by mistake or delivered on a condition which has not been performed. Dig. 12. 4. 5.

The name of an action which lies to recover the payment which has been made by mistake when nothing was due.

Repetition is never admitted in relation to natural obligations which have been voluntarily acquitted, if the debtor had capacity to give his consent. 6 Toullier 386.

In order to entitle the payer to recover back money paid by mistake, it must have been paid by him to a person to whom he did not owe it, for otherwise he cannot recover it back,—the creditor having, in such case, the just right to retain the money. Repetitio nulla est ab eo qui suum recepit.

How far money paid under a mistake of law is liable to repetition has been discussed by civilians; and opinions on this subject are divided. 2 Pothier, Obl., Evans ed. 369, 408-437; 1 Story, Eq. Pl. § 111.

REPLEADER. Making a new series of pleadings.

Judgment of repladers differs from a judgment non obstante veredicto in this: that it is allowed by the court to do justice between the parties where the defect is in the form or manner of stating the right, and the issue joined is on an immaterial point, so that it cannot tell for whom to give judgment; Gerish v. Train, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 124; Magoun v. Lapham, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 419; while judgment non obstante is given only where it is clearly apparent to the court that the party who has succeeded has, upon his own showing, no merits, and cannot have by any manner of statement; 1 Chitty, Pl. 568. See Tatum v. Tatum, 19 Ark. 194.

It may be ordered by the court for the purpose of obtaining a better issue, if it will effect substantial justice where issue has been reached on an immaterial point; 3 B. & P. 353; Havens v. Bush, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 388; Gould, Pl. 473; as a plea of payment on a given day to an action on a bond conditioned to pay on or before that day; 2 Stra. 994. It is not allowed till after trial for a defect which is aided by verdict; 2 Saund. 319 b; Bac. Abr. Pleas. If granted or denied where it should not be, it is error; 2 Salk. 579. See Shippey v. Eastwood, 9 Ala. 198.

The judgment is general, and the parties must begin at the first fault which occasioned the immaterial issue; 1 Ld. Raym. 169; entirely anew, if the declaration is imperfect; 1 Chitty, Pl. 568; that the action must be dismissed in such case; Smith v. Walker, 1 Wash. (Va.) 135; with the replication, if that be faulty and the bar be good; 3 Keb. 664; Stevens v. Taliaferro, 1 Wash. (Va.) 155. No costs are allowed to either side; 6 Term 131; 2 B. & P. 376.

It cannot be awarded after a default at nisi prius; 1 Chitty, Pl. 568; nor where the court can give judgment on the whole record; Willes 532; nor after demurrer; Perkins v. Burbank, 2 Mass. 81; unless, perhaps, where the bar and replication are bad; Cro. Eliz. 318; Potter v. Titcomb, 7 Me. 302; nor after writ of error, without the consent of the parties; 3 Salk. 306; nor at any time in favor of the person who made the first fault; 1 Ld. Raym. 170; Hartfield v. Patton, 1 Hempst. 268, Fed. Cas. No. 6,158 a; Bledsoe v. Chouning, 1 Humphr. (Tenn.) 85; Andre v. Johnson, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 375; nor after judgment; Page v. Walker, 1 Tyl. (Vt.) 146. The same end is secured in many of the states by statutes allowing amendments. See, generally, Tidd, Pr. 813, 814; Com. Dig. Pleader (R 18); Bac. Abr. Pleas (M).

REPLEGIARE (Lat.). To replevy; to redeem a thing detained or taken by another, by putting in legal sureties.

REPLEGIARE DE AVERIIS (Lat.). A writ brought by one whose cattle are impounded or distrained, upon security given to the sheriff to pursue or answer the action at law. 7 Hen. VIII. c. 4; Fitzh. N. B. 68; New Book of Entries, Replevin; Dy. 173; Reg. Orig. 81.

REPLEGIARE FACIAS (Lat.). A writ of replevin, which issued out of chancery, commanding the sheriff to deliver the distress to the owner, and afterwards to do justice in regard to the matter in his own county court. It was abolished by statute of Marlbridge, which provided a shorter process. 3 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 147*; Andr. Steph. Pl. 92.

REPLEVIN. A form of action which lies to regain the possession of personal chattels which have been taken from the plaintiff unlawfully.

The action originally lay for the purpose of recovering chattels taken as a distress, but has acquired a much more extended use. In England and most of the states it extends to all cases of illegal taking, and in some of the states it may be brought whenever a person wishes to recover specific goods to which he alleges title. See infra.

A general use of this remedy seems to date from the latter part of the 13th century, referring to the fact that at that period the remedy known as vetitum namium (q. v.) was falling into desuetude. It is said that at that time, "under the name of Replegiare, or Replevin, an action was being developed which was proving itself to be convenient action for the settlement of disputes between landlord and tenant; but it seems to have owed its vigor, its rapidity, and therefore its convenience, to the supposition that a serious offence had been committed against the king." 2 Poll. & Maitl. 576; see 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 248.

By virtue of the writ, the sheriff proceeds at once to take possession of the property therein described and transfer it to the plaintiff, upon his giving pledges which are satisfactory to the sheriff to prove his title, or return the chattels taken if he fail so to do. It is said to have laid formerly in the detinuit, which is the only form now found at common law, and also in the detinet, where the defendant retained possession, and the sheriff proceeded to take possession and deliver the property to the plaintiff after the trial and proof of title; Chitty, Pl. 145; 3 Bla. Com. 146; DETINET; DETINUIT.

It differs from detinue in this: that it requires an unlawful taking as the foundation of the action; and from all other personal actions in that it is brought to recover the possession of the specific property claimed to have been unlawfully taken.

The action lies to recover possession of personal property; Roberts v. Bank, 19 Pa. 71; including parish records; Sawyer v. Baldwin, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 492; trees after they had been cut down; Warren v. Leland, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 613; Davis v. Easley, 13 Ill. 192; records of a corporation; Southern Plank-Road Co. v. Hixon, 5 Ind. 165; articles which can be specifically distinguished from all other chattels of the same kind by indicia or ear-marks; Low v. Martin, 18 Ill. 286; including money tied up in a bag and taken in that condition; 2 Mod. 61; a promissory note; Pritchard v. Norwood, 155 Mass. 539, 30 N. E. 80; trees cut into boards; Dillingham v. Smith, 30 Me. 370; Davis v. Easley, 13 Ill. 192; a house which is being moved from the land on which it was built; Luce v. Ames, 84 Me. 133, 24 Atl. 720; but does not lie for injuries to things annexed to the realty; 4 Term 504; Cresson v. Stout, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 116, 8 Am. Dec. 373; Hooser v. Hays, 10 B. Monr. (Ky.) 72, 50 Am. Dec. 540; nor to recover such things, if dissevered and removed as part of the same act; De Mott v. Hagerman, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 220, 18 Am. Dec. 443; nor for writings concerning the realty; 1 Brownl. 168.

Replevin lies in Massachusetts wherever detainee does, e. g. for deeds which attend the inheritance; Holmes, Com. L. 352.

A general property with the right to immediate possession gives the plaintiff sufficient title to maintain it; Dunham v. Wyckoff, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 280, 20 Am. Dec. 695; Collins v. Evans, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 63; Frizell v. White, 27 Miss. 198; Tittmore v. Labounty, 60 Vt. 624, 15 Atl. 196; as do a special property and actual possession; Mead v. Kilday, 2 Watts (Pa.) 110; Wilson v. Royston, 2 Ark. 315; Broadwater v. Darne, 10 Mo. 277; Williams v. West, 2 Ohio St. 82; and the bare possession of property, though wrongfully obtained, is sufficient title to maintain it against a mere stranger; Anderson v. Gouldberg, 51 Minn. 294, 53 N. W. 636. If the plaintiff has a right of possession, it is immaterial what his title is; Ferguson v. Lauterstein, 160 Pa. 427, 28 Atl. 852.

A joint owner of personal property can maintain replevin in his own name to recover it, against one whose right is not superior to his; Chaffee v. Harrington, 60 Vt. 718, 15 Atl. 350.

It will not lie for the defendant in another action to recover goods belonging to him and taken on attachment; 5 Co. 99; Clark v. Skinner, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 470, 11 Am. Dec. 302; Kellogg v. Churchill, 2 N. H. 412, 9 Am. Dec. 104; Ranoul v. Griffie, 3 Md. 54; nor, generally, for goods properly in the custody of the law; Ranoul v. Griffie, 3 Md. 54; Pott v. Oldwine, 7 Watts (Pa.) 173; Goodrich v. Fritz, 4 Ark. 525; McLeod v. Oates, 30 N. C. 387; Deshler v. Dodge, 16 How. (U. S.) 622, 14 L. Ed. 1084; Johnson v. Wing, 3 Mich. 163; Watkins v. Page, 2 Wis. 92; Read v. Brayton, 72 Hun, 633, 25 N. Y. Supp. 186; but this rule does not prevent a third person, whose goods have been improperly attached in such suit, from bringing this action; Thompson v. Button, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 84; Chinn v. Russell, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 172; Powell v. Bradlee, 9 Gill & J. (Md.) 220; Angell v. Keith, 24 Vt. 371.

As to the rights of cotenants to bring this action as against each other, see McEl-derry v. Flannagan, 1 Harr. & G. (Md.) 308; Prentice v. Ladd, 12 Conn. 331; Fines v. Bolin, 36 Neb. 621, 54 N. W. 990; as against strangers, see D'Wolf v. Harris, 4 Mas. 515, Fed. Cas. No. 4,221; Scrugham v. Carter, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 131; McArthur v. Lane, 15 Me.

245; Taylor v. True, 27 N. H. 220; Noble v. Epperly, 6 Ind. 414.

The action lies, in England and most of the states, wherever there has been an illegal taking; 18 E. L. & E. 230; Pangburn v. Patridge, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 140, 5 Am. Dec. 250; Hsley v. Stubbs, 5 Mass. 283; Stoughton v. Rappalo, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 562; Daggett v. Robins, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 415, 21 Am. Dec. 752; Bruen v. Ogden, 11 N. J. L. 370, 20 Am. Dec. 593; Drummond v. Hopper, 4 Harr. (Del.) 327; and in some states wherever a person claims title to specific chattels in another's possessions; Ward v. Taylor, 1 Pa. 238; Skinner v. Stouse, 4 Mo. 93; Waterman v. Matteson, 4 R. I. 539; Lathrop v. Bowen, 121 Mass. 107; Eveleth v. Blossom, 54 Me. 447, 92 Am. Dec. 555; while in others it is restricted to a few cases of illegal seizure; Watson v. Watson, 9 Conn. 140, 23 Am. Dec. 324; Eggleston v. Mundy, 4 Mich. 295. The object of the action is to recover possession; and it will not lie where the property has been restored. And when brought in the detinet the destruction of the articles by the defendant is no answer to the action; 3 Bla. Com. 147.

The declaration must describe the place of taking. Great accuracy was formerly required in this respect; 2 Wms. Saund. 74 b; Gardner v. Humphrey, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 53; but now a statement of the county in which it occurred is said to be sufficient, 1 P. A. Bro. 60.

The chattels must be accurately described in the writ; Snedeker v. Quick, 11 N. J. L. 179. The following descriptions were held sufficient: Six oxen; Farwell v. Fox, 18 Mich. 166; a lot of hard wood; all the utensils in a barn; Peterson v. Fowler, 76 Mich. 258, 43 N. W. 10; certain logs (identified by their mark); Schulenburg v. Harriman, 2 Dill. 398, Fed. Cas. No. 12,486; the contents of a (specified) grocery store; Litchman v. Potter, 116 Mass. 371; a moveable building on a (specified) lot, but found on another lot; Elliott v. Hart, 45 Mich. 234, 7 N. W. 812; but not a lot of sundries; Warner v. Aughenbaugh, 15 S. & R. (Pa.) 9. Certainty to a general intent is sufficient; Ruch v. Morris, 28 Pa. 245; so is a description that would sustain a chattel mortgage; Ft. Dodge v. Moore, 37 Ia. 388. The sheriff may require the plaintiff to attend and point out the goods; Foredice v. Rinehart, 11 Or. 208, 8 Pac. 285; Smith v. McLean, 24 Ia. 324; no amendment of the writ is allowed; Paterson v. Parsell, 38 Mich. 607 (contra); Jaques v. Sanderson, 8 Cush. [Mass.] 271; so as to conform to the affidavit and petition; Roberts v. Gee, 39 Fla. 531, 22 South. 877; but not to increase the amount of goods properly described in the writ; Musgrave v. Farren, 92 Me. 198, 42 Atl. 355.

A plaintiff may show that he mistakenly undervalued the property and the surety is bound by the judgment against his principal to the limit of his obligation; the question of the value as found in the replevin cannot be relitigated in a suit against the surety; Bierce v. Waterhouse, 219 U. S. 320, 31 Sup. Ct. 241, 55 L. Ed. 237.

The plea of non cepit puts in issue the taking, and not the plaintiff's title; Rowland v. Mann, 28 N. C. 38; Sawyer v. Huff, 25 Me. 464; Ely v. Ehle, 3 N. Y. 506; Hopkins v. Burney, 2 Fla. 42; Vose v. Hart, 12 Ill. 378; and the pleas, not guilty; Gibson v. Mozier, 9 Mo. 256; cepit in alio loco, and property in another, are also of frequent occurrence.

An avowry, cognizance, or justification is often used in defence. See those titles.

The judgment, when the action is in the detinuit, if for the plaintiff, confirms his title, and is also for damages assessed by the jury for the injurious taking and detention; McCabe v. Morehead, 1 W. & S. (Pa.) 513; Cable v. Dakin, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 172; Dore v. Hight, 15 Me. 20; Barham v. Massey, 27 N. C. 192. In actions of replevin the measure of damages is the real value of the chattel at the time the tortious possession of the defendant began, with damages for its unlawful detention; Maguire v. Dutton, 54 N. J. L. 597, 25 Atl. 254.

The defendant in replevin is not concluded by the value of the property named in the bond of the writ, when he brings an action on the bond, and is not estopped from showing such value to be greater than there stated; Washington Ice Co. v. Webster, 125 U. S. 426, 8 Sup. Ct. 947, 31 L. Ed. 799.

See JUDGMENT.

REPLEVY. To re-deliver goods which have been distrained to the original possessor of them, on his giving pledges in an action of replevin. It signifies also the bailing or liberating a man from prison, on his finding bail to answer. See REPLEVIN.

REPLIANT. One who makes a replication.

REPLICATION (Lat. replicare, to fold back.) The plaintiff's answer to the defendant's plea or answer.

In Equity. The plaintiff's avoidance or denial of the answer or defence. Story, Eq. Pl. § 877.

A general replication is a general denial of the truth of the defendant's plea or answer, and of the sufficiency of the matter alleged in it to bar the plaintiff's suit, and an assertion of the truth and sufficiency of the bill. Cooper, Eq. Pl. 329, 330. Such a replication is always sufficient to put in issue every material allegation of an answer or amended answer, unless the rules of pleading imperatively require an amendment of the bill; Southern Pac. R. Co. v. U. S., 168 U. S. 1, 18 Sup. Ct. 18, 42 L. Ed. 355.

A special replication was one which introduced new matter to avoid the defendant's answer. It might be followed by rejoinder, surrejoinder, and rebutter. Special replications have been superseded by the practice of amending bills; 1 How. Intr. 55; 17 Pet. App. 68. A replication must be made use of where the plaintiff intends to introduce evidence, and a subpoena to the defendant to rejoin must be added, unless he will appear gratis; Story, Eq. Pl. § 879.

A replication may be filed nunc pro tunc after witnesses have been examined under leave of court; Story, Eq. Pl. § 881; Mitf. Eq. Pl. by Jeremy 323. If a replication is taken to a plea and issue be found thereon, the bill will not be dismissed, provided the facts contained in the plea are proved; Elgin Wind Power & Pump Co. v. Nichols, 65 Fed. 215, 12 C. C. A. 578, 24 U. S. App. 542.

Under the new equity rules of the United States supreme court a replication is not required.

In Admiralty. No replication to the answer to a libel is now allowed; the libellant, under Adm. Rule 51, is considered as denying new facts set up in the answer.

At Law. The plaintiff's reply to the defendant's plea. It contains a statement of matter, consistent with the declaration, which avoids the effect of the defendant's plea or constitutes a joinder in issue thereon. See Andr. Steph. Pl. 151.

It is, in general, governed by the plea, whether dilatory or in bar, and most frequently denies it. When the plea concludes to the country, the plaintiff must generally reply by a similiter. See SIMILITER; Campbell v. Clark, Hempst. 67, Fed. Cas. No. 2,355a. When it concludes with a verification, the plaintiff may either conclude the defendant by matter of estoppel, deny the truth of the plea in whole or in part, confess and avoid, the plea, or new assign the cause of action in case of an evasive plea. Its character varies with the form of action and the facts of the case. See 1 Chitty, Pl. 519.

As to the form of the replication:

The title contains the name of the court, and the term of which it is pleaded, and in the margin the names of the plaintiff and defendant. 2 Chitty, Pl. 641.

The commencement is that part which immediately follows the title, and contains a general denial of the effect of the defendant's plea. When the plea is to the jurisdiction, it contains a statement that the writ ought not to be quashed, or that the court ought not to be ousted of their jurisdiction. Rastell, Entr. 101. When misnomer is pleaded, no such allegation is required; 1 B. & P. 61.

When matter in estoppel is replied, it is, in general, in the words, "and the said plaintiff saith that the said defendant."

When the replication denies or confesses and avoids the plea, it contains a preclusion, which see.

The body should contain—

Matter of estoppel, which should be set forth in the replication if it does not appear from the previous pleadings: as, if the matter has been tried upon a particular issue in trespass and found by the jury; 3 East 346; Warner's Ex'rs v. Bledsoe's Adm'x, 4 Dana (Ky.) 73; denial of the truth of the plea, either of the whole plea, which may be by a denial of the fact or facts constituting a single point in express words; Watriss v. Pierce, 36 N. H. 232; Moss v. Hindes, 28 Vt. 279; or by the general replication de injuria, etc., according to the form of action; 8 Co. 67; 1 B. & P. 79; Allen v. Scott, 13 Ill. 80; or of a part of the plea, which may be of any material fact; Bradner v. Demick, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 406; and of such only; 37 E. L. & E. 479; Yingling v. Hoppe, 9 Gill (Md.) 310; U. S. v. Buford, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 31, 7 L. Ed. 585; or of matter of right resulting from facts; 1 Saund. 23 a, n. 5; Calvert v. Lowell, 10 Ark. 147; see TRAVERSE; a confession and avoidance; Hoitt v. Holcomb, 23 N. H. 535; Jenkins v. Stanley, 10 Mass. 226; see CONFESSION AND AVOIDANCE; a new assignment, which see.

The conclusion should be to the country when the replication denies the whole of the defendant's plea containing matter of fact; Walker v. Johnson, 2 McLean, 92 Fed. Cas. No. 17,074; Hartwell v. Hemmenway, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 117; Bindon v. Robinson, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 516; as well where the plea is to the jurisdiction; 1 Chitty, Pl. 385; as in bar; 1 Chitty, Pl. 554; but with a verification when new matter is introduced; 1 Saund. 103, n.; Hampshire Manufacturers Bank v. Billings, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 87; Hallett v. Sliedell, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 56. The conclusions in particular cases are stated in 1 Chitty, Pl. 615; Com. Dig. Pleader (F 5). See 1 Saund. 103, n.; Bindon v. Robinson, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 516; Archb. Civ. Pl. 258; 19 Viner, Bac. Abr. Trespass (I 4).

As to the qualities of a replication. It must be responsive to the defendant's plea; Cannon v. State, 17 Ark. 365; Jones v. Hays, 4 McLean, 521, Fed. Cas. No. 7,467; answering all which it professes to answer; State Bank v. Sherrill, 12 Ark. 183; Whitehurst v. Boyd, 8 Ala. 375; and if bad in part, is bad altogether; 1 Saund. 338; Marsteller v. M'Clean, 7 Cra. (U. S.) 156, 3 L. Ed. 300; Williams v. Moore, 32 Ala. 506; directly; 10 East 205; see Conard v. Dowling, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 481; without departing from the allegations of the declaration in any material matter; Burk v. Huber, 2 Watts (Pa.) 306; Breck v. Blanchard, 22 N. H. 303; see DEPARTURE; with certainty; Sealey v. Thomas, 6 Fla. 25; see CERTAINTY; and without duplication; Hereford v. Crow, 3 Scam. (Ill.) 423; Downer v. Rowell, 26 Vt. 397; Ames v. West, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 211; see DUPLICATION. Although the replication is a departure from the complaint, yet the defendant cannot avail himself of such a defect in a court of error, where he did not raise the question by demurrer or by motion, but went to trial upon the issues as made up; Ankeny v. Clark, 148 U. S. 345, 13 Sup. Ct. 617, 37 L. Ed. 475.

An objection that replications were not filed to the defendant's pleas when the trial commenced, nor before judgment with leave of court, comes to late if made after entry of judgment; J. S. Keator Lumber Co. v. Thompson, 144 U. S. 434, 12 Sup. Ct. 669, 36 L. Ed. 495.

REPLY. See OPENING AND CLOSING; RIGHT TO BEGIN; BURDEN OF PROOF.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE. That communication which the chairman makes to the house upon the close of the investigation in which the committee has been engaged.

REPORT OFFICE. Formerly a department of the English court of chancery. Whart.

REPORTING, COUNCIL OF LAW. The Incorporated Council of Law Reporting for England and Wales has charge of reporting and publishing the cases in those two countries.

REPORTS. A printed or written collection of accounts or relations of cases judicially argued and determined.

The value and force of adjudicated precedents, which is, to a greater or less degree, acknowledged in the jurisprudence of all civilized countries, is elsewhere discussed under the titles herein, judge-made law, precedent, and stare decisis. The greater weight given to precedent, however, in England and America, makes the subject of law reporting one of the utmost interest and importance. The multiplication of reports has given rise to much discussion on the subject.

In a report to the American Bar Association, 1898, by Edward Q. Keasbey, it was suggested that the evils of excessive reports would be lessened if the court could be induced to write shorter opinions, especially when passing upon well-settled principles of law, and if the dissenting opinions were brief. The committee thought that dissenting opinions should be published. Only the important cases should be reported, omitting those which decide only questions of fact, or reaffirm settled principles of law, the selection to be made by the reporter. In preparing the syllabus all dicta should be omitted, and also propositions of law made by the court arguendo. The reporter should state the facts even though they are stated by the court; an abstract of the arguments should be printed only in novel and important cases.

It was said in 1907 that there were about 14,500 volumes of reports; see Bulletin of Amer. Libr. Assoc. p. 94; and that, up to 1906, 725,000 cases had been reported and that 23,000 were being reported each year. See Index to Leg. Periodicals, April, 1909.

Prior to 1800, there were only one or two American Reports. In England there were many, but before the period of official reporting, and particularly among the early reports, there is a great difference in the value of the reports published by volunteer reporters. While some of them are of the highest authority, both in England and America, others are of little or, in many cases, of no authority whatever, and it is of the highest importance that a lawyer in citing them should know the character of the volume cited.

They are often mere note-books of lawyers or of students, or copies hastily and very inaccurately made from genuine manuscripts. In some instances one part of the book is good, when another is perfectly worthless. This is especially true of the early Chancery Reports, which were generally printed as booksellers' "jobs."

The failure to give due attention to the character of the old reports has led to grave judicial errors. Mr. John William Wallace, in "The Reporters," calls attention to the fact that the opinion of Chief Justice Marshall, which "had the effect of almost totally subverting in two states of our Union the entire law of charitable uses," relied upon an authority, which, twenty-five years afterwards, under the critical examination of Mr. Binney, was shown to be no authority, and the opinion passed upon it was overruled. The necessity of attention to the apparent value of the old reports is enhanced by the fact that even in books of the worst authority, there are occasional cases well reported, and different parts of the same book are of very different value. The most thorough and satisfactory source of information on this subject is "The Reporters," the author of which made the most exhaustive investigations in London, and his work received the highest commendation from English judges; 5 C. B. N. S. 854, where the book was characterized "as highly valuable and interesting," and one to which "they could not refrain from referring" on a question involving the reputation of one of the early English reporters. See, also, Sir F. Pollock in 1903 Am. Bar. Assoc. Report as to the value of Mr. Wallace's work.

For a history of the "Law Reports" in England, with much information on reporting, see Daniel, History of the Origin of the Law Reports, 1884.

See 1 Abbott's National Digest x, for much information as to the Federal Reports, other than those in the supreme court. The federal cases (except in the supreme court) have been reprinted in thirty volumes, under the name of "Federal Cases."

In volume 30 of the series is much information as to the early Federal Reports other than those of the supreme court.

English Reports (15 Harv. 2 Rev. 1, 109; 2 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. L. H. 123). He is referred to below as Veeder.

For a list of reports, see Soule, Lawyers' Reference Manual, which gives the chronology of all reports; also Brief Making, by Lile and others, 3d Ed. by R. W. Cooley.

The National Reporter System reports currently in full all decisions, without selection or abridgment, of the courts of last resort of every state, also the decisions of the circuit and district courts, circuit courts of appeals, commerce court, and the supreme court of the United States. The decisions are published in two editions; first in weekly pamphlet form, as advance sheets, and later in bound volumes. There are ten distinct publications of this series, viz.:

The Northwestern Reporter, established in 1879, reporting the decisions in Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska, Dakota, and North and South Dakota; the Pacific Reporter, established in 1883, reporting the decisions in California, Colorado, Idaho, Oregon, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, Kansas, Oklahoma, Arizona, Utah, Washington, and Wyoming; the Northeastern Reporter, established in 1885, reporting the decisions in New York, Massachusetts, Ohio, Illinois, and Indiana; the Atlantic Reporter, established in 1885, reporting the decisions in Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Connecticut, Rhode Island, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, and Maryland; the Southwestern Reporter, established in 1886, reporting the decisions in Missouri, Arkansas, Indian Territory, Texas, Kentucky, and Tennessee; the Southeastern Reporter, established in 1887, reporting the decisions in Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia; the Southern Reporter, established in 1887, reporting the decisions in Alabama, Florida, Louisiana, and Mississippi.

The New York Supplement was established in 1888 and reports the decisions of lower courts of record of the state of New York.

The Federal Reporter, established in 1880, contains the decisions of the United States circuit and district courts since that year and of the United States circuit courts of appeals and commerce court, from the organization of those courts.

The Supreme Court Reporter covers the decisions of the United States supreme court. It begins with volume 106 of the United States Reports and continues to date; one volume is published each year. In this series the decisions are first published in the form of biweekly advance sheets, during the term of court, then the bound volume is published, containing in full a report of all the cases decided during the year.

In addition to the various official and non-official reporting systems, there are several non-official series of law reports that publish selected cases only.

The "Lawyers' Reports Annotated" contains cases selected from the current decisions of the courts of last resort of the several states and territories and of the United States supreme and other federal courts. The series began in 1888, and comprises four volumes a year. In 1906, when 70 volumes had been published, a new series was begun. The new series are issued at the rate of about six volumes per year.

The "American Decisions" is a series of 100 volumes, purporting to contain the cases "of general value and authority" from the earliest state reports to the year 1869.

The "American Reports" is a continuation of the American Decisions, and comprises cases selected from the state reports published during the years 1869 to 1887. There are 60 volumes of this series.

The "American State Reports" is a continuation of the American Reports, and publishes cases selected from the state reports issued between 1887 and 1911. This series terminated with volume 140, issued in 1911.

The three series above named are sometimes styled "The Trinity." They do not cover any decisions of the inferior federal courts nor of the United States supreme court.

The "American and English Annotated Cases" began in 1906, and purports to contain the "Important Cases Selected from the Current American, Canadian and English Reports." Beginning with the twenty second volume of this series, it was merged with the American State Reports. Although published jointly, and identical in contents, the books are issued under separate designations by the two publishers. The series succeeding the American State Reports is published under the title "American Annotated Cases" (cited "Ann. Cas.") and designated by year and number, i. e., 1912A, 1912B, etc. The publishers of the original series, however, retain the title originally adopted, together with the numerical sequence, and add an extra label at the bottom of each volume, giving the corresponding designation of the American Annotated Cases. Thus, vol. 22 American and English Annotated Cases is also labeled "Ann. Cas. 1912A."

Up to the year 1865, the English reports are entitled by the name of the reporter and commonly cited by abbreviation of the reporter's name. The year 1865 marked the organization of the Council of Law Reporting and the establishment of the "Law Reports," a system which has been in operation ever since.

As first established, the Law Reports comprised a separate series for each of the courts, including the House of Lords and the Privy Council Appeal Cases. In 1875 the series was consolidated into six series, namely, the Appeal Cases, Chancery Division, Common Pleas Division, Exchequer Division, Probate Division, and Queen's Bench Division. Commencing with 1881, cases in the Common Pleas and Exchequer Division are reported in the Queen's Bench Division, so that, at present, there are four series, namely, Appeal Cases, Chancery, King's Bench, and Probate.

The Law Reports are cited by the court or division. Up to 1875, the mode of citation was, for example: Goodwin v. Robarts, L. R. 10 Exch. 337, indicating that this case was found in the Law Reports, vol. 10, of the Exchequer Reports. After 1875, when the first consolidation took place, cases were cited merely by the division, for example: Perry v. Barnett, 15 Q. B. D. 388, indicating that this case was found in Law Reports, vol. 15, of the Queen's Bench Division. In 1891, a new style of citation was adopted, the year being added to the citation. For example: Sanderson v. Collins, [1904] 1 K. B. 628, indicating that this case is to be found in the Law Reports, vol. 1, of the King's Bench Division for the year 1904.

CITATION OF IRISH REPORTS. Up to the year 1838, the Irish reports are entitled by the name of the reporter and commonly cited by an abbreviation of the reporter's name. In 1838 the two series entitled, respectively, "Irish Law Reports" and "Irish Equity Reports," commenced publication. Each of these ran to thirteen volumes, covering the years 1838-1850. They were continued by the "Irish Common Law Reports" (17 volumes, 1849-1866), and the "Irish Chancery Reports" (17 volumes, 1850-1866), which were in turn continued by the "Irish Reports, Common Law Series" (11 volumes, 1866-1877), and the "Irish Reports, Equity Series" (11 volumes, 1866-1877). In 1878 the "Irish Law Reports" were established. These reports ran to 32 volumes, covering the years 1878-1893, and were continued by the "Irish Reports," which is the present series. The "Irish Reports" are issued in two volumes a year and are cited by year and volume, as "(1894) 2 I. R. 512."

Among the English reporters the following possess little authority: Noy, Godbolt, Owen, Popham, Winch, March, Hutton, Ley, Lane, Hetley, Carter, J. Bridgman, Keble, Siderfin, Latch, several volumes of the "Modern" Reports, 3d Salkeld, Gilbert's Cases in Law and Equity, the 1st and 2d parts of "Reports in Chancery," Chancery Cases, Reports temp. Finch, "Gilbert's Reports," 8th Taunton, Peake's Nisi Prius Reports. The following: Barnardiston, Fitzgibbon, W. Kelynge, Barnes, Ridgeway, Lee, Cunningham, Andrews, and Willes (1737-60), are said to be, "most of them, of inferior workmanship." Veeder. The same author states that Atkins and Vesey, Sr., are "extremely unsatisfactory, though improved in subsequent editions."

Prof. Wambaugh (Study of Cases) speaks of the "many cases excellently reported by Dyer, Plowden, Coke, Croke, Yelverton, Hobart, and Saunders." The first reporter to make orderly and condensed reports in harmony with modern ideas was Sir James Burrow.

Want of space requires the omission of a detailed list of reports, but a few of the comments upon the older reporters are given here.

Abbreviatio Placitorum. An old collection of cases (1619-1626) abbreviated from the rolls of Rich. I to Edw. II, containing the earliest authentic statement of the common law and the working of the Curia Regis. 2 Holdsworth, Hist. Engl. Law 144. It was reprinted in 1811 by the Record Commission.

Aleyn (John). K. B., 1646-48. 1 vol. These are reports of cases in the time of the civil wars of Charles I., and do not possess much authority, though containing reports of Rolle's decisions.

Ambler (Charles). Cases in the High Court of Ch., 1737-83. Second edition by J. E. Blunt, 2 vols. (1828). As originally published of very little authority, but much improved by Mr. Blunt. "Extremely unsatisfactory;" Veeder.

Barnardiston (Thomas). High Ct. of Ch., 1740-41. 1 vol. Lord Mansfield (2 Burr. 1142) forbade the citing of this book as it would be only misleading the students to put them upon reading it. He said it was marvellous, however, to those who knew the sergeant and his manner of taking notes, that he should so often stumble upon what was right; but that there was not one case in his book which was so throughout. Lord Eldon, however, in 1 Bligh, N. R. 538, says, "in that book there are reports of very great authority."

Barnardiston (Thomas). K. B., 1726-34. 2 vols. A book which for many years was very little esteemed, the author having been reputed a careless fellow who let the wags scribble what they liked in his note-book while he was asleep. However, where his accuracy has been tested, as it has been of later times, it has come out pretty fairly; and now both the K. B. and Ch. reports of Barnardiston are reasonably respected. See Wallace, Report. 423.

Bendloes (Gulielme). All the Courts, 1531-1628. 1 vol. Properly cited as New Benloe, sometimes as old Benloe.

Benloe (Gulielme) & Dalison (Gulielme). C. P. Benloe contains cases from 1532 to 1579, and Dalison from 1546 to 1574. 1 vol. of each, bound together. There is very great confusion in the citations of the reports of Benloe and Dalison. Some cases of Benloe's are given at the end of Keilway's Reports and of Ashe's Tables. It is supposed that the title New Benloe was given to the volume here given as Bendloes to distinguish it from the cases in Keilway and Ashe. The volume given as Benloe & Dalison consists in reality of two separate series of reports, paged independently, although bound together, and the modes of reference are very various, being sometimes to Dalison when Benloe is intended, and vice versa. A full account is given in Wallace's Report. They are said to be of secondary value.

Blackstone (William). K. B., C. P., and Exch. Chamber, 1746-79. 2 vols. Lord Mansfield said (Dougl. 92, n.): "We must not always rely on the words of reports, though under great names. Mr. Justice Blackstone's reports are not very accurate," but of late they have been well edited, and are more esteemed.

Bosanquet (J. B.) & Puller (C.). New Reports, C. P., Exch. Chamb., and House of Lords, 1804-07. 3 vols. Bosanquet & Puller are generally cited from 1 to 5 in American books. In English books the latter series is frequently cited as New Reports.

Bracton. Sir F. Pollock expresses the opinion that Bracton may perhaps be fairly reckoned as a book of reports. His name was Bratton. His Note Book has been edited by Maitland in three volumes (1887); but it has been declared that he can safely be cited only for historical illustration; [1896] A. C. 3.

Brooke (Robert). New Cases. Called also Petit Brooke, Little Brooke and Bellewe's Cases, temp. Henry VIII. Cases in the K. B., C. P., and Exch., 1515-58, selected out of Brooke's Abridgment by Richard Bellewe. Of secondary value.

Burrow (James). K. B., 1756-71. 5 vols. A full, excellent, and accurate reporter, who holds in a legal point of view the same relation to Lord Mansfield that in a literary and historical one Boswell does to Dr. Johnson. He marked an epoch in law reporting, and was the first to prefix a statement of the facts; supra.

Carthew (Thomas). King's Bench, 3 Jac. II.-12 Will. III. 1 vol. Lord Thurlow said, "Carthew and his book were equally bad authority," but Lord Kenyon, in 2 Term 776, says that Carthew is in general a good reporter. See also Willes 182. "Of poor reputation;" Veeder.

Cary (George). Ch., 1557-1604. 1 vol. Frequently mere transcripts from the Registrar's books.

Cases in B. R. temp. Holt. Cases and Resolutions in the Court of K. B., 1714-29. 1 vol. This must not be mistaken for "Reports temp. Holt," for which see "Holt."

Cases in Chancery. Two parts in 1 vol.; with this is usually bound "Select Cases in the High Ct. of Ch.," which contains the cases of the Duke of Norfolk and of the Earls of Bath and Montagu; it is cited as 1, 2, and 3 "Chancery Cases." A book of notoriously doubtful authority; Wallace, Reporters, approved in 19 L. Q. Rev. 236.

Cases tempore Hardwicke. K. B. at Westminster during the time of Hardwicke, usually cited as Hardwicke's Cases, which see; see also Ridgway.

Cases tempore Talbot. K. B., C. P., and Ch., 1734-38. 1 vol. By Alex. Forrester to page 217, and from there to the end, by Hawkins. A book of highly respectable authority, though not a monument worthy of Lord Talbot's transcendent virtue. Wallace, Report. 506.

Cases tempore William III. King's Bench, 1690-1702. 1 vol. See Modern, vol. 12. Buller said in Dougl. 83, "12 Modern is not a book of any authority."

Choyce Chancery Cases, 1557-1606. 1 vol. A very good little book, so far as it goes. See Wallace, Report. 470, where curious extracts are given from the volume. Reprinted, 1870.

Coke (Edward). King's Bench, Common Pleas, Exchequer, and Chancery, 1572-1618. 13 parts or volumes. He published the first part or volume in 1600 and the eleventh in 1616. A twelfth part was published in 1634 and a thirteenth in 1637. The last two are of inferior authority. Coke's Reports are usually called "The Reports." They are not, strictly speaking, reports, but each case constitutes a treatise on the point at issue. Lord Coke's reports are very voluminous. They have been severely criticised by Sir Edward Sugden, Lord Redesdale, and others, and Coke charged with "telling untruths" in them; but the charges made against him have been examined by Wallace (Reporters, p. 165), and Coke's integrity vindicated. The twelfth report is "a book of inferior authority." Pollock, Expansion of the C. L. 71. And see under the head of Plowden.

Comberbach (Roger). K. B., 1685-99. It is said by Lord Thurlow (1 Bro. C. C. 97) to be bad authority, though a few cases are better reported than in any other place. Its chief use is for comparison with other reports of the same cases. Wallace, Report. 396.

Cox (Edward W.). Criminal Cas. in all the Cts. in England and Ireland, 1843-81. 14 vols. These reports, which are edited by Mr. Cox, are prepared by a large number of reporters. Volume 12 is of questionable authority; 10 B. & C. 275.

Croke (Sir George). Ch., K. B., and C. P., 1582-1641. 4 vols. The reports in Croke are generally short, and, as the books consist of four closely-printed volumes, the cases are, of course, very numerous. Occasionally cases are misreported: but taken as a whole, Croke has enjoyed from early times a high reputation, and even now is constantly cited. Wallace, Report. 198. The Chancery cases in the time of Elizabeth are Sir Harbottle Grimston's. The reports are commonly cited by the name of the author and the reigning sovereign; vols. 1 and 2 as Croke (or Cro.) Eliz.; vol. 3 as Croke Jac.; and vol. 4 as Croke Car.

Davies, or Davis, or Davy (Sir John). K. B., C. P., and Exch. in Ireland, 1604-12. 1 vol. Davies, who was chief-justice of Ireland, and died on the night of the day on which he had been appointed chief-justice of England, was a man of great genius and accomplishments. See Wallace, Report. 229.

Dickens (John). High Ct. of Ch., 1559-1798. 2 vols. Dickens was a very attentive and diligent register; but his notes, being rather loose, are not to be considered as of very high authority. Lord Redesdale, 1 Sch. & L. 240. See, also, Sugd. Vend. 146. A few cases, where the opinions are printed from manuscripts prepared for publication, are valuable. Wallace, Report. 476.

Dyer (Sir James). K. B. and C. P. Exch. and Ch., 1513-82. 3 vols. Short notes, never intended by Dyer to have been published; always regarded, however, as among the best of the old reports. Wallace, Report. 126.

Ellis (Thomas F.) & Blackburn (Colm). Q. B., 1852-58. 8 vols. Among modern reports few are more valued for the success with which extraneous matter is stripped off and nothing but the essence of the case presented to the reader. 9 Lond. Law Mag. 339.

Equity Cases Abridged. Cases in the High Court of Ch., 1667-1744. 3 vols. This work is a digest, rather than reports, and is frequently cited. The first volume, which is attributed to Pooley, is of excellent authority; the second, much less so. Seldom cited without misgiving; 19 L. Q. R. 236.

Fortesque (John). Select cases in all the courts of Westminster Hall, tempore Will. III., Anne, Geo. I., and Geo. II.; also the Opinion of all the Judges of England relative to the Grandest Prerogatives of the royal family, and some observations relating to the Prerogative of a Queen-Consort. 1 vol.

Freeman (Richard). K. B. and C. P., 1670-1704. 1 vol. Freeman's note-book having been stolen by a student, and these reports published surreptitiously, they were for a long time but little esteemed. Of late, however, they have been re-edited, and enjoy a higher reputation than they formerly did. Lord Mansfield said, in Cowp. 16, "Some of the cases in Freeman are very well reported." Wallace, Report. 390.

Gilbert (J.). Cases in Law and Eq., 1713-15. 1 vol. A posthumous work, containing one or two cases well reported, but generally consisting of loose notes very badly edited. Wallace, Report. 251. "Of little value;" Veeder. Commonly cited as Gilbert's Cases.

Hardwicke's Cases. Court of King's Bench at Westminster, 7th to 10th Geo. II., during which time Hardwicke presided in that court, to which are added some cases decided by Lee and two Equity cases by Hardwicke.

Hetley (Sir Thomas). C. P., 1627-31. 1 vol. Not marked by any peculiar skill, accuracy, or information. Dougl. ix. Not valued. 2 Jurid. Soc. Papers 577.

Hobart (Sir Henry). C. P. and Ch., 1-23 Jac. I. Hobart was a great judge; and these reports, which are by himself, have always been esteemed. Wallace (Report. p. 163) cites from Judge Jenkins a splendid tribute to his character.

Holt. Reports tempore Holt. K. B., C. P., Exch., and Ch., 1688-1710. 1 vol., by Giles Jacob. (Taken from a MS. of Thomas Farresley.) In Rex v. Bishop of London, 1 Wilson, 15, Lee, C. J., said this was a book of no authority.

Howell (Thomas B.) & (Thomas J.). State Trials and Proceedings for High Treason and other Crimes and Misdemeanors, 1163-1820. 33 vols., and Index.

Vol. 1-21, 1163-1783. T. B. Howell.
22-33, 1783-1820. T. J. Howell.

This is an immense collection of cases, brought together by hunting through every collection in England, and, therefore, having very different degrees of merit. For a full account of its character and value, see Wallace's Report. 64.

Hutton (Sir Richard). C. P., 1612-38. 1 vol. This book seems to belong to that class of literary productions which do not obtain notoriety enough to be abused. Wallace, Report. 246.

Jenkins (David). Exchequer, 1220-1623. 1 vol. Eight centuries, or eight hundred cases. See an account of Jenkins, who was a Welsh judge, by D'Israeli, given in Wallace's Report. 71. The reports of Jenkins were prepared in prison, where Jenkins was put for his loyalty to Charles I. and kept for fifteen years. The book is of excellent authority. Brief, but accurate.

Jones (Sir William). K. B. and C. P., House of Lords, and Exch. Chamb., 1620-41. It is a book of good authority. It is sometimes cited as 1st Jones, to distinguish it from Sir Thomas Jones, which is then correspondingly cited as 2d Jones.

Keble (Joseph). K. B., 12-20 Car. II. 3 vols., an inaccurate reporter, yet a tolerable historian of the law; 3 Wils. 330. Not a satisfactory reporter, but a pretty good register, and more esteemed of late, perhaps, than formerly. Wallace, Report. 315. Lord Kenyon reprimanded counsel for citing Keble; 6 Bing. 664.

Kellway (Robert). K. B. and C. P. It also contains some cases incerti temporis, and some temp. Edw. III. The volume, having been edited by John Croke, is sometimes cited as Croke's Reports. See Wallace, Report. 119. Of secondary value. Its preface shows it to be a selection from

- Keilwey's common place book made by Croke as a supplement to the contemporary Year Books; 24 L. Q. R. 7.
- Leonard (William). K. B., C. P., and Exch., 1549-1615. A very good and much-esteemed reporter; one of the best, indeed, of the old books. See Wallace, Report. 142, referring to Sugden, Lord Nottingham, and Sir George Treby.
- Ley (Sir James). King's Bench, C. P., Ex., and Court of Wards, and Star Chamber, 1608-29. 1 vol. The book is seldom cited; Wallace, Report. 241. It is sometimes cited as Leigh; id. 244.
- Lofft (Capel). K. B., C. P., and Ch., 1772-74. 1 vol. Not a highly esteemed reporter, but the only volume giving an account of the case of the negro Somerset.
- Meeson (R.) & Welsby (W. N.). Exch. and Exch. Chamb., 1836-47. 16 vols. Among the most useful and best reported of the modern English reports.
- Modern Cases in Law and Equity. See Modern Reports, parts 8 & 9; in 1 Burr. 386, it is observed, that it is a miserable, bad book, and in 3 Burr. 1326, the court said they treated it with the contempt it deserved.
- Modern Reports. Select Cases in the K. B., C. P., Ch., and Exch., 1669-1732. 12 vols. By various hands, and of various degrees of excellence; some are very inferior. See much learning on the subject in Wallace, Report. 347-390. They are not treated with respect in the courts; Odger, C. L. See Modern Cases in Law and Equity.
- Moore (Edmund F.). Cases in Privy Council. New Series, 1862-73. 9 vols. Vol. 3, p. 347 to the end, and vols. 4-9 are identical word for word with 1-4 Law Reports, Privy Council.
- Moore (Francis). K. B., C. P., Exch., and Ch., 1512-1612. 1 vol. Moore's Reports are printed from a genuine manuscript, and are esteemed valuable and accurate.
- Mosely (William). High Court of Ch., time of King, 1726-30. 1 vol. Condemned by Lord Mansfield, but perhaps on insufficient ground. Lord Eldon, a better judge of the merits of a Chancery Reporter, spoke well of it (19 Ves. 488, n.), as did also Mr. Hargrave. Wallace, Report. 504. "Not particularly good;" Veeder.
- New Reports. See Bosanquet & Puller.
- Noy (William). K. B. and C. P., 1559-1649. 1 vol. This is an abridgment by Serjeant Size, who when a student borrowed Noy's Reports and abridged them for his own use. Vide Ventr. 81; 2 Keb. 652; for a full account see Wallace, Report. 154.
- Plowden (Edmund). K. B., C. P., and Exch., 1550-80. 1 vol. Probably the most full, finished, and thoroughly accurate of the old reporters; always highly esteemed. Plowden and Coke are the classical reporters of the common law; 2 Sel. Essays, Anglo-Amer. Leg. Hist. 128.
- Raymond (Lord Robert). K. B. and C. P., 1694-1734. 3 vols. Some of the earlier cases in Lord Raymond, having been taken when he was a young man, or copied from the papers of his different young friends, have not been so highly esteemed, perhaps, as his other cases, which are, generally speaking, his own. As a whole, his reports are highly respected, and often cited, even in this day and country. Wallace, Report. 401. "His reports of Holt's decisions are of excellent authority;" Veeder.
- Ridgeway (William). K. B. and Ch., at the time Lord Hardwicke presided in those courts. King's Bench, 1736, Chancery, 1744-45.
- Salkeld (William). K. B., C. H., C. P., and Exch., 1 Will. III. to 10 Anne. 3 vols. The third volume having been published from notes less carefully prepared than the first two (published under the supervision of Lord Hardwicke) is not accounted as of the highest authority. The first two volumes "are too brief to be clear;" Veeder.
- Saunders. K. B., 1666-1673. The most accurate and valuable reporter of his age. His work was subsequently enriched by the notes of Serjeant Williams, and is cited as Williams' Saunders.
- Saville (Sir John). C. P. and Exch., 1580-94. This book, says Wallace (Report. 197), appears "to have no character at all. I have not found a word upon it, either of censure or of praise."
- Sayer (Joseph). K. B., 1751-56. 1 vol. "An inaccurate reporter." 1 Sugd. Vend. 80.
- Select Chancery Cases. High Court of Ch. Containing the great cases of the Duke of Norfolk, and of the Earls of Bath and Montague. (This is part 3 of Chancery Cases, and is usually bound with parts 1 and 2.)
- Strange (Sir John). Ch., K. B., C. P., and Exch. 2 vols. Authoritative, though too brief in the style of reporting. Mr. Nolan, in 1795, published a new edition, which has rendered Strange more valuable than he was. Wallace, Report. 420.
- Style (William). K. B., "now Upper Bench," 1646-1655. Printed from a genuine manuscript, and esteemed.
- Taunton (William P.). C. P. and other Cts., 1807-19. 8 vols. The eighth volume is not very highly esteemed, having been made up from his notes and not supervised by him. Wallace, Report. 533, note; 9 Lond. Law Mag. 339.
- Term Reports. 1785-1800, covering the period of Kenyon, C. J.
- Vaughan (Sir J.). C. P., 1665-74. 1 vol. Edited by Edward Vaughan. Containing some cases from his own perfected manuscript, very well reported, but some others not fully prepared, and not so much esteemed. Vaughan was an interesting character, upon whose merits the author of

- The Reporters dwells with interest. See page 334.
- Vernon (Thomas). High Ct. of Ch., 1680-1719. 2 vols. Vernon was a very eminent chancery lawyer; but his reports were posthumously published from notes found in his study after his death. They were loose, and on that account unsatisfactory and inaccurate. A very highly improved edition was published in 1806, 1807, by Mr. Raithby, under the auspices of Lord Eldon. The manuscript reports of Vernon were the subject of an entertaining chancery suit between his widow, his heir-at-law, and his residuary legatee. No one of the parties, however, succeeded; and the case was ended by the lord chancellor's keeping the manuscript himself. See Wallace, Report. 493.
- West (Martin, J.). High Court of Ch., 1736-39. 1 vol. A book published only of recent time, though from ancient and genuine manuscripts. It is a good work so far as it goes, but, unfortunately, includes but a short term of Lord Hardwicke's administration in Chancery.
- Willes (John). C. P., Exch. Chamb., Ch., and House of Lords, 1737-58. 1 vol. Edited by Charles Durnford. Posthumously published, but quite authoritative and useful.
- Wilson. 1743-1774, C. P. "A very accurate work;" Veeder.
- Year-Books. See YEAR-BOOKS; C. C. Soule in Harv. L. Rev. (1901).
- Yelverton (Sir Henry). K. B., 1603-13. 1 vol. Excellent reports of a first-rate old-school English lawyer, and admirably edited in America by Judge Metcalf. See Wallace, Report. 211, where a full biographical sketch of the gifted and unfortunate reporter is given.

REPRESENT. To exhibit, to expose before the eyes. To represent a thing is to produce it publicly. Dig. 10. 4. 2. 3.

REPRESENTATION. In Insurance. The stating of facts by either of the parties to a policy of insurance, to the other, whether in writing or orally, expressly or by plain implication, preliminary and in reference to making the insurance, obviously tending to influence the other as to entering into the contract. Augusta Ins. & B. Co. v. Abbott, 12 Md. 348; Lee v. Fire Ins. Co., 11 Cush. (Mass.) 324; Sawyer v. Mut. Ins. Co., 6 Gray (Mass.) 221.

A statement incidental to the contract, relative to some fact having reference thereto, and upon the faith of which the contract is made. May, Ins. 190. It may be affirmative or promissory.

The distinction between representation and warranty must be carefully observed; the latter is a part of the contract, the former is but a statement incidental thereto. In an action on the policy the plaintiff must show facts sufficient to bring him within the terms of the warranty, while the burden of proving the untruthfulness of representations, if any, is on the defendant. Further, representations need not be literally complied with; Etna Ins. Co. v. Simmons, 49 Neb. 811, 69 N. W. 125; but only in material points; while in cases of warranty, the question of materiality does not arise; May, Ins. § 183. All reasonable doubts as to whether statements inserted in or referred to in an insurance policy are warranties or representations should be resolved in favor of the assured; Providence Life Assur. Soc. v. Reutlinger, 58 Ark. 528, 25 S. W. 835. Representations in writing are, ipso facto, material; 4 H. L. C. 484; Campbell v. Life Ins. Co., 98 Mass. 381; Miller v. Life Ins. Co., 31 Ia. 216, 7 Am. Rep. 122. Representations are material though the fact represented may not relate directly to the risk; Valton v. Life Assur. Co., 20 N. Y. 32.

Doctrines respecting representation and concealment usually have reference to those by the assured, upon whose knowledge and statement of facts the insurance is usually made; but the doctrine on the subject is equally applied to the underwriter, so far as facts are known to him; 3 Burr. 1905.

In the absence of fraud, deceit, or misrepresentation, the assured cannot be protected by ignorance of the contents of the application, since it is his duty to inform himself of its contents before signing; Herdon v. Triple Alliance, 45 Mo. App. 426; and it is the duty of the assured to communicate all material facts, and he cannot urge as an excuse for his omission to do so that they were actually known to the underwriters, unless the knowledge of the latter was as full and particular as his own information; Sun Mut. Ins. Co. v. Ins. Co., 107 U. S. 485, 1 Sup. Ct. 582, 27 L. Ed. 337.

A misrepresentation though made unintentionally, or through mistake, makes the insurance void, notwithstanding its being free from fraud. See Mut. Benefit Life Ins. Co. v. Daviess' Ex'r, 87 Ky. 541, 9 S. W. 812.

The material falsity of an oral promissory representation, without fraud, is no defence in an action on a policy. If made with the intent to deceive, the policy may be thereby avoided. Promissory representations, reduced to writing and made a part of the contract, become substantial warranties; May, Ins. § 182. See Kimball v. Ins. Co., 9 Allen (Mass.) 540, 85 Am. Dec. 786.

A substantial compliance with a representation is sufficient,—the rule being less strict than in case of a warranty; Miller v. Life Ins. Co., 31 Ia. 216, 7 Am. Rep. 122; Mut. Benefit Life Ins. Co. v. Wise, 34 Md. 582. The validity of the policy does not depend on the literal truth of the assertion; Etna Ins. Co. v. Simmons, 49 Neb. 811, 69 N. W. 125. The substantial truth of the statement is for the jury, but not its materiality; May, Ins. § 187.

In a Virginia case it was said that the laying off and defining of districts under a constitutional requirement that they should be of contiguous counties, etc., compact, and, as nearly as may be, equal in population, was an exercise of political and discretionary power of the legislature for which they are amenable to the people; Wise v. Bigger, 79 Va. 269; but this, it is remarked, "was a mere declaration of the court without discussion of the question and without any facts reported which show any attempt at a gerrymander"; 15 L. R. A. 561, note.

Any clear violation of the constitutional provisions will make an apportionment invalid; as, the division of a county or district where the constitution forbids it; State v. Cunningham, 81 Wis. 440, 51 N. W. 724, 15 L. R. A. 561; or the allotment of a greater number of representatives than the constitution directs; State v. Francis, 26 Kan. 724; and glaring inequalities either of representation or of population in the districts will be considered a sufficient indication that the legislature has exceeded its discretion; State v. Cunningham, 83 Wis. 90, 53 N. W. 35, 17 L. R. A. 145, 35 Am. St. Rep. 27; Giddings v. Blacker, 93 Mich. 1, 52 N. W. 944, 16 L. R. A. 402; People v. Canaday, 73 N. C. 198, 21 Am. Rep. 465; Parker v. State, 133 Ind. 178, 32 N. E. 836, 33 N. E. 119, 18 L. R. A. 567; contra People v. Rice, 135 N. Y. 473, 31 N. E. 921, 16 L. R. A. 836, as to which see 31 Am. Law Reg. 851. The opinion by Peckham, J., in the New York case takes a radically different view of the nature of the power involved in the apportionment of a state for representatives from that expressed in the other cases cited, particularly those from Indiana and New Jersey. He says: "From the formation of government under written constitutions in this country the question of the basis of representation in the legislative branch of the government has been one of the most important and most frequently debated. It is not true that equality of members in representation has been the leading idea at all times in regard to republican institutions. . . . The power to readjust the political divisions of a sovereignty with the view of representation of those divisions or of the inhabitants thereof, in the legislature, resides, of course, in the first instance, with the people, who in this country are the source of all political power. The essential nature of the power itself is not, however, altered by that fact. In its nature it is political as distinguished from legislative or judicial."

If the discretion of the legislature is fairly exercised, the apportionment will be sustained even if not mathematically correct; State v. Campbell, 48 Ohio St. 438, 27 N. E. 884; Prouty v. Stover, 11 Kan. 235, per Brewer, J.; Opinion of the Justices, 18 Me. 458; but there can be no legislative discretion to give a county of less population than another greater representation under a constitution requiring representative districts to contain "as nearly as may be" an equal number of inhabitants; Board of Supervisors v. Blacker, 92 Mich. 638.

These principles have been also applied to apportionments made by minor administrative bodies to which the power is granted; In re Baird, 142 N. Y. 523, 37 N. E. 619; In re Whitney, 142 N. Y. 531, 37 N. E. 621; Baird v. Supervisors, 138 N. Y. 95, 33 N. E. 827, 20 L. R. A. 81. In the case last cited a distinction was made by Peckham, J., between the legislative power of apportionment and that confided to an inferior body. The former, it was said, might reasonably be considered a power to divide according to the legislative discretion, "but in the case of inferior bodies, like boards of supervisors, who have no legislative power excepting what is specifically granted, the power to divide being given, the implication would be strong that it was only a power to divide equally." Nevertheless, as some discretion was necessarily involved, it must be an honest and a fair discretion arising out of the circumstances of the case and reasonably affecting the exercise of the power of equal division. But it was not to be considered "that every trifling deviation from equality of population would justify or warrant an application to a court for redress. . . . It must be a grave, palpable, and unreasonable deviation from the standard," making it apparent "that very great and wholly unnecessary inequality has been intentionally provided for." Baird v. Supervisors, 138 N. Y. 95, 33 N. E. 827, 20 L. R. A. 81.

As to the apportionment of representatives in congress among the states, see APPORTIONMENT; and see, generally, JUDICIAL POWER; LEGISLATIVE POWER.

REPRESENTATIVE DEMOCRACY. A form of government where the powers of the sovereignty are delegated to a body of men, elected from time to time, who exercise them for the benefit of the whole nation. 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 31.

REPRESENTATIVE PEERS. See PEERS.

REPRIEVE (from Fr. repandre, to take back). The withdrawing of a sentence for an interval of time, which operates in delay of execution. 4 Bla. Com. 394.

It is granted by the favor of the pardoning power, or by the court who tried the prisoner. Reprieves are sometimes granted ex necessitate legis; for example, when a woman is convicted of a capital offence, after judgment she may allege pregnancy in delay of execution. In order, however, to render this plea available, she must be quick with child (q. v.), the law presuming—perhaps wrongly enough—that before that period life does not commence in the fetus; Co. 3d Inst. 17; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 368; 2 id. 413; 4 Bla. Com. 395. See JURY OF WOMEN.

The judge is also bound to grant a re-

Insurance against fire and on life rests upon the same general conditions of good faith as marine insurance; but in the first two classes the contract is usually based mainly upon statements by the applicant in written replies to numerous inquiries expressly referred to in the policy, which answers are thus made express warranties and must, accordingly, be strictly true whether their being so is or is not material to the risk. The inquiries are intended to cover all material circumstances, subject, however, to the principle, applicable to all contracts, that fraud by either party will exonerate the other from his obligations, if he so elects; Smith v. Ins. Co., 24 Pa. 320; Glendale Woolen Co. v. Ins. Co., 21 Conn. 19, 54 Am. Dec. 309; Clark v. Ins. Co., 8 How. (U. S.) 235; 2 M. & W. 505; Continental L. Ins. Co. v. Rogers, 119 Ill. 482, 10 N. E. 242, 59 Am. Rep. 810; Alabama G. L. Ins. Co. v. Johnston, 80 Ala. 470, 2 South. 125, 59 Am. Rep. 816. See Cobb v. Ben. Ass'n, 153 Mass. 176, 26 N. E. 230, 10 L. R. A. 666, 25 Am. St. Rep. 619; CONCEALMENT; INSURANCE; MISREPRESENTATION; WARRANTY.

REPRESENTATION OF PERSONS. A fiction of the law, the effect of which is to put the representative in the place, degree, or right of the person represented.

The heir represents his ancestor; Bac. Abr. Heir and Ancestor (A); the devisee, his testator; the executor, his testator; the administrator, his intestate; the successor in corporations, the predecessor; and, generally speaking, they are entitled to the rights of the persons whom they represent, and bound to fulfil the duties and obligations which were binding upon them in those characters.

Representation was unknown to the Romans, and was invented by the commentators and doctors of the civil law. Toullier, Dr. Civ. Fr. liv. 3, t. 1, c. 3, n. 180. See Ayliffe, Pand. 397; Dalloz, Dict. Succession, art. 4, § 2.

REPRESENTATIVE. One who represents or is in the place of another.

In the law of decedents' estates any person who has succeeded to the rights of the decedent, whether by purchase, descent, or operation of law. Kroh v. Heins, 48 Neb. 691, 67 N. W. 771.

A representative of a deceased person, sometimes called a "personal representative," or "legal personal representative," is one who is executor or administrator of the person described. 6 Madd. 159; 5 Ves. 402. See Cox v. Curwen, 118 Mass. 200; Lodge v. Weld, 139 Mass. 504, 2 N. E. 95.

A gift in a will to the "representative" of a person is a gift to his legal personal representatives, in the absence of any context in the will showing that the word is to have a different meaning; 45 Ch. Div. 269.

See PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVES; LEGAL PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVE.

In legislation, it signifies one who has been elected a member of that branch of the legislature called the house of representatives.

The securing of fair apportionment of representatives in legislative bodies is one of the most serious problems in modern constitutional law, there being no subject as to which the legislation is more frequently affected by partisan bias. In many of the states there has been an effort to control the matter by constitutional provisions under which it is usually required that the districts shall be formed of contiguous territory and contain as nearly as possible an equal number of inhabitants. These are the principal provisions in the constitution of Illinois, in which state it was held that an apportionment act was valid which was a substantial compliance with the constitution, though the rule of compactness was only applied to a limited extent; People v. Thompson, 155 Ill. 451, 40 N. E. 307. The subject has been very carefully considered in Indiana. Among the conclusions reached there are: that under the state constitution requiring a sexennial enumeration of the male inhabitants over twenty-one years and an apportionment at the next legislative session thereafter, the legislature, having once made a valid apportionment after an enumeration, is prohibited from making a reapportionment and from repealing such valid apportionment during the enumeration period; that if the first apportionment is invalid, even before it has been declared so by the courts, a second may be passed; that the question of the validity of such a law is not a political one, to be determined only at the discretion of the legislature, but that it is entirely within the jurisdiction of the courts to determine its constitutionality; that where the question of constitutionality has been determined by a lower court in an action between the citizens, and an appeal is dismissed, the subject is not res judicata as against the state; and that the state is not estopped from objecting to the constitutionality of an apportionment by the fact that a legislature has been elected under an unconstitutional act; Board of Com'rs of Huntington Co. v. Heaston, 144 Ind. 593, 41 N. E. 457, 43 N. E. 651, 55 Am. St. Rep. 192.

In New Jersey it was held that the constitutionality of such acts is a subject of judicial inquiry and not a mere political question, but that the courts cannot overturn a law passed within constitutional limitations on the ground that it is unwise, impolitic, unjust, or oppressive, or even that it was procured by corporate means; State v. Wrightson, 56 N. J. L. 126, 28 Atl. 56, 22 L. R. A. 548, where it was held that mandamus to compel officers to proceed under prior laws in respect to elections instead of following an unconstitutional statute is not premature because no demand and refusal has been made or the time arrived when it is the duty of the officers to act.

prieve when the prisoner becomes insane; 4 Hargr. St. Tr. 205, 206; Co. 3d Inst. 4.

The president, under the constitution, Art. II. § 2, has the power to grant reprieves. A reprieve is said to be a withdrawal or withholding of punishment for a time after conviction and sentence, in the nature of a stay of execution. Cooley, Const., 2d ed. 104. See Bish. Cr. Proc. 1299. When a reprieve is granted in a capital case to a day certain, the warden should execute the sentence on the day the reprieve expires, and the time of execution need not be again fixed by the court; In re Buchanan, 146 N. Y. 264, 40 N. E. 883. See Sterling v. Drake, 29 Ohio St. 457, 23 Am. Rep. 762; PARDON; EXECUTION.

REPRIMAND. The censure which in some cases a public officer pronounces against an offender.

This species of punishment is used by legislative bodies to punish their members or others who have been guilty of some impropriety of conduct towards them. The reprimand is usually pronounced by the speaker.

REPRISALS. The forcible taking by one nation of a thing which belonged to another, in return or satisfaction for an injury committed by the latter on the former. Vattel, b. 2, c. 18, s. 342; 1 Bla. Com. c. 7.

Positive reprisals consist in seizing the persons and effects belonging to the other nation, in order to obtain satisfaction.

Negative reprisals take place when a nation refuses to fulfil a perfect obligation which it has contracted, or to permit another state to enjoy a right which it justly claims.

Special reprisals are such as are granted in times of peace to particular individuals who have suffered an injury from the citizens or subjects of the other nation.

General reprisals take place by virtue of commissions delivered to officers and citizens of the aggrieved state, directing them to take the persons and property belonging to the offending state wherever found.

Where an individual is injured by a foreign state he must first apply to its courts, if possible, and it is only when refused redress there that his own government can claim to interfere. Similarly where the injury is to a state, compensation should be demanded before recourse is had to reprisal. Risley, Law of War 57. An instance of reprisal occurred in December, 1897, when Germany threatened bombardment at Hayti unless the government within eight hours saluted the German flag and made compensation to an injured German subject. See LETTERS OF MARQUE.

Reprisals are made in two ways, either by embargo, in which case the act is that of the state, or by letters of marque and reprisals, in which case the act is that of the citizen, authorized by the government.

See 2 Brown, Civ. Law 334. Such letters are generally granted for a refusal to pay debts, for an unwarrantable suspension of treaty obligations, denial of evident justice, or a refusal to pay indemnity for losses. One of the last instances of a letter of reprisal was in 1778 when the King of France gave authority of reprisal to certain people whose vessels had been seized by the British government for carrying contraband of war; Snow, Int. Law 76. Congress has the power to grant letters of marque and reprisal. U. S. Const. art. 1, s. 8, cl. 11.

The property seized in making reprisals is preserved while there is any hope of obtaining satisfaction or justice; as soon as that hope disappears, it is confiscated, and then the reprisal is complete; Vattel, b. 2, c. 18, § 342. See Boyd's Wheat. Int. Law.

The term is now used in the sense of retaliation in general, and the act is directed not merely against property of the state or of its citizens, but against the citizens themselves, their liberty, and even their lives. 11 Opp. §§ 33-43.

While applied more strictly to acts falling short of actual war, the term also includes acts of retaliation in time of war done for the purpose of checking excesses committed by the enemy in violation of the laws of war. Spaight, War Rights on Land, 461-470.

REPRISES. The deductions and payments out of lands, annuities, and the like are called reprises, because they are taken back; when we speak of the clear yearly value of an estate, we say it is worth so much a year ultra reprises, besides all reprises.

In Pennsylvania, lands are not to be sold under an execution when the rents can pay the debt and interest and costs in seven years, beyond all reprises.

REPROBATION. In Ecclesiastical Law. The propounding exceptions either against facts, persons, or things; as, to allege that certain deeds or instruments have not been duly and lawfully executed; or that certain persons are such that they are incompetent as witnesses; or that certain things ought not, for legal reasons, to be admitted.

REPUBLIC. A commonwealth; that form of government in which the administration of affairs is open to all the citizens. In another sense, it signifies the state, independently of its form of government. 1 Toullier 28 and n., 202, note.

REPUBLICAN GOVERNMENT. A government in the republican form; a government of the people; a government by representatives chosen by the people. Cooley, Const. 194. It is usually put in opposition to a monarchical or aristocratic government. But it is said to be, strictly speaking, by no means inconsistent with monarchical form; Cooley, Const. 194; there can be no doubt that in the light of the fact that the Revolution was intended to throw off monarchical forms, a republican form of government in the constitution means a government in which the people choose, directly or indirectly, the executive. A blending of legislative and executive powers in the same official does not violate the constitutional guarantee; Village of Saratoga Springs v. Power Co., 191 N. Y. 123, 83 N. E. 693, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 713. Whether the government of a state is such is a political question; Kiernan v. Portland, 223 U. S. 151, 32 Sup. Ct. 231, 56 L. Ed. 386.

See STATE; GOVERNMENT; POLITICAL QUESTION; CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES. See also Judge Baldwin's article in Col. L. Rev. (1909); Rawle, Constit.

REPUBLICATION. An act done by a testator, from which it can be concluded that he intended that an instrument which had been revoked by him should operate as his will. Schoul. Wills 441; or it is the re-execution of a will by the testator, with a view of giving it full force and effect.

The republication is express when there has been an actual re-execution of it; 1 Ves. 440; Bagwell v. Elliott, 2 Rand. (Va.) 192; Jackson v. Potter, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 312; it is implied when, for example, the testator by a codicil executed according to the statute of frauds, reciting that he had made his will, added, "I hereby ratify and confirm my said will, except in the alterations after mentioned." 3 Bro. P. C. 85. See Hawke v. Euyart, 30 Neb. 149, 46 N. W. 422, 27 Am. St. Rep. 391. The will might be at a distance or not in the power of the testator, and it may be thus republished; 1 Ves. 486; 4 Bro. C. C. 2.

The republication of a will has the effect—first, to give it all the force of a will made at the time of the republication; Beach, Wills 143; if, for example, a testator by his will devise "all his lands in A," then revokes his will, and afterwards buys other lands in A, the republication, made after the purchase, will pass all the testator's lands in A; Cro. Eliz. 493. See 1 P. Wms. 275. Second, to set up a will which had been revoked.

REPUDIATE. To express in a sufficient manner a determination not to accept a right, when it is offered.

He who repudiates a right cannot by that act transfer it to another. Repudiation differs from renunciation in this, that by the former he who repudiates simply declares that he will not accept; while he who renounces a right does so in favor of another. Renunciation is, however, sometimes used in the sense of repudiation. See RENOUNCE; RENUNCIATION; Wolff, Inst. § 339.

REPUDIATION. In Civil Law. A term used to signify the putting away of a wife or a woman betrothed.

Properly, divorce is used to point out the separation of married persons; repudiation, to denote the separation either of married people, or those who are only affianced. Divortium est repudium et separatio maritorum; repudium est renunciatio sponsalium, vel etiam est divortium. Dig. 50. 16. 16L

A determination to have nothing to do with any particular thing: as, a repudiation of a legacy is the abandonment of such legacy, and a renunciation of all right to it.

In Ecclesiastical Law. The refusal to accept a benefice which has been conferred upon the party repudiating.

As to repudiation of a contract before the time of performance, see ELECTION OF RIGHTS AND REMEDIES; PERFORMANCE.

REPUGNANCY. In Contracts. A disagreement or inconsistency between two or more clauses of the same instrument. In deeds, and other instruments inter vivos, the earlier clause prevails, if the inconsistency be not so great as to avoid the instrument for uncertainty; 2 C. B. 830; 13 M. & W. 534. In wills, the latter clause prevails, under the same exceptions; Co. Litt. 112 b; 2 My. & K. 149; 1 Jarm. Wills 411. See, however, 18 Ch. Div. 17. Repugnancy in a condition renders it void; Stockton v. Turner, 7 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 192; 6 Ch. Div. 549.

In Pleading. An inconsistency or disagreement between the statements of material facts in a declaration or other pleading: as, where certain timber was said to be for the completion of a house already built; 1 Salk. 213. Repugnancy of immaterial facts, or of redundant and unnecessary matter, if it does not contradict material allegations, will not, in general, vitiate the pleadings; Co. Litt. 303 b; 1 Chitty, Pl. 233. See Steph. Pl. 378; Gould, Pl. § 172.

REPUTABLE. Worthy of repute or distinction, held in esteem, honorable, praiseworthy. Illinois State Board of Dental Examiners v. People, 123 Ill. 245, 13 N. E. 201.

REPUTATION. The opinion generally entertained in regard to the character or condition of a person by those who know him or his family. The opinion generally entertained by those who may be supposed to be acquainted with a fact.

In general, reputation is evidence to prove a man's reputation in society; a pedigree; 14 Camp. 416; 1 S. & S. 153; certain prescriptive or customary rights and obligations; matters of public notoriety. But as such evidence is in its own nature very weak, it must be supported, when it relates to the exercise of a right or privilege, by proof of acts of enjoyment of such right or privilege within the period of living memory; 1 Maule & S. 679; 5 Term 32. Afterwards, evidence of reputation may be given. Evidence of the reputation of a man for truth and veracity in the neighborhood of his home is equally competent to affect his credibility as a witness, whether it is founded upon a dispassionate judgment, or upon warm admiration for habitual truthfulness or natural indignation at habitual falsehood, and whether his neighbors are virtuous or immoral in their own lives; Brown v. U. S., 164 U. S. 221, 17 Sup. Ct. 33, 41 L. Ed. 410. The facts must be general, and not particular; they must be free from suspicion; 1 Stark. Ev. 54. An existing reputation is a fact to which any one may testify who knows it; he knows it because he hears it, and what he hears constitutes the reputation; Bathrick v. Post & Tribune Co., 50 Mich. 642, 16 N. W. 172, 45 Am. Rep. 63.

Formerly, and until the middle of this century, witnesses in England could testify as to their personal knowledge and opinion of a defendant's or witness's character. At present the question to be asked is whether the witness knows the witness's reputation, what it is, and whether, from such knowledge, he would believe him on oath. Tayl. Ev. § 1324. In America, as to the character of a defendant, reputation is in most states made the exclusive mode of proof. See an interesting article by Prof. John H. Wigmore, in 32 Am. L. Rev. 713.

Injuries to a man's reputation by circulating false accounts in relation thereto are remediable by action and by indictment. See LIBEL; SLANDER; CHARACTER.

REPUTED. Accepted by general, or public opinion.

REPUTED OWNER. In English Practice. A bankrupt trader who has in his apparent possession goods, which he holds with the consent of the true owner, is called the reputed owner. The Bankruptcy Act of 1869, sec. 15, § 5, provided that such goods in his possession at the commencement of his bankruptcy pass to his trustee; but things in action, other than debts due to him in the course of his trade or business, are not deemed goods and chattels within the meaning of that clause; Whart. Dict.; 2 Steph. Com. 166.

By the English Bankruptcy Act of 1883, the trustee is entitled to such goods as are, at the commencement of the bankruptcy (the date of the earliest act of bankruptcy), in the possession, order, or disposition of the bankrupt, by the consent of the true owner, in such a way that the former is the reputed owner of them; provided they are with the bankrupt in his trade or business. The ownership may be rebutted by showing a custom in the trade to take goods on hire, as in the case of a hotel-keeper having hired furniture; 18 Ch. D. 30; or pianos; 18 id. 601; and perhaps furniture in general; 41 L. J. Q. B. 20; but see, contra, 23 Ch. D. 261.

In mechanic's lien law, where the remedy is usually in rem, liens are filed of record against the "owner or reputed owner."

REQUEST. Within the provision of the constitution of a religious society providing that a change therein cannot be granted except at the request of two-thirds of the society, a vote was held not a request. Philomath College v. Wyatt, 27 Or. 390, 31 Pac. 216, 37 Pac. 1022, 26 L. R. A. 68.

In Contracts. A notice of a desire on the part of the person making it, that the other party shall do something in relation to a contract. Generally, when a debt is payable immediately, no request need be made; Lent v. Padelford, 10 Mass. 230, 6 Am. Dec. 119; Ernst v. Bartle, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 319. In some cases, the necessity of a request is implied from the nature of the transaction; as, where a horse is sold to A, to be paid for on delivery, A must show a request; 5 Term 409; or impossibility on the part of the vendor to comply, if requested; 5 B. & Ad. 712; previous to bringing an action; and on a promise to marry; 2 Dowl. & R. 55. See DEMAND. And if the contract in terms provides for a request, it must be made; Ernst v. Bartle, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 327. It should be in writing, and state distinctly what is required to be done; 1 Chitty, Pr. 497.

In Pleading. The statement in the plaintiff's declaration that a demand or request has been made by the plaintiff of the defendant to do some act which he was bound to perform, and for which the action is brought.

A general request is that stated in the form "although often requested so to do" (licet sæpe requisitus), generally added in the common breach in the money counts. Its omission will not vitiate the declaration; 1 B. & P. 59; Leffingwell v. White, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 100, 1 Am. Dec. 97.

A special request is one provided for by the contract, expressly or impliedly. Such a request must be averred; 2 B. & C. 685; and proved; 1 Saund. 32, n. 2. It must state time and place of making, and by whom it was made, that the court may judge of its sufficiency; 1 Stra. 89. See Com. Dig. Pleader (C 69, 70); 1 Saund. 33, n.; DEMAND.

A trial judge is requested to charge a jury in accordance with points submitted by counsel.

REQUEST, LETTERS OF. See LETTERS OF REQUEST.

REQUEST NOTES. In English Law. Certain notes or requests from persons amenable to the excise laws, to obtain a permit for removing any excisable goods or articles from one place to another.

REQUESTS, COURTS OF. See COURTS OF REQUESTS.

REQUISITION. The act of demanding a thing to be done by virtue of some right. See MILITARY OCCUPATION.

The demand made by the governor of one state on the governor of another for a fugitive, under the provision of the United States constitution. See EXTRADITION; FUGITIVE FROM JUSTICE.

REQUISITIONS OF TITLE. Written inquiries made by the solicitor of an intending purchaser of land, to the vendor's solicitor, in respect of some apparent insufficiency in the abstract of title. Moz. & W.

RES (Lat. things). The terms Res, Bona, Biens, used by jurists who have written in the Latin and French languages, are intended to include movable or personal, as well as immovable or real, property. 1 Burge. Conf. L. 19.

The word has two widely different meanings in Roman law. 1. It denotes things, acts, and forbearances, and sometimes even persons considered as the subjects or objects of rights and obligations. 2. It also has a meaning which includes, beyond these, rights and obligations themselves. In this widest sense the word "res" embraces the whole matter with which law is conversant. Campb. Austin 60. See a learned treatment in Nettleship, Contributions to Latin Lexicography.

See BIENS; BONA; THINGS; JUS AD REM.

RES ADIRATÆ. The gist of the old action for res adirata was the fact that the plaintiff had lost his goods, that they had come into the hands of the defendant, and that the defendant, on request, refused to give them up. 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 275.

RES ADJUDICATA. Incorrectly used for res judicata.

RES COMMUNES (Lat.). In Civil Law. Those things which, though a separate share of them can be enjoyed and used by every one, cannot be exclusively and wholly appropriated; as, light, air, running water. Mackeldey, Civ. Law § 156; Erskine, Inst. 1. 1. 5. 6.

RES GESTÆ (Lat.). Transaction; thing done; the subject-matter.

Those circumstances which are the automatic and undesigned incidents of a particular litigated act, and which are admissible in evidence when illustrative of such act. Whart. Ev.; People v. Wong Ark, 96 Cal. 125, 30 Pac. 1115.

Events speaking for themselves through the instructive words and acts of participants, not the words and acts of participants when narrating the events; Graves v. People, 18 Colo. 170, 32 Pac. 63.

"All declarations or exclamations uttered by the parties to a transaction, and which are contemporaneous with and accompany it, and are calculated to throw light upon the motives and intentions of the parties to it, are clearly admissible as parts of the res gestæ." International & G. N. R. Co. v. Anderson, 82 Tex. 516, 17 S. W. 1039, 27 Am. St. Rep. 902.

Professor Thayer prefers the singular form res gesta, of which he says in a note to 14 Am. L. Rev. 817: "In using this form . . . the writer is aware that he runs the risk of seeming over-nice about a trifle. It is believed, however, that the endeavor to give precision to the phrase will be more materially forwarded by fixing the mind upon the singular form of expression instead of the plural; that was the regular usage, at least in questions of evidence, and it is not at all obsolete today." It is used in Waldele v. R. Co., 95 N. Y. 274, 47 Am. Dec. 41.

When it is necessary in the course of a cause to inquire into the nature of a particular act, or the intention of the person who did the act, proof of what the person said at the time of doing it is admissible evidence as a part of the res gestæ, for the purpose of showing its true character. On an indictment for a rape, for example, what the girl said so recently after the fact as to exclude the possibility of practising on her, has been held to be admissible evidence as a part of the transaction; 2 Stark. 241; 1 Phill. Ev. 4th Am. ed. 185.

Declarations or acts, accompanying the fact in controversy and tending to illustrate or explain it, as conversations contemporaneous with the facts; State v. Mason, 112 Mo. 374, 20 S. W. 629, 34 Am. St. Rep. 390; Brockett v. Steam-Boat Co., 18 Fed. 156; Weir v. Plymouth Borough, 148 Pa. 566, 24 Atl. 94; or the complaints of the injured party, both as to bodily suffering and the circumstances of the occurrence; Elkins v. McKean, 79 Pa. 493; Hall v. Masonic Accident Ass'n, 86 Wis. 518, 57 N. W. 366; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Buck, 116 Ind. 566, 19 N. E. 453, 2 L. R. A. 520, 9 Am. St. Rep. 883; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Umlin, 158 U. S. 271, 15 Sup. Ct. 840, 39 L. Ed. 977; Chicago West Div. R. Co. v. Becker, 128 Ill. 545, 21 N. E. 524, 15 Am. St. Rep. 144; or the declarations and conduct of third persons at the time; Kleiber v. R. Co., 107 Mo. 240, 17 S. W. 946, 14 L. R. A. 613; Railway Co. v. Herrick, 49 Ohio St. 25, 29 N. E. 1052; Mo. Pac. R. Co. & I. & G. N. R. Co. v. Collier, 62 Tex. 318; Petrie v. Cartwright, 114 Ky. 103, 70 S. W. 297, 59 L. R. A. 720, 102 Am. St. Rep. 274; see 21 How. St. Tr. 514; are admissible; also declarations of a party at the time of taking possession of personal property as to the nature of his possession; State v. Schneider, 35 Mo. 533; statements made by the parties at the time of the sale of personal property, when such statements bear upon the question of good faith or other fact in issue; Haight v. Hayt, 19 N. Y. 464; Banfield v. Parker, 36 N. H. 353; statements as to the conditions of an execution sale; Arnold v. Gorr, 1 Rawle (Pa.) 223; or of an officer or other persons interested at the time of levying on property; id.; Pierson v. Hoag, 47 Barb. (N. Y.) 243; of a person at the time of making an entry upon land, when they explain the character and purpose of making such entry; 3 Bla. Com. 174; by a bondsman when signing a bond; State v. Gregory, 132 Ind. 387, 31 N. E. 952; declarations accompanying the payment of money, to show the purpose or application of such payment; Bank of Woodstock v. Clark, 25 Vt. 308; statements of a grantor at the time of making a conveyance; Badger v. Story, 16 N. H. 168; Chick v. Sisson, 95 Mich. 412, 54 N. W. 895; Kent v. Harcourt, 33 Barb. (N. Y.) 491; Potter v. McDowell, 31 Mo. 62. Declarations of a wife showing maltreatment on the part of her husband are part of the res gestæ in an action by him for the alienation of her affections; Rudd v. Rounds, 64 Vt. 432, 25 Atl. 438; and so also declarations of a person whose mental capacity is the subject of investigation, as part of the facts on which a non-expert witness founds his opinion; Johnson v. Culver, 116 Ind. 278, 19 N. E. 129; and what was said by an alleged borrower when the question was whether the money which passed was a loan; Mayes v. Power, 79 Ga. 631, 4 S. E. 681. Declarations made by an officer of a steamboat while engaged in violently removing a passenger from a part of the vessel in which his contract for transportation did not entitle him to be, were admitted as part of the res gestæ; New Jersey Steamboat Co. v. Brockett, 121 U. S. 637, 7 Sup. Ct. 1039, 30 L. Ed. 1049.

A mere narrative of a past occurrence is inadmissible as part of the res gestæ; Lund v. Tyngsborough, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 42; Rockwell v. Taylor, 41 Conn. 55; Archer v. Helm, 70 Miss. 874, 12 South. 702; the declaration must so harmonize with the fact as to form one transaction; Smith v. N. B. Society, 123 N. Y. 85, 25 N. E. 197, 9 L. R. A. 616. In a case frequently criticised, a statement made immediately after the act and whilst running from the room, where her throat had been cut, was held inadmissible; 14 Cox, Cr. C. 341. This was the famous Bedingfield Case which gave rise to an extended controversy between Cockburn, C. J., who presided at the trial, and Mr. Taylor, the English writer on evidence, in the course of which pamphlets were published by each of them. Lord Cockburn defined the term thus: "Whatever act or series of acts constitute, or in point of time immediately accompany and terminate in, the principal act charged as an offense against the accused, from its inception to its consummation or final completion, or its prevention or abandonment,—whether on the part of the agent or wrong-doer, in order to its performance, or on that of the patient or party wronged in order to its prevention,—and whatever may be said by either of the parties during the continuance of the transaction, with reference to it, including herein what may be said by the suffering party, though in the absence of the accused, during the continuance of the action of the latter, actual or constructive,—as, e. g., in the case of flight or applications for assistance, form part of the principal transaction, and may be given in evidence as part of the res gestæ, or particulars of it; while, on the other hand, statements made by the complaining party, after all action on the part of the wrong-doer, actual or constructive has ceased, through the completion of the principal act or other determination of it by its prevention or abandonment by the wrong-doer,—such as, e. g., statements made with a view to the apprehension of the offender,—do not form part of the res gestæ, and should be excluded."

Mr. Taylor criticised this definition and expressed a doubt whether it was not better that the term should "be left unfettered by useless definition and be determined in each case either by the judge or the jury in the exercise of a sound discretion." This followed the view of Greenleaf on Evidence, § 108, in an extended discussion of this controversy. Prof. J. B. Thayer, in 14 Am. L. Rev. 817, dissents from the view of Mr. Taylor, remarking that "a term that cannot be defined should be dropped." He, however, criticised at length the proposed definition of Lord Cockburn. See an article on this controversy by N. W. Sibley in 19 L. Q. Rev. 203.

The question as to the requirement that the statements shall be absolutely contemporaneous with the crime or extended in question is not decided by the courts in this country with unanimity. That they must be contemporaneous in order to meet the requirement of being probably true is held in State v. Wagner, 61 Me. 178, because in such case fabrication is not probable; Mitchum v. State, 11 Ga. 615; so it was held that the statements must be contemporaneous; Durkee v. R. Co., 69 Cal. 533, 11 Pac. 130, 58 Am. Rep. 562, where a declaration made only five minutes after a railway accident was rejected. Statements made shortly after an accident have been admitted in other cases; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Mosley, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 397, 19 L. Ed. 437; Hill v. Com., 2 Grat. (Va.) 594; Christopherson v. R. Co., 135 Ia. 409, 109 N. W. 1077, 124 Am. St. Rep. 284. Antecedent declarations have been rejected, even when made just before the subject of the inquiry; Ala. Great Southern R. Co. v. Hill, 90 Ala. 71, 8 South. 90, 9 L. R. A. 442, 24 Am. St. Rep. 764.

A leading text writer treats the subject in the nature of an exception to the hearsay rule, the underlying principle of which is that as the outburst of honest belief in a moment of intense excitement, they acquire a certain guarantee of trustworthiness; but in order that an exclamation should be admissible there must be (1) a startling occasion; (2) the statement must be made before there is time to fabricate; and (3) must relate to the circumstances of the occurrence; and (4) the declaration must be made by one who has had the opportunity to observe personally as to that of which he speaks. Accordingly, the writer referred to considers that if the evidence fulfils these requisites it is immaterial whether the words were spoken by a party to the transaction or a bystander: Wigm. Ev. §§ 1750, 1751. Some courts, however, hold that the statements of a bystander are not admissible; Butler v. Ry. Co., 143 N. Y. 417, 38 N. E. 454, 26 L. R. A. 46, 42 Am. St. Rep. 738; Flynn v. State, 43 Ark. 289; State v. Bellard, 50 La. Ann. 594, 23 South. 504, 60 Am. St. Rep. 461; Bradshaw v. Com., 10 Bush (Ky.) 576; L. R. 18 Q. B. D. 537; Sullivan v. Electric Co., 51 Wash. 71, 97 Pac. 1109, 130 Am. St. Rep. 1082, where the exclamations of a bystander were excluded because they related to matters of opinion and not to mere facts as to which the person might testify as a witness. In that case the offer was of the exclamation of a fellow-passenger "that it looked like murder" to let the deceased off at that place while intoxicated.

The length of the interval of time between the main facts and the statements cannot be important if sufficient time elapsed to make the statements, having regard to their form and substance, mere narrative; Jones v. State, 71 Ind. 66; and that only a minute elapsed, does not alter the rule; King v. State, 65 Miss. 576, 5 South. 97, 7 Am. St. Rep. 681; but see Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Mosley, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 397, 19 L. Ed. 437; Com. v. M'Pike, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 181, 50 Am. Dec. 727, where the declarations are considered part of the res gestæ, if there is neither time nor motive for misrepresentation or intention; and if they are voluntary and spontaneous and made within so short a time after the occurrence as to preclude the idea of deliberate design; People v. Vernon, 35 Cal. 49, 95 Am. Dec. 49; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Buck, 116 Ind. 566, 19 N. E. 453, 2 L. R. A. 520, 9 Am. St. Rep. 883; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Robertson, 82 Tex. 657, 17 S. W. 1041, 27 Am. St. Rep. 929; Kirby v. Com., 77 Va. 681, 46 Am. Rep. 747.

In an action for personal injury, a physician's written statement concerning the injury made at the time and annexed to his deposition, is not admissible as part of the res gestæ; Vicksburg & M. R. v. O'Brien, 119 U. S. 99, 7 Sup. Ct. 118, 30 L. Ed. 299.

It was said in 7 Ad. & El. 556: "Declarations accompanying acts are a wide field of evidence and to be carefully watched." The test is expressed in 7 Ad. & El. 361, in these words: "Where an act done is evidence per se, a declaration accompanying that act may well be evidence if it reflects light upon or qualifies the act. But I am not aware of any case where the act done is, in its own nature, irrelevant to the issue and where the declaration per se is inadmissible, in which it has been held that the union of the two has rendered them admissible."

The danger of error is pointed out by Parker, C. J., in Patten v. Ferguson, 18 N. H. 528, where he said: "Here it is admitted that neither the fact nor the declaration, standing alone, are evidence; and when put together, it is the declaration which is significant, and not the fact. The fact was of no importance standing alone; and the declaration, standing alone, was incompetent. When they are united, the unimportant fact is used as a vehicle to introduce the incompetent declaration."

Professor Wigmore considers that the subject has been so confused as to make it almost impossible to arrive at a real basis of the principle involved. He discriminates between what he terms the verbal act doctrine and the exception to the hearsay rule for spontaneous exclamations. The latter he defines to be a statement or exclamation by an injured person immediately after the injury, declaring the circumstances of the injury, or by a person present at an affray, railroad collision or other exciting occasion, asserting the circumstances of it as observed by him; Wigm. Ev. § 1746. The verbal act he defines as the utterance of specific words in itself a part of the details of the issue under the pleadings; id. § 1770; or when the utterance accompanies conduct to which it is desired to attach some legal effect; id. § 1772.

The modern tendency is to extend rather than to narrow the rule as to the admission of declarations as part of the res gestæ, especially in view of the fact that the parties are now generally permitted to testify on their own behalf, and to consider the former grounds for excluding such declarations as affecting their weight only; Jack v. Mut. Reserve Fund Life Ass'n, 113 Fed. 49, 51 C. C. A. 36. In order to render such declarations admissible as part of the res gestæ it is insufficient to show that they were made "immediately" after the transaction, without showing, at least approximately, how nearly they were connected therewith in point of time. Declarations, to be introduced as part of the res gestæ, must be so nearly connected with the transaction under investigation in point of time as to be free from any suspicion of device or afterthought; Pool v. Warren County, 123 Ga. 205, 51 S. E. 328.

In order to determine whether a particular statement is part of the res gestæ it is necessary that it should be a verbal act, illustrating, explaining or interpreting other parts of the transaction of which it is itself a part, and it must not be merely a narrative of a completed, past affair; Chicago City R. Co. v. White, 110 Ill. App. 23. Declarations made at the same time the main fact under consideration takes place and so connected with it as to illustrate its character, are admissible; Dills v. May, 3 Ky. L. Rep. 765. A declaration made under such circumstances as to raise the presumption that it was the unpremeditated explanation of the matter about which it was made is competent; Pledger v. R. Co., 69 Neb. 456, 95 N. W. 1057; Horst v. Lewis, 71 Neb. 365, 98 N. W. 1046, 103 N. W. 460; Shannon v. Castner, 21 Pa.

An admission of declarations as part of the res gestæ rests largely in the discretion of the trial court; Pledger v. R. Co., 69 Neb. 456, 95 N. W. 1057; but where the declarations of a party do not explain, illustrate or characterize a fact, but are merely offered to establish the existence of a fact or strengthen other proof of its existence, they are not admissible; Corder v. Talbott, 14 W. Va. 277. Facts not in issue, but so connected with the facts in issue as to form a part of the same transaction or subject matter, are admissible; Schmidt v. Packard, 132 Ind. 398, 31 N. E. 944; and so are the circumstances in which the injury was committed; Illinois Central R. Co. v. Henon, 68 S. W. 456, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 298. The fact that the plaintiff was intoxicated at the time of the injury is admissible; Herrick v. Wixom, 121 Mich. 384, 80 N. W. 117, 81 N. W. 333. A mere expression of opinion is not admissible; Trexler v. R. Co., 28 Pa. Super. Ct. 198. A statement which constitutes part of the res gestæ may be testified to by the person who made it; Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Hall, 34 Tex. Civ. App. 535, 80 S. W. 133.

Where statements made by an agent are admissible, it is not necessary to call him to prove them, but they may be proved by any other witness; Geylin v. De Villeroi, 2 Houst. (Del.) 311; statements made by a duly authorized agent are admissible; Lockwood v. Rose, 125 Ind. 588, 25 N. E. 710; Singleton v. Mann, 3 Mo. 464; Wheaton v. Ins. Co., 20 S. D. 62, 104 N. W. 850.

RES INCORPORALES. Things incorporeal; fixed relations in which men stand to things or to other men; relations giving them power over things or claims against persons. Inst. 2. 2.

RES INTEGRA (Lat. an entire thing; an entirely new or untouched matter). A term applied to those points of law which have not been decided, which are untouched by dictum or decision. 3 Mer. 269; 1 Burge, Confl. L. 241.

RES INTER ALIOS ACTA (Lat.). A technical phrase which signifies acts of others or transactions between others.

Neither the declarations nor any other acts of those who are mere strangers, or, as it is usually expressed any res inter alios acta, are admissible in evidence against any one; when the party against whom such acts are offered in evidence was privy to the act, the objection ceases; it is no longer res inter alios; 1 Stark. Ev. 52; 3 id. 1300; 4 Mann. & G. 282. See MAXIM.

RES IPSA LOQUITUR (Lat. the transaction speaks for itself). A phrase often used in actions for injury by negligence where no proof of negligence is required beyond the accident itself, which is such as necessarily to involve negligence. See 5 Ex. 787. It is thus defined by Erle, J., in Scott v. London Docks Co., 2 H. & C. 596: "When the thing is shown to be under the management of the defendant or his servants, and the accident is such as in the ordinary course of things does not happen if those who have the management use proper care, it affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of explanation by the defendant, that the accident arose from want of care." This definition has been termed a legal classic; 1 Thomp. Negl. § 15, with a note collecting numerous cases.

In Shearm. & Redf. Negl. § 59, it is said that where it is shown that the accident is such as that its real cause may be the negligence of the defendant, and that whether it is so or not is within the knowledge of the defendant, the plaintiff may give the required evidence of negligence without himself explaining the real cause of the accident by proving the circumstances and thus raising the presumption that if the defendant does not choose to give the explanation, the real cause was negligence on the part of the defendant. Paducah Traction Co. v. Baker, 130 Ky. 360, 113 S. W. 449, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1185; In re Hawkins, 165 N. Y. 188, 59 N. E. 925; Howser v. R. Co., 80 Md. 146, 30 Atl. 906, 27 L. R. A. 154, 45 Am. St. Rep. 332; Consolidated Traction Co. v. Thalheimer, 59 N. J. L. 474, 37 Atl. 132; Rockwell v. McGovern, 202 Mass. 6, 88 N. E. 436, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1022.

Wigm. Evid. § 2509, gives the cases in every state, and advances the following considerations that ought to limit the operation of the rule: 1. The apparatus must be such that in the ordinary instances no injurious operation is to be expected unless from a careless construction, inspection or user. 2. Both the inspection and user must have been at the time of the injury in the control of the party charged.

The doctrine is that when a thing which causes injury without fault of the person injured, is shown to be under the exclusive control of defendant and would not cause the damage in ordinary course if the party in control used proper care, it affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of an explanation, that the injury arose from defendant's want of care; San Juan Light & Transit Co. v. Requena, 224 U. S. 89, 32 Sup. Ct. 399, 56 L. Ed. 680, where the doctrine was held rightly applied against an electric light company in the case of a person injured while adjusting an electric light in his residence by an electric shock transmitted from outside wires entirely without fault on his part and in a manner which would not have happened had the wires been in proper condition.

Where damage is done by the falling of objects to the highway from a building, the rule applies and the accident is of itself evidence of negligence; Doll & Sons v. Ribetti, 203 Fed. 593, 121 C. C. A. 621, per Gray, C. J., following 2 H. & C. 722; 6 Q. B. 759.

The sudden sinking of a sidewalk under the weight of a pedestrian is evidence of negligence on the part of a contractor who took up and relaid it, in the execution of public work; Rockwell v. McGovern, 202 Mass. 6, 88 N. E. 436, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1022; otherwise, in a suit against a city and its contractor in which there was judgment below against the contractor which was reversed, the court pointing out that the street was in the care of the city and that there was no evidence that the sidewalk was out of repair and that the city had knowledge of the fact; Cunningham v. Dady, 191 N. Y. 152, 83 N. E. 689.

The sudden starting of a street car as a passenger is alighting raises the presumption of negligence; Paducah Traction Co. v. Baker, 130 Ky. 360, 113 S. W. 449, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1185.

Where a passenger was injured by the collision of the car in which she was riding with a cable car of an independent railway, it was held that as to the railway company, which was transporting plaintiff, the accident created a presumption of negligence, but that as to the line operating the other car, a presumption of negligence did not arise; Loudoun v. R. Co., 162 N. Y. 386, 56 N. E. 988.

Where a passenger in an electric car became alarmed at the sight of flame shooting from the controller-box and received an electric shock as she stepped over the metal door sill in an attempt to escape from the car, it was held that there was sufficient evidence of defendant's negligence; Buckbee v. R. Co., 64 App. Div. 360, 72 N. Y. Supp. 217. So also where plaintiff received an electric shock while using a telephone during a thunderstorm; Rocap v. Telephone Co., 19 Pa. Dist. R. 291; and where a patient was injured while having an X-ray photograph taken; Jones v. Tel. & Tel. Co., 118 Minn. 217, 136 N. W. 741, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 485.

This doctrine has a narrower application between master and servant than between carrier and passenger, for the carrier owes a higher degree of duty to a passenger than a master to a servant. A cause of action against a railroad for injuries to a brakeman by the derailment of a train is not established by evidence that one of the trucks under the car was defective, without showing which one; Henson v. R. Co., 194 N. Y. 205, 87 N. E. 85, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 790. The application of the rule arises from the nature of the occurrence and not from the relation of the parties; Klebe v. Distilling Co., 207 Mo. 480, 105 S. W. 1057, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 140.

Allegations of specific omissions of duty do not deprive the plaintiff of his right to rely upon the doctrine if the case otherwise is a proper one for its application; Kluska

v. Yeomans, 54 Wash. 465, 103 Pac. 819, 132 Am. St. Rep. 1121; McNeill v. R. Co., 130 N. C. 256, 41 S. E. 383; Dearden v. R. Co., 33 Utah, 147, 93 Pac. 271.

On the other hand, it has been held that the doctrine does not extend to cases in which acts of negligence specifically described are the gist of the action; Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Leonard, 126 Ill. App. 189; Todd v. Ry. Co., 126 Mo. App. 684, 105 S. W. 671. It is said that while it is inapplicable to support specific acts of negligence, yet if the plaintiff has made general allegations of negligence as well as specific allegations, he may rely upon the doctrine to support the general allegations; North Chicago St. R. Co. v. Cotton, 140 Ill. 486, 29 N. E. 899; Chicago City R. Co. v. Carroll, 206 Ill. 318, 68 N. E. 1087; but this rule was denied in Pierce v. R. Co., 22 Mont. 445, 56 Pac. 867; it was also said that the plaintiff, although alleging a specific act of negligence, may nevertheless rely upon the doctrine to establish the negligence of the defendant in the respect alleged; Palmer Brick Co. v. Chennall, 119 Ga. 842, 47 S. E. 239. An unsuccessful attempt to prove by direct evidence the precise cause of an accident does not prevent the plaintiff from relying upon the presumption applicable to it; Sullivan v. Rowe, 194 Mass. 500, 80 N. E. 459; McNamara v. R. Co., 202 Mass. 491, 89 N. E. 131.

Where there are general allegations of negligence and these are followed by allegations of specific omissions of duty, the general allegations are to be deemed explained, limited and controlled by the special allegations. In many cases where the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is inapplicable, this rule is invoked to prevent a recovery for acts of negligence not specifically pleaded; Walters v. R. Co., 48 Wash. 233, 93 Pac. 419, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 788.

The doctrine means that the facts of the occurrence warrant an inference of negligence, not that they compel such an inference. It does not shift the burden of proof, nor does it convert the defendant's general issue into an affirmative defence. When all the evidence is in, it is for the jury to determine whether the preponderance is with the plaintiff; Sweeney v. Erving, 228 U. S. 233, 33 Sup. Ct. 416, 57 L. Ed. 815. Whether the defendant introduces evidence or not, the plaintiff is not entitled to a verdict unless he satisfies the jury by the preponderance of the evidence that his injuries were attributable to the defendant's negligence; Stewart v. Carpet Co., 138 N. C. 66, 50 S. E. 562.

Where contractual relations existed between the parties, and the plaintiff shows actual negligence or conditions so obviously dangerous as to admit of no other inference, the burden thus thrown on the defendant is not that of satisfactorily accounting for the accident, but of showing that he used due care; Stearns v. Spinning Co., 184 Pa. 519, 39 Atl. 292, 39 L. R. A. 842, 63 Am. St. Rep. 807.

See Foley v. R. R., 193 Mass. 332, 79 N. E. 765, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1076; Stewart & Co. v. Harman, 108 Md. 446, 70 Atl. 333, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 228; NEGLIGENCE.

RES JUDICATA (Lat. the matter has been adjudged). A legal or equitable issue which has been decided by a court of competent jurisdiction.

When one is barred in any action, real or personal, by judgment, demurrer, confession, or verdict, he is bound as to that or a like action forever; 14 Q. B. D. 146; XII B. L. R. 304.

When a question is necessarily decided in effect though not in express terms between parties to the suit, they cannot raise the same question as between themselves in any other suit in any other form; 3 Atkins 626. This definition of Lord Hardwicke, in Gregory v. Molesworth, has been by some writers considered the best.

The doctrine of res judicata is plain and intelligible, and amounts simply to this, that a cause of action once finally determined, without appeal, between the parties, on the merits, by a competent tribunal, cannot afterwards be litigated by a new proceeding either before the same or any other tribunal; Foster v. The Richard Busteed, 100 Mass. 409, 1 Am. Rep. 125.

Estoppel rests on equitable principles, while res judicata does not rest upon equitable principles, but on the two maxims which were its foundation in the Roman Law (see infra); Ind. L. R. VIII. All. 332; it is rather a principle of public policy than the result of equitable considerations. It is also a matter of private right; Putnam v. Clark, 34 N. J. Eq. 535.

It has been characterized as a "fundamental concept in the organization of civil society;" Jeter v. Hewitt, 22 How. (U. S.) 352, 16 L. Ed. 345.

It was derived from Roman law, being founded on the maxims nemo debet bis vexari pro eadem causa (no one ought to be twice sued for the same cause of action), and interest reipublicæ ut sit finis litium (it is the interest of the state that there should be an end of litigation).

It was said by the civilians res judicata facit ex albo nigrum, ex nigro album, ex curvo rectum, ex recto curvum (a decision makes white black; black, white; the crooked, straight; the straight, crooked).

It was said by Blackburn, L. J., that the doctrine was not received in England, as it was on the continent, directly from the Roman law; L. R. 2 App. Cas. 530.

A broad distinction is pointed out in Cromwell v. County of Sac, 94 U. S. 352, 24 L. Ed. 195: "It should be borne in mind that there is a difference between the effect of a judgment as a bar or estoppel against the prosecution of a second action upon the same claim or demand, and its effect as an estoppel in another action between the same parties upon a different claim or cause of action. In the former case, the judgment, if rendered upon the merits, constitutes an absolute bar to a subsequent action. . . . But where the second action between the same parties is upon a different claim or demand, the judgment in the prior action operates as an estoppel only as to those matters in issue or points controverted, upon the determination of which the finding or verdict was rendered."

Where the cause of action is the same. In order to make a matter res judicata, there must be a concurrence of the four conditions following:

1. Identity in the thing sued for; 5 M. & W. 100; Bull v. Hopkins, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 22.

2. Identity of the cause of action; Hopkins v. Lee, 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 109, 5 L. Ed. 218; Minor v. Walter, 17 Mass. 237; Coit v. Tracy, 8 Conn. 268, 20 Am. Dec. 110; Cist v. Zeigler, 16 S. & R. (Pa.) 282, 16 Am. Dec. 573; McGrady v. Monks, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 611, 20 S. W. 959.

3. Identity of persons and of parties to the action; Legrand v. Rixey's Adm'r, 83 Va. 862, 3 S. E. 864; Sanford v. Oberlin College, 50 Kan. 342, 31 Pac. 1089.

4. Identity of the quality in the persons for or against whom the claim is made; 5 Co. 32 b; 6 Mann. & G. 164.

The simplest test as to whether it is the same cause of action is whether the cause of action has been merged in the former judgment. It is thus expressed by Lord Selborne, 2 App. Cas. 519: "When there is res judicata the original cause of action is gone."

In Lawrence v. Vernon, 3 Sumn. 22, Fed. Cas. No. 8,146, Judge Story said: "What is meant by the same cause of action is where the same facts will support both actions. This is a test to know whether a final determination in a former action is a bar or not to a subsequent action." To the same effect, 1 DeG., F. & J. 178, per Lord Westbury. In 15 C. B. N. S. 99, Willes, J., said: "To constitute a good plea of res judicata, it must be shown that the former suit was one in which the plaintiff might have recovered precisely what he seeks to recover in the second." So in [1893] 2 Q. B. 172.

In 14 Q. B. D. 147, Bowen, L. J., said: "The principle is frequently stated in the form of another legal proverb, Nemo debet bis vexari pro eadem causa. It is a well settled rule of law that damages resulting from one and the same cause of action must be assessed and recorded once for all. The difficulty in each instance arises upon the application of this rule, how far is the cause which is being litigated afresh the same cause in substance with that which has been the subject of the previous suit. "The principle consideration," says De Grey, C. J., 2 W.

Bla. 527, "Is whether it be precisely the same cause of action in both, appearing by proper averments in a plea, or by proper facts stated in a special verdict, or a special case." "And one great criterion," he adds, "of this identity is that the same evidence will maintain both actions."

Plaintiff sued for too little, and then brought a new suit for his full claim; held estopped: 96 L. T. 679; a plaintiff must plead all his grounds in the first case. If he loses on that, he cannot bring another suit and urge a different ground; Manhattan Trust Co. v. Trust Co., 107 Fed. 332, 46 C. C. A. 322; Northern Pac. Ry. Co. v. Slight, 205 U. S. 132, 27 Sup. Ct. 442, 51 L. Ed. 738. This is merely the necessary rule that as to a given cause of action the plaintiff may not split his case, nor the defendant his defence. The case must be tried once for all. And so, where it was the same cause of action, "it is quite right that the defendant should be estopped from setting up in the same action a defence that he might have pleaded, but has chosen to let the proper time go by;" Howlett v. Tarte, 10 C. B. N. S. 813.

Where the cause of action is different. Here, as held in Cromwell v. Sac, 94 U. S. 352, 24 L. Ed. 195, the judgment in the former action operates as an estoppel only to those matters in issue or points controverted, upon the determination of which the finding or verdict was rendered. It is immaterial what might have been litigated and determined. The cause of action is considered a different cause of action if it was not merged in the former judgment.

A common case which illustrates what is a different cause of action is found in Enfield v. Jordan, 119 U. S. 680, 7 Sup. Ct. 358, 30 L. Ed. 523, where it was held that there was a different cause of action because the former judgment was rendered upon different coupons than those involved in the second suit. To the same effect, Nesbitt v. Independent Dist., 144 U. S. 610, 12 Sup. Ct. 746, 36 L. Ed. 562. See CAUSE OF ACTION.

In Cromwell v. Sac, 94 U. S. 352, 24 L. Ed. 195, it was said: "Various considerations, other than the actual merits, may govern a party in bringing forward grounds of recovery or defence in one action, which may not exist in another action upon a different demand, such as the smallness of the amount or the value of the property in controversy, the difficulty of obtaining the necessary evidence, the expense of the litigation and his own situation at the time. A party acting upon considerations like these ought not to be precluded from contesting in a subsequent action, other demands arising out of the same transaction."

In Bond v. Markstrum, 102 Mich. 11, 60 N. W. 282, an action for a second instalment of rent where the judgment between the parties for the first instalment was set up, it was said: "Such former judgment does not preclude defenses in the second case which might have been made in the first or which were set up in the answer to the first, they not having been, as a matter of fact, litigated and passed on in the first action."

In Hooker v. Hubbard, 102 Mass. 245, it was said: "If pleadings present several distinct propositions of fact, the judgment is not conclusive upon any one of them, unless it appears from the record or aliunde that the issue upon which it was rendered was upon that proposition."

It was said in Howlett v. Tarte, supra, quoted and followed in Cromwell v. Sac: "But nobody ever heard of a defendant being precluded from setting up a defence in a second action because he did not avail himself of the opportunity of setting it up in the first action."

In 1 H. & C. 797, Martin, B., interrupting counsel, said: "What is said in Smith's Lead. Cas. as to an award is no authority for saying that an award would be an estoppel in an action for another infringement of the same patent." And in 13 M. & W. 147, it was held: "If the plaintiff were to be deemed estopped now, when the point in issue was not raised at all in the former suit, he would be deemed estopped by the finding of a matter which he never disputed and on which the jury gave no verdict, and the court no judgment."

Where the record is such that there is or may be a material issue or matter that may not have been raised, litigated, and decided in the former action, the judgment therein does not constitute an estoppel, unless by pleading or proof the party asserting it establishes the fact that the issue, right, or matter in question was actually and necessarily litigated and determined in the former action; Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Board of Com'rs, 117 Fed. 82, 54 C. C. A. 468.

In 10 L. R. C. P. 154, a replication that after a former judgment and before the second action, a second instalment had become due and there was default, was held good, the court saying that the default did not exist at the time of the first action, nor until after its determination and could not have been in controversy in such action and consequently there could be no estoppel.

"Facts not produced in the first action, whether then at hand or not, may be used in another suit on a different demand, though it be of the same nature and grow out of the same transaction;" Big. Est. 188.

What is concluded? In Last Chance Mining Co. v. Tyler Mng. Co., 157 U. S. 683, 15 Sup. Ct. 733, 39 L. Ed. 859, the court said: "The essence of estoppel by judgment is that there has been a judicial determination of a fact." In New Orleans v. Bank, 167 U. S. 387, 17 Sup. Ct. 905, 42 L. Ed. 202, the court said: "If in the prior cases, the question of exemption was necessarily presented and determined upon identically the same facts, upon which the right of exemption is now claimed." Parke, B., in 2 Exch. 665 (cited in Cromwell v. Sac), said: "The facts actually decided by an issue in any suit cannot be again litigated between the same parties."

"Facts not produced in the first action . . . may be used in another suit on a different demand, though it be of the same nature and grew out of the same transaction;" Big. Est. 188.

And in Outram v. Morewood, 3 East 346, the court said: "And it is not the recovery, but the matter alleged by the party upon which the recovery proceeds which creates the estoppel." (Quoted in Cromwell v. Sac.)

"A judgment is conclusive by way of estoppel of facts (necessary facts in general as well as the primary facts in issue) and none other without the existence and proof or admission, by which it could not have been rendered." Big. Est. 170. "The judgment is conclusive upon all issues which have become necessary for a decision of the case whatever their relation to the cause of action;" Big. Est. 177, citing King v. Chase, 15 N. H. 9, 41 Am. Dec. 675, as taking a contrary view, but as being inconsistent with the doctrine of the other cases which are cited. It was held in New Orleans v. Bank, 167 U. S. 376, 17 Sup. Ct. 905, 42 L. Ed. 202, that when the construction of a contract is in controversy, the construction adjudged by the court will bind the parties in all future disputes.

Cases to which the doctrine of res judicata has been applied are: The decision of a referee on a point properly determined by him and reviewable on appeal; 3 East 346; Castle v. Noyes, 14 N. Y. 329; a judgment rendered on a compromise; Culverhouse v. Marx, 39 La. Ann. 809, 2 South. 607; an agreed judgment; Robbins v. Hubbard (Tex.) 108 S. W. 773; Weir v. Marley, 99 Mo. 484, 12 S. W. 798, 6 L. R. A. 672; by default; Harshman v. Knox Co., 122 U. S. 306, 7 Sup. Ct. 1171, 30 L. Ed. 1152; Goebel v. Iffa, 111 N. Y. 177, 18 N. E. 649; Johnson v. Jones, 58 Kan. 745, 51 Pac. 224; on demurrer; Gould v. R. Co., 91 U. S. 526, 23 L. Ed. 416; Bissell v. Spring Valley Tp., 124 U. S. 225, 8 Sup. Ct. 495, 31 L. Ed. 411; Schroers v. Fisk, 10 Colo. 599, 16 Pac. 285; or by divided court; Kolb v. Swann, 68 Md. 516, 13 Atl. 379; a judgment of dismissal entered under an agreement reciting a settlement that nothing is due; U. S. v. Parker, 120 U. S. 89, 7 Sup. Ct. 454, 30 L. Ed. 601; or upon a hearing where the entry is not "expressly without prejudice"; Lyon v. Mfg. Co., 125 U. S. 698, 8 Sup. Ct. 1024, 31 L. Ed. 839; or a simple dismissal with taxation of costs and award of execution; Rogers v. Riessner, 30 Fed. 525; State v. Superior Court, 62 Wash. 556, 114 Pac. 427; or dismissal for want of prosecution; Jones v. Turner, 81 Va. 709 (contra, Worst v. Sgitovich [Tex.] 46 S. W. 72; United States Fastener Co. v. Bradley, 143 Fed. 523; the decree must be on the merits; Ex parte Loung June, 160 Fed. 254); or dismissal for failure in the proof of execution of a contract for breach of which an action is brought, even where the words, without prejudice, are added to the decree; Parsons v. Riley, 33 W. Va. 464, 10 S. E. 806; judgments in other states; Sweet v. Brackley, 53 Me. 346; Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Harris, 97 U. S. 331, 24 L. Ed. 959; a judgment against the plaintiff on a counterclaim; Steves v. Frazee, 19 Ind. App. 284, 49 N. E. 385.

If the declaration have several counts and the jury finds for the plaintiff on one of them, this is equivalent to finding against the defendant on the other counts and the issues become res judicata; Downing v. R. Co., 70 Mo. App. 657.

"A judgment by default only admits for the purpose of the action the legality of the demand or claim in suit; it does not make the allegations of the declaration or complaint evidence in an action upon a different claim." Cromwell v. County of Sac, 94 U. S. 356, 24 L. Ed. 195.

The following will not operate as res judicata: A judgment on a plea in abatement in an action of attachment for rent is not res judicata on the trial on the merits; Caruthers v. Williams, 53 Mo. App. 181. A judgment ordering that the cause be filed away for want of prosecution is not final or a bar to a subsequent action; Nickell v. Fallen (Ky.) 23 S. W. 366. A judgment abating an action entered upon a verdict finding that plaintiff's powers as administrator had ceased pending the action, is not a bar to the subsequent revival of the action on plaintiff's reinstatement as administrator; Hill v. Bryant, 61 Ark. 203, 32 S. W. 506. A decree against the plaintiff without prejudice; Robinson v. Car & Foundry Co., 142 Fed. 170; Cassatt v. Coal Co., 150 Fed. 33, 81 C. C. A. 80, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 99; where the former judgment was on matter of form or on a plea to the jurisdiction; Bissell v. Spring Valley Township, 124 U. S. 225, 8 Sup. Ct. 495, 31 L. Ed. 411, where a bill was dismissed, but the plaintiff could sue at law; Pendleton v. Dalton, 92 N. C. 185. So a judgment of recovery by a physician when set up in a subsequent suit for malpractice; Jordahl v. Berry, 72 Minn. 119, 75 N. W. 10, 45 L. R. A. 541, 71 Am. St. Rep. 469.

The decision of a motion or summary application is not to be regarded in the light of res judicata, or as so far conclusive upon the parties as to prevent their drawing the same matter in question again in the more regular form of an action; Denny v. Bennett, 128 U. S. 489, 9 Sup. Ct. 134, 32 L. Ed. 491.

A judgment in a civil action is not admissible in a criminal proceeding, for the reason that the parties "are necessarily different, and the objects and results of the two proceedings are equally diverse;" State v. Bradnack, 69 Conn. 212, 37 Atl. 492, 43

L. R. A. 620; Britton v. State, 77 Ala. 202; contra, Dorrell v. State, 83 Ind. 357, where, in a prosecution for the unlawful removal of a fence, a judgment in a civil action between the defendant and the prosecuting witness was admitted in evidence. But this case was criticised in State v. Bradnack, 69 Conn. 212, 37 Atl. 492, 43 L. R. A. 620, as founded upon an error which was not relieved by the instruction of the court to the jury that the evidence was not conclusive, but merited serious consideration. The Connecticut court cite a former decision of their own to the effect that, "a judgment is conclusive or is nothing. If not conclusive, there is no rule by which courts can measure and determine its effect;" Bethlehem v. Watertown, 51 Conn. 494. See 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 653, n.

A judgment in habeas corpus to obtain possession of a child is conclusive so long as the same conditions exist; Cormack v. Marshall, 211 Ill. 519, 71 N. E. 1077, 67 L. R. A. 757, 1 Ann. Cas. 256; and so upon the same state of facts in another jurisdiction; Slack v. Perrine, 9 App. D. C. 128. The doctrine is said to apply to habeas corpus proceedings to obtain the custody of a child; Weir v. Marley, 99 Mo. 484, 12 S. W. 798, 6 L. R. A. 672; Willis v. Willis, 165 Ind. 332, 75 N. E. 655, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 244, 6 Ann. Cas. 772; but not in another court where the welfare of the child requires it, though no change of circumstances is shown; In re King, 66 Kan. 695, 72 Pac. 263, 67 L. R. A. 783, 97 Am. St. Rep. 399.

In proceedings for the custody of a child the facts must be identical, and the court cannot say that they are so when the evidence of the former proceeding is not before it; People v. Dewey, 23 Misc. Rep. 267, 50 N. Y. Supp. 1013.

The doctrine does not apply to habeas corpus judgments for the remanding of a prisoner where a new state of facts exists; Weir v. Marley, 99 Mo. 484, 12 S. W. 798, 6 L. R. A. 672.

But it has been held that a judgment in habeas corpus proceedings is conclusive as to the person charged with unlawfully restraining another of his liberty, until reversed in some proper proceedings; State v. Huegin, 110 Wis. 189, 85 N. W. 1046, 62 L. R. A. 700; to the same effect, State v. Whitchee, 117 Wis. 668, 94 N. W. 787, 98 Am. St. Rep. 968; a judgment does not affect a later application; In re Kopel, 148 Fed. 505.

It is universally held in this country that a judgment to work an estoppel must be a final judgment; and, if appealable, final on appeal, or the time for appeal be passed.

A plea of res judicata must aver that the former judgment has not been superseded, reversed or appealed from; Hornick v. Holt-rup (Ky.) 76 S. W. 874; but it is also held that it is not demurrable if a plea fail to aver that a former judgment has not been appealed from; Fenn v. Roach & Co. (Tex.) 75 S. W. 361. If a supplemental bill set up a former judgment and does not allege that it was final, it is not demurrable, because, if not final, the trial should be continued until it becomes so; Theller v. Hershey, 89 Fed. 575. The effect of the former judgment will be suspended pending an appeal therefrom; Purser v. Cady, 120 Cal. 214, 52 Pac. 489. The doctrine of res judicata applies even though the amount in controversy in the former suit was so small that the party was not entitled to a review in an appellate court; Johnson Co. v. Wharton, 152 U. S. 252, 14 Sup. Ct. 608, 38 L. Ed. 429.

But in England a judgment is none the less effective as an estoppel although it is liable to be reversed on appeal; 13 Halsb. Laws of England 325.

Evidence of a former recovery is admissible under a plea of non assumpsit; Stone v. Stone, 2 Cra. C. C. 119, Fed. Cas. No. 13,488; Hempstead v. Stone, 2 Mo. 65; but it is also held that it is not available under a general denial; Louisville, N. A. & C. Ry. Co. v. Cauley, 119 Ind. 142, 21 N. E. 546; Jones v. Lavender, 55 Ga. 228. It may be specially pleaded in bar, or may be shown under the general issue; Kimball v. Hilton, 92 Me. 214, 42 Atl. 394. It cannot be given in evidence under the general issue, but must be pleaded specially; Coles v. Carter, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 691; under a plea of not guilty in ejectment, the defendants can show res judicata; Bruner v. Finley, 211 Pa. 74, 60 Atl. 488. The better and usual practice is to plead the issue and set up fully the former judgment and record therein. The practice appears not to be uniform; see Big. Est. 761, with a reference to articles on Pleading Estoppel in Mich. L. Rev. (1911).

Unless the former record is presented at the hearing of the second case, effect will not be given to it as res judicata, but the court may take judicial notice of its own records and examine and consider the former record where the case was as to plaintiff splitting its cause of action; Bienville W. S. Co. v. Mobile, 186 U. S. 217, 22 Sup. Ct. 820, 46 L. Ed. 1132.

When the decree in the former case is general in its terms, the opinion in that case may be considered in order to determine what questions were presented and decided; D'Arcy v. Staples & Hanford Co., 161 Fed. 733, 88 C. C. A. 606. But it is said that the courts are not bound to search the records of other courts and give effect to their judgment, and that who relies upon a former adjudication in another court must properly present it to the court in which he seeks to enforce it. Secondary proof will be received of a judgment when the record is lost; U. S. v. Price, 113 Fed. 851.

In order that the judgment in a former tion of the death of the insured and of the liability of the defendant.

If the effect of res judicata be disregarded in a case, it is held that the party may file a bill in equity; Monmouth Electric Co. v. Eatontown Tp., 74 N. J. Eq. 578, 70 Atl. 994.

See, generally, Wells, Res Judicata, etc.; Herman, Estoppel and Res Adjudicata; Chand, Res Judicata; Van Fleet, Former Adjudication; Duchess of Kingston's Case, 3 Sm. L. Cas., 2008; JUDGMENT; AUTREFOIS ACQUIT; COMITY.

RES MANCIPI. In Roman Law. Those things which might be sold and alienated, or of which the property might be transferred from one person to another.

The division of things into res mancipi and res nec mancipi was one of ancient origin, and it continued to a late period in the empire. Res Mancipi (Ulp. Frag. xix.) are prædia in italico solo, both rustic and urban; also, jura rusticorum prædiorum or servitutes, as via, iter, aqueductus; also slaves, and four-footed animals, as oxen, horses, etc., quæ collo dorsove domantur. Smith, Dict. Gr. & Rom. Antiq. To this list may be added children of Roman parents, who were, according to the old law, res mancipi. The distinction between res mancipi and nec mancipi was abolished by Justinian in his Code. Id.; Cooper, Inst. 442.

RES NOVA (Lat.). Something new; something not before decided.

RES NULLIUS (Lat.). A thing which has no owner. A thing which has been abandoned by its owner is as much res nullius as if it had never belonged to any one. Also things which are not the subject of private ownership.

The first possessor of such a thing becomes the owner; res nullius fit primi occupantis. Bowry, Com. 97.

RES PARAPHERNA. See PARAPHERNALIA; PARAPHERNAUX BIENS.

RES PERIIT DOMINO (Lat. the thing is lost to the owner). A phrase used to express that when a thing is lost or destroyed it is lost to the person who was the owner of it at the time. For example, an article is sold; if the seller has perfected the title of the buyer so that it is his, and it be destroyed, it is the buyer's loss; but if, on the contrary, the title has not vested in the buyer, then the loss falls on the seller. The cases are collected in Blackb. Sales (Canadian Ed.) 263.

RES PRIVATÆ. In Civil Law. Things the property of one or more individuals. Mackeldey, Civ. Law § 157.

RES PUBLICÆ. In Civil Law. Things the property of the state. Mackeldey, Civ. Law § 157.

RES RELIGIOSÆ. In Civil Law. Things pertaining to religion. Places where the dead were buried. Thevenot Dessaulles, Dict. du Dig. Chose.

RES SACRÆ. In Civil Law. Things which had been publicly consecrated.

RES SANCTÆ. In Civil Law. Things which were especially protected against injury of man.

RES UNIVERSITATIS. In Civil Law. Things which belonged to cities or municipal corporations. They belonged so far to the public that they could not be appropriated to private use; such as public squares, market-houses, streets, and the like. Inst. 2. 1. 6.

RESALE. A second sale made of an article; as, for example, when A, having sold a horse to B, and the latter, not having paid for him, and refusing to take him away, when by his contract he was bound to do so, again sells the horse to C. The effect of a resale is, in this case, that B would be liable to A for the difference of the price between the sale and resale; 4 Bingh. 722; 4 Mann. & G. 898; Blackb. Sales 463. See SALE.

RESCEIT, RECEIT. The admission or receiving of a third person to plead his right in a cause formerly commenced between two other persons: as, when an action is brought against a tenant for life or years, or any other particular tenant, and he makes default, in such case the reversioner may move that he may be received to defend his right and to plead with the demandant. Jacob, Law Dict.; Cowell.

The admittance of a plea when the controversy is between the same two persons. Co. Litt. 192.

RESCISSION OF CONTRACTS. The abrogation or annulling of contracts.

It may take place by mutual consent; Ans. Contr. 258; and this consent may be inferred from acts; 4 Mann. & G. 898; Goodrich v. Laffin, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 57; Quincy v. Tilton, 5 Greenl. (Me.) 277; Flegal v. Hoover, 156 Pa. 276, 27 Atl. 162. It may take place as the act of one party, in consequence of a failure to perform by the others; 2 C. B. 905; Wardens of Church of St. Louis v. Kirwan, 9 La. Ann. 31; Cunningham v. R. Co., 63 Hun 439, 18 N. Y. Supp. 600; White v. Hand, 76 Ga. 3; not so, ordinarily, where the failure is but partial; 4 Ad. & E. 599; 1 M. & W. 231; on account of fraud, even though partially executed; Pierce v. Wood, 23 N. H. 519. Misrepresentations not a part of the same transaction are no cause for rescinding the contract; Barnett v. Barnett, 83 Va. 504, 2 S. E. 733.

A contract cannot, in general, be rescinded by one party unless both parties can be placed in the same situation and can stand upon the same terms as existed when the contract was made; 1 M. & W. 231; Norton v. Young, 3 Greenl. (Me.) 30; Pittsburgh & N. A. Turnpike Co. v. Com., 2 Watts (Pa.) 433; Bell v. Keepers, 39 Kan. 105, 17 Pac.

case may be conclusive in a second suit between the parties, it must be shown either by the record or by extrinsic evidence that the same question was necessarily raised and determined in the former suit. If there be any uncertainty on this head on the record, the whole subject matter will be at large and open to a new contention unless extrinsic evidence be given to show the precise point involved and determined. If, upon the face of the record, anything is left to conjecture as to what was involved and decided, there is no estoppel when it is pleaded and nothing conclusive when it is offered in evidence; Russell v. Place, 94 U. S. 606, 24 L. Ed. 214.

Where a former judgment goes both to defects of form and also to the merits, a judgment which does not designate as between the two will be presumed to rest on the former. But if the judgment on demurrer is on the merits, it becomes "res judicata"; Bissell v. Spring Valley, 124 U. S. 225, 232, 8 Sup. Ct. 495, 31 L. Ed. 411.

Estoppel by res judicata operates as against both parties and privies; Emlden v. Lisherness, 89 Me. 581, 36 Atl. 1101, 56 Am. St. Rep. 442.

Privity may be by succeeding to the position of another in respect of the subject of the estoppel (as an assignee), or by holding in subordination to that other (as landlord and tenant). It is a property, and not a personal relation. Big. Est. 158.

Besides privity arising out of property interests, there is a common instance of privity created by joining in the conduct of litigation. Where a third party has control of the litigation between other parties, he may be and usually is bound by the judgment; but where a third party successfully defended a patent case, employing counsel and paying the costs, he cannot use the judgment as res judicata without showing clearly that such fact was known to the plaintiff; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Cramer, 192 U. S. 265, 24 Sup. Ct. 291, 48 L. Ed. 437; and so if the third party contributed money for the defense, but had no right to participate in the conduct of the case; Rumford Chemical Works v. Chemical Co., 215 U. S. 156, 30 Sup. Ct. 45, 54 L. Ed. 137.

Where a bank agreed with the attorney of a city that the suit to be brought by it against the city should abide the judgment in a test case it may claim the benefit of the judgment subsequently rendered against the city therein; Bank of Commerce v. Louisville, 88 Fed. 398.

Where there is concurrent jurisdiction at law and in equity, a decision in one court is res judicata as to the other; Ross v. Wood, 70 N. Y. 11. Where there is jurisdiction both of the cause and the parties a judgment of a court of general jurisdiction is conclusive, even though erroneous, until it is reversed upon appeal or vacated; 7 Co.

76; Fox v. Bldg. Fund Ass'n, 81 Va. 677; Adams v. Franklin, 82 Ga. 168, 8 S. E. 44. See Wiese v. Musical Fund Ass'n, 82 Cal. 645, 23 Pac. 212, 7 L. R. A. 577; Shores v. Hooper, 153 Mass. 228, 26 N. E. 846, 11 L. R. A. 308.

A decree on a bill by a stockholder for the benefit of himself and all other stockholders who come in, to enjoin the consummation of an agreement by the corporation, is conclusive in a subsequent suit by another stockholder for the same purpose and involving the same question, in the absence of fraud or collusion; Willoughby v. Stockyards Co., 50 N. J. Eq. 656, 25 Atl. 277, citing Hill v. Bain, 15 R. I. 75, 23 Atl. 44, 2 Am. St. Rep. 873; Dewey v. Trust Co., 60 Vt. 1, 12 Atl. 224, 6 Am. St. Rep. 84; Harmon v. Auditor of Public Accounts, 123 Ill. 122, 13 N. E. 161, 5 Am. St. Rep. 502.

The fact that a court is composed of several divisions does not prevent the judgment of one of the divisions from being res judicata; a change in a person holding an office does not destroy the effect of a judgment against such officer as res judicata; New Orleans v. Bank, 167 U. S. 371, 17 Sup. Ct. 905, 42 L. Ed. 202.

The United States cannot be estopped by a judgment against its agent even though the suit was conducted by and at the expense of the government; Carr v. U. S., 98 U. S. 433, 25 L. Ed. 209; Tindal v. Wesley, 167 U. S. 223, 17 Sup. Ct. 770, 42 L. Ed. 137; nor is the state estopped by a judgment against its agent; Peck v. State, 137 N. Y. 376, 33 N. E. 317, 33 Am. St. Rep. 738; contra, Cunningham v. Shanklin, 60 Cal. 118. But it is held that the state may be estopped by a judgment for taxes; Newport & C. B. Co. v. Douglass, 12 Bush (Ky.) 673.

One who is not a party and only technically bound by a judgment, but who is fully cognizant of the proceedings and stands by and takes the benefit of them, is estopped by his conduct; [1896] 2 Ch. 788; L. R. 2 P. & D. 327.

"Estoppel is a rule of evidence; you cannot found a suit upon it;" [1891] 3 Ch. 82, per Bowen, L. J.

Where one of two joint tort-feasors is sued, a judgment in his favor cannot be set up as res judicata in a suit against another of them; Bigelow v. Copper Co., 225 U. S. 111, 32 Sup. Ct. 641, 56 L. Ed. 1009, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 875.

In N. Y. Life Ins. Co. v. Chittenden, 134 Iowa, 613, 112 N. W. 96, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 233, 120 Am. St. Rep. 441, 13 Ann. Cas. 408, a life insurance company paid a policy to the administrator of the insured, who had disappeared more than seven years before; upon his reappearing, the company brought an action against the administrator for the proceeds of the policy, but it was held that the judgment was res judicata on the ques-

785; Fairbanks, Morse & Co. v. Walker, 76 Kan. 903, 92 Pac. 1129, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 558. He must, upon the discovery of the fraud, announce his purpose and adhere to it. If he treat the property as his own, his right is lost; he has a reasonable time in which to make his election; Shappirio v. Goldberg, 192 U. S. 232, 24 Sup. Ct. 259, 48 L. Ed. 419.

The right may be waived by mere lapse of time; Veazie v. Williams, 3 Story 612, Fed. Cas. No. 16,907; see 6 Cl. & F. 234; or other circumstances; 9 B. & C. 59; Whitney v. Alaire, 4 Den. (N. Y.) 554; Kimball v. Cunningham, 4 Mass. 502, 3 Am. Dec. 230.

The purpose to rescind, if on the ground of fraud, must be announced promptly, unconditionally and unequivocally, upon the discovery of the fraud; Blank v. Aronson, 187 Fed. 241, 109 C. C. A. 327; there must be no vacillation of purpose; Richardson v. Lowe, 149 Fed. 625, 79 C. C. A. 317.

In case of a conditional sale or exchange, the party desiring to rescind must return or tender a return of all the property received by him under the terms of the sale or exchange, and within a reasonable time; Young v. Argo, 1 Marv. (Del.) 156, 40 Atl. 719, where it was held that the question as to what is a reasonable time is for the court under the circumstances of each case; it is said that the question is for the jury; Clark v. Steel Works, 53 Fed. 491, 3 C. C. A. 600.

If a party means to rescind a contract because of the failure of the other party to perform, he should give a clear notice of his intention to do so, unless the contract itself dispenses with such notice, or unless notice becomes unnecessary by reason of the conduct of the parties; Hennessy v. Bacon, 137 U. S. 78, 11 Sup. Ct. 17, 34 L. Ed. 605.

The equity for the rescission and cancellation of agreements, deeds, and other instruments arises when a transaction is vitiated by illegality or fraud, or by reason of its having been carried on in ignorance or mistake of facts material to its operation; Bisp. Eq. 31; U. S. v. Tel. Co., 128 U. S. 315, 9 Sup. Ct. 90, 32 L. Ed. 450. The jurisdiction of equity is exercised upon the principle of quia timet; that is, for fear that such agreements, securities, deeds, and other instruments may be vexatiously or injuriously used against the party seeking relief, when the evidence to impeach them may be lost; or that they may throw a cloud or suspicion over his interest or title; or where he has a defence good in equity which cannot be made available at law. The cases in which this relief will be granted on account of misrepresentation and fraud may be divided into four classes: first, where there is actual fraud in the party defendant in which the party plaintiff has not participated; Smith v. Richards, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 26, 10 L. Ed. 42; secondly, where there is constructive fraud against public policy and the party plaintiff does not appear to have participated therein; thirdly, where there is a fraud against public policy and the party plaintiff has participated therein, but public policy would be defeated by allowing it to stand; fourthly, where there is a constructive fraud by both parties,—that is, where both parties are in delicto, but not in pari delicto; see 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 694; Horton v. Moyers, 25 Ga. 89; Smith v. Elliott's Adm'r, 1 Pat. & H. (Va.) 307; Bisph. Eq. § 31. The court will decree that a deed or other solemn instrument shall be delivered up and cancelled, not only when it is voidable on account of fraud, but also when it is absolutely void, unless its invalidity appears upon the face of it, so that it may be defeated at any time by a defence at law; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 698; Field v. Holbrook, 6 Duer. (N. Y.) 597. To rescind an executed contract for alleged false representations, fraud must be made clearly to appear, and it must be shown that the complainant has been injured and deceived thereby; Union R. Co. v. Duel, 124 U. S. 173, 8 Sup. Ct. 433, 31 L. Ed. 417.

The ignorance or mistake which will authorize relief in equity must be an ignorance or mistake of material facts; Daniel v. Mitchell, 1 Stor. 173, Fed. Cas. No. 3562; and the mistake must be mutual; Allen v. Hammond, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 63, 9 L. Ed. 633; McCobb v. Richardson, 24 Me. 82, 41 Am. Dec. 374; Riegel v. Life Ins. Co., 153 Pa. 134, 25 Atl. 1070, 19 L. R. A. 166; Weiner v. Rawson, 89 Ga. 619, 15 S. E. 813. If the facts are known but the law is mistaken, the same rule applies in equity as at law, that a mere mistake or ignorance of law, where there is no fraud or trust, is immaterial: ignorantia legis neminem excusat; Adams, Eq., 8th ed. 188. See Kornegay v. Everett, 99 N. C. 30, 5 S. E. 418; IGNORANCE; MISTAKE.

Instruments may also be rescinded and canceled when they have been obtained from persons who were at the time under duress or incapacity; French's Heirs v. French, 8 Ohio 214, 31 Am. Dec. 441; Cook v. Tounbs, 36 Miss. 685; or by persons who stood in a confidential relation and took advantage of that relation; Thompson v. Lee, 31 Ala. 292; 8 Beav. 437; Mortland v. Mortland, 151 Pa. 593, 25 Atl. 150; Armstrong v. Logan, 115 Mo. 465, 22 S. W. 384; Smith v. Cuddy, 96 Mich. 562, 56 N. W. 89.

Gross inadequacy of consideration; Howard v. Edgell, 17 Vt. 9; Bond v. Watson, 22 Ga. 637; Matthews v. Crockett's Adm'r, 82 Va. 394; Thackrah v. Haas, 119 U. S. 499, 7 Sup. Ct. 311, 30 L. Ed. 486; fraudulent misrepresentation and concealment; Boyce's Ex'rs v. Grundy, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 210, 7 L. Ed. 655; Norton v. Norton, 74 Ia. 161, 37 N. W. 129; Harper v. Harper, 85 Ky. 160, 3 S. W. 5, 7 Am. St. Rep. 583; hardship and unfairness; French's Heirs v. French, 8 Ohio, 214, 31 Am. Dec. 441; Bank of Republic v. Baxter, 31 Vt. 101; undue influence; Harding v. Wheaton, 2 Mas. 378, Fed. Cas. No.

Reasonable time means before the lapse of a time, after the true state of things is known, so long that under the circumstances of the particular case the other party may fairly infer that the right of rescission is waived. This statement reconciles the substance and language of the best English authorities; Pollock, Contracts, 630.

"In order that the remedy should not be lost by laches or delay, it is, if not universally, at all events ordinarily * * * necessary that there be sufficient knowledge of the facts constituting the title to relief;" L. R. 5 P. C. 241.

"Acquiescence and waiver are always questions of fact. There can be neither without knowledge." And the knowledge must be actual, not merely possible or potential; "the wrong-doer cannot make extreme vigilance and promptitude conditions of rescission;" Pence v. Langdon, 99 U. S. 581, 25 L. Ed. 420. In regard to acquiescence in the contract the nature of the property concerned is material; 8 D. M. & G. 150; if a party entitled to avoid a transaction has precluded himself by his acts or acquiescence in his life time, his representatives cannot dispute it afterwards; 3 D. F. & J. 535.

If before the election to rescind has been made an innocent third party has acquired an interest in the property or if in consequence of his delay, the possession even of the wrong-doer is affected, it will preclude the exercise of the right to rescind; L. R. 7 Ex. 34. An intention to rescind must be communicated to the other party. This can be done by instituting proceedings to have the contract set aside judicially, in which case the rescission when obtained relates back to the commencement of the proceedings; L. R. 4 H. L. 73; or if the other party is the first to sue on the contract, the rescission may be set up as a defense and this is itself a sufficient act of rescission without any prior declaration of an intention to rescind; L. R. 7 Ex. 36.

Apart from judicial proceedings the communication of the desire to rescind need not be formal, but it must be a distinct and positive rejection of the contract; L. R. 9 Eq. 263. But it seems that if notwithstanding the express repudiation the other party insists on treating the contract as in force, then judicial steps should be taken; Pollock, Contracts 619.

A party exercising his option to rescind is entitled to be restored so far as possible to his former position. The contract cannot be rescinded if the position of the parties has been changed so that the former state of things cannot be restored; Pollock, Contracts 621. In re Morgantown Tin Plate Co., 184 Fed. 109.

RESCOUS. An old term, synonymous with rescue, which see.

RESCRIPT. In Canon Law. A term including any form of apostolical letter emanating from the pope. The answer of the pope in writing. Dict. Droit Can.

In Civil Law. The answer of the prince, at the request of the parties, respecting some matter in dispute between them, or to magistrates, in relation to some doubtful matter submitted to him. They were binding on the court in that suit; originally, in some cases at least, they seem to have been binding as precedents. Gray, Nat. & Sources of Law 192.

The rescript was differently denominated according to the character of those who sought it. They were called adnotations or subnotations, when the answer was given at the request of private citizens; letters or epistles, when he answered the consultation of magistrates; pragmatic sanctions, when he answered a corporation, the citizens of a province, or a municipality. See Code.

At Common Law. A counterpart.

In Massachusetts it is used to denote the statement of the decision of the supreme judicial court as an appellate tribunal, and the accompanying brief statement of the reasons for the decision sent to the court from which the case was brought.

RESCRIPTION. In French Law. A rescription is a letter by which the maker requests some one to pay a certain sum of money, or to account for him to a third person for it. Pothier, Contr. de Change, n. 225.

According to this definition, bills of exchange are a species of rescription. The difference appears to be this,—that a bill of exchange is given when there has been a contract of exchange between the drawer and the payee; whereas the rescription is sometimes given in payment of a debt, and at other times it is lent to the payee.

RESCUE. The forcibly and knowingly freeing another from arrest or imprisonment. 4 Bla. Com. 131. A deliverance of a prisoner from lawful custody by a third person. 2 Bish. Cr. Law § 1065; 1 Russ. Cr. § 597. Taking and setting at liberty, against law, a distress taken for rent, services, or damage feasant. Bacon, Abr. Rescous.

If the rescued prisoner was arrested for felony, then the rescuer is a felon; if for treason, a traitor; 3 P. Wms. 468; Cro. Car. 583; and if for a trespass, he is liable to a fine as if he had committed the original offence; Hawk. Pl. Cr. b. 5, c. 21. See U. S. v. Dodge, 2 Gall. 313, Fed. Cas. No. 14,975; Russ. & R. 432. If the principal be acquitted, the rescuer may nevertheless be fined for the misdemeanor in the obstruction and contempt of public justice; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 598.

In order to render the rescuer criminal, it is necessary he should have knowledge that the person whom he sets at liberty has been apprehended for a criminal offence, if he is in the custody of a private person; but if he be under the care of a public officer, then he is to take notice of it at his peril; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 606. See 1 Car. & M. 299.

A departure from an unlawful imprisonment or custody is not an escape; and one who, without violence, assists a person who is confined without authority of law to depart from his place of confinement, is not guilty of the crime of assisting a prisoner to escape; People v. Ah Teung, 92 Cal. 421, 28 Pac. 577, 15 L. R. A. 190; State v. Leach, 7 Conn. 452, 18 Am. Dec. 113. See BREACH OF PRISON; ESCAPE.

The rescue of cattle and goods distrained by pound-breach is a common-law offense and indictable; 7 C. & P. 233; Com. v. Beale, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 514.

In Maritime Law. The retaking by a party captured of a prize made by the enemy. There is still another kind of rescue which partakes of the nature of a recapture: it occurs when the weaker party, before he is overpowered, obtains relief from the arrival of fresh succors, and is thus preserved from the force of the enemy. 1 C. Rob. 224, 271; Halleck, Int. Law cxxxv.

Rescue differs from recapture. The rescuers do not by the rescue become owners of the property, as if it had been a new prize; but the property is restored to the original owners by the rule of postliminium.

RESCUSSOR. The party making a rescue is sometimes so called; but more properly he is a rescuer.

RESEALING WRIT. The second sealing of a writ by a master so as to continue it, or cure it of an irregularity. Whart. Dict.

RESERVATION. The creation of a right or interest which had no prior existence as such in a thing or part of a thing granted, by means of a clause inserted by the grantor in the instrument of conveyance.

"The creation in behalf of the grantor of a new right issuing out of the thing granted, something which did not exist as an independent right before the grant;" Stone v. Stone, 141 Ia. 438, 119 N. W. 712, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 221, 18 Ann. Cas. 797; Herbert v. Pue, 72 Md. 307, 20 Atl. 182; Blackman v. Striker, 142 N. Y. 555, 37 N. E. 484.

That part of a deed or instrument which reserves a thing not in esse at the time of the grant, but newly created. 2 Hilliard, Abr. 359.

The meaning of a reservation in a contract must be determined in every case by the particular facts of the case; Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. R. Co., 143 U. S. 596, 12 Sup. Ct. 479, 36 L. Ed. 277.

A reservation is distinguished from an exception in that it is of a new right or interest: thus, a right of way reserved at the time of conveying an estate, which may have been enjoyed by the grantor as owner of the estate, becomes a new right. State v. Wilson, 42 Me. 9. Sometimes the terms are used indiscriminately and what is designated by one in the deed is construed to be the other by the court; Wellman v. Churchill, 92 Me. 193, 42 Atl. 352; Stone v. Stone, 141 Ia. 438, 119 N. W. 712, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 221, 18 Ann. Cas. 797. A reservation is never of a part of the real estate granted but something taken back out of it; while an exception is of some part of the estate not granted; Youngerman v. Board of Sup'rs, 110 Ia. 731, 81 N. W. 166; the former applies to something that did not exist before; the latter, where the subject already exists; Sheffield Water Co. v. Tanning Co., 225 Pa. 614, 74 Atl. 742.

An easement may be acquired by the grantor of a deed poll by a clause of reservation; and the technical distinction between reservation and exception will be disregarded, and the language used so construed as to effectuate the intention of the parties; Haggerty v. Lee, 50 N. J. Eq. 464, 26 Atl. 537.

See EXCEPTION.

A reservation may be of a life-estate; Colby v. Colby, 28 Vt. 10; Logan's Adm'r v. Caldwell, 23 Mo. 373; of a right of flowage; Moulton v. Faught, 41 Me. 298; right to use water; Hammond v. Woodman, 41 Me. 177, 66 Am. Dec. 219; Olmsted v. Loomis, 9 N. Y. 423; right of way; Hart v. Connor, 25 Conn. 331; Brown v. Thissell, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 254; Biles v. R. Co., 5 Wash. 509, 32 Pac. 211; a right of fishing; U. S. v. Winans, 198 U. S. 371, 25 Sup. Ct. 662, 49 L. Ed. 1089; a ground rent, in Pennsylvania, and of many other rights and interests; 9 B. Monr. 163; Alcutt v. Lakin, 33 N. H. 507, 66 Am. Dec. 739; Meriwether v. Lewis, 9 B. Monr. (Ky.) 163; Sloan v. Furnace Co., 29 Ohio St. 568; Stockbridge Iron Co. v. Iron Co., 107 Mass. 290.

A reservation must always be for the grantor, and, if there are no words of limitation, for his life only, and it is never to a stranger; Engel v. Ayer, 85 Me. 448, 27 Atl. 352; Stone v. Stone, 141 Ia. 438, 119 N. W. 712, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 221, 18 Ann. Cas. 797; Jackson v. Snodgrass, 140 Ala. 365, 37 South. 246; Haverhill Sav. Bk. v. Griffin, 184 Mass. 419, 68 N. E. 839, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 221, note; although to save it in some cases it has been held to be an exception; Bartlett v. Barrows, 22 R. I. 642, 49 Atl. 31; Bridger v. Pierson, 45 N. Y. 601; Martin v. Cook, 102 Mich. 267, 60 N. W. 679; or to operate by way of estoppel; Butler v. Gosling, 130 Cal. 422, 62 Pac. 596.

Of Public Lands. The public land laws of the United States provide for reservations or "reserves" of government land for certain public purposes; such as Indian reservations and those for military posts, and for the conservation of natural resources, such as forests, mines, water power and the like. The jurisdiction of a circuit court over crimes committed on military reservations extends to the whole of such reservations, whether used for military purposes or not; Benson v. U. S., 146 U. S. 325, 13 Sup. Ct. 60, 36 L. Ed. 991.

The land department of the United States has authority to withdraw or reserve public lands from sale, etc., and a grant by congress does not operate upon lands theretofore reserved for any purpose whatever. Lands withdrawn from sale by the land department are considered as reserved within the terms of this rule; Northern Pac. Ry. Co. v. Logging & Mfg. Co., 68 Fed. 993, 16 C. C. A. 97, 34 U. S. App. 66. An act for the sale of desert lands does not embrace alternate sections reserved to the United States along the lines of railroads for the construction of which congress has made grants of lands; U. S. v. Healey, 160 U. S. 136, 16 Sup. Ct. 247, 40 L. Ed. 369. See LANDS, PUBLIC; LAND GRANT; INDIAN TRIBES; WOODS AND FORESTS.

RESERVE. The National Bank Act directs that all national banks in the sixteen largest cities shall at all times have on hand, in lawful money of the United States, an amount equal to at least twenty-five per cent. of the aggregate amount of its notes in circulation and deposits. Fifteen per cent. is required of all other national banks.

When three-fourths of the national banks in any city of 25,000 inhabitants apply to the comptroller to be added to the reserve cities, he may grant their request and thereafter the banks in such city shall maintain the twenty-five per cent. reserve. Act of March 3, 1903.

When the reserve falls below the proper limit, the bank must not increase "its liabilities by making any new loans or discounts," otherwise than by discounting or purchasing bills of exchange payable at sight, nor make any dividend, till the limit is reached. On a failure to make good the reserve for thirty days after notice by the comptroller of the currency, the latter may, with the concurrence of the secretary of the treasury, appoint a receiver to wind up the bank. R. S. § 5191. See NATIONAL BANKS.

In Insurance Law. That part of the premiums on a policy, with the interest thereon, which is required to be reserved or set aside as a fund for the payment of the policy when it becomes due. Richards, Ins. L. 20.

An insurance company is deemed to be solvent when its reserved funds, invested at a specified rate of interest, will suffice to meet the payments on its policies as they shall mature. As a factor of safety, the rate of interest is usually fixed very low.

Under the statutes of many states insurance companies are required to deposit in each state where they do business securities approved by some state officer, usually an insurance commissioner, to an amount specified which is termed the reserve fund; Biddle, Ins. § 66. They are held not to apply to relief associations where the assessments are purely voluntary; 11 Ins. L. J. 859. The securities which compose a reserve fund are in the nature of a trust fund for the policy holders, and not a security for the general creditors; Falkenbach v. Patterson, 43 Ohio St. 359, 1 N. E. 757; Relfe v. Life Ins. Co., 76 Mo. 594; Moies v. Mut. Life Ins. Co., 12 R. I. 259; and a receiver appointed in case of the insolvency of a company is not entitled to control it, but securities are held in trust for distribution by the trustee; Cooke v. Warner, 56 Conn. 234, 14 Atl. 798. After the policy holders are satisfied, the securities, if the property of the company, may be applied for the benefit of general creditors; Moies v. Mut. Life Ins. Co., 12 R. I. 259.

In many states such fund is required as a prerequisite to permission to a foreign insurance company to do business in the state, and ordinarily the deposits required by such laws are for the benefit of domestic policy holders; In re Life Ass'n of America, 91 Mo. 177, 3 S. W. 833; Bockover v. Life Ass'n, 77 Va. 85; State v. Benton, 25 Neb. 834, 41 N. W. 793; 17 U. C. Ch. 160.

Another use of the term is its application to a fund sometimes called the safety fund and sometimes a reserve fund in policies issued by companies which provide for an assessment to meet the losses. Such fund is intended for the protection of living members by the use of the income for the payment of dues and assessments; 2 Joyce, Ins. § 1287. Where a reserve fund and the mortuary and benefit fund were to be raised by assessments, the latter being for the payment of death claims only and the former for the exclusive use of members, except that it might be used in payment of death claims when they exceed the experience table of mortality, it was held, upon dissolution, that the reserve fund was to be distributed exclusively among the holders of certificates in force, and that death claims had no right to share in it; In re Equitable Reserve F. L. Ass'n, 131 N. Y. 354, 30 N. E. 114.

In a policy on the Tontine system (see INSURANCE, subtitle, Tontine), where, in addition to the provision for the payment of death claims, it was provided that in case the policy holder survived the specified period and the policy remained in force, there should be a payment in cash or annuity bonds from a fund created by a certain class of policy holders consisting of those effecting insurance on the same plan and in the same year, the surplus and profits to be equitably apportioned among survivors of that class, it was held that the policy did not require a separate investment of these funds and that the consent of the assured to placing the dividends in a reserve fund did not extend its obligations in that respect; Bogardus v. Life Ins. Co., 101 N. Y. 328, 4 N. E. 522.

The term reserve in life insurance is also applied to the fund accumulated out of premiums after the payment of expenses and other charges properly apportioned to each policy, and where a life policy provides that, in case of lapse for non-payment of premium, the net reserve, less indebtedness, shall be applied to the purchase of extended insurance, or, if the assured shall so elect within three months, to the purchase of a paid-up policy, and also that said indebtedness may be paid in cash, and the entire net reserve so applied, such indebtedness must be paid within the three months; Omaha Nat. Bank v. Life Ins. Co., 81 Fed. 935.

Paying to the insured the reserve on his life policy, taking no promise to repay it, but with an agreement that it will be extinguished automatically by a charge against his reserve, is a payment, not a loan; Parish Orleans v. Life Ins. Co., 216 U. S. 517, 30 Sup. Ct. 385, 54 L. Ed. 597.

RESERVE BANKS. See NATIONAL BANK.

RESET. The receiving or harboring an outlawed person. Cowell.

RESIANCE. A man's residence or permanent abode. Such a man is called a resiant. Kitch. 33.

RESIANT ROLLS. Those containing the resiants in a tithing, etc., which were called over by the steward on holding courts leet.

RESIDENCE. Personal presence in a fixed and permanent abode. Roosevelt v. Kellogg, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 208; Sears v. Boston, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 251.

A residence is different from a domicile, although it is a matter of great importance in determining the place of domicile. The essential distinction between residence and domicile is that the first involves the intent to leave when the purpose for which one has taken up his abode ceases. The other has no such intent; the abiding is animo manendi. One may seek a place for the purposes of pleasure, of business, or of health. If his intent be to remain, it becomes his domicile; if his intent be to leave as soon as his purpose is accomplished, it is his residence; Brisenden v. Chamberlain, 53 Fed. 311. See Cambridge v. Charlestown, 13 Mass. 501; Hallowell v. Saco, 5 Greenl. (Me.) 143; People v. Platt, 50 Hun 454, 3 N. Y. Supp. 367; 59 L. J. 67; DOMICIL. But it has been held synonymous with domicile, as to appointment of a guardian; Cahon's Estate, 15 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 312. It is an element of domicile. See Appeal of Taney, 97 Pa. 74; Dacey, Dom. 1. Residence and habitancy are usually synonymous; Lee v. Boston, 2 Gray (Mass.) 490; 2 Kent 574, n. Residence indicates permanency of occupation, as distinct from lodging, or boarding, or temporary occupation, but does not include as much as domicile, which requires an intention combined with residence; Jefferson v. Washington, 19 Me. 293; 2 Kent 576. See Bartlett v. New York, 5 Sandf. (N. Y.) 44; People v. Tax Com'rs, 16 N. Y. Supp. 834. In a statute it was held not to mean business residence, but the fixed home of the party; 13 Repr. 430 (Md.). See 15 M. & W. 433; Hanover Nat. Bk. v. Stebbins, 69 Hun 308, 23 N. Y. Supp. 529. It is a physical fact, while domicile is a matter of intention; bona fide residence means "residence with domiciliary intent"; Lyon v. Lyon, 13 Pa. Dist. R. 634, per Sulzberger, J.

Residence has been held to be more restricted than domicile as applied to home-stead laws; Fulton v. Roberts, 113 N. C. 421, 18 S. E. 510.

An averment of residence is not equivalent to an allegation of citizenship; Grand Trunk Ry. Co. of Canada v. Twitchell, 59 Fed. 727, 8 C. C. A. 237, 21 U. S. App. 45. Residence and citizenship are wholly different things in connection with the jurisdiction of federal courts. One may remain a citizen of a state while residing temporarily in another state; Steigleder v. McQuesten, 198 U. S. 141, 25 Sup. Ct. 616, 49 L. Ed. 986.

Within the meaning of the statute against kidnapping, any place where a child has a right to be is its residence; Wallace v. State, 147 Ind. 621, 47 N. E. 13. See KIDNAPPING; DOMICIL.

As to the qualification for holding offices, see OFFICER.

RESIDENT. One who has his residence in a place.

One is a resident of a place from which his departure is indefinite as to time, definite as to purpose; and for this purpose he has made the place his temporary home; Brisenden v. Chamberlain, 53 Fed. 311. See NON-RESIDENT.

RESIDENT MINISTER. In International Law. See MINISTER.

RESIDUARY ACCOUNT. In English Practice. The account which every executor and administrator, after paying the debts and particular legacies of the deceased, and before paying over the residuum, must pass before the Board of Inland Revenue. 2 Steph. Com. 221.

RESIDUARY CLAUSE. The clause in a will by which that part of the property is disposed of which remains after satisfying previous bequests and devises. 4 Kent 541*; 2 Will. Exec., 7th Am. ed. *1316.

RESIDUARY DEVISEE. The person to whom the residue of a testator's real estate is devised after satisfying previous devises.

RESIDUARY ESTATE. What remains of a testator's estate after deducting the debts and the bequests and devises.

RESIDUARY LEGATEE. He to whom the residuum of the estate is devised or bequeathed by will. Rop. Leg.; Powell, Mortg. See LEGACY.

RESIDUE. That which remains of something after taking away a part of it: as, the residue of an estate, which is what has not been particularly devised by will.

What is left; the rest. Hulin v. Squires, 63 Hun 352, 18 N. Y. Supp. 309. What is left after all liabilities are discharged, and the objects of the testator carried into effect. Morgan v. Huggins, 48 Fed. 3.

A will bequeathing the general residue of personal property passes to the residuary legatee everything not otherwise effectually disposed of; and it makes no difference whether a legacy falls into the estate by lapse or is void at law, the next of kin is equally excluded; 15 Ves. 416; 2 Mer. 392. See Phelps v. Robbins, 40 Conn. 264.

Where a residuary legacy lapses, there is a pro tanto intestacy; Reed's Estate, 82 Pa. 428. Where the residue is not expressly disposed of and it does not appear by the will that the executors were intended to take it beneficially, they are to be deemed trustees for the next of kin; 8 Beav. 475; though previous to 1830, it was considered in the English courts that if the testator had named in his will an executor, but no residuary legatee, the executor should retain the residue of the personal estate for his own benefit; Schoul. Ex. & Ad. § 494. Under the statutes 2 Geo. IV. and 1 Wm. IV. c. 40, the executor is a trustee for the next of kin, unless it shall appear from the will that he is to take the residue beneficially; L. R. 7 H. L. 606; and he is not entitled to it by implication of law; id. See 12 Eng. Rul. Cas. 20; LEGACY. A legacy to the next of kin does not exclude his claim to the residue; Amb. 566; 12 Ves. 298.

RESIGNATION. See OFFICER; CLUB.

RESIGNATION BOND. In Ecclesiastical Law. A bond given by an incumbent to resign on a certain contingency. It may be conditioned to resign for good and sufficient reason, and therefore lawful, e. g. to resign if he take a second benefice, or on request, if a patron present his son or kinsman when of age to take the living, etc. Cro. Jac. 249, 274. But equity will generally relieve the incumbent; 1 Rolle, Abr. 443.

RESIGNEE. One in favor of whom a resignation is made. 1 Bell, Com. 125, n.

RESIST. To oppose by direct, active, and quasi-forceful means. State v. Welch, 37 Wis. 196, 201.

RESISTANCE (Lat. re, back, sisto, to stand, to place). The opposition of force to force. See ARREST; ASSAULT; OFFICER; PROCESS.

RESOLUTION. A solemn judgment or decision of a court. This word is frequently used in this sense in Coke and some of the more ancient reporters.

An agreement to a law or other thing adopted by a legislature or popular assembly. See Dict. de Jurisp.; ORDINANCE; JOINT RESOLUTION.

In Civil Law. The act by which a contract which existed and was good is rendered null.

Resolution differs essentially from rescission. The former presupposes the contract to have been valid, and it is owing to a cause posterior to the agreement that the resolution takes place; while rescission, on the contrary, supposes that some vice or defect annulled the contract from the beginning. Resolution may be by consent of the parties or by the decision of a competent tribunal; rescission must always be by the judgment of a court; 7 Troplong, de la Vente, n. 689; 7 Toullier 551.

RESOURCES. Money or any property that can be converted into supplies, capabilities of producing wealth, or to supply necessary wants; available means or capabilities of any kind. Ming v. Woolfolk, 3 Mont. 386.

RESPECTIVE, RESPECTIVELY. Words of severance. Occurring in a testamentary gift to more persons than one, their effect is to sort out the devisees or legatees so that they take as tenants in common; 31 L. J. Ch. 368. In court or in chambers respectively, as used in the Judicature Act, means either in court or in chambers; 53 L. J. Q. B. 428; 13 Q. B. D. 218.

RESPECTU COMPUTI VICECOMITIS HABENDO. A writ for respiting a sheriff's account addressed to the treasurer and barons of the exchequer. Reg. Orig. 139.

RESPITE. In Civil Law. An act by which a debtor who is unable to satisfy his debts at the moment transacts (i. e. compromises) with his creditors and obtains from them time or delay for the payment of the sums which he owes to them. La. Code 3051.

A forced respite takes place when a part of the creditors refuse to accept the debtor's proposal, and when the latter is obliged to compel them, by judicial authority, to consent to what the others have determined in the cases directed by law.

A voluntary respite takes place when all the creditors consent to the proposal of the debtor to pay in a limited time the whole or a part of his debt.

A delay, forbearance, or continuation of time.

In Criminal Law. A reprieve. A temporary suspension of the execution of a sentence. See Mishler v. Com., 62 Pa. 60, 1 Am. Rep. 377. It differs from a pardon, which is an absolute suspension. See PARDON; REPRIEVE.

RESPITE OF HOMAGE. To dispense with the performance of homage by tenants who held their lands in consideration of performing homage to their lords. Cowell.

RESPONDEAT OUSTER (that he answer over). See ABATEMENT; JUDGMENT; OUSTER.

RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR. A phrase often used to indicate the responsibility of a principal for the acts of his servant or agent. MASTER AND SERVANT; PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

RESPONDENT. The party who makes an answer to a bill or other proceeding in chancery; or to a libel in divorce.

In Civil Law. One who answers or is security for another; a fidejussor. Dig. 2. 8. 6.

RESPONDENTIA. In Maritime Law. A loan of money, on maritime interest, on goods laden on board of a ship, upon the condition that if the goods be wholly lost in the course of the voyage, by any of the perils enumerated in the contract, the lender shall lose his money; if not, that the borrower shall pay him the sum borrowed, with the interest agreed upon. See Maitland v. Atlantic, Newb. 514, Fed. Cas. No. 8,980.

The contract is called respondentia because the money is lent mainly, or most frequently, on the personal responsibility of the borrower. It differs principally from bottomry, which see, in the following circumstances: bottomry is a loan on the ship, respondentia is a loan upon the goods. Conard v. Ins. Co., 1 Pet. (U. S.) 386, 7 L. Ed. 189. The money is to be repaid to the lender, with maritime interest, upon the arrival of the ship in the one case, and of the goods in the other. In most other respects the contracts are nearly the same, and are governed by the same principles. In the former, the ship and tackle, being hypothecated, are liable, as well as the borrower; in the latter, the lender has, in general, it is said, only the personal security of the borrower; Marsh. Ins. 734.

If any part of the goods arrive safely at the end of the voyage, the lender is entitled to have the proceeds applied to the payment of his debt. If the loan is made to the master, and not to the owners of the goods, the necessity for the loan and for the hypothecation of the cargo must be clearly shown, or the owners of the goods, and, consequently, the goods themselves, will not be bound. The ship and freight are always first to be resorted to to raise money for the necessity of the ship or the prosecution of the voyage; and it seems that a bond upon the cargo is considered by implication of law a bond upon the ship and freight also, and that unless the ship be liable in law the cargo cannot be held liable; The Constancia, 4 Notes of Cas. 285, 512, 677; 10 Jur. 845; 2 W. Rob. 83; 14 Jur. 96. See MASTER OF A SHIP.

If the contract clearly contemplates that the goods on which the loan is made are to be sold or exchanged, free from any lien, in the course of the voyage, the lender will have no lien on them, but must rely wholly upon the personal responsibility of the borrower. It has frequently been said by elementary writers, and without qualification, that the lender has no lien; 2 Bla. Com. 458; 3 Kent 354; but the form of bond generally in use in this country expressly hypothecates the goods, and thus, even when there is no express hypothecation, if the goods are still on board at the end of the voyage, it is not doubtful that a court of admiralty will direct the arrest of the goods and enforce against them the maritime lien or privilege conferred by the respondentia contract. There is, perhaps, no common-law lien, but this maritime lien only; but the latter will be enforced by the proper admiralty process. See the authorities cited in note to Abb. Shipp., 13th ed. 152, 154, 175; Atlantic Ins. Co. v. Conard, 4 Wash. C. C. 662, Fed. Cas. No. 627; form of respondentia bonds in Conkl. Adm. 263; 1 Pars. Mar. Law 437; Abb. Shipp. 455. See ADMIRALTY; MARITIME CAUSE; LIEN.

RESPONDERE NON DEBET (Lat. ought not to reply). The prayer of a plea where the defendant insists that he ought not to answer, as when he claims a privilege: for example, as being a member of congress or a foreign ambassador. 1 Chitty, Pl. *433.

RESPONSA PRUDENTIUM (Lat.). In Roman Law. Opinions given by Roman lawyers.

Before the time of Augustus, every lawyer was authorized, de jure, to answer questions put to him; and all such answers, responsa prudentium, had equal authority—not the force of law, but the opinion of a lawyer. Augustus was the first prince who gave to certain distinguished juris-consults the particular privilege of answering in his name; and from that period their answers acquired greater authority. Adrian determined in a more precise manner the degree of authority which these answers should have, by enacting that the opinions of such authorized juris-consults, when unanimously given, should have the force of law (legis vicem) and should be followed by the judges, and that when they were divided, the judge was allowed to adopt that which to him appeared the most equitable. The opinions of other lawyers held the same place they had before: they were considered merely as the opinions of learned men. Mackeldey, Man. Introd. § 43; Mackeldey, Hist. du Dr. Rom. §§ 40, 49; Hugo, Hist. du Dr. Rom. § 313; Inst. 1. 2. 8; Institutes Expliquées, n. 39.

RESPONSALIS. In Old English Law. One who appeared for another.

A person, without restrictions as to character, permitted by the judge to act for a party in his presence. Such a person was sometimes allowed by a justice to act on the appearance of the defendant, which, according to the old writs, was always in proper person. Lord Coke calls special attention to the difference between a responsalis and an attorney; 2 Co. Inst. 249; In re Cooper, 22 N. Y. 68, per T. W. Dwight, arguendo.

In Ecclesiastical Law. A proctor.

RESPONSIBILITY. The obligation to answer for an act done and to repair any injury it may have caused.

One person—as, for example, a principal, master, or parent—is frequently responsible, civilly, for the acts of another.

Penal responsibility is always personal; and no one can be punished for the commission of a crime but the person who has committed it, or his accomplice.

RESPONSIBLE. Able to pay the sum, which may be required of him; able to discharge an obligation. Webst. Dict.; Farley v. Day, 26 N. H. 527; People v. Dorsheimer, 55 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 119. A promise “to be responsible” for the debt of another is merely a guaranty, and not a suretyship; Bickel v. Auner, 9 Phila. (Pa.) 499; Gilbert v. Henck, 30 Pa. 209.

In an act directing municipal officers to award contracts to the lowest responsible bidder, responsible applies not only to pecuniary ability but also to judgment and skill; Interstate Vitified Brick & P. Co. v. City of Philadelphia, 164 Pa. 477, 30 Atl. 383. See People v. Kent, 160 Ill. 655, 43 N. E. 760.

RESPONSIBLE GOVERNMENT. A term used in England and her colonial possessions to indicate an obligation to resign, on the part of the ministry, upon the declaration of a want of confidence by vote of the legislative branch of the colonial government. Mills, Col. Const. 27.

RESSEISER. The taking of lands into the hands of the crown, where a general livery or ouster le main was formerly misused. Whart.

REST. In computing compound interest, the date to which interest is computed and then added to the principal is so called.

RESTAUR, or RESTOR. The remedy or recourse which assurers have against each other, according to the date of their assurances; or against the master, if the loss arise through his default; also the remedy or recourse a person has against his guarantor, or other person, who is to indemnify him from any damage sustained. Whart.

RESTAURANT. An eating house. Lewis v. Hitchcock, 10 Fed. 6. See INN; INN-KEEPER.

RESTITUTIO IN INTEGRUM. In Civil Law. A restoring parties to the condition they were in before entering into a contract or agreement, on account of fraud, infancy, force, honest mistake, etc. Calvinus, Lex. The going into a cause anew from the beginning. Id.

RESTITUTION. The placing back or restoring articles which have been lost by jet-tison: this is done, when the remainder of the cargo has been saved, at the general charge of the owners of the cargo; but when the remainder of the goods is afterwards lost, there is not any restitution. Stevens, Av. pt. 1, c. 1, s. 1, art. 1, n. 8. As to captured vessels, see RECAPTURE.

In Practice. The return of something to the owner of it or to the person entitled to it.

After property has been taken into execution, and the judgment has been reversed or set aside, the party against whom the execution was sued out shall have restitution; and this is enforced by a writ of restitution; Cro. Jac. 698; Duncan v. Kirkpatrick, 13 S. & R. (Pa.) 294. When the thing levied upon under an execution has not been sold, the thing itself shall be restored; when it has been sold, the price for which it is sold is to be restored; Bacon, Abr. Execution (Q); 1 Maule & S. 425.

“Pending an appeal from an order of the common pleas striking off the satisfaction of a judgment, the plaintiff in the judgment issued an execution, and the terre-tenant of the land was compelled to pay to the sheriff a large sum of money to prevent a sale of the land; the supreme court subsequently reversed the order striking off the satisfaction of the judgment; held, that the terre-tenant was entitled to a writ of restitution.” Whitesell v. Peck, 176 Pa. 170, 35 Atl. 48. Whether restitution should be made in the progress of judicial procedure if the interest of the parties defendant are diverse, is a question of fact; Andrews v. Thum, 71 Fed. 763, 18 C. C. A. 308, 33 U. S. App. 393.

RESTITUTION EDICT. An edict issued in 1629, by Emperor Ferdinand II., requiring Protestants to restore to the Roman Catholic authorities all ecclesiastical property which they had appropriated at the peace of Passau in 1552.

RESTITUTION OF CONJUGAL RIGHTS. In Ecclesiastical Law. A compulsory renewal of cohabitation between a husband and wife who have been living separately. Unknown in the United States.

A suit may be brought in the divorce and matrimonial court for this purpose whenever either the husband or wife is guilty of the injury of subtraction, or lives separate from the other without sufficient reason, by which the party injured may compel the other to return to cohabitation; 3 Bla. Com. 94; 3 Steph. Com. 11; but a woman cannot take proceedings for the restitution of conjugal rights until she has used reasonable means to induce her husband to take her back; 14 P. Div. 26; and the rule requires a written demand for cohabitation, of a conciliatory character; id. A wife whose husband had refused to receive her because she had left her home on account of a disagreement with his children by a former marriage, was held entitled to a decree for the restitution of conjugal rights; [1896] P. 175; 1 Add. Eccl.

305; 3 Hagg. 619. Formerly a deed of separation afforded no bar to this suit, even though it in terms forbade such proceedings. But this rule is now changed; Schoul. Hus. & Wife § 482.

The "just cause" for withdrawing from cohabitation need not be sufficient ground of divorce; 94 L. T. 704. The plaintiff must write a preliminary request for cohabitation, which must be clear and friendly, though it may be peremptory; 85 L. T. 648.

See CRUELTY.

RESTITUTION OF STOLEN GOODS. At common law there was no restitution of goods upon an indictment, because it was at the suit of the crown only, therefore the party was compelled to bring an appeal of robbery in order to have his goods again; but a writ of restitution was granted by 21 Hen. VIII. c. 11, and it became the practice of the crown to order, without any writ, immediate restitution of such goods.

RESTITUTION, WRIT OF. A writ which lies, after the reversal of a judgment, to restore a party to all that he has lost by occasion of the judgment. 2 Tidd, Pr. 1186.

RESTITUTIONE EXTRACTI AB EC-CLESIA. A writ which formerly lay to restore a man to the church, which he had recovered for a sanctuary being suspected of a felony. Reg. Orig.; Cowell.

RESTITUTIONE TEMPORALIU. A writ addressed to the sheriff to restore the temporalities of a bishopric to the bishop elected and confirmed. Fitz. N. B. 169.

RESTRAINING. Narrowing down; making less extensive. For example, a restraining statute is one by which the common law is narrowed down or made less extensive in its operation. Restraining powers are the limitations or restrictions upon the use of a power imposed by the donor. Restraining order is an order granted on motion or petition, restraining the Bank of England or other public company from allowing any dealing with certain specified stock or shares. Hunt, Eq. pt. iii. c. 3, s. 2.

A temporary restraining order is distinguished from an interlocutory injunction in that it is ordinarily granted merely pending the hearing of a motion for a temporary injunction and its life ceases with the disposition of that motion and without further order of the court, while an interlocutory injunction is usually granted until the coming in of an answer or until the final hearing of the cause and stands as a binding restraint until rescinded by the further action of the court; High, Inj. § 3, quoted in Houghton v. Meyer, 208 U. S. 149, 28 Sup. Ct. 234, 52 L. Ed. 432. See UNITED STATES COURTS.

RESTRAINT. The effect of restraint in the law is to be considered mainly with respect to trade, marriage, princes, and alienation, all of which are herein separately considered. As to restraint upon anticipation, see MARRIED WOMAN; and as to the execution of deeds or other documents under restraint, see DURESS.

RESTRAINT OF MARRIAGE. Conditions attached to gifts or bequests to a person who has never been married, in general restraint of marriage, are void; Chit. Const. 619; so is an agreement not to marry any one except a particular person; 4 Burr. 2225. The gift or bequest is good and the condition fails, but if the restraint is partial, with a gift over in case of marrying a Roman Catholic or a particular person or without the consent of a particular person, the condition is good, and so is a condition in restraint of a second marriage. See 1 Ch. D. 399; 1 Q. B. D. 279; 16 Ch. D. 188.

It is said that a condition in restraint of marriage is valid if it is a condition precedent; 2 Dick. 712. In 1 Q. B. D. 279, it was held to be the intention of the testator not to restrain marriage but to make provision for the devisee until marriage. See Poll. Contr. 307. A limitation until marriage is good; Wats. Comp. Eq. 1139, being construed as a provision until marriage and not a restraint on marriage. "The distinction between a bequest to which a condition is appended in restraint of marriage, and the limitation of an annuity or bequest to continue as long as a woman remains unmarried, has been fully recognized by our decisions." Hotz's Estate, 38 Pa. 422, 80 Am. Dec. 490; Kromer Estate, 22 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 327, 330. And see In re Appleby's Estate, 100 Minn. 408, 111 N. W. 305, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 591, 117 Am. St. Rep. 709, 10 Ann. Cas. 563.

The rule that a condition in restraint in marriage is void, does not apply to a second marriage; Herd v. Catron, 97 Tenn. 662, 37 S. W. 551, 37 L. R. A. 731. As to what is a condition in restraint of marriage, see 10 Harv. L. Rev. 1072; and as to contracts in restraint of marriage, 14 Harv. L. Rev. 614. See MARRIAGE.

RESTRAINT OF PRINCES AND RULERS.

A phrase used in the exceptions to bills of lading, importing a limitation upon the liability of a ship-owner under the contract. The words apply only to the ruling power of a country and not to pirates or any lawless power; 4 Term 783; they apply not only to hostile acts, but to those committed by the government of which the assured is a subject, as the seizure of a vessel for use as a fire-ship; 2 Ld. Raym. 840; or the wrongful seizure of an English ship and cargo by a British ship of war; 2 E. & E. 160; L. R. 5 Q. B. 599; to a temporary embargo by a friendly government; 3 B. & S. 163; 32 L. J. Q. B. 50; a detention of a neutral vessel in a blockaded port; 7 L. R. Q. B. 404; or a siege; L. R. 9 C. P. 518. A reasonable apprehension of capture will justify delay under the usual exception of restraint of princes,

It does not include a seizure of the cargo by an armed mob; 4 Term 783, n.; or a remote danger of capture; 10 East 530; nor, it seems, a restraint sanctioned by municipal law of the ship-owner's country; 3 B. & S. 163; nor the process of a court of law; 23 L. T. 251.

Where goods contraband of war were shipped under a bill of lading containing this exception, it was held that the risk of the goods being seized amounted to a restraint of princes; [1896] 2 Q. B. 326.

Enforced obedience to lawfully prescribed quarantine regulations is a restraint of natural liberty of action devised by and proceeding from the people, and detention at quarantine is fairly included within an exception in a charter party which has reference to restraint of princes or rulers and people; The Progress, 50 Fed. 835, 2 C. C. A. 45, 3 U. S. App. 147.

See CHARTER PARTY; PERILS OF THE SEA; QUARANTINE.

RESTRAINT OF TRADE. Contracts operating for the restraint of trade are presumptively illegal and void on the ground of the policy of the law favoring freedom of trade; but the presumption of illegality may be rebutted by the occasion and circumstances; 2 Pars. Contr. 870. See U. S. v. Trans-Missouri Freight Ass'n., 58 Fed. 58, 7 C. C. A. 15, 24 L. R. A. 73. Thus in agreements for the sale of the good-will of a firm, or the formation or dissolution of a partnership, provisions operating in restraint of trade are frequently inserted. See Good Will. Their validity depends upon whether the restraint is such only as to afford a fair protection to the interests of the party in whose favor it is imposed; Leake, Contr. 633; Ellerman v. Stockyards Co., 49 N. J. Eq. 217, 23 Atl. 287. If reasonably necessary for the protection of the property sold it will be upheld; Anchor Electric Co. v. Hawkes, 171 Mass. 101, 50 N. E. 509, 41 L. R. A. 189, 68 Am. St. Rep. 403; [1899] 1 Ch. D. 300. Whatever restraint is larger than is necessary for the protection of the party is void; therefore, the old rule was that the restraint must be limited in regard to space; 5 M. & W. 562; L. R. 15 Eq. 59. An agreement reasonable in regard to space may be unlimited in regard to the duration of time provided for; but where the question is as to whether the space is unlimited, the duration of the restraint in point of time may become an important matter; Leake, Contr. 634; 2 M. & G. 20. It has been said generally that where a covenant in restraint of trade is general, that is, without qualifications, it is bad, as being unreasonable and contrary to public policy. Where it is partial, that is, subject to some qualification either as to time or space, then the question is whether it is reasonable; and if reasonable, it is good in law; [1892] 3 Ch. 447.

The tendency of modern cases is not to adhere to any arbitrary or conventional rule as to time or space, and as to territory, it has even been said that "the rule has always been that it might extend to the limits where in the plaintiff's trade would be likely to go"; Knapp v. S. Jarvis Adams Co., 135 Fed. 1008, 70 C. C. A. 536; and in a later case a covenant by a partner, on sale of his interest in property and good will of the firm, manufacturing an article sold generally throughout the United States, not to engage in the same business without limitation as to time or space, was construed to limit the restraint to the United States and as so limited it was held reasonable and valid, there being no monopoly created, and the business being subject to active competition, so that no public interest was involved; Prame v. Ferrell, 166 Fed. 702, 92 C. C. A. 374. The case is rested upon the modern rule as stated in Gibbs v. Gas Co., 130 U. S. 396, 9 Sup. Ct. 553, 32 L. Ed. 979, that if the public welfare is not involved "the question is whether, under the particular circumstances of the case and the nature of the particular contract involved in it, the contract is or is not unreasonable." This rule was applied in Diamond Match Co. v. Roeber, 106 N. Y. 473, 13 N. E. 419, 60 Am. Rep. 464; [1894] App. Cas. 535; Oakdale Mfg. Co. v. Garst, 18 R. I. 484, 28 Atl. 973, 23 L. R. A. 639, 49 Am. St. Rep. 784; Harrison v. Sugar Refining Co., 116 Fed. 304, 53 C. C. A. 484, 58 L. R. A. 915; Fleckenstein Bros. Co. v. Fleckenstein, 76 N. J. L. 613, 71 Atl. 265, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 913, with a very full note on the validity of agreements for restraint, ancillary to a sale of the business, as affected by its territorial scope.

The English law on the subject may be fairly collected from the following group of cases. A contract in restraint of trade must have some consideration, whether under seal or not; Mitchell v. Reynolds, 1 Smith Lead. Cas. 421; the adequacy is not important; 6 A. & E. 438. Whether the terms are reasonable is a question for the judge; [1904] 1 K. B. 45. The opinions of other persons in the trade are inadmissible; [1899] 2 Ch. 13.

Restrictions may continue during the life of either party and need not be limited to the period during which the employer carries on his business (if made between employers); 6 A. & E. 454. As to the extent of area, the court will consider whether the restraint is greater than the protection of the party can possibly require; if it is, it is unreasonable; [1904] 1 K. B. 45. In some cases an unlimited restriction will be held valid; [1894] A. C. 535.

A covenant restraining parties from doing business with a particular class of persons may be sustained; 10 Q. B. 346. There is no absolute rule that a covenant in restraint of trade is void even though unlimited in extent; 14 Ch. D. 351; the question is whether the protection of the party reasonably requires it.

In the leading case of Maxim Gun, etc., Co. v. Nordenfelt, [1893] 1 Ch. 630, covenants in general and partial restraint of trade are discussed at large and it is held that the covenant in question as restricted to the gun and ammunition business, though unlimited to space and practically covering the remainder of the defendant's life, was under the circumstances, reasonable and ought to be enforced by injunction.

The decision in Mitchell v. Reynolds, supra, may be regarded as the first announcement of the rule in relation to the invalidity of contracts in restraint of trade; although their illegality had been declared in very early cases; Y. B. 2 Hen. V. 5, 26; and of a much earlier case it is said: It was an unlearned local court, in 1299 or 1300, that fined several chandlers of Norwich for having made a covenant among themselves that none should sell a pound of candles cheaper than another"; Sir F. Pollock in Genius of the Com. Law 96, citing Leet Jurisdiction in Norwich (Selden Soc.) p. 52. It is not an uninteresting fact in legal history that about six hundred years after this ancient case it was held in Emery v. Candle Co., 47 Ohio St. 320, 24 N. E. 660, 21 Am. St. Rep. 819, that an agreement of candle makers, to increase prices and decrease manufacture, was illegal and nonenforceable.

Mitchell v. Reynolds contains much more in the way of legal statement than is required for the decision of the precise point involved, which was that a reasonable restraint agreed to for a good consideration is valid, and it was afterwards remarked by Tindal, C. J., that when it was said by Parker, C. J., in Mitchell v. Reynolds, that "a restraint to carry on a trade throughout the kingdom must be void; a restraint to carry it on within a particular place is good," those are only examples and not limits of the application of the rule which can only be, "What is a reasonable restraint with reference to the particular case"; Horner v. Graves, 7 Bing. 735. In this case it is worthy of note that the Chief Justice suggested a test of whether the restraint is reasonable or not which is still recognized as accurate, viz.: "Whether the restraint is such only as to afford a fair protection to the interests of the party in favor of whom it is given, and not so large as to interfere with the interests of the public." More than sixty years after this case, the English rule was stated in the same terms, and it was said that the true test of validity is whether the contract is or is not reasonable; [1894] App. Cas. 535; and a more comprehensive statement is that a general covenant in restraint of trade, without qualifications, is bad, because unreasonable and contrary to public policy, but if partial, that is, subject to some qualification either as to time or place, then the question is whether it is reasonable, and if it is, it is legally valid; [1892] 3 Ch. 447. In Rousillon v. Rousillon,

L. R. 14 Ch. Div. 351, the existence of an absolute rule with respect to restraint unlimited as to space, was denied, but that question was left somewhat in doubt by the English court of appeal in 36 id. 351; see also 4 App. Cas. 674; so that by way of summing up a review of the English decisions, it is said that the question "whether there is an inflexible rule that contracts, the restraint of which extends throughout England, are null and void, is still a mooted one"; Patterson, Restr. of Trade 16. See, also, [1893] 1 Ch. 630; [1898] 1 Ch. 676.

In the United States it was early held that a covenant not to pursue an occupation in the state was in total restraint of trade and void; Chappel v. Brockway, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 157; Taylor v. Blanchard, 13 Allen (Mass.) 370, 19 Am. Dec. 203; More v. Bonnet, 40 Cal. 251, 6 Am. Rep. 621; contra, Beal v. Chase, 31 Mich. 490; Herrshoff v. Boutineau, 17 R. I. 3, 19 Atl. 712, 8 L. R. A. 469, 33 Am. St. Rep. 850; and see Diamond Match Co. v. Roeber, 106 N. Y. 473, 13 N. E. 419, 60 Am. Rep. 464, where it was held that the question as to what is a general restraint of trade does not depend on state lines, and a restraint is not necessarily general which embraces an entire state. See infra further as to this case.

The United States supreme court took the view that a restraint co-extensive with the state was not necessarily void; Oregon S. Nav. Co. v. Winsor, 20 Wall. (U. S.) 64, 22 L. Ed. 315, where the subject was discussed by Bradley, J., and in a later case it was said by Fuller, C. J., "The question is whether under the particular circumstances of the case, the nature of the particular contract involved in it, the contract is or is not unreasonable;" Gibbs v. Gas Co., 130 U. S. 396, 9 Sup. Ct. 553, 32 L. Ed. 979. In Lange v. Werk, 2 Ohio St. 519, a covenant not to manufacture candles in the United States was held void, and in Watertown T. Co. v. Pool, 51 Hun (N. Y.) 157, 4 N. Y. Supp. 861, a similar contract as to space but limited to ten years in time, for the manufacture of thermometers, was held valid as a reasonable restriction. An agreement in a contract not to engage in the business of manufacturing or dealing in certain articles of commerce for a period of five years, and without any limitation of space, is held to be unlawful; Bishop v. Palmer, 146 Mass. 469, 16 N. E. 299, 4 Am. St. Rep. 339; as was a contract, excluding the obligor from engaging in a useful trade everywhere and for all time; Alger v. Thacher, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 51, 31 Am. Dec. 119; and a contract of sale of fire alarm or police telegraph machines, with a covenant not to enter into competition with the purchaser for ten years without restriction as to place; Gamewell F. A. Tel. Co. v. Crane, 160 Mass. 50, 35 N. E. 98, 22 L. R. A. 673, and note, 39 Am. St. Rep. 458; but a contract unlimited territorially save by the words so-far as the law allows, is not void as being in conflict with public policy, nor as being too uncertain to be capable of being enforced; Hedge v. Lowe, 47 Ia. 137.

"The general common law rule can then best be stated as follows: Contracts in restraint of trade are in themselves, if nothing more appear to show them reasonable, bad in the eye of the law, but if from the peculiar circumstances of each case they appear to be reasonable and are founded upon a good consideration, they are valid." Patterson, Restr. of Trade 5; Morris Run C. Co. v. Coal Co., 68 Pa. 173, 8 Am. Rep. 159; Ellerman v. Stockyards Co., 49 N. J. Eq. 217, 23 Atl. 287; Angier v. Webber, 14 Allen (Mass.) 211, 92 Am. Dec. 748, and a valuable note; Hubbard v. Miller, 27 Mich. 15, 15 Am. Rep. 153, where Christiancy, C. J., applies substantially the same test quoted supra from Tindal, C. J., in 7 Bing. 735.

Contracts in general restraint of trade are void unless natural and not unreasonable for the protection of the parties; Chappel v. Brockway, supra; Maier v. Homan, 4 Daly (N. Y.) 168; Hedge v. Lowe, 47 Ia. 137, as such contracts impose too great a restraint on trade and are oppressive to one party without being of benefit to another; Heichew v. Hamilton, 3 G. Greene (Ia.) 596; Minturn v. Alexandre, 5 Fed. 119. Contracts for limited restraint are valid if entered into for good reasons, such as to afford fair protection to the purchaser of a business; Nobles v. Bates, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 307; Jenkins v. Temples, 39 Ga. 655, 99 Am. Dec. 482, and it is said that one who has created a property by his skill or industry is at liberty, if it be necessary to make a market for the good will of the business, to sell his right of competition in the whole field covered by the business, and for a reasonable length of time; Kramer v. Old, 119 N. C. 1, 25 S. E. 813, 34 L. R. A. 389, 56 Am. St. Rep. 650.

A contract not to carry on a trade in a particular town or county is valid; Grundy v. Edwards, 7 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 368, 23 Am. Dec. 409. Contracts in restraint of trade held to be valid are: Not to practise medicine within twelve miles of a place; Appeal of McClurg, 58 Pa. 51; not to engage in a certain business within sixty miles of a place for ten years; Whitney v. Slayton, 40 Me. 224; not to run a stage on a certain route; Pierce v. Fuller, 8 Mass. 223, 5 Am. Dec. 102; not to set up the business of an apothecary within twenty miles of a place; 6 Ad. & El. 438.

A contract not to sell oil within the state except in one city was held void; Consumers' Oil Co. v. Nunnemaker, 142 Ind. 560, 41 N. E. 1048, 51 Am. St. Rep. 193. An agreement never to engage in a certain trade in the city and county of San Francisco or state of California, was held too extensive in its restriction and void; More v. Bonnet, 40 Cal. 251, 6 Am. Rep. 621; as was a covenant not to run a steamboat belonging to a certain corporation or allow its machinery to be used on any other boat in any of the waters of certain states; Oregon Steam Nav. Co. v. Hale, 1 Wash. T. 283, 34 Am. Rep. 803. But the contract by the owner of a line of vessels running between New York and the West Indies, who had sold the good will thereof, to do no business with such ports within any place in the United States east of the Mississippi River, is not an unreasonable restraint of trade; Brett v. Ebel, 29 App. Div. 256, 51 N. Y. Supp. 573, approved in Wood v. Whitehead Bros. Co., 165 N. Y. 545, 59 N. E. 357. And for a collection of cases held either valid or void, see Angier v. Webber, 14 Allen (Mass.) 211, 92 Am. Dec. 755-759.

The conclusion from the cases is stated to be that the weight of authority in this country as in England is opposed to a fixed limit beyond which the restraint under a contract cannot extend; Patterson, Restr. of Trade 25. That there is no limitation as to time is no objection; 5 M. & W. 548 (where Parke, B., states clearly the reasons for applying a different rule to time from that relating to space); Beard v. Dennis, 6 Ind. 200, 63 Am. Dec. 380; Cook v. Johnson, 47 Conn. 175, 36 Am. Rep. 64; Geraty v. Druiding, 44 Ill. App. 441; Ellerman v. Stockyards Co., 49 N. J. Eq. 217, 23 Atl. 287.

An agreement to relinquish a business and not to carry it on thereafter, limited as to place but unlimited as to time, is not void; Webster v. Buss, 61 N. H. 40, 60 Am. Rep. 317; Watrous v. Allen, 57 Mich. 362, 24 N. W. 104, 58 Am. Rep. 363; and the limit of space may be according to the nature of the contract; L. R. 1 Ch. 463; and a covenant not to engage in a certain business within a certain area, not greater than that covered by the business, is not injurious to the public; Fleckenstein Bros. Co. v. Fleckenstein, 76 N. J. L. 613, 71 Atl. 265, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 913. A covenant by one selling a business not to engage in the same business, is valid even if unlimited as to time or space, if it be necessary to protect the purchaser; Marshall Engine Co. v. Engine Co., 203 Mass. 410, 89 N. E. 548; and it has been held that no contracts are void as being in general restraint of trade when they operate simply to prevent a party from engaging or competing in the same business; Leslie v. Lorillard, 110 N. Y. 519, 18 N. E. 363, 1 L. R. A. 456.

But contracts for the limitation of competition in the operations of public service corporations are frequently held void upon grounds of public policy; Central New York Tel. Co. v. Averill, 55 Misc. Rep. 346, 105 N. Y. Supp. 378; Chicago G. L. & C. Co. v. Coke Co., 121 Ill. 530, 13 N. E. 169, 2 Am. St. Rep. 124; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Tel. Co., 65 Ga. 160, 38 Am. Rep. 781; Gibbs v. Gas Co., 130 U. S. 396, 9 Sup. Ct. 553, 32 L. Ed. 979; Central Transp. Co. v. Car Co., 139 U. S. 24, 11 Sup. Ct. 478, 35 L. Ed. 55; West Virginia

Transp. Co. v. Pipe Line Co., 22 W. Va. 600, 46 Am. Rep. 527; Swigert v. Tilden, 121 Ia. 650, 97 N. W. 82, 63 L. R. A. 608, 100 Am. St. Rep. 374. And on the same principle the consolidation of public service corporations has been held illegal; People v. Trust Co., 130 Ill. 268, 22 N. E. 798, 8 L. R. A. 497, 17 Am. St. Rep. 319; Burrows v. Interborough Metropolitan Co., 156 Fed. 389. See 21 Harv. L. Rev. 533, and 21 id. 114, where the question of holding stock is considered.

Agreements to restrain rivalry and competition in bidding for public work are void, but an honest co-operation is not within the rule against combinations to stifle competition; Hoffman v. McMullen, 83 Fed. 372, 28 C. C. A. 178, 45 L. R. A. 410.

The tendency of recent adjudications was said, in a much cited case, to be now clearly marked in the direction of relaxing the rigor of the doctrine that all contracts in general restraint of trade are void, irrespective of special circumstances; Diamond Match Co. v. Roeber, 106 N. Y. 473, 13 N. E. 419, 60 Am. Rep. 464.

This case has been the subject of much discussion, and was said to be a departure from a well settled rule in Lufkin Rule Co. v. Fringeli, 57 Ohio St. 596, 49 N. E. 1030, 41 L. R. A. 185, 63 Am. St. Rep. 736, where on a sale of good will, a covenant not to engage in the same business in the state or in the United States for twenty-five years was held void; and a similar case is Union Strawboard Co. v. Bonfield, 193 Ill. 420, 61 N. E. 1038, 86 Am. St. Rep. 346. On the other hand the New York case was approved in Southworth v. Davison, 106 Minn. 120, 118 N. W. 363, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 769, 16 Ann. Cas. 253, where it was said that: "The settled modern law, however, is, both in England and this country, that a limitation as to both time and place is unnecessary, if the agreement in other respects be reasonable, and not in conflict with public policy or the general welfare." In this case there was a limit of space—a "radius of five miles" from a town—but none of time. "The test question," said Sterrett, C. J., is whether the contract "is injurious to the public interests" and if so "it is void as against public policy. Courts will not stop to inquire as to the degree of injury inflicted. It is enough to know that the natural tendency of such contracts is injurious"; Nester v. Brewing Co., 161 Pa. 473, 29 Atl. 102, 24 L. R. A. 247, 41 Am. St. Rep. 894, where it was also held that the rule is not confined to contracts respecting necessities of life, and a combination of brewers to raise the price of beer was held unlawful; as was also a contract of stenographers to raise prices by preventing competition; More v. Bennett, 140 Ill. 69, 29 N. E. 888, 15 L. R. A. 361, 33 Am. St. Rep. 216; a by-law of a trade association requiring members to allow their bids to be increased six per cent. before they are submitted; Mil- waukee M. & B. Ass'n v. Niezerowski, 95 Wis. 129, 70 N. W. 166, 37 L. R. A. 127, 60 Am. St. Rep. 97; and rules of a "club" of master plumbers intended to regulate prices and suppress competition; Hunt v. Co-Operative Club, 140 Mich. 538, 104 N. W. 40, 112 Am. St. Rep. 420.

There are cases in which municipal ordinances requiring work to be done by a certain class are held void as in restraint of trade by creating or encouraging monopoly; Atlanta v. Stein, 111 Ga. 789, 36 S. E. 932, 51 L. R. A. 335; Adams v. Brennan, 177 Ill. 194, 52 N. E. 314, 42 L. R. A. 718, 69 Am. St. Rep. 222, both cases being efforts to discriminate in favor of union labor in city work.

Courts will not lend their aid to enforce the performance of a contract which they hold to be in restraint of trade, as contrary to public policy, on the ground that one side has performed the agreement, but will leave the parties in the plight in which their own illegal action placed them; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. R. Co., 61 Fed. 993, 9 C. C. A. 659, 27 U. S. App. 1; Central Trans. Co. v. P. Car Co., 139 U. S. 24, 11 Sup. Ct. 478, 35 L. Ed. 55; Gibbs v. Gas Co., 130 U. S. 396, 9 Sup. Ct. 553, 32 L. Ed. 979.

The reasonableness of such covenants and consequently whether they are in restraint of trade or not, is a question of law for the court and not of fact for the jury; 11 M. & W. 548; id. 653; 7 Bing. 743; Wiley v. Baumgardner, 97 Ind. 66, 49 Am. Rep. 427. And the question of reasonableness is to be determined with reference to the time when the contract was made unaffected by possible future contingencies; Cook v. Johnson, 47 Conn. 175, 36 Am. Rep. 64; 7 Man. & Gr. 969.

Covenants of this character have been held divisible, partly valid and partly void; 11 M. & W. 653; Lange v. Werk, 2 Ohio St. 519; Appeal of Smith, 113 Pa. 579, 6 Atl. 251; Oregon S. Nav. Co. v. Winsor, 20 Wall. (U. S.) 64, 22 L. Ed. 315; More v. Bonnet, 40 Cal. 251, 6 Am. Rep. 621.

Where the restriction of a business is in accordance with public policy, the rule against such covenants does not apply, upon the ground that the reason ceasing, the rule also ceases. This is true in the case of patents, the object of granting which is to create a monopoly; Morse T. D. & M. Co. v. Morse, 103 Mass. 73, 4 Am. Rep. 513; Billings v. Ames, 32 Mo. 265; trade secrets; L. R. 9 Eq. 345; Vickery v. Welch, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 523; intoxicating liquors; Harrison v. Lockhart, 25 Ind. 112; but in case of a business in which competition is particularly beneficial to the public interest, the tendency is to view with disfavor any restrictions. This principle has been applied to the manufacture of gas; Chicago G. L. & C. Co. v. Coke Co., 121 Ill. 530, 13 N. E. 169, 2 Am. St. Rep. 124; pipe lines; West Virginia Transp.

Co. v. Pipe Line Co., 22 W. Va. 600, 46 Am. Rep. 527; telegraphing: Western Union Tel. Co. v. Tel. Co., 65 Ga. 160, 38 Am. Rep. 781.

From the cases above referred to it is apparent that the common law doctrine avoiding contracts in restraint of trade was evolved largely out of covenants by which one individual restricted himself from engaging in a certain business within a specified limit of space or time. The purpose of such covenants was of course to eliminate the competition of the individual who was a party to the covenant. The modern cases with respect to restraint of trade group themselves about combinations on a larger scale and more comprehensive in their results, intended to suppress competition, as nearly as may be, and to create monopolies.

While the strictness of the ancient rule with respect to what was then termed restraint of trade has thus been relaxed, the mischief against which that rule was directed has taken a new form, and the creation of monopolies and restrictions upon competition is now accomplished under the guise of what are termed trusts, pooling agreements, and the like. The distinguishing feature of these attempts to stifle competition is a combination of persons engaged in any particular business under agreements for controlling the output of manufacturing establishments, and lessening the amount of goods placed upon the market, and stipulating for prices of goods sold. The term trust is derived from the means frequently employed to carry out these combinations, the stock of the various corporations or the property of the various concerns which become parties to a combination being in some cases assigned to trustees to control and manage in execution of the agreement.

It has been maintained that the rules governing contracts in restraint of trade are not applicable to trusts because persons constituting trusts become partners, and, as is well known, partners are not subject to these rules; see 3 Political Sci. Quart. 592; and the same writer is doubtful whether the offence of engrossing, forestalling, or regrating ever existed independently of the statutes 5 & 6 Edw. IV. ch. 14, and when these statutes were repealed courts had no authority to punish offenders; id. See 4 Harv. L. Rev. 128.

The use of the term "trust" has long survived the termination of its practical use in this connection, but its adoption in statutes and judicial decisions seems to require its acceptance as a term clothed with a legal signification quite removed from the original meaning which led to its use in this connection. See infra.

Of late years the suppression of monopolies has been the principal source of litigation respecting the restraint of trade and one of the match trust cases held that the court would of its own motion take notice of an illegal contract which came before it for adjudication and leave the parties where they had placed themselves. If the contract was void as against public policy, the court would not enforce it while executory, nor relieve a party from loss occasioned by part performance. The subject of monopoly was discussed very forcibly by Sherwood, C. J., and they were declared to be odious and dangerous to the maintenance of free government; he contended that all combinations between persons or corporations for the purpose of raising or controlling the price of merchandise or any of the necessities of life, are monopolies and intolerable, and ought to receive the condemnation of all courts; Richardson v. Buhl, 77 Mich. 632, 43 N. W. 1102, 6 L. R. A. 457, and note.

A combination, contract or understanding, the direct and necessary effect of which is to stifle or restrict competition in trade or business, violates the state anti-trust statute, whatever the intention of the parties; but one of which the main purpose and effect is to foster trade and increase the business of those who make and operate it and only indirectly and remotely restricts competition, is not "a combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade" within the anti-trust statutes nor is one for the purpose of fixing and determining the value of wages or other charges for personal services; nor one for regulating fairly the methods of business and providing rules for fair dealing among its members; State v. Board, 107 Minn. 506, 121 N. W. 395, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1260, with note on combinations to control the price of labor, etc., as violations of anti-trust acts.

The purchase of a controlling interest in the stock of a competing company for the purpose of preventing competition is unlawful even though there are other concerns in the same business which would prevent a complete monopoly; Dunbar v. Tel. Co., 224 Ill. 9, 79 N. E. 423, 115 Am. St. Rep. 132, 8 Ann. Cas. 57; particularly where the public policy of the state as expressed in the Constitution is against all monopolies; s. c. on final hearing, id. 238 Ill. 456, 87 N. E. 521.

The question of the illegality with respect to combinations of capital has arisen in the variety of cases which, however, may be to some extent classified, and such a classification has been suggested which divides them into simple combinations, trusts, and corporate combinations. Eddy, Combinations § 580.

The first class, of simple combinations, includes those agreements between persons engaged in the same business for the purpose of controlling the operation of the business in the common interest but without surrendering to the individual the control of the business by the owner. The second class of trusts, originated, as above stated, in the effort to devise a scheme for circumventing the established rules of law invalidating contracts or agreements in restraint of trade.

Both of these classes have been appropriately termed the looser forms of combination which were effectually disposed of by the federal and state anti-trust acts, discussed infra, which have driven those seeking to form combinations on or near the border line of legality into the third class above denominated "corporate combinations." In short the simple combination and the trust have practically disappeared, and where it is sought to form a combination in the direction of controlling prices, establishing a monopoly and either destroying or reducing competition, now universally, it may be said, resort is had to incorporation. Very many of these combinations under the old system have been declared illegal, and of these there may be cited by way of illustration the following: Agreements among coal companies for dividing the coal from particular districts, the business being controlled by a committee; Morris Run Coal Co. v. Coal Co., 68 Pa. 173, 8 Am. Rep. 159; or one to control the coal market; Arnot v. Coal Co., 68 N. Y. 558, 23 Am. Rep. 190; or one consisting of all retail coal dealers in a state except one, to fix and maintain a uniform price; People v. Sheldon, 139 N. Y. 251, 34 N. E. 785, 23 L. R. A. 221, 36 Am. St. Rep. 690; a milk exchange to regulate price; People v. Milk Exch., 145 N. Y. 267, 39 N. E. 1062, 27 L. R. A. 437, 45 Am. St. Rep. 609; an association of wholesale druggists and manufacturers of proprietary medicines to control prices; John D. Park & Sons Co. v. Druggists Ass'n, 50 N. Y. Supp. 1064; a contract between the grain dealers of a town to suppress competition and control prices; Craft v. McConoughy, 79 Ill. 346, 22 Am. Rep. 171; a candle manufacturers' association comprising ninety-five per cent. of the manufacturers of certain kinds of candles, to increase price and decrease outputs; Emery v. Candle Co., supra; a contract between five cotton seed oil mills to fix prices and abolish markets and guarantee profits; Texas Standard Cotton Oil Co. v. Adoue, 83 Tex. 650, 19 S. W. 274, 15 L. R. A. 598, 29 Am. St. Rep. 690; an agreement between dealers in cotton bagging not to sell for a given price without the consent of a majority; Marsh v. Russell, 66 N. Y. 288; India Bagging Ass'n v. Kock & Co., 14 La. Ann. 168 (but a contract granting the exclusive right to sell bags and bagging for a certain period is valid unless part of a conspiracy to create a monopoly; Pacific Factor Co. v. Adler, 90 Cal. 110, 27 Pac. 36, 25 Am. St. Rep. 102); one of nearly, if not all, of the canal boat owners to regulate freight and passenger rates; Stanton v. Allen, 5 Denio (N. Y.) 434, 49 Am. Dec. 282; and one between rival steamboat lines to operate jointly and suppress competition; Leslie v. Lorillard, 40 Hun (N. Y.) 392; Anderson v. Jett, 89 Ky. 375, 12 S. W. 670, 6 L. R. A. 390; an association of salt producers to regulate prices and control the business of the individual members; Central Ohio Salt Co. v. Guthrie, 35 Ohio St. 666; a combination of saw-mill owners to increase prices and limit output; Santa Clara Val. M. & L. Co. v. Hayes, 76 Cal. 387, 18 Pac. 391, 9 Am. St. Rep. 211; an agreement of tobacco warehouse owners for pooling receipts and controlling the business of the individual members; Hoffman v. Brooks, 6 Ohio Dec. 1215, 23 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 648; one of sheep buyers for pooling commissions and restricting sales to butchers who were members of a certain association; Judd v. Harrington, 139 N. Y. 105, 34 N. E. 790; a combination of wire cloth manufacturers who agreed to maintain certain prices; De Witt Wire Cloth Co. v. Wire Cloth Co., 16 N. Y. Supp. 384; an agreement by several manufacturers for the control, through a trustee, of manufacturing and selling carbons for electric lighting; Pittsburg Carbon Co. v. McMillin, 119 N. Y. 46, 23 N. E. 530, 7 L. R. A. 46; one by the grocery men of a town to abandon in favor of a single firm the buying and selling of butter; Chapin v. Brown, 83 Ia. 156, 48 N. W. 1074, 12 L. R. A. 428, 32 Am. St. Rep. 297; one of producers of blue stone to control prices through one company acting as an agent for sales; Cummings v. Bluestone Ass'n, 15 App. Div. 602, 44 N. Y. Supp. 787.

The cases above cited vary greatly both in facts and the statements of the reasons why they have been held illegal, and these differences make it impossible to deduce from them any general rule of decision which might serve to determine in advance whether the given contract would be held lawful or not.

The cases generally show in the main a purpose not willfully to do an unlawful act but to unite for mutual benefit and the only general conclusion that can be reached from a consideration of all the cases is that the courts are disposed to treat an agreement intended to raise or maintain prices or control a particular business either at large or in specified localities or to establish a monopoly, as unlawful and non-enforceable either by suit upon it or defense under it. This general disposition of the courts will be found to be illustrated in many of the foregoing cases and is well stated in Nester v. Brewing Co., 161 Pa. 473, 29 Atl. 102, 24 L. R. A. 247, 41 Am. St. Rep. 894, where a combination of brewers in Philadelphia known as the "Brewers' Pool" was held to be against public policy and void, because the court found as a fact that its object was to enable the 45 brewers of Philadelphia to regulate and control the sale and price of beer in Philadelphia and Camden County, New Jersey, and that it was a combination in restraint of trade tending to destroy competition and create a monopoly in an article of daily consumption. The court considered the test in these and all like cases to be whether there was a contract in restraint of trade which was injurious to the public interest and if so it was void without respect to the degree of injury inflicted, it being enough to know that the natural tendency of such contracts was injurious. So after all it would seem that the courts with practical unanimity, where no federal or state statute directly applies, have determined to apply to combinations of persons engaged in the same business for the control of markets and prices, practically the same general principle which had been gradually evolved in England and in this country as to the legality or illegality of contracts restraining an individual from the pursuit of any particular vocation, that is to say, that the circumstances of each particular case will be regarded by the court, and the case determined by the consideration whether in that case the agreement is to be considered reasonable and not against public policy. See Good Will.

In a discriminating effort to classify the cases and to find in them a rule of decision, Harmon, J., in holding void a pooling agreement of tobacco warehousemen of Cincinnati for fixing prices, limiting the freedom of parties to it, and providing penalties for breaches of it, said: "The presumption is always against the validity of such agreements and certainly where they include all those engaged in any business in a large city or district, are unlimited in duration, and are manifestly intended, by the surrender of individual discretion, by the arbitrary fixing of prices, or by any of the methods to which the hope of gain makes human ingenuity so fruitful, to strangle competition outright and breed monopolies, the law, while it may not punish, will not enforce them;" Hoffman v. Brooks, 6 Ohio Dec. 1215, 23 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 648, where there is also an extended and useful note on the subject by Elisha Greenhood.

As will be shown elsewhere in this title the apparently conclusive construction of the words restraint of trade by the United States supreme court in the Standard Oil and American Tobacco Cases practically applies the same rule as has been reached through a long series of decisions in both countries with respect to such contracts at common law.

The origin of the form of combination known as trusts was in an effort to avoid the effect of the decision that the direct combination or agreement of persons and corporations was illegal. The term was originally correctly used, as the agreements from which it took its name were in the nature of pooling agreements by which the different parties of the combination deposited their stock with trustees giving them the right to vote it and control the corporations included in the trust, the separate owners receiving certificates of the trustees defining their respective interests; after that method was practically abandoned the term trust continued to be applied popularly to every method of effecting a combination in trade. Cook, Trusts 4.

The form of combination originally termed a trust was so dealt with by the courts as to result in its abandonment as unsafe and unreliable, and the creation of incorporated combinations has taken its place; the constituent members of the combination being usually corporations of different states they were readily assailed in their home states, and through such attacks upon one of its members, the trust was in many cases practically destroyed. The first case which was the subject of extended litigation was (1889) People v. Sugar Refining Co., 121 N. Y. 586, 24 N. E. 834, 9 L. R. A. 33, 18 Am. St. Rep. 843. This trust was a combination of sugar refiners and was formed by the transfer of their stock to a board by whom shares were issued, which were divided among the constituent corporations and distributed to their stockholders according to their interests. It was provided in the agreement that it should be secret and the absolute management and control was vested in the board. The objects to be the promotion of economy and the reduction of the cost of production and to give to each the benefit of appliances and processes used by the others for the purpose of improving the quality and diminishing the cost of the product; protection against labor troubles, and against lowering the standard of a product; and generally to promote the interests of the parties. The defendant was a corporation of New York and the proceeding was quo warranto for forfeiture and dissolution. The grounds on which relief was sought included allegations that the defendant, as a party to a combination injurious to trade, was guilty of criminal conspiracy; that the trust was a monopoly; and that the acts of the corporation in transferring its control amounted to a violation of its obligations to exercise its own corporate franchises. Judgment was rendered against the corporation upon several grounds, among which was that the combination was illegal as tending to monopoly in restraint of trade. The other grounds of the decision were based on the violation of corporate obligations, the transfer of its duties, obligations and powers being held to be unlawful and good ground for forfeiture of the charter. The decision was affirmed on appeal first by the supreme court and then by the court of appeals; the final decision was rested upon the violations by the corporation of the principles of law covering such bodies. A few of these so-called "trusts" will suffice to illustrate the system which, though practically obsolete, forms an important chapter in the struggle of centuries against the illegal restraint of trade by suppression of competition and creation and maintenance of monopolies.

The original Standard Oil Trust was created by the organization of a corporation in each of four states, Ohio, New York, Pennsylvania and New Jersey. The assets and business in each state were transferred to the corporation of that state and payment made in its stock; and it was provided that no stock of the corporation should ever be issued except to trustees, to be held for the purpose of the trust, who had complete power of management. In Ohio, the attorney general proceeded by petition in the nature quo warranto and upon the ground that the object of the organization was to establish a monopoly. The association was held to be contrary to public policy and void; State v. Oil Co., 49 Ohio St. 137, 30 N. E. 279, 15 L. R. A. 145, 34 Am. St. Rep. 541. The result of this case was the abandonment of the original trust and the subsequent operation of the Oil Trust through the New Jersey corporation as a holding company. The history of the transaction is given in the opinion of the supreme court, Standard Oil Co. of N. J. v. U. S., 221 U. S. 1, 38, 31 Sup. Ct. 502, 55 L. Ed. 619, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 834, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 734.

The American Preservers' Trust was formed by the assignment of at least a majority of the stock in seven corporations engaged in the same business, and after the trust was succeeded by a corporation, one of the original parties to it who refused to transfer his business and assets was sued in replevin; the trust agreement was held to be an illegal contract in providing for a combination in restraint of trade contrary to public policy. Bishop v. Preservers' Co., 157 Ill. 284, 41 N. E. 765, 48 Am. St. Rep. 317. Where a Missouri corporation became a party to a trust agreement, an injunction to restrain it from doing business separately was denied, upon the ground that the organization was contrary to law and that the Missouri corporation had no right to become a party to such an association; American Preservers' Trust v. Mfg. Co., 46 Fed. 152.

The Cotton Seed Oil Trust was formed of four corporations whose property and management was turned over to a committee and by it operated. Another corporation subsequently admitted under the terms of the agreement endeavored to withdraw from it, and in an action by the last mentioned company to gain possession of its property, the contract between the corporations was held void as being a partnership which the corporations under their charters had no power to make; Mallory v. Oil Works, 86 Tenn. 598, 8 S. W. 396.

The Chicago Gas Trust was formed of four independent companies and a new corporation was organized to operate the business, not by manufacturing companies, but by holding a majority of the shares of the four constituent companies. Upon an information in the nature of quo warranto, the corporation filed demurrers to determine its power to acquire and hold the stock of the other corporations and the demurrers were sustained upon the general grounds that the action of the Gas Trust was ultra vires, suppressed competition and established a monopoly which was opposed to public policy and unlawful.

It was further held that when a corporation is organized under general statute, if the statement of its objects show necessarily a creation of a monopoly it will be void, as is also the creation of one corporation to control all others engaged in the same business; People v. Gas Trust Co., 130 Ill. 268, 22 N. E. 798, 8 L. R. A. 497, 17 Am. St. Rep. 319.

The Nebraska Distilling Company to unify the control and management of distilleries, was a Nebraska corporation. Under quo warranto, it was held that the trust agreement was in restraint of trade, destructive of competition and created a monopoly, and therefore was contrary to public policy and void; State v. Distilling Co., 29 Neb. 700, 46 N. W. 155; Distilling & C. F. Co. v. People, 156 Ill. 448, 41 N. E. 188, 47 Am. St. Rep. 200.

The American Cattle Trust was a voluntary association in New York to receive and hold, through trustees, the stock of corporations engaged in the business of handling and selling cattle, etc. In a suit by one who had exchanged his stock in a constituent corporation for trust certificates, and who sought to recover his stock, the relief prayed for was granted and the trust held to be illegal; Gould v. Head, 38 Fed. 886.

Incorporated Trusts.—As a result of the almost continuous series of decisions affirming the invalidity of direct combinations of individual owners and of combinations through the medium of trusts, according to the original use of that term, there followed the effort, still in progress, to accomplish the result of creating combinations which would stand the test of the law by means of incorporation. In these cases the courts proceeded to apply the same general principles which had been decided with relation to the preceding forms of combination; and where it has appeared that the corporation itself, or in agreement with other individuals or corporations whose business was acquired by it, was intended to create a monopoly, destroy competition and increase or control prices, the combination has been held void, and contracts furthering its objects and purposes have not been enforced; Richardson v. Buhl, 77 Mich. 632, 43 N. W. 1102, 6 L. R. A. 457 (where the question arose upon the suit by one of the parties to the combination for an account in equity, which was refused); Merz Capsule Co. v. Capsule Co., 67 Fed. 414 (1895) (where one of the parties, after agreeing to do so, refused to join in the combination and the agreement was declared void as a conspiracy in restraint of trade among the several states within the Sherman act); American Biscuit & Mfg. Co. v. Klotz, 44 Fed. 721 (where one of the vendors of his business refused to comply with the contract and having tendered back the stock of the trust corporation, resumed his business, and the relief was refused upon the ground that the agreement was an attempt to create a monopoly, which could not be encouraged by the court of equity); Western Wooden Ware Ass'n v. Starkey, 84 Mich. 76, 47 N. W. 604, 11 L. R. A. 503, 22 Am. St. Rep. 686 (where a corporation created for the purpose of monopolizing the business sought to enjoin persons from carrying on the same business in several states upon a contract to sell all their assets and business, which was held void as against public policy being made not for the purpose of continuing the business of those who have sold out but of destroying it in order to create a monopoly and the injunction was refused); Harding v. Glucose, 182 Ill. 551, 55 N. E. 577, 64 L. R. A. 738, 74 Am. St. Rep. 189 (where an agreement of a company which had agreed to sell to a trust corporation was declared illegal as part of the arrangement to create an illegal combination, and an injunction was granted on the application of a stockholder in one of the vendor corporations).

In many cases corporations formed to take the place of illegal trust combinations previously existing were either held invalid or abandoned because of the general attitude of the courts towards them. The corporations so formed were declared to be illegal combinations to restrain production and control prices; Strait v. Harrow Co., 18 N. Y. Supp. 224; National Harrow Co. v. E. Bement & Sons, 21 App. Div. 290, 47 N. Y. Supp. 462 (reversed, but on a technical point only, id., 163 N. Y. 505, 57 N. E. 764); National Harrow Co. v. Hench, 76 Fed. 667; National Lead Co. v. Paint Store Co., 80 Mo. App. 247; Distilling & C. F. Co. v. People, 156 Ill. 448, 41 N. E. 188, 47 Am. St. Rep. 200; Olmstead v. Cattle-Feeding Co., 73 Fed. 44. In the Standard Oil Case, White, C. J., said that "the first and second sections of the law, when taken together, embrace every conceivable act which could possibly come within the spirit or purpose of the prohibitions of the law, without regard to the garb in which such acts were clothed."

During all this period of struggle in the courts against the modern development of the efforts to stifle freedom of trade and establish monopoly there was proceeding pari passu a popular movement to curb the prevailing tendencies to those ends by the legislative branches of the federal and state governments.

In many modern state constitutions, following generally that of Illinois, 1870, there are efforts to prevent combinations to suppress competition. Most of these are directed against such attempts by railroad companies either through unjust discriminations or consolidation of competing lines. There are constitutional provisions on this subject in several states, among which are Alabama, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Georgia, Illinois, Louisiana, Michigan, Massachusetts, Nebraska, Pennsylvania, Texas, and West Virginia. A summary of them will be found in Spelling, Trusts & Monopo- lies § 89, note. They are usually considered as declaratory of the common law, as that of Colorado was expressly decided to be; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. R. Co., 110 U. S. 667, 4 Sup. Ct. 185, 28 L. Ed. 291. Of the same character are state statutes directed against restraint of trade generally, which add but little to the limitations of the common law. The difficulty in dealing with the subject by state legislation is inherent. The great trusts cannot be reached by legislation within the states, inasmuch as their operations are not circumscribed by state boundaries. On the other hand attempts to deal with the subject by congress are hampered and obstructed by the constitutional limitation that federal legislation can deal only with interstate and foreign commerce; nevertheless an attempt was made by what was known as the anti-trust act of July 2, 1890, 26 Stat. L. 209.

This statute is commonly known as the "Sherman Anti-Trust Act," though Senator Sherman was not the author of it. Who was responsible for its present form was not known until the publication of Senator Hoar's Autobiography (Vol. II, p. 363), where he gives the facts, prefaced by the remark: "In 1890 a bill was passed which was called the Sherman Act for no other reason that I can think of except that Mr. Sherman had nothing to do with it whatever." A bill was introduced by Senator Sherman, not dealing with the domestic question except as admitting imports to compete with trust-made goods, free from tariff duties. This bill was referred to the judiciary committee by which the subject was at first considered with scant favor. Finally, however, a substitute was reported and passed by the senate, and as the result of conference was agreed to by the house. This substitute, which became, without change, the present law, was drawn by Senator Hoar, who was a member of the subcommittee to which the original bill was referred. Senator Sherman, however, was the original mover of the legislation, without regard to the form in which it finally passed; and, according to established practice in such case, the bill became known as the Sherman Act. He earnestly and ably advocated its passage at every stage. It passed the House unanimously and the Senate with but one negative vote. It may be added that Senator Edmunds, in a private letter, afterwards published, mentioned the fact that the bill as finally passed was drawn by a single hand and not thereafter amended. See Walker's Hist. of the Sherman Act; Thornton's Sherman Anti-Trust Act.

The act was a result of the growing public sentiment against combinations of capital then mainly utilized in the forms of trusts and the use of that term, which originated at the time when the trust form was used, is continued, though, as above stated, without reason since the practical abandonment of the trust form of combinations and has been applied popularly to corporations created to serve the purposes which were originally accomplished by means of trusts. The Sherman act was the result of painstaking efforts in Congress to cope with what was universally considered to be an evil to be remedied and it occupied the attention of congress more or less continuously from the original introduction of the bill on December 4, 1889, until its passage by the senate with one dissenting vote and the house by a unanimous vote. It was approved July 2, 1890. Section 1 declares to be illegal every contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, and penalizes any person who shall make such a contract or engage in such combination or conspiracy. Section 2 makes it a penal offense to monopolize or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire to monopolize, any part of such trade or commerce, and section 3 applies it to the Territories and the District of Columbia. Section 4 vests the jurisdiction of violations of the act in certain courts of the United States. Section 5 provides for making parties of persons not residing in the district in which the court is held, where the ends of justice require it. Section 6 provides for the forfeiture, seizure and condemnation of any property under any contract, or by any combination or pursuant to any conspiracy, mentioned in the act. Section 7 authorizes a suit by any person injured in consequence of the violation of the act, with treble damages therefore. Section 8 provides that the word person shall include corporation.

The question of the constitutionality of this act was early raised and settled by the supreme court. The objection was made that arbitrarily to deprive a citizen of his general liberty of contract by general statute, was a deprivation of liberty without due process of law and therefore unconstitutional. To this the court replied: "The question is, for us, one of power only and not of policy. We think the power exists in congress and that the statute therefore is valid." U. S. v. Traffic Ass'n, 171 U. S. 505, 19 Sup. Ct. 25, 43 L. Ed. 259. The constitutionality of such legislation was also discussed at length and affirmed by the same court in Addyston P. & S. Co. v. U. S., 175 U. S. 211, 20 Sup. Ct. 96, 44 L. Ed. 136.

"The clear and positive purpose of the statute," it was said in U. S. v. Coal Dealers' Ass'n, 85 Fed. 252, "must be understood to be that trade and commerce within the jurisdiction of the federal government shall be absolutely free and no contract or combination will be tolerated that impedes or restricts their natural flow and freedom."

This statement of the purpose of the act by Morrow, J., seemed to be not only apt, but fully warranted by the language of the supreme court in U. S. v. Freight Ass'n, 166 U. S. 290, 17 Sup. Ct. 540, 41 L. Ed. 1007, when, in response to the objection that the act did not mean what its language imported, but only to declare illegal contracts in unreasonable restraint of trade, the court said: "When, therefore, the body of an act pronounces as illegal every contract or combination in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, etc., the plain and ordinary meaning of such language is not limited to that kind of contract alone which is in unreasonable restraint of trade, but all contracts are included in such language, and no exception or limitation can be added without placing in the act that which is omitted by congress."

It was settled in an early case that a contract made for and in behalf of a state by its officers, under the South Carolina dispensary act vesting in a state a monopoly in the purchase and sale of alcoholic liquors, was not within the act, the state being neither a corporation nor a person, but a sovereign; Lowenstein v. Evans, 69 Fed. 908.

The question was soon raised whether the Sherman act applied to railroads, the objection being made, in cases where it was proposed to apply it, that the regulation of their traffic was provided for by the interstate commerce act. The supreme court, however, in two cases held that the act was applicable to such companies, and that there was no inconsistency between the two federal statutes. Trans-Missouri Freight Ass'n and the Traffic Ass'n Cases, supra.

It was held in U. S. v. Debs, 64 Fed. 724, that the federal court might, under the Sherman act, sustain a bill in equity to enjoin a combination or conspiracy which would interrupt interstate transportation and when an injunction issued to restrain the prosecution of such a combination was violated and the defendants imprisoned for contempt, the supreme court refused to discharge them on habeas corpus. The petition was denied on other grounds, but the court said that it was not to be understood that they dissented from the conclusions of the lower courts in reference to the scope of the act. Other cases sustaining the view taken in the Debs case are: U. S. v. Amalgamated Council, 54 Fed. 994, 26 L. R. A. 158; U. S. v. Cassidy, 67 Fed. 698.

The first case in the Supreme Court involving this statute was U. S. v. E. C. Knight Co., 156 U. S. 1, 15 Sup. Ct. 249, 39 L. Ed. 325, in which it was sought to restrain and dissolve what was known as the Sugar Trust; the supreme court affirmed a decree dismissing the bill upon the ground that, although the control of the manufacture of a commodity involves the control of its disposition this is a secondary or indirect control and the commerce through which the commodity is distributed "succeeds to manufacture and is not a part of it." The court said that: "The fact that an article is manufactured for export to another state does not of itself make it an article of interstate commerce, and the intent of the manufacturer does not determine the time when the article passes from the control of the state and belongs to commerce."

"The contracts and acts of the defendants related exclusively to the acquisition of the Philadelphia refineries, and the business of sugar refining in Pennsylvania, and bore no direct relation to commerce between the states or with foreign nations."

Prior to the Standard Oil and Tobacco Cases, infra, this case had been the only one which has interrupted a continuous line of decisions gradually working out an accepted construction of the act, but during that time the court has been endeavoring to distinguish it from other cases in which the result reached has been generally treated as inconsistent with it, as for example Loewe v. Lawlor, 208 U. S. 274, 28 Sup. Ct. 301, 52 L. Ed. 488, 13 Ann. Cas. 815, where it is difficult for any ordinary mind to see wherein the cases differ, or the case of Swift & Co. v. U. S., 196 U. S. 395, 25 Sup. Ct. 276, 49 L. Ed. 523, where Holmes, J., defined commerce among the states as "not a technical legal conception, but a practical one, drawn from the course of business," a distinction which seems to have been overlooked in the Knight Case. And in Addyston P. & S. Co. v. U. S., 175 U. S. 211, 20 Sup. Ct. 96, 44 L. Ed. 136, there was another rather ineffectual effort to distinguish it from the earliest case, which has the distinction of being usually cited for such a purpose. The explanation may be, and probably is, that at the outset the disposition of the court was to limit the scope of the act, and this was done to an extent which could not be logically followed.

In U. S. v. Coal Dealers' Ass'n, supra, an incorporated association of coal dealers in San Francisco, for the purpose of controlling the coal trade in that city, was held illegal under the anti-trust act. Similar rulings are U. S. v. Coke Co., 46 Fed. 432, 12 L. R. A. 753; U. S. v. Hopkins, 82 Fed. 529. This latter decision was reversed in Hopkins v. U. S., 171 U. S. 578, 19 Sup. Ct. 40, 43 L. Ed. 290. The combination was of commission men doing business at the stock yards, receiving, buying and selling and handling live stock from different states. The court below treated the agreement as being made "to control and monopolize the entire business of buying and selling live stock at the Kansas City stock yards. It is clearly a combination to restrict, control and monopolize that class of trade and commerce." But the supreme court treated the agreements as in effect operating "in furtherance of and in aiding commerce by providing for it facilities, conveniences, privileges or services, but which do not directly relate to charges for its transportation or to any other trade form of interstate commerce."

This distinction and its reasoning is difficult to follow in the light of other decisions made by it upon the act, but the opinion concludes: "It follows from what has been said that the complainants have failed to show the defendants guilty of any violations of the act of congress, because it does not appear that the defendants are engaged in interstate commerce, or that any agreements or contracts made by them and relating to the conduct of their business are in restraint of any such commerce. Whether they refused to transact business which is not interstate commerce, except with those who are members of the exchange and whether such refusal is justifiable or not, are questions not open for discussion here. As defendants' actions or agreements are not a violation of the act of congress, the complainants have failed in their case, and the order for the injunction must be reversed."

In Anderson v. U. S., 171 U. S. 604, 19 Sup. Ct. 50, 43 L. Ed. 300, the question involved was the legality of a live stock exchange composed of the purchasers of cattle (whereas in the Hopkins Case the members of the association were commission men merely), and it was alleged that the members of the exchange in the Anderson Case unlawfully and oppressively refused to purchase cattle from a member who dealt with another member of the stockyards, not a member of the exchange. The agreement was held valid mainly upon the ground that it did not, upon its face, operate as a restraint upon interstate commerce and there was no evidence to show that it did so in fact. In determining that the agreement was not in restraint of interstate trade, the court said: "It has already been stated in the Hopkins case, above mentioned, that in order to come within the provisions of the statute the direct effect of an agreement or combination must be in restraint of that trade or commerce which is among the several states, or with foreign nations. Where the subject matter of the agreement does not directly relate to and act upon and embrace interstate commerce, and where the undisputed facts show that the purpose of the agreement was not to regulate, obstruct, or restrain that commerce, but that it was entered into with the object of properly and fairly regulating the transaction of the business in which the parties to the agreement were engaged, such agreement will be upheld as not within the statute, where it can be seen that the character and terms of the agreement are well calculated to attain the purpose for which it was formed, and where the effect of its formation and enforcement upon interstate trade or commerce is in any event indirect and incidental, and not its purpose or object."

A contract of a railroad company having certain connecting lines to be used for its business is not a violation of the act; Prescott & A. C. R. Co. v. R. Co., 73 Fed. 438. This case does not present the question of what would be the effect of an agreement in the interchange of business to the exclusion of other lines in order to control interstate commerce, but only follows out the doctrine that the railroad company not being bound to contract for carriage beyond its own line may make a selection among different agencies for that work; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. R. Co., 110 U. S. 667, 4 Sup. Ct. 185, 28 L. Ed. 291; and may make certain discriminations between certain connecting lines with respect to demanding prepayment of freight or refusing to advance charges in the case of some connecting lines and not of others; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. S. S. Co., 86 Fed. 407, 30 C. C. A. 142. The same general principle was applied to express companies; Southern Indiana Exp. Co. v. Exp. Co., 92 Fed. 1022, 35 C. C. A. 172.

The legal remedy under the act is not affected by the dissolution of an illegal combination pending an appeal in a case brought against it; U. S. v. Freight Ass'n, 166 U. S. 290, 17 Sup. Ct. 540, 41 L. Ed. 1007.

In a case arising under the Sherman act, congress is authorized by the constitution to confer upon any federal court jurisdiction to summon the proper parties to a suit to a hearing and decree wherever they reside or are found within the national dominion of the nation, although beyond the limits of the district of the court; U. S. v. Oil Co., 152 Fed. 290.

It was held in Northern Securities Co. v. U. S., 193 U. S. 197, 24 Sup. Ct. 436, 48 L. Ed. 679, that the act is violated as well by a corporate combination as by a voluntary association, and thereby was ended a somewhat generally accepted but (as now held) erroneous opinion which led to the adoption of corporate fusion as a refuge from the settled decision as to the illegality of the voluntary combinations and trusts. Probably nowhere can there be found a more lucid statement of the construction of the act, before then generally accepted, as to the safety of the incorporated combination than in the dissenting opinion of Holmes, J.

In Swift & Co. v. U. S., 196 U. S. 375, 25 Sup. Ct. 276, 49 L. Ed. 518, a combination of packers, having for its purpose the avoidance of competition and control both of prices and credit to dealers, was held illegal. So also in Continental Wall Paper Co. v. Louis Voight & Sons Co., 212 U. S. 227, 29 Sup. Ct. 280, 53 L. Ed. 486, a combination of the same character respecting wall paper was held illegal under the act, and the illegality was held to be a valid defence in an action for merchandise bought under such agreement; and in W. W. Montague & Co. v. Lowry, 193 U. S. 38, 24 Sup. Ct. 307, 48 L. Ed. 608, a similar combination of manufacturers of tiles, mantels and grates was held illegal and a recovery by a person injured was sustained under Sec. 7 of the act.

In Loewe v. Lawlor, 208 U. S. 274, 28 Sup. Ct. 301, 52 L. Ed. 488, 13 Ann. Cas. 815, a combination of trade-unionists to conduct a boycott was held to be within the act, and so it was said, was any combination whatever which essentially obstructs the free flow of interstate commerce or restricts the liberty of a trader to engage in it.

Acts done in a foreign country are not punishable under the act, though they might be if done here; American Banana Co. v. Fruit Co., 213 U. S. 347, 29 Sup. Ct. 511, 53 L. Ed. 826, 16 Ann. Cas. 1047.

Three other cases, cited supra, may be properly enumerated as completing the list of Supreme Court decisions which should be read in order to gain an accurate understanding of the state of the law as construed by that court up to the beginning of the year 1911. These cases were all of exchanges of some sort, in all of which the transactions were held not to be within the anti-trust act, mainly as not showing restraint of interstate commerce; Hopkins v. U. S., 171 U. S. 578, 19 Sup. Ct. 40, 43 L. Ed. 290; Anderson v. U. S., 171 U. S. 604, 19 Sup. Ct. 50, 43 L. Ed. 300; Board of Trade of Chicago v. Stock Co., 198 U. S. 236, 25 Sup. Ct. 637, 49 L. Ed. 1031.

Taking the cases as a whole in addition to points stated and not here repeated, they established the constitutionality of the act and that it embraces railroads; the illegality of any direct restraint of interstate trade, whether reasonable or unreasonable, or whether it destroy or affect competition among members of the combination as well as of strangers to it. What is a direct restraint is frequently a leading question, and while it must be to some extent substantial and a proximate result of the combination, no rule has been established to determine whether it is either; each case must stand or fall by its own circumstances. It is enough to invalidate the agreement that it gives power to control prices, whether it actually raises them or not; and the restraint forbidden need not amount to total suppression, but merely decrease of competition. The act embraces corporations, private manufacturers and dealers. These conclusions are gathered from a consideration of the whole line of cases cited, but a good summary of previous decisions is given in the opinion of the court in the Northern Securities Co. v. U. S., supra.

There is no substantial change in the points established, except that created by the cases of Standard Oil Co. v. U. S., 221 U. S. 1, 31 Sup. Ct. 502, 55 L. Ed. 619, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 834, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 734, and U. S. v. Tobacco Co., 221 U. S. 106, 31 Sup. Ct. 632.

55 L. Ed. 663, in which it is held that the words "restraint of trade" in the Sherman act are used in their common law sense and are to be read so as to make the first and second sections of the act prohibit only unreasonable or undue restraints of interstate trade or attempts to monopolize the same in any and every form.

Both corporations were held to be guilty of an unreasonable restraint of trade and to be illegal combinations under both the first and second sections of the act. The opinion of the court in the first case contains an extended argument to sustain the position that unless a combination amounts to an unreasonable restraint of trade it is not invalid under the act, although, as the particular case under consideration is held to be unreasonable, it is forcibly suggested by Harlan, J., in his dissenting opinion in the second case, that as, under any construction of the act, the combination was held unlawful, the discussion of what might have been the result if it were held reasonable is obiter dictum. The opinion in the first case, reaffirmed in the second, goes at length into the discussion of the common law rule as to restraints which as appears in this title was so well settled that a simple statement that the statute was to be construed as applying to interstate trade, the common law rules and definitions as to restraints and monopolies would seem to have accomplished the apparent purpose of the decision.

In addition to the discussion of the effect of reasonable restraints, which was, under the view taken in either case, unnecessary, the striking feature of the opinions in these cases is the effort "to show that the construction was not in conflict with prior decisions." It is thus characterized by an extremely friendly critic who approves of the decision as one which, if frankly admitted to be "a substantial change from the previous interpretation," it would be, "under all the circumstances, not sufficient reason for withholding general approval." The quotations are from an analysis of the two opinions by Robert L. Raymond in 25 Harv. L. Rev. 31, which supplements a paper by the same author on "The Federal Anti-Trust Act," in 23 id. 353. This writer says in the later of these papers, at page 43: "It is not necessary to discuss former cases, nor to quote from opinions of the court to show that the rule previously adopted was that all direct or substantial restraints of competition, whether reasonable or not, are illegal. The fact is obvious from a study of the previous cases, and it is not worth while to emphasize it."

The truth of this statement of the result of the decisions is readily verified by reference to the original statement by the court of its construction of the act in the Trans-Missouri Freight Case, as quoted in the dissenting opinion therein, of White, J., who proceeded to controvert it in a discussion of the common law rule and the policy of not construing the act as an extension of it. He has continued his dissent, expressed from time to time with the remarkable ability and force which always characterizes his opinions, until at length he has been able to fortify them with a majority of the court. That he recognized that the law had been settled in opposition to his views clearly appeared when in his dissenting opinion in the Northern Securities Case, 193 U. S. at page 373, 24 Sup. Ct. 436, 48 L. Ed. 679, he thus replied to the suggestion that it did not follow that such power as was deprecated "would ever be exerted by congress" by this statement of the law as determined: "The first suggestion is at once met by the consideration that it has been decided by this court that, as the anti-trust act forbids any restraint, it therefore embraces even reasonable contracts or agreements."

Even the briefest statement of the acceptance by the courts of the doctrine that the Sherman Act was not a mere application of the common law to interstate trade would be utterly beyond present limits, but it is proper, if not necessary, in connection with the cases of 1911 to note what nearly all of the judges who then concurred in those decisions, had before that judicially declared to be the law.

In his dissenting opinion in the Northern Securities Case, Holmes, J., said that the statute "hits 'every' contract or combination of the prohibited sort, great or small," (the quotation marks are his) and that the natural inclination to assume that it was directed against certain great combinations cannot be carried out. And in the same opinion he said of the Joint Traffic and Trans-Missouri Freight Cases: "I accept those decisions absolutely, not only as binding upon me, but as decisions which I have no desire to criticize or abridge."

In U. S. v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co., 54 U. S. App. 723, 85 Fed. 271, 29 C. C. A. 141, 46 L. R. A. 122, Taft, J. (with the concurrence of Harlan, J., then, and Lurton, J., later, in the supreme court) said, in answer to the contention that the combination would have been valid at common law, that it was sufficient to point to the decision in the Trans-Missouri Freight Case, "in which it was held that contracts in restraint of interstate transportation were within the statute, whether the restraints would be regarded as reasonable at common law or not." On appeal this question was not raised or referred to, but the decree was affirmed with a restriction of the injunction to interstate trade, correcting a supposed inadvertence.

Lurton, J., speaking directly for himself, said that the supreme court cases made it clear that the legality of a contract as imposing only reasonable restraint was not a defence against an action under the Sherman Act upon a contract whose dominant purpose was a direct restraint of interstate trade; Atlanta v. Pipeworks, 127 Fed. 23, 61 C. C. A. 387, 64 L. R. A. 721.

Of the members of the court who sat in the Standard Oil and Tobacco Cases, Justices Holmes, White, Harlan, Day and McKenna concurred (at least did not dissent) in the statement of Fuller, C. J., in the opinion of the court in Loewe v. Lawlor, supra, which cited the Trans-Mo. Freight, Joint Traffic and Northern Securities Cases as holding "that the anti-trust law has a broader application than the prohibition of restraints of trade unlawful at common law." The first named case is quoted as replying to the assertion that such agreements as that under consideration were not void at common law, that "the answer to the statement now is to be found in the terms of the statute under consideration," and the last case, it is said, declares "illegal every contract, combination, or conspiracy, in whatever form, of whatever nature, and whoever may be parties to it, which directly or necessarily operates in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states."

In Chesapeake & O. F. Co. v. U. S., 115 Fed. 610, 53 C. C. A. 256, Day, J. (then a circuit judge), in an opinion concurred in by Lurton and Severens, JJ., stated his understanding of the decisions to be that at common law only contracts in unreasonable restraint of trade were non-enforceable, but that the act of congress prohibited "all contracts in restraint of trade. It has not left to the courts the consideration of the question whether such restraint is reasonable or unreasonable, or whether the contracts would have been illegal at common law or not. The act leaves for consideration by judicial authority no question of this character, but all contracts and combinations are declared illegal if in restraint of trade or commerce among the states," citing the Trans-Mo. Freight Case, the Joint Traffic Case, and the Addyston Pipe Case.

To this enumeration of six out of nine Justices who sat in the Standard Oil and Tobacco Cases whose previous judicial opinions have been cited, it should be added that Van Devanter, J., sat in the first of these cases below and concurred in the opinion of the court by Sanborn, J. (in which Hook and Adams, JJ., also concurred), to the effect that if the necessary effect of a contract, combination, etc., is to restrict free competition in interstate or foreign commerce, "it is a contract, combination or conspiracy in restraint of that trade, and it violates the law. The parties to it are presumed to intend the inevitable result of their acts, and neither their actual intent nor the reasonableness of the restraint imposed may withdraw it from the denunciation of the statute." U. S. v. Oil Co., 173 Fed. 177.

Thus it appears that of the justices who concurred in the Standard Oil and Tobacco decisions, Hughes and Lamar, JJ., seem alone to have approached the cases as res integra.

It may be added to this judicial history (which seems essential to a proper understanding of these much discussed decisions) that in the Tobacco Case, tried below, before Lacombe, Coxe, Ward and Noyes, JJ., it was said that the Sherman act as construed "by successive majorities of the supreme court," condemns every combination in restraint of interstate trade which by its necessary operation destroys or restricts competition. One opinion expresses a doubt whether the supreme court may not have gone too far and construed too broadly, and suggests that possibly it should be amended to confine the illegality to "unreasonable restraint," and concludes, "but these are all legislative, and not judicial questions;" U. S. v. Tobacco Co., 164 Fed. 700.

In this connection it is worth while to note the impression made upon eminent English law writers respecting the construction of the Sherman act in the Trans-Missouri Freight Ass'n and Traffic Ass'n cases. The subject of combinations in the law of England and other countries was critically considered in the "Report of a Royal Commission on Shipping Rings," a term applied to sea carriage combinations of ship owners. The report contains papers on the subject by Rt. Hon. Arthur Cohen, K. C., the chairman of the commission, and Sir John Macdonell. Mr. Cohen says: "It was held by a majority of the supreme court in the important case of U. S. v. Freight Ass'n, 166 U. S. 290 [17 Sup. Ct. 540, 41 L. Ed. 1007], that the Sherman act applies equally to all contracts tending to create a monopoly, whether or not they are reasonable or whether or not they are unlawful at common law." (Italics in the original.)

Sir John Macdonell says: "As to the Sherman act, the supreme court has held that it is directed not merely against contracts or combinations in restraint of trade which are unreasonable. 'All contracts are included in such language, and no exception can be added without placing in the Act that which has been omitted by congress.' (U. S. v. Trans-Missouri Freight Ass'n, 166 U. S. 328 [17 Sup. Ct. 540, 41 L. Ed. 1007].) The supreme court has in terms stated that this act applies to 'every contract, combination, or conspiracy, in whatever form, of whatever nature, and whoever may be parties to it, which directly or necessarily operates in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States or with foreign nations,' and that 'the act is not limited to restraints of inter-state and international trade that are unreasonable in their nature, but embraces all direct restraints imposed by any combination, conspiracy, or monopoly upon such trade or commerce' (Northern Securities Co. v. U. S., 193 U. S. 331 [24 Sup. Ct. 436, 48 L. Ed. 679], Harlan, J.)." Then after stating that there was no decision expressly upon the point whether a contract to give a "deferred rebate" would be a breach of the act, and after referring to some American authority that it might not be such if the restraint were reasonable, this conclusion is reached: "Without venturing to state a decided opinion upon a question still open, it seems most probable that such contract, if carried out by a combination of ship-owners and if in any way restraining trade, would come within the Sherman act." 10 Journ. Soc. of Comp. Legislation 144, 149, 170.

There have been some allusions to the Standard Oil and Tobacco Cases by the supreme court since they were decided. In U. S. v. R. Ass'n, 224 U. S. 383, 395, 32 Sup. Ct. 507, 56 L. Ed. 810, it is said that whether it is a facility in aid of interstate commerce or an unreasonable restraint forbidden by the act of congress, as construed and applied in those cases, "will depend upon the intent to be inferred from the extent of the control thereby secured over instrumentalities which such commerce is under compulsion to use, the method by which such control has been brought about, and the manner in which that control has been exerted." And again in the same case the court quoted from the Standard Oil Case that it must not be overlooked in applying a remedy "that injury to the public by the prevention of an undue restraint on, or the monopolization of trade or commerce is the foundation upon which the prohibitions of the statute rest, and moreover that one of the fundamental purposes of the statute is to protect, not to destroy, rights of property."

In U. S. v. R. Co., 226 U. S. 61, 86, 33 Sup. Ct. 53, 57 L. Ed. 124, a quotation was made from the Standard Oil Case to the effect that "it was deemed essential by an all-embracing enumeration to make sure that no form of contract or combination by which an undue restraint of interstate or foreign commerce was brought about could save such restraint from condemnation." And both cases were cited to the effect that if the act complained of contravened the provisions of the anti-trust act, it was no defence to say that it was legal in the state where made and within corporate powers conferred by state authority. In the same case citations of similar cases were made with respect to the remedy to be applied.

In U. S. v. Reading Co., 226 U. S. 324, 369, 33 Sup. Ct. 90, 57 L. Ed. 243, the Standard Oil Case was cited to the point that the act did not forbid or restrain the power to make normal and usual contracts, and that the words "restraint of trade" should be given a meaning that would not destroy the individual right of contract and render difficult if not impossible any movement of trade in the character of interstate commerce, the free movement of which it was the purpose of the statute to protect.

In U. S. v. R. Co., 226 U. S. 470, 474, 33 Sup. Ct. 162, 57 L. Ed. 306, it was said that the Standard Oil and Northern Securities Cases were not, in view of the different situation, to be followed in reorganizing the constituent parts of the combination therein declared to be unlawful.

In U. S. v. Patten, 226 U. S. 525, 542, 33 Sup. Ct. 141, 57 L. Ed. 333, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 325, the Standard Oil Case is quoted as authority for the position that a conspiracy to corner a staple commodity which is normally the subject of interstate commerce, is a violation of section I of the statute, thus: "The context manifests that the statute was drawn in the light of the existing practical conception of the law of restraint of trade, because it groups, as within that class, not only contracts which were in restraint of trade in the subjective sense, but all contracts or acts which theoretically were attempts to monopolize, yet which in practice had come to be considered as in restraint of trade in a broad sense." And again in the same case, both the former cases were cited to sustain the proposition that the conspiracy in question was a violation of the anti-trust act, because it tended to inflict public injury.

In Nash v. U. S., 229 U. S. 373, 376, 33 Sup. Ct. 780, 57 L. Ed. 1232, both cases are said "to have established that only such contracts and combinations are within the act as, by reason of intent or the inherent nature of the contemplated acts, prejudice the public interests by unduly restricting competition or unduly obstructing the course of trade."

In connection with the supposed overruling of the Trans-Missouri Freight Case in the Standard Oil Case, an allusion to the former in a subsequent case is of importance.

In Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co. v. U. S., 226 U. S. 20, 49, 33 Sup. Ct. 9, 57 L. Ed. 107, a case decided after the Standard Oil Case, the court refers to U. S. v. Freight Ass'n, 166 U. S. 290, 17 Sup. Ct. 540, 41 L. Ed. 1007, as an authority and makes this emphatic statement with respect to the efficiency of the Sherman law in which it says there "is a limitation of rights, rights which may be pushed to evil consequences and therefore restrained. This court has had occasion in a number of cases to declare its principle. Two of those cases we have cited. The others it is not necessary to review or to quote from except to say that in the very latest of them the comprehensive and thorough character of the law is demonstrated and its sufficiency to prevent evasions of its policy 'by resort to any disguise or subterfuge of form,' or the escape of its prohibitions 'by any indirection.' U. S. v. Tobacco Co., 221 U. S. 106, 181 [31 Sup. Ct. 632, 55 L. Ed. 663]. Nor can they be evaded by good motives. The law is its own measure of right and wrong, of what it permits or forbids, and the judgment of the courts cannot be set up against it in a supposed accommodation of its policy with the good intention of parties, and it may be, of some good results. U. S. v. Freight Ass'n, 166 U. S. 290 [17 Sup. Ct. 540, 41 L. Ed. 1007]; Armour Packing Co. v. U. S., 209 U. S. 56, 62 [28 Sup. Ct. 428, 52 L. Ed. 681]."

It has been held in cases involving the construction of the act that under section 7, a private person has no remedy in equity, but only an action at law; Block v. Distributing Co., 95 Fed. 979; Southern Indiana Exp. Co. v. Exp. Co., 88 Fed. 659; and that an action at law will lie for damages caused by a combination illegal under the act; W. W. Montague & Co. v. Lowry, 193 U. S. 38, 24 Sup. Ct. 307, 48 L. Ed. 608; Lowry v. Grate Ass'n, 106 Fed. 38; but the action can only be maintained by the person who actually suffers damage; Ames v. Tel. Co., 166 Fed. 820; and the complaint need only state facts showing that the defendant committed one or more of the offenses condemned by the act, to the injury of the plaintiff; People's Tobacco Co. v. Tobacco Co., 170 Fed. 396, 95 C. C. A. 566. A combination, to be within the act, need not in terms relate to interstate commerce, if its purpose and effect are necessarily to restrain it; Gibbs v. McNeeley, 118 Fed. 120, 55 C. C. A. 70, 60 L. R. A. 152; and if the necessary effect of a combination is but incidentally and indirectly to restrain interstate commerce, while its chief result is to foster the trade and increase the business of the contracting parties, "it does not fall under the ban of the act"; Sanborn, J., in Union Pac. Coal Co. v. U. S., 173 Fed. 737, 97 C. C. A. 578; Virtue v. Package Mfg. Co., 179 Fed. 115, 102 C. C. A. 413; Whitwell v. Tobacco Co., 125 Fed. 454, 60 C. C. A. 290, 64 L. R. A. 689; Hopkins v. U. S., 171 U. S. 578, 19 Sup. Ct. 40, 43 L. Ed. 290; Field v. Pav. Co., 194 U. S. 618, 24 Sup. Ct. 784, 48 L. Ed. 1142; it must be the dominant purpose of the contract and not a merely insignificant and incidental interference; Cincinnati, P., B. S. & P. P. Co. v. Bay, 200 U. S. 179, 26 Sup. Ct. 208, 50 L. Ed. 428.

It has been held: that "trade" and "commerce" are synonymous, and that "monopolize" means to engross or control the market; U. S. v. Patterson, 55 Fed. 605; that the act did not apply to restraint of interstate commerce by a state; Lowenstein v. Evans, 69 Fed. 908; but that a municipal corporation is a person within the meaning of sections 7 and 8; Chattanooga F. & P. Works v. Atlanta, 203 U. S. 390, 27 Sup. Ct. 65, 51 L. Ed. 241.

The act of February 12, 1913, provides that every combination, etc., shall be void if made between two or more persons or corporations, either of whom, as principal or agent, has engaged in importing any article, if it is in restraint of trade or to increase the market price of any imported article or of any manufacture into which such article is intended to enter. The act prescribes a penalty of fine or imprisonment or either and for a seizure of the property by the United States.

The act of March 4, 1913, provides that the sums thereunder appropriated shall not be expended in the purchase of steel, machinery, etc., from any corporation, etc., which has combined to monopolize interstate or foreign commerce.

By act of August 24, 1912, no vessel engaged in the coastwise or foreign trade of the United States shall be permitted to enter or pass through the Panama Canal if owned, chartered or controlled by any person or company doing business in violation of the anti-trust act of July 2, 1890. Suit may be brought by any shipper or the Attorney General of the United States. Questions of fact may be determined by any court of the United States having competent jurisdiction in any cause to which the owners or operators of such ships may be parties.

See TRADE COMMISSION, FEDERAL; Act of Oct. 15, 1914 (Clayton Act).

A patentee has the right to reserve to himself, as part of his monopoly, the control of the price at which dealers may retail the patented product to buyers; The Fair v. Mfg. Co., 166 Fed. 117, 92 C. C. A. 43. The owner of a patented article can charge such price as he may choose and sell it upon condition that the buyer on a resale shall charge a certain price for such article; Bement v. Harrow Co., 186 U. S. 70, 22 Sup. Ct. 747, 46 L. Ed. 1058. Any conditions which are not in their very nature illegal in regard to patent property, imposed by the patentee, and agreed to by the licensee, for the right to manufacture or sell the article, are valid; and the fact that the conditions in the contracts keep up the monopoly does not render them illegal. The prohibition imposed upon the licensees in this case was a reasonable one, which excluded them from making such articles (here harrows) as were made by others who were manufacturing and selling other machines under other patents. But it would be unreasonable to prohibit them from using any patents legally obtained by them and not infringing patents owned by others. It was also held that there was nothing which violates the Sherman act in the agreement that the patent owner would not license any other person to manufacture or sell any harrow of the peculiar style and construction then used or sold by the licensees: id.

Contracts by which a number of patents covering similar inventions are assigned by the several owners to one of the parties, which grants licenses under them to all the others, are not violations of the Sherman act, because of provisions intended to protect and keep up the patent monopoly; U. S. Consol. S. R. Co. v. Griffin & Skelley Co., 126 Fed. 364, 61 C. C. A. 334. To the same effect, although all the manufacturers of the article in the United States were licensees; Indiana Mfg. Co. v. Threshing Mach. Co., 154 Fed. 365, 83 C. C. A. 343.

A system of contracts between the owner of a patent for rubber-tire wheels and its licensees, fixing uniform prices and the percentage of the whole output which should be made and sold by each licensee, and providing that the business of all should be supervised by commissioners appointed by the licensor, is not rendered invalid by a provision for the accumulation of a fund by them to use in the purchase of tires from any or all of the licensees which should be sold to the trade to the best interest of all licensees; Rubber Tire Wheel Co. v. Rubber Works Co., 154 Fed. 358, 83 C. C. A. 336.

Complainant sold his patented machine with a license restriction that it should only be used in connection with certain unpatented articles made by him. With knowledge of such license agreement, defendant sold to the vendee of the patented machine an unpatented article described in the license restriction; it was held that defendant's act constituted contributory infringement of the patent, and that while an absolute and unconditional sale operates to pass the patented article outside of the boundaries of the patent, a patentee, by a conditional sale, may so restrict the use of his vendee within specific boundaries of time, place or method as to make prohibited uses outside of those boundaries an infringement; Henry v. A. B. Dick Co., 224 U. S. 1, 32 Sup. Ct. 364, 56 L. Ed. 645, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 880. A patentee may not by notice regulate the price at which future sales of the patented article may be made, such article being in the hands of a retailer by purchase from a jobber who has paid the agent of the patentee the full price asked for the article sold; Bauer v. O'Donnell, 229 U. S. 1, 33 Sup. Ct. 616, 57 L. Ed. 1041.

A trade agreement involving the right of all parties thereto to use a certain patent, which transcends the right to a monopoly of the patent and controls the output and price of goods to all those using the patent, is illegal under the Sherman act. While rights conferred by patents are definite and extensive, they do not give a universal license against positive prohibitions any more than any other rights do. A trade agreement under which manufacturers, formerly competitive, combined and restricted themselves to certain rules and regulations among others limiting the output of their product and quantity, vendees and price, was held illegal under the act; Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co. v. U. S., 226 U. S. 20, 33 Sup. Ct. 9, 57 L. Ed. 107, distinguishing Bement v. Harrow Co., 186 U. S. 70, 22 Sup. Ct. 747, 46 L. Ed. 1058, and Henry v. A. B. Dick Co., 224 U. S. 1, 32 Sup. Ct. 364, 56 L. Ed. 645, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 880, supra.

The owner of a copyright cannot qualify future sales by his vendee or limit or restrain future sales at a specified price, and a notice in the book that a sale at a different price will be treated as an infringement is invalid.

There are differences between the patent and copyright statutes in the extent of the protection granted by them and the rights of a patentee are not necessarily to be applied as an analogy to those under a copyright; Bobbs-Merrill Co. v. Straus, 210 U. S. 339, 28 Sup. Ct. 722, 52 L. Ed. 1086.

Neither the patent statute nor the copyright act was intended to authorize agreements in unlawful restraint of trade; Straus v. Publishers' Ass'n, 231 U. S. 222, 34 Sup. Ct. 84, 58 L. Ed. 192, where it was held that agreements between book publishers and sellers restricting the sales to booksellers only who would maintain the price of copyrighted books and would not sell to any one who would cut the price, went beyond any fair and legal means to protect prices and was manifestly illegal under the Sherman act and that it was not justified as to copyrighted books under the copyright act.

A system of contracts between manufacturers and wholesale and retail merchants, by which the manufacturers attempted to control the prices for all sales by all dealers, wholesale or retail, whether purchasers or subpurchasers, eliminating all competition and fixing the amount which the consumer should pay, is in restraint of trade and invalid both at common law and, so far as it affects interstate commerce, under the Sherman act. Such agreements are not excepted from the general rule because they relate to proprietary medicines manufactured under a secret process but not under letters patent; nor is a manufacturer entitled to control prices on all sales of his own products in restraint of trade. The bill was filed to enjoin price cutting and to enjoin the defendant from inducing regular customers of the plaintiff to break their contract with the plaintiff; Dr. Miles M. Co. v. John D. Park & Sons Co., 220 U. S. 373, 31 Sup. Ct. 376, 55 L. Ed. 502 (Holmes, J., dissented, saying: "I cannot believe that in the long run the public will profit by this court permitting knaves to cut reasonable prices for some ulterior purpose of their own and thus to impair, if not to destroy, the production and sale of articles which it is assumed to be desirable that the public should be able to get"). To the same effect, John D. Park & Sons Co. v. Hartman, 153 Fed. 24, 82 C. C. A. 158, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 135.

The owner of a secret process is not protected by law in his secret, but he may protect himself by contract against its disclosure by one to whom it was communicated in confidence, or restrict its use by such person, and such contracts are not in restraint of trade; id., 153 Fed. 24, 82 C. C. A. 158, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 135. See TRADE SECRET.

An infringer of a patent cannot defend in a suit in equity by setting up a violation of the Sherman act in the acquisition and management of the patents by the complainant; Otis

Elevator Co. v. Geiger, 107 Fed. 131; nor can the infringer of a trademark; Northwestern Consol. M. Co. v. William Callam & Son, 177 Fed. 785.

A party to an illegal combination is not thereby deprived of his right of action upon a contract in itself legal; The Charles v. Wisewall, 74 Fed. 802; Connolly v. Sewer Pipe Co., 184 U. S. 540, 22 Sup. Ct. 431, 46 L. Ed. 679; Continental W. P. Co. v. Louis Voight & Sons Co., 212 U. S. 227, 29 Sup. Ct. 280, 53 L. Ed. 486.

There being no federal statute of limitations applicable to section 7 of the Sherman act, suits under it are subject to the state statutes; Atlanta v. Pipe Co., 101 Fed. 900. In actions for treble damages under section 7, the parties are entitled to a jury trial; Meeker v. R. Co., 162 Fed. 354. Acts committed without the territory of the United States are not violations of the act; American Banana Co. v. Fruit Co., 213 U. S. 347, 29 Sup. Ct. 511, 53 L. Ed. 826, 16 Ann. Cas. 1047. One member of an unlawful combination cannot have relief in equity against other persons who interfere with its illegal purpose, since he does not come in with clean hands; Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Frank, 110 Fed. 689; but any one or more members of a combination in violation of the act may be sued under section 7, for sales at an excessive price whether he or they made the sale or not; Chattanooga F. & P. W. v. Atlanta, 203 U. S. 390, 27 Sup. Ct. 65, 51 L. Ed. 241, affirming Atlanta v. Pipeworks, 127 Fed. 23, 61 C. C. A. 387, 64 L. R. A. 721, which reversed Atlanta v. Pipe Co., 101 Fed. 900.

The act applies to combinations of laborers; Workingmen's A. Council v. U. S., 57 Fed. 85, 6 C. C. A. 258; Waterhouse v. Comer, 55 Fed. 150, 19 L. R. A. 403; Loewe v. Lawlor, 208 U. S. 283, 28 Sup. Co., 62 Fed. 803; In re Certain Merchandise, 64 Fed. 577 (but in reviewing this decision the supreme court withheld any expression of opinion on this point; In re Debs, 158 U. S. 577, 15 Sup. Ct. 900, 39 L. Ed. 1092). The right of action at law has been sustained where one corporation having obtained control of two other independent companies, used it to the damage of a rival business concern; Monarch Tobacco Works v. Tobacco Co., 165 Fed. 774; a combination to restrict production of woodenware and increase prices was held illegal both under the act and at common law, and the contract was held not enforceable; Cravens v. of a dealers' association except at higher prices; W. W. Montague & Co. v. Lowry, 193 U. S. 38, 24 Sup. Ct. 307, 48 L. Ed. 608. A combination of thirty-five factories in twelve states was held unlawful, but, because it would contribute towards completing it, the appointment of a receiver was refused; American B. & M. Co. v. Klotz, 44 Fed. 721.

Contracts held void under the act: A stipulation in a sale of books not to sell at less than the publisher's price; Bobbs-Merrill Co. v. Co., 167 Fed. 704 and 167 Fed. 721, 94 C. C. Ed. 300 (these decisions have been criticized as applications by the Supreme Court to this act of the doctrine de minimis non curat lex; Walker, Hist. Sherm. Law 136).

Contracts held to be no violation of the act: Between a board of trade and the telegraph companies to communicate buying and selling prices to some members and not to others; Board of Trade of Chicago v. Stock Co., 198 U. S. 245, 25 Sup. Ct. 637, 49 L. Ed. 1031, on certiorari to Christie G. & S. Co. v. Board of Trade, 125 Fed. 166, 61 C. C. A. 11, which reversed Board of Trade of Chicago v. Ed. 428; for the sale of a patent upon condition that, with written consent of a majority of parties to the license contract, an effort might be made on behalf of all parties to crush competition; Rubber Tire Wheel Co. v. Rubber Works Co., 154 Fed. 358, 83 C. C. A. 336, reversing id., 142 Fed. 531; giving an exclusive privilege of transporting milk over a certain railroad; Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Kutter, 147 Fed. 51, 77 C. C. A. 315; a combination of commercial brokerage companies which, although it had the effect of suppressing a certain amount of competition in interstate business, was substantially an acquisition of most of the business done at a single point in one state; Arkansas Brokerage Co. v. Dunn & Powell, 173 Fed. 899, 97 C. C. A. 454, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 464.

Indictments have been held insufficient: Where the restraint was only mutual and not extraneous; U. S. v. Greenhut, 50 Fed. 469 (the same conclusion being reached by three other judges in extradition proceedings; In re Corning, 51 Fed. 205; In re Terrell, 51 Fed. 213; In re Greene, 52 Fed. 104); where the agreement did not practically create a monopoly; U. S. v. Nelson, 52 Fed. 646; but in the Addyston Pipe Case, Taft, J., with Harlan and Lurton, JJ., concurring, enjoined merely mutual restraint of a combination as within the act; U. S. v. Steel Co., 85 Fed. 271, 29 C. C. A. 141, 46 L. R. A. 122, reversing id., 78 Fed. 712, and this was unanimously affirmed by the supreme court in Addyston P. & S. Co. v. U. S., 175 U. S. 211, 20 Sup. Ct. 96, 44 L. Ed. 136.

Indictments have been sustained under the act for being a party to a combination in restraint of interstate commerce; U. S. v. Cassidy, 67 Fed. 698; against a corporation engaged in interstate commerce for conspiracy and against its officers, as being themselves engaged in interstate commerce by reason of conducting the corporate business; U. S. v. MacAndrews & Forbes Co., 149 Fed. 823.

The offenses indictable under the act include "restraints of trade aimed at compelling third parties and strangers, involuntarily, not to engage in the course of interstate commerce or trade, except on conditions that the combination imposes"; U. S. v. Naval Stores Co., 172 Fed. 455.

On indictment the original conspiracy to violate the act and the first overt act must have been within the period of the statute of limitations; U. S. v. Kissel, 173 Fed. 823. On indictment for a combination to drive a dealer out of business by refusing to sell him coal unless he would conform to directions about the retail price, the combination must be proved, as in the absence of it such refusal to sell is not unlawful; Union Pac. C. Co. v. U. S., 173 Fed. 737, 97 C. C. A. 578. Injunctions have been granted at the suit of the United States, against a combination to regulate the output and fix prices of coal, where the contract was clearly directed against interstate commerce; U. S. v. Coke Co., 46 Fed. 432, 12 L. R. A. 753 (and such combinations were dissolved; U. S. v. Coal Dealers' Ass'n, 85 Fed. 252; Chesapeake & O. F. Co. v. U. S., 115 Fed. 610, 53 C. C. A. 256); a combination to arrest the operation of railroads engaged in interstate commerce; U. S. v. Elliott, 62 Fed. 801; and one to prevent competition in the purchase of live stock for meats; Swift & Co. v. U. S., 196 U. S. 375, 25 Sup. Ct. 276, 49 L. Ed. 518, affirming U. S. v. Swift & Co., 122 Fed. 529.

State Anti-Trust Laws.—Many of the states have statutes known as anti-trust laws intended to prevent combinations to limit or control prices and production, which like the federal anti-trust law declare such combinations illegal and provide for the punishment of those making them as for a misdemeanor. In states where there are what might be termed general anti-trust laws, there will be found a strong resemblance between them in their scope and terms. In those statutes the offence is described as entering directly or indirectly into any combination pool, trust, conspiracy, agreement, confederation, arrangement, contract or understanding. In all the statutes heretofore passed, either all or some of these words are used to express the transaction which is forbidden and penalized. In some of the states, as, for example, Ohio and Texas, the statute defines a trust and then proceeds to declare any such to be unlawful and to provide for proceedings in quo warranto against any corporation or association which may be guilty of violation of the act and also for the criminal prosecution of violators of the act. The exact language of the Ohio statute on this subject is as follows: "A trust is a combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons, firms, partnerships, corporations or associations of persons, or of any two or more of them, for either any or all of the following purposes: 1. To create or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce. 2. To limit or reduce the production, or increase or reduce the price, of any commodity or merchandise. 3. To prevent competition in manufacturing, making, transportation, sale or purchase of merchandise, produce or commodity. 4. To fix at any standard or figure, whereby its price to the public or consumer shall be in any manner controlled or established, any article or commodity of merchandise, produce or commerce intended for sale, use or consumption in this state. 5. To make or enter into or execute or carry out any contracts, obligations or agreements of any kind or description, by which they shall bind or have bound themselves not to sell, dispose of or transport any article or any commodity or any article of trade, use, merchandise, commerce or consumption below a common standard figure or fixed value, or by which they shall agree in any manner to keep the price of such article, commodity or transportation at a fixed or graduated number, or by which they shall in any manner establish or settle the price of any article, commodity or transportation between themselves and others, so as to directly or indirectly preclude a free and unrestricted competition among themselves, or any purchaser or consumer in the sale or transportation of any such article or commodity, or which they shall agree to pool, combine, or directly or indirectly unite any interests that they may have connected with the sale or transportation of any such article or commodity, that its price might in any way be affected. Every such trust as is defined herein is declared to be unlawful, against public policy and void." And the Texas statute is, with two or three slight and unimportant verbal differences, identical. The identity of the two statutes leads to the almost necessary conclusion that one was copied from the other. Other states have defined the term trust, having apparently the same general ideas in view, although the Mississippi statute includes within its definition "to issue, own or hold the certificates of any stock of any trust or combine," to place the control, to any extent, of business or of the products or earnings, thereof, in the power of trustees by whatever name called." Both of which acts cover transactions legitimately within the true and original meaning of the term trust. This statutory adoption of the term would seem to make necessary the assumption that the word trust is now to be incorporated in the law with a new meaning far removed from its original meaning and entirely disconnected from it except for the casual use of the trust form as an instrument for carrying out the originally large combinations of capital against which the entire body of anti-trust legislation so called is directed. If this new definition of the term is to be accepted it will be found to be applied in statutes in popular use and occasionally by courts to mean general combinations, agreements, understandings, or conspiracies expressed or implied between persons, corporations, firms or associations or one or more of them having for their object restraint of trade, control of prices and of commodities or their production or output, suppression of competition in production, importation, manufacturing, transportation, sale or purchase of commodities, or what was known at common law as engrossing and forestalling.

In some of the states it is to be noted that the anti-trust acts are specifically confined to corporations. In many of them there are specific acts respecting labor organizations, many of them being discriminations in favor of labor organizations as against combinations of capital and in others prohibition of boycotting, blacklisting, and prohibiting employees from being members of labor unions or discriminations against them on that account. See LABOR UNION; LABOR LAWS; BOYCOTTING; BLACKLIST.

The Texas anti-trust act of May 25, 1899, defined monopoly as follows: "A 'monopoly' is any union or combination or consolidation or affiliation of capital, credit, assets, property, trade, custom, skill or acts, or of any other thing or possession, by or between persons, firms, or corporations, or associations of persons, firms or corporations, whereby any one of the purposes or objects mentioned in this act is accomplished or sought to be accomplished, or whereby any one or more of said purposes are promoted or attempted to be executed or carried out, or whereby the several results described herein are reasonably calculated to be produced; and a monopoly as thus defined and contemplated, includes not merely such combinations by and between two or more persons, firms or corporations acting for themselves, but is especially defined and intended to include all aggregations amalgamations, affiliations, consolidations, or incorporations of capital, skill, credit, property, assets, custom, trade, or other valuable thing or possession, whether affected by the ordinary methods of partnership or by actual union under the legal form of a corporation or an incorporated body resulting from the union of one or more distinct firms or corporations, or by the purchase, acquisition or control of shares or certificates of stock or bonds, or other corporate property or franchises, and all corporations or partnerships that have been or may be created by the consolidation or amalgamation of the separate capital, stock, bonds, assets, credit, properties, custom, trade, or corporate or firm belongings of two or more firms or corporations or companies are especially declared to constitute monopolies within the meaning of this act if so created or entered into for any one or more of the purposes named in this act; and a 'monopoly' as defined in this section is hereby declared to be unlawful and against public policy, and any and all persons, firms, corporations, or association of persons engaged therein shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a conspiracy to defraud, and shall be subject to the penalties prescribed in this act."

In addition to the decisions above noted as to combinations or agreements looking to the suppression of competition, many others may be referred to by way of illustration.

The Illinois act of July 1, 1893, which declares contracts in violation of its provisions void but excepts agricultural products or live stock, was held to be class legislation rendering the entire act void as in conflict with the 14th amendment; Connolly v. Sewer Pipe Co., 184 U. S. 540, 22 Sup. Ct. 431, 46 L. Ed. 679, and see, as to the Texas anti-trust law of 1889 Baker v. Grice, 169 U. S. 284, 18 Sup. Ct. 323, 42 L. Ed. 748.

Trusts have been held illegal in the case of: the business of manufacturing and selling preserves; Bishop v. Preservers' Co., 157 Ill. 284, 41 N. E. 765, 48 Am. St. Rep. 317; in the manufacture and sale of distillery products; Distilling & C. F. Co. v. People, 156 Ill. 448, 41 N. E. 188, 47 Am. St. Rep. 200; brewers who combined to lease "all the cooling room capacity for cooling beer" in a town, to prevent competition (and in this case it was held that the parties could not recover for non-performance of the contract); Houck v. Brewing Ass'n, 88 Tex. 184, 30 S. W. 869; a combination to control the price and production of a floating-spring tooth harrow which is held to be an instrument of such general use and utility as to render such a combination a violation of public policy; National H. Co. v. E. Bement & Sons, 21 App. Div. 290, 47 N. Y. Supp. 462.

A similar combination between a corporation and its stockholders, although it did not combine with any other corporation, was void within the Illinois anti-trust act; Ford v. Milk Shippers' Ass'n, 155 Ill. 166, 39 N. E. 651, 27 L. R. A. 298. An agreement for buying and selling coal at prices fixed by an association organized to control them is void so far as it is not executed, but not so as to deny to the seller his remedy for non-payment for coal delivered under the contract; Drake v. Siebold, 81 Hun 178, 30 N. Y. Supp. 697. A contract not to sell beer except to one company, which, in its turn, contracts not to sell beer to any other party in the vicinity, is a combination in violation of the Texas statute; Texas Brewing Co. v. Templeman, 90 Tex. 277, 38 S. W. 27; Fuqua v. Brewing Co., 90 Tex. 298, 38 S. W. 29, 750, 35 L. R. A. 241. Where a masons' and builders' association, by its laws or rules, required all who competed for any contract or job to bring their bids for examination and have six per cent. added to the lowest before it should be submitted in competition, is contrary to public policy; Milwaukee M. & B. Ass'n v. Niezerowski, 95 Wis. 129, 70 N. W. 166, 37 L. R. A. 127, 60 Am. St. Rep. 97.

In Montana, where water rights are of great importance in connection with mining, a contract to control them is void; Ford v. Gregson, 7 Mont. 89, 14 Pac. 659. What are known as "corners" in the necessities of life have been held void as violating the law against the creation of monopolies; State Bk. v. Chapelle, 40 Mich. 447; Wright v. Crabbs, 78 Ind. 487; Sampson v. Shaw, 101 Mass. 145, 3 Am. Rep. 327; and this is true whether the agreement on which they are based is temporary or permanent; id. So also the courts hold void expedients for buying up or cornering particular stocks in the market, by whatever means the result is accomplished; Vanderbilt v. Bennett, 19 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 460; Woodruff v. R. Co., 30 Fed. 91; so of a combination of mill-owners designed to control the output of cotton seed oil; Texas S. O. Co. v. Adoue, 83 Tex. 650,

There are other cases in which the courts have held combinations of this general character valid, as in Central S. R. Co. v. Cushman, 143 Mass. 353, 9 N. E. 629 (shade rollers).

A corporation organized for the purpose of acquiring patents and granting licenses thereunder covering machines relating to a certain art, is not subject to the anti-trust laws of Illinois; Edison E. L. Co. v. Electric Co., 53 Fed. 592, 3 C. C. A. 605; Columbia W. Co. v. Wire Co., 71 Fed. 302; on the ground that patents cannot be subjected to state laws.

A contract to refrain from forming a corporation for the construction of waterworks in a specified city and from carrying on such work in order that the other party to the contract might obtain a corporation for such purpose and conduct the business without competition, is not void as against public policy; Oakes v. Water Co., 143 N. Y. 430, 38 N. E. 461, 26 L. R. A. 544.

A contract by which three out of four persons engaged in manufacturing oleomargarine consolidate, in order to stop sharp competition and agree not to engage separately in the business for five years, is not void; Oakdale Mfg. Co. v. Garst, 18 R. I. 484, 28 Atl. 973, 23 L. R. A. 639, 49 Am. St. Rep. 784.

An agreement to raise the price of lumber fifty cents a thousand feet is not a restraint upon trade unless it involves the absorption of the entire traffic; U. S. v. Nelson, 52 Fed. 646. The by-law of the Associated Press, which provides that no member of it "shall receive or publish the regular news dispatches of any other news association covering a like territory and organized for a like purpose," is not void as unreasonable and in restraint of trade; Matthews v. Associated Press, 136 N. Y. 333, 32 N. E. 981, 32 Am. St. Rep. 741. In California it is held that the law against unlawful restraint of trade is not violated by an agreement by an association of stevedores to control prices, unless it appears that the entire business of the city is controlled by it, and that the prices are unreasonable or the restriction prevents fair competition; Herriman v. Menzies, 115 Cal. 16, 44 Pac. 660, 46 Pac. 730, 35 L. R. A. 318, 56 Am. St. Rep. 81.

In some cases the question of the constitutionality of the state anti-trust acts has been raised and it has been argued that their application in many cases would be a violation of the constitutional rights secured by the 14th amendment of the federal constitution and the due process of law and the equal protection of the laws provision of state constitutions. It has been objected that the enforcement of these laws would result in the deprivation of the liberty of contract secured by the constitutions and that they are not a legitimate exercise of the police power, under which it has been sought to justify them, also that they unjustly discriminate between individuals and classes.

Without attempting to enumerate all the cases which have arisen upon these statutes a few of them may be stated by way of illustration:

Statutes which prohibit combinations or trusts are constitutional and such combinations or agreements are against public policy and void at common law and as a matter of American common law irrespective of whether or not there is statute on the subject; State v. Packing Co., 173 Mo. 356, 73 S. W. 645, 61 L. R. A. 464, 96 Am. St. Rep. 515.

The Ohio statute has been held constitutional; State v. Gage, 72 Ohio 210, 73 N. E. 1078; as was also a Michigan statute; Bingham v. Brands, 119 Mich. 255, 77 N. W. 940; and a Massachusetts statute prohibiting sales upon condition that purchasers of the goods should not deal elsewhere, but allowing the appointment of sole agents; Com. v. Strauss, 191 Mass. 545, 78 N. E. 136, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 968, 6 Ann. Cas. 842. A California statute prohibiting combinations in restraint of trade was held constitutional and not in conflict with the penal code defining criminal conspiracies; People v. Butchers' Protective Ass'n, 12 Cal. App. 471, 107 Pac. 712. Other cases in which the state statutes have been held to be constitutional are State v. Oil Co., 218 Mo. 1, 116 S. W. 902; State v. Oil Co., 95 Miss. 6, 48 South. 300; State v. Oil Co., 111 Minn. 85, 126 N. W. 527; State v. Witherspoon, 115 Tenn. 138, 90 S. W. 852; but a state statute prohibiting combinations of fire insurance companies was held unconstitutional; Niagara F. Ins. Co. v. Cornell, 110 Fed. 816.

The prohibition of monopolies is within the police power of the state legislature; Opinion of the Justices, 193 Mass. 605, 81 N. E. 142; State v. Lumber Co., 24 S. D. 136, 123 N. W. 504, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 804; State v. Drayton, 82 Neb. 254, 117 N. W. 768, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1287, 130 Am. St. Rep. 671.

In most of the cases cited the decisions have rested upon the doctrine that the prohibition of combinations in restraint of trade, and monopolies resulting therefrom, as contained in the state anti-trust laws are valid as exercised under the police powers of the state, or, as is said in one case, the analogous power of the state. Knight & Jillson Co. v. Miller, 172 Ind. 27, 87 N. E. 823, 18 Ann. Cas. 1146.

The statute of Illinois was said not to supersede the common law with respect to combinations in restraint of trade; People v. Ins. Co., 126 Ill. App. 636; and in another state court it was said that the state statutes indicate a policy to extend, rather than to restrict, the common law rules as to restraint of trade and monopolies; Stewart v. Lumber Co., 56 Fla. 570, 48 South. 19, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 649.

It is not a legal defence to an action for goods sold and delivered or service rendered, that the seller or person rendering service is a member of an illegal trust or combination, since the illegality is collateral to the contract of sale and does not taint it; National Distilling Co. v. Importing Co., 86 Wis. 352, 56 N. W. 864, 39 Am. St. Rep. 902; The Charles E. Wisewall, 74 Fed. 802; and it is no defense to an action by a milkshippers' association for goods sold that it is an illegal corporation under the Illinois act of June 11, 1891; Chicago M. S. Ass'n v. Ford, 46 Ill. App. 576.

It is no defense to an action for compensation due from the federal government for mail service over a leased line that the leases were void because operated by a combination intended to prevent competition; Southern Pac. Co. v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cl. 77.

A purchaser of river craft cannot invoke the Sherman act as a defense to an action for the purchase money because of his covenant to maintain rates, which was not declared by the contract to enter into the consideration of the sale, especially when the rates applied primarily to domestic and not to interstate business; Cincinnati, P., B. S., & P. P. Co. v. Bay, 200 U. S. 179, 26 Sup. Ct. 208, 50 L. Ed. 428.

Where a retailer bought Ajello pianos and sold them at cost, in order to attract customers to his store, it was held that the maker had no cause of action; [1898] 1 Ch. 274. See 15 Harv. L. Rev. 427, on "Competition and the Law," by Prof. Bruce Wyman.

RESTRAINT ON ALIENATION. A provision in a settlement to the special use of a married woman without power of alienation, which is valid as an exception to the general rule against any restraint on alienation. It is in force only during marriage; Snell, Eq. 290; 11 Ch. D. 645.

A restriction, by way of devise over, against all alienation during a limited time upon an estate in fee, is void; Potter v. Couch, 141 U. S. 296, 11 Sup. Ct. 1005, 35 L. Ed. 721. See PERPETUITY; SPENDTHRIFT TRUST; MARRIED WOMAN.

RESTRICTIVE INDORSEMENT. See INDORSEMENT.

RESTS. A term used in computing interest especially on mortgages and in trust accounts. It consists in striking a balance of the account, at the end of any fixed period, upon which interest is allowed, thus giving the benefit of compound interest. 3 Pars. Contr. § 151.

RESULTING TRUST. A trust raised by implication or construction of law, and presumed to exist from the supposed intention of the parties and the nature of the transaction.

All trusts created by implication or construction of law are often included under the general term implied trusts; but these are commonly distinguished into implied or resulting and constructive trusts; resulting or presumptive trusts being those which are implied or presumed from the supposed intention of the parties and the nature of the transaction; constructive trusts, such as are raised independently of any such intention, and which are forced on the conscience of the trustee by equitable construction and the operation of law. Story, Eq. Jur. § 1095; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 510; 2 id. 198; 3 Swanst 585; Ross v. Hegeman, 2 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 373; Thomas v. Walker, 6 Humphr. (Tenn.) 93.

Where, upon a purchase of property, the conveyance of the legal estate is taken in the name of one person, while the consideration is paid by another, the parties being strangers to each other, a resulting or presumptive trust immediately arises, and the person named in the conveyance will be a trustee for the party from whom the consideration proceeds; Baker v. Vining, 30 Me. 126, 50 Am. Dec. 617; Livermore v. Aldrich, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 435; Partridge v. Havens, 10 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 618; Strimpfer v. Roberts, 18 Pa. 283, 57 Am. Dec. 606; Hellman v. Messmer, 75 Cal. 166, 16 Pac. 766; Carter v. Challen, 83 Ala. 135, 3 South. 313; Price v. Kane, 112 Mo. 412, 20 S. W. 609; and if he conveys the property to the cestui que trust, such conveyance is good as against the creditors of the trustee; Garner v. Bank, 151 U. S. 420, 14 Sup. Ct. 390, 38 L. Ed. 218.

Resulting trusts are raised by the law from the presumed intention of the parties, and the natural equity that one who furnishes the means for the acquisition of property should enjoy its benefits. But it cannot arise where an obligation exists on his part, legal or moral, to provide for the grantee, as in the case of a husband for his wife, or a father for his child, as under such circumstance the relation to the party is of itself sufficient evidence to rebut the presumption of a resulting trust, for in such cases arises the contrary presumption of an advancement for the grantee's benefit; Jackson v. Jackson, 91 U. S. 125, 23 L. Ed. 258.

Where land is bought by a husband with the separate property of a married woman, and the title is taken in his name, a trust results to her, in the absence of any agreement to the contrary; Ross v. Hendrix, 110

N. C. 403, 15 S. E. 4; Lloyd v. Woods, 176 Pa. 67, 34 Atl. 926. But where a wife gives to her husband money from her father's estate, without any agreement for its investment, or that he should be accountable to her for it, and he subsequently informed her that he has invested it in land for her, when, in fact, he has not done so, but has taken the title in his own name, no resulting trust therein was created in favor of the wife; Nashville Trust Co. v. Lannom's Heirs (Tenn.) 36 S. W. 977.

To establish a resulting trust in one person of land purchased in the name of another, to whom title is conveyed, it is essential that the party setting up the trust shall have paid, or become bound for the purchase-money on his own account, and as part of the original transaction of purchase; Harvey v. Pennypacker, 4 Del. Ch. 445; payment by way of loan to the nominal purchaser raises no resulting trust; id. It is a latent equity, which cannot prejudice a bona fide holder for value; Gray v. Corbit, 4 Del. Ch. 135.

The fact that a conveyance is voluntary, especially when accompanied by other circumstances indicative of such an intention, it is said, may raise a resulting trust. See 2 Vern. 473; Philbrook v. Delano, 29 Me. 410; Souverbye v. Arden, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 240.

Where a voluntary; 1 Atk. 188; disposition of property by deed; Stevens v. Ely, 16 N. C. 493; or will is made to a person as trustee, and the trust is not declared at all; 3 Sim. 538; or is ineffectually declared; 1 Myl. & C. 286; Ralston v. Telfair, 17 N. C. 255; or does not extend to the whole interest given to the trustee; King v. Mitchell, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 326, 8 L. Ed. 932; Benning v. Benning's Ex'r, 14 B. Monr. (Ky.) 585; 3 H. L. C. 492; or it fails either wholly or in part by lapse or otherwise; Dashiell v. Attorney General, 5 Harr. & J. (Md.) 392, 9 Am. Dec. 572; Hawley v. James, 5 Paige (N. Y.) 318; Kerlin v. Campbell, 15 Pa. 500; 10 Hare 204; the interest so undisposed of will be held by the trustee, not for his own benefit, but as a resulting trust for the donor himself, or for his heir at law or next of kin, according to the nature of the estate.

A resulting trust must arise at the time the title is taken. No subsequent oral agreement or payment will create it; Smith v. Turley, 32 W. Va. 14, 9 S. E. 46; McDevitt v. Frantz, 85 Va. 740, 8 S. E. 642; Fessenden v. Taft, 65 N. H. 39, 17 Atl. 713; Ducie v. Ford, 138 U. S. 587, 11 Sup. Ct. 417, 34 L. Ed. 1091. Where a father was induced to execute an absolute deed of his land to one of his children, by fraudulent representations that the grantee would hold it in trust for the other children, and subsequently without fraud executed another deed to the same grantee for the same land, the latter deed passed the title free from any trust in favor of the other children, as the fraud in procuring the first deed created a resulting trust in favor of the father, the express trust being void, as not being in writing, and the second deed carried the father's equitable interest; Thompson v. Marley, 102 Mich. 476, 60 N. W. 976.

The property may be personal or real; Union Bank v. Baker, 8 Humphr. (Tenn.) 447; Leiper v. Hoffman, 26 Miss. 615; 2 Beav. 454. Parol evidence is admissible to prove a resulting trust in land; Myers v. Jackson, 135 Ind. 136, 34 N. E. 810; Seiler v. Mohn, 37 W. Va. 507, 16 S. E. 496; Howard v. Howard, 52 Kan. 469, 34 Pac. 1114. One who buys shares of stock with his own money does not become trustee for another, though he tells him that the purchase is made for his benefit and he expects to be reimbursed by him; 18 U. S. App. 293. Resulting trusts cannot be declared upon doubtful evidence, nor upon a mere preponderance of evidence. There should be no room for a reasonable doubt as to the facts relied upon to establish the trust; Adams v. Burns, 96 Mo. 361, 10 S. W. 26; Murphy v. Hanscome, 76 Ia. 192, 40 N. W. 717; Henslee v. Henslee, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 367, 24 S. W. 321.

The statute of frauds has no application to a trust resulting from the purchase of property with funds of another; Reynolds v. Sumner, 126 Ill. 58, 18 N. E. 334, 1 L. R. A. 327, 9 Am. St. Rep. 523; Barnett v. Vincent, 69 Tex. 685, 7 S. W. 525, 5 Am. St. Rep. 98.

RESULTING USE. A use raised by equity for the benefit of a feoffor who has made a voluntary conveyance to uses without any declaration of the use. 2 Washb. R. P. 100.

The doctrine, at first limited to the case of an apparently voluntary conveyance with no express declaration, became so extended that a conveyance of the legal estate ceased to imply an intention that the feoffee should enjoy the beneficial interest therein; and if no intent to the contrary was expressed, and no consideration proved or implied, the use always resulted to the feoffor; 2 Washb. R. P. 100. And if part only of the use was expressed, the balance resulted to the feoffor; 2 Atk. 150; 2 Rolle, Abr. 781; Co. Litt. 23 a. And, under the statute, where a use has been limited by deed and expires, or cannot vest, it results back to the one who declared it; Reformed Dutch Church v. Veeder, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 494; Sewall v. Cargill, 15 Me. 414; Ashhurst v. Given, 5 W. & S. (Pa.) 323. And see Cro. Jac. 200; Tudor, Lead. Cas. Eq. 258; 2 Washb. R. P. 132.

RESUMMONS. A second summons calling upon a person to answer an action where the first summons is defeated. 2 Chitty, Arch. Pr. 1347.

RESUMPTION. The taking again by the crown of land or tenements, which, on false suggestion, had been granted by letters patent. Whart. Dict.

RETAIL. To sell by small parcels, and not in the gross. Com. v. Kimball, 7 Metc. (Mass.) 308.

RETAILER OF MERCHANDISE. One who deals in merchandise by selling it in smaller quantities than he buys,—generally with a view to profit. U. S. v. Mickle, 1 Cra. C. C. 268, Fed. Cas. No. 15,763.

RETAIN. To continue to hold; to keep in possession. To keep is a synonym for retain. Richardson v. Seevers' Adm'r, 84 Va. 269, 4 S. E. 712.

In Practice. To engage the services of an attorney or counsellor to manage a cause. See RETAINER.

RETAINER. The act of withholding what one has in one's own hands, by virtue of some right. See EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

"If an executor has as much goods in his hands as his own debt amounts to, the property of those goods is altered and rests in himself; that is, he has them as his own proper goods in satisfaction of his debt and not as executor." Plowden 184. See O. W. Holmes, Early Engl. Executors in 9 Harv. L. Rev. 42; 3 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. L. H. 737. This doctrine has lately been applied where the debt due by an insolvent testator to his executor greatly exceeded the value of the assets, and it was held that the executor was entitled to retain them in specie in payment of his debt; [1898] 1 Q. B. 282, discussing 9 Mod. 268; but not if he is an undischarged bankrupt; [1911] 1 K. B. 327.

In Practice. The act of a client by which he engages an attorney or counsellor to manage a cause, either by prosecuting it, when he is plaintiff, or defending it, when he is defendant.

The retaining fee.

A general retainer merely gives a right to expect professional service when requested. It binds the person retained not to take a fee from another against his retainer; but to do nothing except what he is asked to do, and for this he is to be distinctly paid; Rhode Island Exch. Bk. v. Hawkins, 6 R. I. 206.

In English practice a much more formal retainer is usually required than in America. Thus it is said by Chitty, 3 Pr. 116, note m, that, although it is not indispensable that the retainer should be in writing, unless required by the other side, it is very expedient. It is therefore recommended, particularly when the client is a stranger, to require from him a written retainer, signed by himself; and, in order to avoid the insinuation that it was obtained by contrivance, it should be witnessed by one or more respectable persons. When there are several plaintiffs, it should be signed by all, and not by one for himself and the others, especially if they are trustees or assignees of a bankrupt or insolvent. The retainer should also state whether it be given for a general or a qualified authority. See Osborn v. Bank, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 738, 830, 6 L. Ed. 204; Jackson v. Stewart, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 34; Henck v. Todhunter, 7 Harr. & J. (Md.) 275, 16 Am. Dec. 300; Hardin v. Ho-yo-po-nubby's Lessee, 27 Miss. 567. The existence of the relation of solicitor and client between parties may be inferred from their acts, although the solicitor has not received any express retainer. [1891] 1 Ch. 337.

The effect of a retainer to prosecute or defend a suit is to confer on the attorney all the powers exercised by the forms and usages of the courts in which the suit is pending; Reil v. Hutchinson, 2 McCord (S. C.) 409; Lewis v. Sumner, 13 Metc. (Mass.) 269. He may receive payment; Langdon v. Potter, 13 Mass. 320; Brackett v. Norton, 4 Conn. 517, 10 Am. Dec. 179; Ducett v. Cunningham, 39 Me. 386; may bring a second suit after being nonsuited in the first for want of formal proof; Scott v. Elmendorf, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 315; may sue a writ of error on the judgment; Grosvenor v. Danforth, 16 Mass. 74; may discontinue the suit; Gaillard v. Smart, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 385; may restore an action after a nol. pros.; Reinholdt v. Alberti, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 469; may claim an appeal, and bind his client in his name for the prosecution of it; Adams v. Robinson, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 462; may submit the suit to arbitration; Buckland v. Conway, 16 Mass. 396; McElreath v. Middleton, 89 Ga. 83, 14 S. E. 906; may sue out an alias execution; Cheever v. Mirrick, 2 N. H. 376; may receive livery of seisin of land taken by an extent; Pratt v. Putnam, 13 Mass. 363; may waive objections to evidence, and enter into stipulation for the admission of facts or conduct of the trial; Alton v. Gilman, 2 N. H. 520; and for release of bail; Hughes v. Hollingsworth, 5 N. C. 146; may waive the right of appeal, review, notice, and the like, and confess judgment; Pike v. Emerson, 5 N. H. 393, 22 Am. Dec. 468; may agree to the entry of a judgment; Devenbaugh v. Nifer, 3 Ind. App. 379, 29 N. E. 923; In re Maxwell, 66 Hun 151, 21 N. Y. Supp. 209; may waive a jury trial; Stevenson v. Felton, 99 N. C. 58, 5 S. E. 399. But he has no authority to execute a discharge of a debtor except upon the actual payment of the full amount of the debt; 8 Dowl. 656; Derwort v. Loomer, 21 Conn. 245; Walker v. Scott, 13 Ark. 644; Watt v. Brookover, 35 W. Va. 323, 13 S. E. 1007, 29 Am. St. Rep. 811; nor to satisfy a judgment for a less sum than is due; Peters v. Lawson, 66 Tex. 336, 17 S. W. 734; and that in money only; Nolan v. Jackson, 16 Ill. 272; Everett v. Sherfey, 1 Ia. 360; nor to release sureties; Givens v. Briscoe, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 532; Varnum v. Bellamy, 4 McLean 84, Fed. Cas. No. 16,886; nor to enter a retraxit; Lambert v. Sandford, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 137, 18 Am. Dec. 149; nor to act for the legal representatives of his deceased client; Wood v. Hopkins, 3 N. J. L. 689; and ordinarily one retained to collect a debt has no right to compromise it; Martin v. Cap. Ins. Co., 85 Ia. 643, 52 N. W. 534; Willard v. Gas Fixture Co., 47 Mo. App. 1; Brockley v. Brockley, 122 Pa. 1, 15 Atl. 646. An attorney's authority to appear for his client ceases after the entry of final judgment, except that he may take the necessary steps to collect the judgment; Cruikshank v. Goodwin, 66 Hun 626, 20 N. Y. Supp. 757.

There is an implied contract on the part of an attorney who has been retained, that he will use due diligence in the course of legal proceedings; but it is not an undertaking to recover a judgment; Hall v. Kerr, Wright (Ohio) 446. See 7 C. & P. 289; Babbitt v. Bumpus, 73 Mich. 331. An attorney is bound to act with the most scrupulous honor; he ought to disclose to his client if he has any adverse retainer which may affect his judgment or his client's interest; but the concealment of the fact does not necessarily imply fraud; Williams v. Reed, 3 Mas. 405, Fed. Cas. No. 17,733. See Weeks, Att. at Law.

RETAINING A CAUSE. Under the English Judicature Acts of 1873 and 1875, a cause brought in a wrong division of the High Court of Justice may be retained therein, at the discretion of the court or a judge.

RETAINING FEE. A fee given to counsel on being consulted, in order to insure his future services. See RETAINER.

RETAKING. The taking one's goods, wife, child, etc., from another, who without right has taken possession thereof. See RECAPTION; RESCUE.

RETALIATION. See LEX TALIONIS.

RETENEMENTUM. Detaining, withholding, or keeping back. Cowell.

RETIRE. As applied to bills of exchange, this word is ambiguous. It is commonly used of an indorser who takes up a bill by handing the amount to a transferee, after which the indorser holds the instrument with all his remedies intact. But it is sometimes used of an acceptor, by whom, when a bill is taken up or retired at maturity, it is in effect paid, and all the remedies on it extinguished; Byles, Bills, 93, 195, 263, 296; Dan. Neg. Inst. 12.

RETIRING BOARD. In case an army officer has become physically incapacitated, the secretary of war, under the direction of the president, may assemble a retiring board of not more than nine nor less than five officers; two-fifths shall be selected from the Medical Corps. The members, except those of the Medical Corps, shall be seniors in rank to the person whose disability is enquired of. R. S. § 1246.

RETORNA BREVIVM. In Old English Law. The return of writs by sheriffs and bailiffs, which is only a certificate delivered to the court on the day of return, of that which he hath done touching the execution of their writ directed to him: this must be indorsed on back of writ by officer; 2 Lilly, Abr. 476. Each term has return days, fixed, as early as 51 Hen. III., at intervals of about a week, on which all original writs are returnable. The first return day is regularly the first day in the term; but there are three days' grace. 3 Bla. Com. 278.

RETORNO HABENDO. A writ issued to compel a party to return property to the party to whom it has been adjudged to belong, in an action of replevin. See DE RETORNO HABENDO REPLEVIN.

RETORTION, RETORSION. An act by which a government imposes the same hard treatment on the citizens or subjects of a state that the latter has used towards the citizens or subjects of the former, for the purpose of obtaining the removal of obnoxious measures. Vattel, liv. 2, c. 18, § 341. An act of retaliation in kind when a nation has failed in courtesy or friendship. Instances of retortion usually arise in discriminating duties or restrictions upon commercial intercourse; Snow, Int. Law 78. It is equivalent to retaliation and may be either amicable or vindictive. The former, retorsion de droit, is a remedy for a departure from any international courtesy, done in an unfriendly, but not an illegal manner. The latter, retorsio facti, implies the infliction of the same amount of evil on an aggressive state that it has inflicted on the state aggrieved; Risley, Law of War 57. This is a purely belligerent act; id.

The term is more properly applied to retaliation for unfriendly and inequitable acts on the part of foreign states and should not be extended to embrace illegal acts or international delinquencies. 2 Opp. §§ 29-33.

RETOUR SANS PROTÉT. A request or direction by the drawer of a bill of exchange, that in case the bill should not be honored by the drawee, it may be returned without protest, by writing the words "retour sans protét" or "sans pais." Should such request be made, it is said that a protest as against the drawer, and perhaps as against the indorsers, is unnecessary; Byles, Bills, 15th ed. 216.

RETRACT (Lat. re, back, traho, to draw). To withdraw a proposition or offer before it has been accepted. See LETTER; OFFER.

After pleading guilty, a defendant will, in certain cases where he has entered that plea by mistake or in consequence of some error, be allowed to retract it. But where a prisoner pleaded guilty to a charge of larceny, and sentence has been passed upon him, he will not be allowed to retract his plea and plead not guilty; 9 C. & P. 346; Dig. 12. 4. 5.

RETRAXIT (Lat. he has withdrawn). In Practice. The act by which a plaintiff withdraws his suit. It is so called from the fact that this was the principal word used when the law entries were in Latin.

Voluntary renunciation by plaintiff in open court of his suit and cause of action. Tate v. Bank, 96 Va. 765, 32 S. E. 476. At common law it was made in open court; Rincon W. & P. Co. v. Water Co., 115 Fed. 543.

A retraxit differs from a nonsuit—the former being the act of the plaintiff himself, for it cannot even be entered by attorney; 8 Co. 58; Lowry v. McMillan, 8 Pa. 157, 163, 49 Am. Dec. 501; Barnard v. Daggett, 68 Ind. 305; Thomason v. Odum, 31 Ala. 108, 68 Am. Dec. 159; and it must be after declaration filed; Lowry v. McMillan, 8 Pa. 163, 49 Am. Dec. 501; while the latter occurs in consequence of the neglect merely of the plaintiff. A retraxit also differs from a nolle prosequi. The effect of a retraxit is to end the litigation; Waldron v. Angleman, 71 N. J. L. 166; Bac. Abr. Nonsuit (A); Thomason v. Odum, 31 Ala. 108, 68 Am. Dec. 159; U. S. v. Parker, 120 U. S. 95, 7 Sup. Ct. 454, 30 L. Ed. 601; nolle prosequi is not a bar even in a criminal prosecution; Com. v. Wheeler, 2 Mass. 172. See Com. Dig. Pleader (X 2).

RETRIBUTION. That which is given to another to recompense him for what has been received from him: as, a rent for the hire of a house.

A salary paid to a person for his services.

The distribution of rewards and punishments.

RETROACTIVE. See RETROSPECTIVE.

RETROCESSION. In Civil Law. When the assignee of heritable rights conveys his rights back to the cedent, it is called a retrocession. Erskine, Inst. 3. 5. 1.

RETROSPECTIVE. Looking backward. Having reference to a state of things existing before the act in question.

This word is usually applied to those acts of the legislature which are made to operate upon some subject, contract, or crime which existed before the passage of the acts; and they are therefore called retrospective laws. These laws are generally unjust, and are to a certain extent forbidden by that article in the constitution of the United States which prohibits the passage of ex post facto laws, or laws impairing the obligation of contracts. See EX POST FACTO LAW; IMPAIRING THE OBLIGATION OF CONTRACTS; CONSTITUTION OF UNITED STATES. They are invalid in that respect only so far as they contravene the 5th amendment; Plummer v. R. Co., 152 Fed. 210.

The 14th amendment contains no prohibition of a retrospective legislation as such, and therefore, now, as before, the mere fact that a statute is retrospective in its operation does not make it repugnant to the federal constitution, the only limitation is that it shall not be ex post facto.

A general law for the punishment of offences, which endeavors to reach, by its retrospective operation, acts previously committed, as well as to prescribe a rule of conduct for the citizen in future, is void in as far as it is retrospective; Jaehne v. New York, 128 U. S. 189, 9 Sup. Ct. 70, 32 L. Ed.

A statute of limitations which provides that in all civil suits in which the cause of action shall have arisen within the state, the defendant, who shall have become a non-resident of the state after such cause of action shall have arisen, shall not have the benefit of any statute of this state for the limitation of actions during the period of such residence without the state, if retrospective in its effect, is constitutional and applies to the trial of issues pending when the act was passed; Bates v. Cullum, 177 Pa. 633, 35 Atl. 861, 34 L. R. A. 440, 55 Am. St. Rep. 753.

Legislation which concerns merely modes of procedure, applies to pending suits whether the act so specify or not; Lane v. White, 140 Pa. 99, 21 Atl. 437.

A statutory amendment allowing, as of right, but one new trial in ejectment is not unconstitutional as retrospective legislation, when applied to a pending action in which there has been one new trial long after the date of the act; Campbell v. Min. Co., 83 Fed. 643, 27 C. C. A. 646.

In the absence of constitutional prohibition against it, retrospective legislation is usually valid if not subject to the objection that it impairs vested rights. Where there is a constitutional prohibition, much legislation otherwise valid will fail; as, for example, the deed of a person of unsound mind could not in such case be ratified; Routson v. Wolf, 35 Mo. 174. Retrospective statutes which have been held valid are: One validating a married woman's power of attorney; Dentzel v. Waldie, 30 Cal. 138; authorizing the insertion in a deed of the name of a married woman which was omitted by mistake; Goshorn v. Purcell, 11 Ohio St. 641; or validating an unauthorized conveyance of a married woman of her separate estate; Appeal of Jones, 57 Pa. 369; prohibiting the defence to a suit on a contract that it was made on Sunday, unless the defendant restores whatever of value he received under the contract; Berry v. Clary, 77 Me. 482, 1 Atl. 360; rendering a bond valid which when executed was invalid because not bearing the proper stamp; State v. Norwood, 12 Md. 195; curing a defective conveyance; Newman v. Samuels, 17 Ia. 528; confirming a conveyance defectively executed; Dulany's Lessee v. Tilghman, 6 Gill & J. (Md.) 461; remedying irregularities in legal procedure and assessments of property for taxation; White v. U. S., 191 U. S. 552, 24 Sup. Ct. 171, 48 L. Ed. 295; giving validity to past deeds which were before ineffectual; McFaddin v. Evans-Snyder-Buel Co., 185 U. S. 505, 22 Sup. Ct. 758, 46 L. Ed. 1012; validating a defective power of attorney; Randall v. Kreiger, 23 Wall. (U. S.) 137, 23 L. Ed. 124; changing the law by providing that the rents and profits of a married woman's estate shall not be subject to her husband's debts and contracts even as against a previous judgment against the husband; Baker's Ex'rs v. Kilgore, 145 U. S. 487, 12 Sup. Ct. 943, 36 L. Ed. 786; a constitutional provision that property should not be subject to execution upon judgments theretofore rendered for acts done during the "war of the rebellion"; Freeland v. Williams, 131 U. S. 405, 9 Sup. Ct. 763, 33 L. Ed. 193; taking away a statutory right to sue a city for damages by a mob, though a claim under such statute had been converted into a judgment; Louisiana v. New Orleans, 109 U. S. 285, 3 Sup. Ct. 211, 27 L. Ed. 936; giving effect to a mortgage which was invalid under the provisions of prior laws; Gross v. Mortgage Co., 108 U. S. 477, 2 Sup. Ct. 940, 27 L. Ed. 795; validating bonds of the territory of Arizona; Utter v. Franklin, 172 U. S. 416, 19 Sup. Ct. 183, 43 L. Ed. 498, followed in West Side Belt R. Co. v. Construction Co., 219 U. S. 92, 31 Sup. Ct. 196, 55 L. Ed. 107, where a state act permitting foreign corporations to register and thereafter to sue on contracts made before registration was held valid.

The naked legal title to land is not a vested interest in the sense of a property right which the courts will protect from retrospective legislation intended to divest it; Diamond State I. Co. v. Husbands, 8 Del. Ch. 205, 68 Atl. 240, where the land involved was the property of a dissolved corporation.

The legislature has power to pass curative acts which do not deprive one of vested rights; Downs v. Blount, 170 Fed. 15, 95 C. C. A. 289, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1076, as to cure a defective conveyance by retroactive legislation; Newman v. Samuels, 17 Ia. 528; or to confirm conveyances defectively executed; Dulany's Lessee v. Tilghman, 6 Gill & J. (Md.) 461.

The right to pass retrospective laws, with the exceptions above mentioned, exists in the several states, according to their own constitutions, and they become obligatory if not prohibited by the latter; Hess v. Werts, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 364; Dash v. Van Kleeck, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 477, 5 Am. Dec. 291. See Satterlee v. Matthewson, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 414, 7 L. Ed. 458; Stein v. Sav. Ass'n, 18 Ind. 237, 81 Am. Dec. 353.

An instance may be found in the laws of Connecticut. In 1795 the legislature passed a resolve setting aside a decree of a court of probate disapproving of a will, and granted a new hearing: it was held that the resolve, not being against any constitutional principle in that state, was valid; Calder v. Bull, 3 Dall. (U. S.) 386, 1 L. Ed. 648. And in Pennsylvania a judgment was opened by the act of April 1, 1837, which was held to be constitutional; Braddee v. Brownfield, 2 W. & S. (Pa.) 271.

Under a New York statute which provides that no person should practice medicine in the state who had ever been convicted of a felony, it was held that the statute applied to persons convicted before its passage; People v. Hawker, 152 N. Y. 234, 46 N. E. 607.

Laws should never be considered as applying to cases which arose previously to their passage, unless the legislature have clearly declared such to be their intention; State v. Bermudez, 12 La. 352. See Dash v. Van Kleeck, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 477, 5 Am. Dec. 291; 1 Kent 455; Code 1. 14. 7; Story, Const. § 1393; 3 C. B. 551; Eakin v. Raub, 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 330.

Nothing but clear and express words will give such effect to it; 4 H. & N. 76; White v. U. S., 191 U. S. 545, 24 Sup. Ct. 171, 48 L. Ed. 295; so of criminal acts; [1891] 2 Q. B. 148.

There is a strong presumption that an act was not meant to act retrospectively; U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. U. S., 209 U. S. 306, 28 Sup. Ct. 537, 52 L. Ed. 804.

Rules of court affecting procedure only apply to pending causes; Laukhuff's Estate, 39 Pa. Super. Ct. 117.

RETURN. An official statement by an officer of what he has done in obedience to a command from a superior authority, or why he has done nothing, whichever is required. State v. Bulkeley, 61 Conn. 287, 23 Atl. 186, 14 L. R. A. 657.

Persons who are beyond the sea are exempted from the operation of the statute of limitations of some states, till after a certain time has elapsed after their returning. See Hall v. Little, 14 Mass. 203; Ruggles v. Keeler, 3 Johns. 263, 3 Am. Dec. 482; 2 W. Bla. 723; 3 Litt. 48; Pancoast's Lessee v. Addison, 1 Harr. & J. (Md.) 350, 2 Am. Dec. 520.

When a member of parliament has been elected to represent a certain constituency, he is said to be returned, in reference to the return of the writ directing the proper officer to hold the election. In this country, election returns are the statements or reports of the balloting at an election, by the proper officers.

To come or go back to the same place; to revisit. First Soc. of Waterbury v. Platt, 12 Conn. 186.

RETURN-DAY. A day appointed by law when all writs are to be returned which have issued since the preceding return-day. The sheriff is, in general, not required to return his writ until the return-day. After that period he may be ruled to make a return. See RULE DAY; CRASTINUM; TERM.

RETURN OF PREMIUM. A repayment of a part or the whole of the premium paid. Policies of insurance, especially those on marine risks, not unfrequently contain stipulations for a return of the whole or a part of the premium in certain contingencies; 2 Phill. Ins. xxii. sect. xi.; but in the absence of any such stipulation, in a case free of fraud on the part of the assured, if the risk does not commence to run, he is entitled to a return of it, if paid, or an exoneration from his liability to pay it, subject to deduction settled by stipulation or usage; and so, pro rata, if only a part of the insured subject is put at risk; 2 Phill. Ins. ch. xxii. sect. i.; and so an abatement of the excess of marine interest over the legal rate is made in hypothecation of ship or cargo in like case; id. sect. vii.

RETURN OF WRITS. A short account, in writing, made by the sheriff, or other ministerial officer, of the manner in which he has executed a writ. Steph. Pl. 24.

It is the duty of such officer to return all writs on the return-day: on his neglecting to do so, a rule may be obtained on him to return the writ, and if he do not obey the rule he may be attached for contempt. See 19 Com. Dig. Return.

A return of service by a state sheriff may be questioned upon removal to a federal court; the latter court may determine upon affidavits whether the service conferred jurisdiction; Mechanical Appliance Co. v. Castleman, 215 U. S. 437, 30 Sup. Ct. 125, 54 L. Ed. 272.

A marshal's return of service is conclusive on the parties, but where it does not show jurisdictional facts it can be set aside by a rule; Jackson v. Amusement Co., 131 Fed. 134.

While the physical acts of the sheriff could not be controverted, the legal conclusion could be; the proper method is by a rule to quash; Higham v. Travelers' Ass'n, 183 Fed. 846.

While it is true that a sheriff's return cannot be contradicted, yet a court may inquire into the facts where the return is not full or explicit, and this may be done by a rule; Park Bros. & Co. v. Boiler Works, 204 Pa. 453, 54 Atl. 334.

That a return cannot be controverted, see Newcomb v. R. Co., 182 Mo. 687, 81 S. W. 1069.

RETURNUM AVERIORUM. A judicial writ, similar to the retorno habendo. Cowell.

RETURNUM IRREPLEGIABILE. A judicial writ addressed to the sheriff for the final restitution or return of cattle to the owner when unjustly taken or distrained, and so found by verdict; it is granted after a nonsuit in a second deliverance. Reg. Judic. 27.

REUS (Lat.). In Civil Law. A party to a suit, whether plaintiff or defendant. Reus est qui cum altero litem contestatam habet, sive id egit, sive cum eo actum est.

A party to a contract. Reus credendi is he to whom something is due, by whatever title it may be: reus debendi is he who owes, for whatever cause. Pothier, Pand. lib. 50. Reus stipulandi, a party to a stipulation; reus promittendi, the debtor or obligor to the stipulation. Where there were several creditors or several debtors jointly entitled to, or jointly liable under, a stipulation they were respectively called correi.

See MENS REA; INTENT.

REVE. The bailiff of a franchise or manor; an officer in parishes within forests who marks the commonable cattle. Cowell.

REVELAND. In Domesday Book we find land put down as thane-lands, which were afterwards converted into revelands, i. e. such lands as, having reverted to the king upon death of his thane, who had it for life, were not since granted out to any by the king, but vested in charge upon account of the reve or bailiff of the manor. Spelm. Feuds, c. 24. It seems pretty clear that reeveland is, properly, land attributed to the sheriff while exercising his duty, in fact, a kind of office-endowment. Vinogradoff, English Society 372. Reveland, according to Maitl. Domesd. Book 169, is obscure.

REVELS. Sports of dancing, masking, etc., formerly used in princes' courts, the inns of court, and noblemen's houses, commonly performed by night; there was an officer to order and supervise them, who was entitled the "master of the revels." Cowell.

REVENDECATION. In Civil Law. An action by which a man demands a thing of which he claims to be owner. It applies to immovables as well as movables, to corporeal or incorporeal things. Merlin, Répert.

By the civil law, he who has sold goods for cash or on credit may demand them back from the purchaser if the purchase-money is not paid according to contract. The action of revendication is used for this purpose. See an attempt to introduce the principle of revendication into our law; 2 Hall, Law Journ. 181.

Revendication, in another sense, corresponds very nearly to the stoppage in transitu of the common law. It is used in that sense in the Code de Commerce, art. 577. Revendication, says that article, can take place only when the goods sold are on the way to their place of destination, whether by land or water, and before they have been received into the warehouse of the insolvent (failli) or that of his factor or agent authorized to sell them on account of the insolvent. See Dig. 14. 4. 15; 18. 1. 19. 53; 19. 1. 11.

REVENUE. The income of the government arising from taxation, duties, and the like; and, according to some correct lawyers, under the idea of revenue is also included the proceeds of the sale of stocks, lands, and other property owned by the government. Story, Const. § 877.

Internal revenue. The revenue raised by the United States from all sources of taxation except duties on imports. By revenue is also understood the income of private individuals and corporations.

See TAXATION.

A bill establishing rates of postage is not a bill for raising revenue, within the meaning of the constitution; but post-office laws may be revenue laws without being laws for raising revenue; U. S. v. James, 13 Blatchf. 207, Fed. Cas. No. 15,464. See Davenport City v. Dows, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 390, 21 L. Ed. 96; Warner v. Fowler, 4 Blatchf. 311, Fed. Cas. No. 17,182.

REVENUE LAWS. Laws made for the direct and avowed purpose of creating and securing revenue or public funds for the service of the government. U. S. v. Mayo, 1 Gall. 398, Fed. Cas. No. 15,755. See U. S. v. Hill, 123 U. S. 686, 8 Sup. Ct. 303, 31 L. Ed. 275.

No country ever takes notice of the revenue laws of another; 1 Cowp. 343, per Lord Mansfield; 3 D. & R. 190.

Under the constitution of the United States revenue bills must originate in the house of representatives; Const. art. 1, § 7. See MONEY BILLS.

REVENUE SIDE OF THE EXCHEQUER. That jurisdiction of the court of exchequer, or of the exchequer division of the high court of justice, by which it ascertains and enforces the proprietary rights of the crown against the subjects of the realm. The practice in revenue cases is not affected by the orders and rules under the Judicature Act of 1875.

REVERSAL. In International Law. A declaration by which a sovereign promises that he will observe a certain order, or certain conditions, which have been once established, notwithstanding any changes that might otherwise cause a deviation therefrom; as, for example, when the French court consented for the first time, in 1745, to grant to Elizabeth, the Czarina of Russia, the title of empress, it exacted as a reversal a declaration purporting that the assumption of the title of an imperial government by Russia should not derogate from the rank which France had held towards her.

Letters by which a sovereign declares that by a particular act of his he does not mean to prejudice a third power. Of this we have an example in history: formerly the emperor of Germany, whose coronation, according to the golden bull, ought to have been solemnized at Aix-la-Chapelle, gave to that city, when he was crowned elsewhere, reversals, by which he declared that such coronation took place without prejudice to its rights, and without drawing any consequences therefrom for the future.

In Practice. The decision of a superior court by which the judgment, sentence, or decree of the inferior court is annulled.

After a judgment, sentence, or decree has been rendered by the court below, a writ of error may be issued from the superior to the inferior tribunal, or an appeal taken, when the record and all proceedings are sent to the appellate court. When, on the examination of the record, the appellate court gives a judgment different from the inferior court, they are said to reverse the proceeding.

REVERSE, REVERSED. A term frequently used in the judgments of an appellate court, in disposing of the case before it. It then means "to set aside, to annul, to vacate." Laithe v. McDonald, 7 Kan. 254.

REVERSION. The residue of an estate left in the grantor, to commence in possession after the determination of some particular estate granted out by him. The return of land to the grantor and his heirs after the grant is over. Co. Litt. 142 b; 2 Bla. Com. 175; 4 Kent 354. See CONDITION; CONDITIONAL FEE; BASE FEE.

The reversion is a vested interest or estate and arises by operation of law only. In this latter respect it differs from a remainder, which can never arise except either by will or deed; Cruise, Dig. tit. 17; 4 Kent 345; 19 Vin. Abr. 217. A reversion is said to be an incorporeal hereditament; 4 Kent 354; 1 Washb. R. P. 37, 47; Snell's Ex'rs v. Snell, 38 N. J. Eq. 124. The possibility of reverter in the grantor of a qualified or determinable fee is not void for remoteness; First Universalist Soc. v. Boland, 155 Mass. 171, 29 N. E. 524, 15 L. R. A. 231; as to the reversion or remainder in lands confiscated by the United States because of the owners engaging in the rebellion, see Jenkins v. Collard, 145 U. S. 546, 12 Sup. Ct. 868, 36 L. Ed. 812. See REMAINDER; LIMITATION.

In some cases land taken under the right of eminent domain for a specific purpose reverts to the former owner when that purpose has ceased. See EMINENT DOMAIN; ESCHEAT.

A street railway leasing its property for 999 years cannot be said to have a reversion in the property, which amounts to anything substantial. It rests upon a false analogy with the English land laws; Thirteenth & Fifteenth St. P. R. Co. v. Broad St. R. T. R. Co., 31 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 103, per Sulzberger, J. Improvements on the roadbed by a lessee railroad company roadbed leased for 999 years are for the benefit of the lessee; Northern Pac. Ry. Co. v. Boyd, 228 U. S. 482, 33 Sup. Ct. 554, 57 L. Ed. 931.

REVERSIONARY INTEREST. The interest which one has in the reversion of lands or other property. The residue which remains to one who has carved out of his estate a lesser estate. See REVERSION. An interest in the land when possession shall fail. Cowell.

REVERSIONARY LEASE. One to take effect in futuro. See LEASE.

REVERTER. Reversion. A possibility or reverter is that species of reversionary interest which exists when the grant is so limited that it may possibly terminate. See 1 Washb. R. P. 63.

REVEST. To replace one in the possession of anything of which he has been divested, or put out of possession. 1 Rep. H. & W. 353.

REVIEW. In Practice. A second examination of a matter. For example, by the laws of Pennsylvania, the courts having jurisdiction of the subject may grant an order for a view of a proposed road; the reviewers make a report, which, when confirmed by the court, would authorize the laying out of the same. After this, by statutory provision, the parties may apply for a review or second examination, and the last viewers may make a different report. For the practice of reviews in chancery, see BILL OF REVIEW.

The criticism of a publication. See CRITICISM; LIBEL.

REVIEW, COURT OF. In England. A court of appeal in bankruptcy cases, established in 1832 and abolished in 1847. Robson, Bkcy.

REVIEWER, REVIEWEE. Terms used in the caption of a case in Vermont in substantially the same sense as appellant and appellee. Sumner v. Wentworth, 1 Tyler 42.

REVILING CHURCH ORDINANCES. An offence against religion punishable in England by fine and imprisonment. 4 Steph. Com. 208. See BLASPHEMY.

REVISED STATUTES OF THE UNITED STATES. The Revised Statutes were enacted June 22, 1874, and, when printed in 1875, embraced the laws, general and permanent in their nature, in force December 1, 1873. A second edition was completed in the latter part of 1878, and includes only the specific amendments passed by the forty-third and forty-fourth congresses, with references to some other acts. The period from 1874 to 1880 is provided for by a supplement published in 1881. See Preface to Supplement to Rev. Stat. A second edition of the supplement, covering the legislation from 1874 to 1891, and embracing the matter in the Supplement to the Revised Statutes of 1881, was prepared and published under the direction of congress by Chief Justice Wm. A. Richardson of the Court of Claims. Volume 2 of the Supplement covers legislation down to March 4, 1901. Subsequent legislation is found in Statutes at Large, vols. 32 to 37. Vol. 37 covers the 63d Congress, 1911-1913.

Transactions subsequent to the enactment of the Revised Statutes must be determined by the law as there found, and not by the earlier statutes incorporated therein. In cases of ambiguity or uncertainty, the previous statutes may be referred to to elucidate the legislative intent, but where the language is clear, the Revised Statutes must govern. The second edition is neither a new revision nor a new enactment; it is only a new pub-tion, a compilation containing the original law with certain specific alterations and amendments made by subsequent legislation incorporated therein according to the judgment of the editor, who had no discretion to correct errors or supply omissions; Wright v. I. S., 15 Ct. Cl. 80. Sections of a statute re-enacted in the Revised Statutes are to be given the same meaning they had in the original, unless a contrary intention is clearly manifested; U. S. v. Le Bris, 121 U. S. 278, 7 Sup. Ct. 894, 30 L. Ed. 946; the Revised Statutes are merely a compilation of the statutes of the United States, and resort may be had to the original statute to ascertain what, if any, change of phraseology there is, and whether such change should be construed as changing the law; U. S. v. Lacher, 134 U. S. 626, 10 Sup. Ct. 625, 33 L. Ed. 1080; and this is specially so where the act authorizing the revision directs marginal references as in this case; Barrett v. U. S., 169 U. S. 227, 18 Sup. Ct. 327, 42 L. Ed. 723, where some historical matter relating to the subject is found. "They must be treated as the legislative declaration of the statute law on the subjects embraced, on the first day of December, 1873. When the meaning is plain, the courts cannot look to the statutes which have been revised, to see if congress erred in that revision, but may do so when necessary to construe doubtful language." Bate Refrigerating Co. v. Sulzberger, 157 U. S. 1, 15 Sup. Ct. 508, 39 L. Ed. 601; U. S. v. Commercial Co., 74 Fed. 145.

An intention to alter the scope and purpose of an existing law cannot be imputed to congress because it placed in the Revised Statutes in two separate sections portions of what was a single section of the original act; Anderson v. Steamship Co., 225 U. S. 187, 32 Sup. Ct. 626, 56 L. Ed. 1047.

See STATUTES AT LARGE.

REVISING ASSESSORS. In English Law. Two officers formerly elected to assist the mayor in revising the parish burgess lists, but now abolished and the duties transferred to the revising barristers.

REVISING BARRISTERS. In English Law. Barristers appointed to revise the list of voters for county and borough members of parliament, and who hold courts for that purpose throughout the country.

An appeal lies on questions of law to the King's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice.

REVIVAL. Of Contracts. An agreement to renew the legal obligation of a just debt after it has been barred by the act of limitation or lapse of time is called its revival.

In Practice. The act by which a judgment which has lain dormant or without any action upon it for a year and a day is, at common law, again restored to its original force.

When a judgment is more than a day and a year old, no execution can issue upon it at common law; but till it has been paid, or the presumption arises from lapse of time that it has been satisfied, it may be revived and have all its original force, which was merely suspended. This may be done by a scire facias or an action of debt on the judgment. See SCIRE FACIAS; and as to ABATEMENT AND REVIVAL, see that title.

REVIVE. To bring again to life, to reanimate, to renew; to bring into action after a suspension. Lindsey v. Lyman, 37 Ia. 207.

REVOCATION. The recall of a power or authority conferred, or the vacating of an instrument previously made.

An act of the mind demonstrated by some outward and visible sign. Graham v. Burch, 47 Minn. 171, 49 N. W. 697, 28 Am. St. Rep. 339.

Revocation of grants. Grants may be revoked by virtue of a power expressly reserved in the deed, or where the grant is without consideration or in the nature of a testamentary disposition; 3 Co. 25.

Voluntary conveyances, being without pecuniary or legal consideration, may be superseded or revoked, in effect, by a subsequent conveyance of the same subject-matter to another for valuable consideration. And it will make no difference that the first conveyance was meritorious, being a voluntary settlement for the support of one's self or family, and made when the grantor was not indebted, or had ample means besides for the payment of his debts. And the English cases hold that knowledge of the former deed will not affect the rights of a subsequent purchaser; 9 East 59; 4 B. & P. 332; 18 Ves. 84. See, also, the exhaustive review of the American cases, in note to Sexton v. Wheaton, 1 Am. Lead. Cas. 36.

It is generally held that a voluntary conveyance which is also fraudulent, is void as to subsequent bona fide purchasers for value with notice; but if not fraudulent in fact, it is only void as to those purchasing without notice. See Bisp. Eq. 257; Elliott v. Horn, 10 Ala. 348, 352, 44 Am. Dec. 488; Verplank v. Sterry, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 536, 557, 7 Am. Dec. 348; Hudnal v. Wilder, 4 McCord (S. C.) 295, 17 Am. Dec. 744; FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE.

The fact that the voluntary grantor subsequently conveys to another, is regarded as prima facie evidence that the former deed was fraudulent as to subsequent purchasers without notice, or it would not have been revoked; Cathcart v. Robinson, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 265, 8 L. Ed. 120; Bank of Alexandria v. Patton, 1 Rob. (Va.) 500, 544.

In some of the states, notice of the voluntary deed will defeat the subsequent purchaser; Lancaster v. Dolan, 1 Rawle (Pa.) 231, 18 Am. Dec. 625; Baltimore v. Williams, 6 Md. 242; Hudnal v. Wilder, 4 McCord (S. C.) 295, 17 Am. Dec. 744; Corprew v. Arthur, 15 Ala. 525. But in other states the English rule prevails; Doyle v. Sleeper, 1 Dana (Ky.) 531; Freeman v. Eatman, 38 N. C. 81, 40 Am. Dec. 444.

If one bail money or other valuables to another, to be delivered to a third person on the day of marriage, he may countermand it at any time before delivery over; 1 Dy. 49. But if such delivery be made in payment or security of a debt, or for other valuable consideration, it is not revocable; 1 Stra. 165. And although the gift be not made known to the donee, being for his benefit, his assent will be presumed until he expressly dissents; 3 Co. 26 b; 2 Salk. 618.

Powers of appointment to uses are revocable if so expressed in the deed of settlement. But it is not indispensable, it is said, that this power of revocation should be repeated in each successive deed of appointment, provided it exist in the original deed creating the settlement; 4 Kent 336; 1 Co. 110 b; 2 Bla. Com. 339.

It has been said that the power of revocation does not include the appointment of new uses; 2 Freem. 61; Pr. in Ch. 474.

A voluntary deed of trust, without power of revocation, made with a nominal consideration, and without legal advice as to its effect, when there was evidence that its effect was misunderstood by the grantor, will be set aside in equity; Garnsey v. Mundy, 24 N. J. Eq. 243; s. c. 13 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 345, and note by Mr. Bispham. In a similar case it was held that the mere omission of counsel to advise the insertion of a power of revocation is not a ground to set aside the deed; but that this omission and the absence of the power are circumstances tending to show that the act was not done with a deliberate intent. The deliberate intent of a party to tie his hands should clearly appear. In the absence of such an intent the omission of a power to revoke is prima facie evidence of mistake. The mistake being one of fact mixed with legal effects, equity will relieve; Appeal of Russell, 75 Pa. 269; the earlier English cases seem to have insisted upon the presence of a power of revocation in voluntary settlements; L. R. 8 Eq. 558; 14 id. 365; but in a later case it was held that the absence of such a power was merely a circumstance of more or less weight, according to the other circumstances of each case; L. R. 8 Ch. Ap. 430. A reserved right of revocation is not inconsistent with the creation of a valid trust; Mize v. Nat. Bank, 60 Mo. App. 358.

A quitclaim deed from a trustee to the donor of the trust will not revoke the trust, though made solely for that purpose, since a completed trust, without reservation of power to revoke, can only be revoked by the consent of all the beneficiaries; Ewing v. Shanahan, 113 Mo. 188, 20 S. W. 1065. See Hellman v. McWilliams, 70 Cal. 449, 11 Pac. 659.

Powers of sale and of substitution of trustee in a mortgage or deed of trust are coupled with an interest so that they are not revoked by the death of the grantor, although the mortgage or deed of trust is a mere right to resort to the thing for the payment of the debt, and the mortgagee or trustee has no estate, legal or equitable, in the thing conveyed; Frank v. Mortgage Co., 86 Miss. 103, 38 South. 340, 4 Ann. Cas. 54, 70 L. R. A. 135, with full note on the revocation by death of power of sale in a mortgage or deed of trust.

A power of sale of an ancestor's land, for the purpose of an amicable division among the heirs, is revoked by the death of one of the parties, although it contains a provision that it shall not be revoked by death, and authorizes the payment of the salary and expenses of the agent out of the proceeds of the property; Weaver v. Richards, 144 Mich. 395, 108 N. W. 382, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 855, and note. That case is put squarely upon the doctrine that the interest which will protect a power after the death of the person creating it, must be an interest in the thing itself. And a contract placing one's property in another's hands to manage and sell, which is to continue after the death of the donor, is nevertheless terminated by the death of the donor; Mills v. Smith, 193 Mass. 11, 78 N. E. 765, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 865.

The American courts, following Brown v. M'Gran, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 479, 10 L. Ed. 550, hold that the consignee of goods for sale, who has incurred liability or made advances upon the faith of the consignment, acquires a power of sale which, to the extent of his interest, is not revocable or subject to the control of the consignor. But if orders are given by the consignor, contemporaneously with the consignment and advances, in regard to the time and mode of sale, and which are, either expressly or impliedly, assented to by the consignee, he is not at liberty to depart from them afterwards. But if no instructions are given at the time of the consignment and advances, the legal presumption is that the consignee has the ordinary right of factors to sell, according to the usages of the trade and the general duty of factors, in the exercise of a sound discretion, and reimburse the advances out of the proceeds, and that this right is not subject to the interference or control of the consignor. See Cotton v. Hiller, 52 Miss. 7; Mooney v. Musser, 45 Ind. 115.

The right of the factor to sell in such case is limited to the protection of his own interest, and if he sell more than is necessary for that purpose contrary to the order of his principal, he is liable for the loss incurred; Weed v. Adams, 37 Conn. 378.

The case of Parker v. Brancker, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 40, seems to go to the length of holding that where the consignment is to sell at a limited price the consignee may after notice sell below that price, if necessary, to reimburse advances. But to this extent the American rule has not gone; 1 Pars. Contr., 8th

ed. 70. See, also, Frothingham v. Everton, 12 N. H. 239; Blot v. Bolecau, 3 N. Y. 78, 51 Am. Dec. 345.

The English courts do not hold such a power irrevocable in law; 3 C. B. 380; 5 id. 895. In the last case, Wilde, C. J., thus lays down the rule. It may furnish a ground for inferring that the advances were made upon the footing of an agreement that the factor shall have an irrevocable authority to sell in case the principal made default. But it would be an inference of fact, not a conclusion of law. The fact that the agent has incurred expense in faith of the authority being continued, and will suffer loss by its revocation, is a ground of recovery against the principal, but does not render the power irrevocable. A pledge of personal property to secure liabilities of the pledgor, with an express power of sale, confers such an interest in the subject-matter that it will not be revoked by his death; Knapp v. Alood, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 205, 40 Am. Dec. 241. But a power to pledge or sell the property of the constituent and from the avails to reimburse advances made on liabilities incurred by the appointee is not so coupled with an interest as to be irrevocable; Hunt v. Rousmanier's Adm'r, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 174, 5 L. Ed. 589; Mansfield v. Mansfield, 6 Conn. 539, 16 Am. Dec. 76. The interest must exist in the subject-matter of the power, and not merely in the result of its exercise, to become irrevocable; Rochester v. Whitehouse, 15 N. H. 468; McDonald v. Black's Adm'r, 20 Ohio, 185, 55 Am. Dec. 448. Hence, if one give a letter of credit agreeing to accept bills to a certain amount within a limited time, the letter is revoked by death, and bills drawn after the death and before knowledge thereof reaches the drawer cannot be enforced against the estate of such deceased party; Michigan State Bk. v. Leavenworth's Estate, 28 Vt. 209.

As to the revocation of a submission to arbitrators, see ARBITRATION AND AWARD.

Revocation of offer.—An offer may be revoked at any time before acceptance, even though a definite time for acceptance is specified, unless there is a distinct contract for a definite time, founded on a distinct consideration; Pollock, Contr. 27. Such revocation can take effect only when it is communicated to the other party, before acceptance; id. 30.

A general proposal by public advertisement may be revoked by an announcement of equal publicity, such as an announcement in the same newspaper, even as against a person who afterwards acts on the proposal not knowing that it has been revoked; Shuey v. U. S., 92 U. S. 73, 23 L. Ed. 697, said in Pollock, Contr. 23, to be judicial legislation.

See OFFER; ACCEPTANCE; LETTER.

The power of a partner to contract in the name of the firm may be revoked, by injunction out of chancery, where there is a wanton or fraudulent violation of the contract constituting the association; Bisp. Eq. 426; 1

Story, Eq. Jur. § 673. This will sometimes be done on account of the impracticability of carrying on the undertaking; 1 Cox, Ch. 213; 2 V. & B. 299. So, too, such an injunction might be granted on account of the insanity or permanent incapacity of one of the partners; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 673. But insanity is not alone sufficient to produce a dissolution of the partnership; 2 My. & K. 125. See PARTNERSHIP.

An oral license to occupy land is, where the statute of frauds prevails, revocable at pleasure, unless permanent and expensive erections have been made by the licensee in faith of the permission. In such case a court of equity will decree a conveyance on equitable terms, in conformity with the contracts of the parties, or else require compensation to be made upon equitable principles; Trenton W. P. Co. v. Chambers, 9 N. J. Eq. 471; Redfield, Railw. 106; Prince v. Case, 10 Conn. 375, 27 Am. Dec. 675.

For the law in regard to the revocation of wills, see WILLS; and as to the revocation of authority of agents, see PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

REVOCATIONE PARLIAMENTI. An ancient writ for recalling a parliament. 4 Inst. 44.

REVOCATUR (Lat. it is recalled). A term used to denote that a judgment is annulled for an error in fact. The judgment is then said to be recalled, revocatur; not reversed, which is the word used when a judgment is annulled for an error in law; Tidd, Pr. 1126.

REVOLT. The endeavor of the crew of a vessel, or any one or more of them, to overthrow the legitimate authority of her commander, with intent to remove him from his command, or against his will to take possession of the vessel by assuming the government and navigation of her, or by transferring their obedience from the lawful commander to some other person. U. S. v. Tappan, 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 419, 6 L. Ed. 509.

According to Wolff, revolt and rebellion are nearly synonymous; it is the state of citizens who unjustly take up arms against the prince or government. Wolff, Droit de la Nat. § 1232. See REBELLION.

By Cr. Code, § 292, if any one of the crew of an American vessel, on the high seas or other waters, within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the U. S., endeavors to make a revolt, etc., or conspires, etc., so to do, or incites, etc., any other of the crew to disobey lawful orders, or to neglect their duty, or assembles such others in a mutinous manner, or makes a riot, or unlawfully confines the master, etc., he is punishable by a fine of not over $1,000, or imprisonment for not over five years, or both. By § 293, if any one of the crew, etc., usurps the command of the vessel, or deprives the master of authority, or resists his authority, or transfers the same to one not entitled thereto, he is punishable by a fine of not over $2,000, and imprisonment for not over ten years. Foreign seamen on American vessels are punishable under this section; 1 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 88. If, before a voyage is begun, the seamen for good reason believe that the vessel is un-seaworthy, they may resist an attempt to compel them to go to sea in her, without being guilty of revolt; 1 Sprague 75.

Revolts on shipboard are to be considered as defined by the last-mentioned act; 1 W. & M. 306.

A confederacy or combination must be shown; 2 Sumn. 582; 1 W. & M. 305. The vessel must be properly registered; 3 Sumn. 342; must be pursuing her regular voyage; 2 Sumn. 470. The indictment must specifically set forth the acts which constitute the crime; Whart. Prec. § 1061, n.

REWARD. The offer of recompense given by authority of law for the performance of some act for the public good, which, when the act has been performed, is to be paid. The recompense actually so paid.

The offer may be made to an individual; Franklin v. Heiser, 6 Blatchf. 426, Fed. Cas. No. 5,054; or by public, oral statement, poster, or newspaper; Hayden v. Souger, 56 Ind. 46, 26 Am. Rep. 1; Symmes v. Frazier, 6 Mass. 344, 4 Am. Dec. 142; its acceptance and performance create a valid contract; Poll. Contr. 11; Ans. Contr. 31; Pierson v. Morch, 82 N. Y. 503; Kasling v. Morris, 71 Tex. 584, 9 S. W. 739, 10 Am. St. Rep. 797; Cummings v. Gann, 52 Pa. 484; such performance being sufficient consideration; Ryer v. Stockwell, 73 Am. Dec. 634; 4 B. & Ad. 621. The offer, not being a contract until performance, may be withdrawn prior thereto; Harson v. Pike, 16 Ind. 140; Biggers v. Owen, 79 Ga. 658, 5 S. E. 193; Freeman v. Boston, 5 Metc. (Mass.) 57; Ryer v. Stockwell, 14 Cal. 137, 73 Am. Dec. 634; that the claimant was ignorant of the withdrawal, where the offer and withdrawal were by public advertisement, is immaterial; Shuey v. U. S., 92 U. S. 75, 23 L. Ed. 697. See REVOCATION.

The offer of a reward may contain such terms as the party sees fit to prescribe; Arnis v. Conner, 43 Ark. 337; provided they are lawful; Bish. Contr. § 467; Smith v. Arnold, 106 Mass. 269; and substantial performance is usually sufficient; Besse v. Dyer, 9 Allen (Mass.) 152, 85 Am. Dec. 747.

Where a reward was for an "arrest," furnishing information that led to an arrest was not enough; M'Claghry v. King, 147 Fed. 465, 79 C. C. A. 91, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 216, 8 Ann. Cas. 856; Kinn v. Bank, 118 Wis. 537, 95 N. W. 969, 99 Am. St. Rep. 1012; Williams v. R. Co., 191 Ill. 610, 61 N. E. 456, 85 Am. St. Rep. 278; the arrest must be legal; Moore v. Peace (Ky.) 97 S. W. 762; Morris v. Kasling, 79 Tex. 141, 15 S. W. 226, 11 L. R. A. 389.

A reward may be offered by the government or by a private person; Furman v. Parke, 21 N. J. L. 310; by a railroad company; Central R. & B. Co. v. Cheatham, 85 Ala. 292, 4 South. 828, 7 Am. St. Rep. 48; but not by the District of Columbia; Baker v. Washington, 7 D. C. 134; nor by municipal corporations, unless authorized by statute;

Butler v. McLean, 32 Ill. App. 397; Loveland v. Detroit, 41 Mich. 367, 1 N. W. 952; Gale v. South Berwick, 51 Me. 174; Hawk v. Marion Co., 48 Ia. 472; Board of Com'rs of Grant Co. v. Bradford, 72 Ind. 455, 37 Am. Rep. 174; contra, York v. Forscht, 23 Pa. 391. But where the selectmen of a town offered a reward in excess of that authorized by statute, it was held good for the lawful amount; In re Kelly, 39 Conn. 159; and such officials are personally liable for the excess; Lee v. Trustees of Flemingsburg, 7 Dana (Ky.) 29; contra, Huthsing v. Bousquet, 2 McCrary 152, 7 Fed. 833.

Any one who complies with the terms of the offer, if not guilty of fraud, may recover the reward; Hassan v. Doe, 38 Me. 45; Blain v. Exp. Co., 69 Tex. 74, 6 S. W. 679; Means v. Hendershott, 24 Ia. 78; although not embraced in the description of the persons to whom it was originally proposed; First Nat. Bk. v. Hart, 55 Ill. 62; 64 L. T. 594; but not for apprehending a person who has been admitted to bail; Marking v. Needy, 8 Bush (Ky.) 22; nor one discharged from arrest by the committing magistrate; Board of Sup'rs of Itawamba Co. v. Candler, 62 Miss. 193. The owners of a proprietary medicine offered a reward to any one who used it and then contracted influenza; held a contract with one who met the conditions; [1893] 1 Q. B. 256. Where a prize is offered in a county competition, one who meets the conditions may recover; 39 Wash. L. R. 18.

One may recover a reward offered by his employers; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Sebring, 16 Ill. App. 181; but not if he is morally bound to furnish the information; Burke v. Wells, Fargo & Co., 50 Cal. 218; or it is his official duty to do so; Morris v. Kasling, 79 Tex. 141, 15 S. W. 226, 11 L. R. A. 398; Smith v. Whildin, 10 Pa. 39, 49 Am. Dec. 572. And a reward offered by the state for the capture of a criminal cannot be claimed by an officer whose official duty it is to make the arrest; the rule being founded on public policy, it is opposed to opening the door to any inducement for public officers to delay arrests until rewards are offered; Smith v. Gentry (Ky.) 45 S. W. 515, 42 L. R. A. 302, where it was held that no one could have any property right in a reward until it was earned by making the arrest, so that where, by sharp practice in making use of information derived over the telephone, one person secured the reward and prevented another, who really gave the information, from obtaining the benefit of it, the latter had no right of action. But it is held that a promise to pay a reward to a police constable is binding because there might be some information which he was not bound, in the discharge of his ordinary duty, to give; 11 A. & E. 856.

A reward was offered by the defendant for the arrest of a criminal. A police officer made the arrest, but the prisoner broke away from him and in the pursuit surrendered to the plaintiff. The defendant voluntarily paid the reward to the officer. Plaintiff on a suit for a share of the reward was held not entitled to any part of it; Stair v. Hieska Among Congregation (Tenn.) 159 S. W. 840.

An offer of a reward is not void as against public policy, because made for conviction of offences afterwards to be committed; Wilmoth v. Hensel, 151 Pa. 200, 25 Atl. 86, 31 Am. St. Rep. 738.

It is held to be necessary that the person performing the service should know of the offer when he did so; Howland v. Lounds, 51 N. Y. 604, 10 Am. Rep. 654; Broadnax v. Ledbetter, 100 Tex. 375, 99 S. W. 1111, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1057; Williams v. R. Co., 191 Ill. 610, 61 N. E. 456, 85 Am. St. Rep. 278; contra, Everman v. Hyman, 3 Ind. App. 459, 29 N. E. 1140; Russell v. Stewart, 44 Vt. 170; 12 C. B. N. S. 740; 104 E. C. L. 740; Drummond v. U. S., 35 Ct. Cl. 356; Eagle v. Smith, 4 Houst. (Del.) 293; but if the reward was offered by statute the party need not allege knowledge; Board of Com'rs of Clinton County v. Davis, 162 Ind. 60, 69 N. E. 680, 64 L. R. A. 780, 1 Ann. Cas. 283.

Where a reward was offered for the return of a lost pocketbook, it was held that the fact that the pocketbook was found before the finder heard of the reward was irrelevant, and also that the finder had a lien on the article for the offered reward; MacFarlane v. Bloch, 59 Or. 1, 115 Pac. 1056, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1275.

The person first complying with the terms of the offer is entitled to the reward; 4 B. & Ad. 621; U. S. v. Simons, 7 Fed. 709; U. S. v. George, 6 Blatch. 406, Fed. Cas. No. 15,198; and where the offer is for information, the whole of which is furnished in fragments by different persons, the reward may be equitably apportioned; Janvrin v. Exeter, 48 N. H. 86, 2 Am. Rep. 185; Fargo v. Arthur, 43 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 193; and so as to the recovery of property; Hawk v. Marion County, 48 Ia. 472; Deslondes v. Wilson, 5 La. 397, 25 Am. Dec. 187; Symmes v. Frazier, 6 Mass. 344, 4 Am. Dec. 142.

The finder of lost property is not entitled to a reward, if there was no promise of one by the owner; Watts v. Ward, 1 Or. 86, 62 Am. Dec. 299. See FINDER.

REX (Lat.). A king.

RHANDIR. A part in the division of Wales before the Conquest; every township comprehended four gavels, and every gavel had four rhandirs, and four houses or tenements constituted every rhandir. Tayl. Hist. Gav. 69.

RHODE ISLAND. One of the original thirteen states of the United States of America; its full style being, "The State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations."

Its territory lies between Massachusetts and Connecticut, in the southwest angle of that portion of the territory of the former state which was known as the colony of New Plymouth, and is situated at the head and along both shores of the Narragansett Bay, comprising the islands in the same, the principal of which is Rhode Island, placed at the mouth of the bay. The settlement was commenced as early as June, 1636, on the present site of the city of Providence, by five men under Roger Williams. Williams founded his colony upon a compact which bound the settlers to obedience to the major part "only in civil things"; leaving to each perfect freedom in matters of religious concernment, so that he did not, by his religious practices, encroach upon the public order and peace. A portion of the Massachusetts colonists, who were of the antinomian party, after their defeat in that colony, settled on the island of Aquetnet, now Rhode Island, where they associated themselves as a colony on March 7, 1638. These settlements, together with one "at Shawomet, now Warwick, made by another sect of religious outcasts, under Gorton, in 1642-3, remained under separate voluntary governments until 1647, when they were united under one government, styled "The Incorporation of Providence Plantations in the Narragansett Bay in New England," by virtue of a charter granted in 1643.

This colony remained under this charter, which, upon some provisions, was confirmed by Cromwell in 1653, until after the restoration, when a new charter was procured from Charles II., in the fifteenth year of his reign, under which a new colonial government was formed on the 24th of November, 1663, which continued, with the short interruption of the colonial administration of Sir Edmund Andros, down to the period of the American revolution.

In the general assembly of the colony, on the first Wednesday of May, 1776, in anticipation of the declaration of independence, an act was passed which absolved the colonists from their allegiance to the king of Great Britain, and which ordered that in future all writs and processes should issue in the charter name of "The Governor and Company of the English Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations," instead of the name of the king. The old colonial charter, together with a bill of rights adopted by the general assembly, remained the sole constitution of state government until the first Tuesday in May, 1843, when a state constitution framed by a convention assembled in November, 1842, and adopted by the people of the state, went into operation. Sundry amendments have been made.

RHODIAN SEA-LAW. A code of maritime laws adopted by the people of Rhodes, who had by their commerce and naval victories obtained the sovereignty of the sea, about nine hundred years before the Christian era. There is reason to suppose this code has not been transmitted to posterity, at least not in a perfect state. The Roman jurists borrowed from them. Scrutton, Roman Law Influence, § 4. See CODE; Ashburner on Rhodian Sea-Law, who is of opinion (p. cxii) that it was probably put together by a private hand between A. D. 600 and A. D. 800, and could not have been much later.

RIAL. A piece of gold coin current for ten shillings in the reign of Henry VI.

RIBAUD. A rogue; a vagrant.

RIBBONMEN. Associations or secret societies formed in Ireland, having for their object the dispossession of landlords and political purposes. See Whart. Law Lex.

RIDER. A schedule or small piece of paper or parchment added to some part of a record or policy of insurance; as, when on the reading of a bill in the legislature a new clause is added, this is tacked to the bill on a separate piece of paper, and is called a rider.

A new and unrelated provision added to an appropriation bill for the purpose of coercing the executive to approve of obnoxious legislation, or bring the wheels of government to a stop for want of funds. It is used in a general way of an unrelated provision added to any bill.

Even though it may have become a modern practice in Congress to adopt independent legislation by attaching riders to appropriation bills, the courts are not relieved from the duty of interpreting the statute; Pennington v. U. S., 231 U. S. 631, 34 Sup. Ct. 269, 58 L. Ed. 410.

RIDING. In English Law. An ascertained district; part of a county. This term has the same meaning in Yorkshire that division has in Lincolnshire. 4 Term 459. See TRITHING.

RIDING ARMED. The offense of riding or going armed with dangerous or unusual weapons. It is a misdemeanor; 4 Steph. Com., 11th ed. 203.

RIDING CLERK. One of the Six Clerks in chancery, who, in his turn, for one year kept the controlment books of all grants that passed the Great Seal. Whart. Dict.

RIENS. A French word which signifies nothing. See the following titles. It sometimes signifies not, as, rien culpable, not guilty.

RIENS EN ARRIÈRE (L. Fr. nothing in arrear). A plea which alleges that there is nothing remaining due and unpaid of the plaintiff's demand. It is a good plea, and raises the general issue in an action for rent. 2 Wm. Saund. 297, n. 1; 2 Ld. Raym. 1503; Gould, Pl. 286; McKelv. Pl. 38.

RIENS PASSE PER LE FAIT (L. Fr. nothing passed by the deed). A plea which avoids the effect of a deed where its execution cannot be denied, by asserting that nothing passed thereby: for example, an allegation that the acknowledgment was before a court which had not jurisdiction.

RIENS PER DESCENT. A plea by an heir sued for the debt of his ancestor that he had no lands by descent from the ancestor. Chitty, Prec. 433.

RIER, or REER-COUNTY. Close county, in opposition to open county. It appears to be some public place which the sheriff appoints for the receipt of the king's money after the end of the county court. Fleta says it is dies crastinus post comitatum. Encyc. Lond.

RIFFLARE. To take away anything by force.

RIGGING THE MARKET. A term of the stock exchange denoting the practice of inflating the price of given stocks or enhancing their quoted value by a system of pretended purchasers, designed to give the air of an unusual demand for such stocks. L. R. 13 Eq. 447.

RIGHT. A well-founded claim. If people believe that humanity itself establishes or proves certain claims, either upon fellow-beings, or upon society or government, they call these claims human rights; if they believe that these claims inhere in the very nature of man himself, they called them inherent, inalienable rights; if people believe that there inheres in monarchs a claim to rule over their subjects by divine appointment, they call the claim divine right, jus divinum; if the claim is founded or given by law, it is a legal right. The ideas of claim and that the claim must be well founded always constitute the idea of right. Rights can only inhere in and exist between moral beings; and no moral beings can coexist without rights, consequently without obligations. Right and obligation are correlative ideas. The idea of a well-founded claim becomes in law a claim founded in or established by the law: so that we may say a right in law is an acknowledged claim.

Men are by their inherent nature moral and social beings; they have, therefore, mutual claims upon one another. Every well-grounded claim on others is called a right, and, since the social character of man gives the element of mutuality to each claim, every right conveys along with it the idea of obligation. Right and obligation are correlative. The consciousness of all constitutes the first foundation of the right or makes the claim well grounded. Its incipency arises instinctively out of the nature of man. Man feels that he has a right of ownership over that which he has produced out of appropriated matter, for instance, the bow he has made of appropriated wood; he feels that he has a right to exact obedience from his children, long before laws formally acknowledge or protect these rights; but he feels, too, that if he claims the bow which he made as his own, he ought to acknowledge (as correlative obligation) the same right in another man to the bow which he may have made; or if he, as father, has a right to the obedience of his children, they have a corresponding claim on him for protection as long as they are incapable to protect themselves. The idea of rights is coexistent with that of authority (or government); both are inherent in man; but if we understand by government a coherent system of laws by which a state is ruled, and if we understand by state a sovereign society, with distinct authorities to make and execute laws, then rights precede government, or the establishment of states, which is expressed in the ancient law maxim: Ne ex regula jus sumatur, sed ex jure quod est, regula fiat. See GOVERNMENT. We cannot refrain from referring the reader to the noble passage of Sophocles, Oedyp. Tyr. 876 et seq., and to the words of Cicero, in his oration for Milo: Est enim hæc, judices, non scripta sed nata lex; quam non didicimus, accepimus, legimus: verum ex natura ipsa arripimus, hausimus, expressimus; ad quam non docti sed facti; non instituti sed imbuti sumus.

As rights precede government, so we find that new rights are acknowledged above governments and their states, in the case of international law. International law is founded on rights, that is, well-grounded claims which civilized states, as individuals, make upon one another. As governments come to be more and more clearly established, rights are more clearly acknowledged and protected by the laws, and right comes to mean a claim acknowledged and protected by the law. A legal right, a constitutional right, means a right protected by the law, by the constitution; but government does not create the idea of right or original rights; it acknowledges them; just as government does not create property or values and money, it acknowledges and regulates them. If it were otherwise, the question would present itself, whence does government come? whence does it derive its own right to create rights? By compact? But whence did the contracting parties derive their right to create a government that is to make rights? We would be consistently led to adopt the idea of a government by jus divinum,—that is, a government deriving its authority to introduce and establish rights (bestowed on it in particular) from a source wholly separate from human society and the ethical character of man, in the same manner in which we acknowledge revelation to come from a source not human.

Rights are claims of moral beings upon one another: when we speak of rights to certain things, they are, strictly speaking claims of persons on persons,—in the case of property, for instance, the claim of excluding others from possessing it. The idea of right indicates an ethical relation, and all moral relations may be infringed; claims may be made and established by law which are wrong in themselves and destitute of a corollary obligation; they are like every other wrong done by society or government; they prove nothing concerning the origin or essential character of rights. On the other hand, claims are gradually more clearly acknowledged, and new ones, which were not perceived in early periods, are for the first time perceived, and surrounded with legislative protection, as civilization advances. Thus, original rights, or the rights of man, are not meant to be claims which man has always perceived or insisted upon or protected, but those claims which, according to the person who uses the term, logically flow from the necessity of the physical and moral existence of man; for man is born to be a man,—that is, to lead a human existence. They have been called inalienable rights; but they have been alienated, and many of them are not perceived for long periods. Lieber, in his Political Ethics, calls them primordial rights: he means rights directly flowing from the nature of man, developed by civilization, and always showing themselves clearer and clearer as society advances. He enumerates, as such especially, the following: the right of protection; the right of personal freedom,—that is, the claim of unrestricted action except so far as the same claim of others necessitates restriction: these two rights involve the right to have justice done by the public administration of justice, the right of production and exchange (the right of property), the right of free locomotion and emigration, the right of communion in speech, letter, print, the right of worship, the right of influencing or sharing in the legislation. All political civilization steadily tends to bring out these rights clearer and clearer, while in the course of this civilization, from its incipency, with its relapses, they appear more or less developed in different periods and frequently wholly in abeyance: nevertheless, they have their origin in the personality of man as a social being.

Publicists and jurists have made the following further distinction of rights:—

Rights are perfect and imperfect. When the things which we have a right to possess, or the actions we have a right to do, are or may be fixed and determinate, the right is a perfect one; but when the thing or the actions are vague and indeterminate, the right is an imperfect one. If a man demand his property which is withheld from him, the right that supports his demand is a perfect one, because the thing demanded is or may be fixed and determinate; but if a poor man ask relief from those from whom he has reason to expect it, the right which supports his petition is an imperfect one, because the relief which he expects is a vague, indeterminate thing. Rutherford, Inst. c. 2, § 4; Grotius, lib. 1. c. 1, § 4.

Rights are also absolute and qualified. A man has an absolute right to recover property which belongs to him; an agent has a qualified right to recover such property when it has been intrusted to his care and which has been unlawfully taken out of his possession.

Rights might with propriety be also divided into natural and civil rights; but as all the rights which man has received from nature have been modified and acquired anew from the civil law, it is more proper, when considering their object, to divide them into political and civil rights.

Political rights consist in the power to participate, directly or indirectly, in the establishment or management of government. These political rights are fixed by the constitution. Every citizen has the right of voting for public officers, and of being elected; these are the political rights which the humblest citizen possesses.

Civil rights are those which have no relation to the establishment, support, or management of the government. These consist in the power of acquiring and enjoying property, of exercising the paternal and marital powers, and the like. It will be observed that every one, unless deprived of them by a sentence of civil death, is in the enjoyment of his civil rights,—which is not the case with political rights; for an alien, for example, has no political, although in the full enjoyment of his civil, rights.

These latter rights are divided into absolute and relative. The absolute rights of mankind may be reduced to three principal or primary articles: the right of personal security, which consists in a person's legal and uninterrupted enjoyment of his life, his limbs, his body, his health, and his reputation; the right of personal liberty, which consists in the power of locomotion, of changing situation or removing one's person to whatsoever place one's inclination may direct, without any restraint unless by due course of law; the right of property, which consists in the free use, enjoyment, and disposal of all his acquisitions, without any control or diminution save only by the laws of the land. 1 Bla. Com. 124-139.

The relative rights are public or private: the first are those which subsist between the people and the government; as, the right of protection on the part of the people, and the right of allegiance which is due by the people to the government; the second are the reciprocal rights of husband and wife, parent and child, guardian and ward, master and servant.

Rights are also divided into legal and equitable. The former are those where the party has the legal title to a thing; and in that case his remedy for an infringement of it is by an action in a court of law. Although the person holding the legal title may have no actual interest, but hold only as trustee, the suit must be in his name, and not, in general, in that of the cestui que trust; 8 Term 332; 1 Saund. 158, n. 1; 2 Bing. 20. The latter, or equitable rights, are those which may be enforced in a court of equity by the cestui que trust.

RIGHT CLOSE, WRIT OF. An abolished writ which lay for tenants in ancient demesne, and others of a similar nature, to try the right of their lands and tenements in the court of the lord exclusively. 1 Steph. Com. 224.

RIGHT HEIRS. The heirs of the testator at common law, who, if more than one, take as tenants in common. 47 L. J. Ch. 714; 35 W. R. 356.

RIGHT HONOURABLE. Used to designate a member of the British privy council.

RIGHT OF ACTION. The right to bring suit in a case. Also sometimes used in the same sense as right in action, which is identical with chase in action (q. v.).

RIGHT OF APPEAL. This is not limited to a right of appeal by statute, but includes a case where a judge has given leave to appeal. 46 L. J. Q. B. 226; 2 Q. B. D. 125.

RIGHT OF COMMON. See COMMON.

RIGHT OF HABITATION. In Louisiana. The right of dwelling gratuitously in a house the property of another. La. Civ. Code, art. 623; 3 Toullier, c. 2, p. 325; 14 id. n. 279, p. 330; Pothier, n. 22-25.

RIGHT OF LIEN. The word lien is of the same origin as the word liable, and the right of lien expresses the liability of certain property for a certain legal duty, or a right to resort to it in order to enforce the duty. Appeal of Wood, 30 Pa. 277. See LIEN.

RIGHT OF POSSESSION. The right to possession which may reside in one man, while another has the actual possession, being the right to enter and turn out such actual occupant: e. g. the right of a dissee. An apparent right of possession is one which may be defeated by a better; an actual right of possession, one which will stand the test against all opponents. 2 Bla. Com. *196.

RIGHT OF PROPERTY. The abstract right (merum jus) which remains after the actual possession has been so long gone that the right of possession is also lost, and the law will only allow recovery of the land by a writ of right. It, together with possession and right of possession, makes a perfect title; e. g. a disseisor has naked possession, the dissee has right of possession and right of property. But after twenty years without entry the right of possession is transferred from the dissee to the disseisor; and if he now buys up the right of property which alone remains in the dissee, the disseisor will unite all three rights in himself, and thereby acquire a perfect title. 2 Bla. Com. *197.

RIGHT OF SALE. A contractual right of sale of an article constitutes the taker of such right an agent for the sale of the article, but does not bind the giver to supply the article; 6 L. R. Ir. 319.

RIGHT OF SEARCH. See SEARCH, RIGHT OF; PRISONER.

RIGHT OF WAY. See EASEMENT; WAY; RAILROAD.

RIGHT PATENT. The name of an ancient writ, which Fitzherbert says, "ought to be brought of lands and tenements, and not of an advowson, or of common, and lieth only of an estate of fee-simple, and not for him who has a lesser estate, as tenant in tail, tenant in frank-marriage, or tenant for life." Fitzh. N. B. 1.

RIGHT, PETITION OF. See PETITION OF RIGHT.

RIGHT TO BEGIN. In Practice. The party who asserts the affirmative of an issue has the right to begin and reply, as on him is the burden of proof. The substantial affirmative, not the verbal, gives the right; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 74. See OPENING AND CLOSING.

RIGHT, WRIT OF. See WRIT OF RIGHT.

RIGHTS, BILL OF. See BILL OF RIGHTS.

RIGOR MORTIS. Cadaveric rigidity. The peculiar rigidity which takes place in the muscles of the body within five or six hours after death and which remains till putrefaction ensues. The muscles lose their translucency and elasticity, and there is found to have occurred in them a coagulation of their plasma or tissue juice. Both chemically and physically the process differs materially from the ordinary rigidity of contraction.

RING. A current term to designate a combination of persons, usually for the attainment of a selfish aim or purpose; especially a clique formed for controlling a market, or local or state politics. See RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

RING-DROPPING. In Criminal Law. A phrase applied in England to a trick frequently practised in committing larcenies. It is difficult to define it; it will be sufficiently exemplified by the following cases. The prisoner, with some accomplices, being in company with the prosecutor, pretended to find a valuable ring wrapped up in a paper, appearing to be a jeweller's receipt for "a rich brilliant diamond ring." They offered to leave the ring with the prosecutor if he would deposit some money and his watch as a security. The prosecutor, having accordingly laid down his watch and money on a table, was beckoned out of the room by one of the confederates, while the others took away his watch and money. This was held to amount to a larceny; 1 Leach 273. In another case, under similar circumstances, the prisoner procured from the prosecutor twenty guineas, promising to return them the next morning, and leaving the false jewel with him. This was also held to be larceny; 1 Leach 314; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 679.

RINGING THE CHANGES. A trick practised by a criminal, by which, on receiving a good piece of money in payment of an article, he pretends it is not good, and, changing it, returns to the buyer a spurious coin. See 2 Leach Cr. Law Rep. 644.

RINGS-GIVING. The giving of golden rings by a newly-created sergeant-at-law to every person of rank at court, from the princes of the blood, through the lords in parliament and the justices and barons of the courts, down to the meanest clerk of common pleas, to each one according to his dignity. The expense was not less than forty pounds

English money. Fortesque 190; 10 Co. Introd. 23.

RIOT. A tumultuous disturbance of the peace by three persons or more, assembling together of their own authority with an intent mutually to assist each other against any who shall oppose them, in the execution of some enterprise of a private nature, and afterwards actually executing the same in a violent and turbulent manner, to the terror of the people, whether the act intended were of itself lawful or unlawful. Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 65, § 1. See Shouse v. Com., 5 Pa. 83; Fisher v. State, 78 Ga. 258.

"An unlawful assembly which has actually begun to execute the purpose for which it is assembled, by a breach of the peace, and to the terror of the public or a lawful assembly, may become a riot if the persons assembled form and proceed to execute an unlawful purpose to the terror of the people, although they had not that purpose when they assembled." Steph. Dig. Cr. Law, art. 77.

An unlawful assembly is an assembly of three or more persons who meet together for a common purpose in such a manner that a breach of the peace may be apprehended from their conduct. Police authorities may disperse an unlawful assembly, but may only use slight force, unless there is reason to apprehend immediate violence on the part of the mob; Odgers, C. L. 156. As soon as an unlawful assembly starts from its place of meeting to carry out its purpose, it becomes a rout; as soon as it begins to carry out that purpose in violence and in obvious defiance of the authorities, it becomes a riot.

There are five necessary elements of a riot; three persons at least; a common purpose; execution or inception of that purpose; an attempt to help one another by force if necessary; force or violence displayed in such a manner as to alarm one person having reasonable courage; [1907] 2 K. B. 860.

In England it is an indictable misdemeanor for a person to refuse to take part in suppressing a riot when called upon to do so by a justice of the peace or constable. A justice of the peace must read the statutory proclamation, if necessary, and take whatever subsequent steps are necessary to disperse the rioters. After the lapse of an hour from the reading of the riot act, or, because of violence by the mob, within the hour, it is the duty of the civil authorities to stop the riot at whatever cost; and deadly weapons may then be used. Rioting, after the lapse of an hour, was a felony; Odgers, C. L. 161.

There must be proved—first, an unlawful assembling; State v. Renton, 15 N. H. 169; for if a number of persons lawfully met together, as, for example, at a fire, or in a theatre or a church, should suddenly quarrel and fight, the offense is an affray, and not a riot, because there was no unlawful assembling; but if three or more being so assembled, on a dispute occurring, form into parties with promises of mutual assistance, which promises may be express, or implied from the circumstances, then the offense will no longer be an affray, but a riot; the unlawful combination will amount to an assembling within the meaning of the law. In this manner any lawful assembly may be converted into a riot: State v. Snow, 18 Me. 346; 1 Camp. 328; Solomon v. Kingston, 24 Hun (N. Y.) 562. Any one who joins the rioters after they have actually commenced is equally guilty as if he had joined them while assembling.

Secondly, proof must be made of actual violence and force on the part of the rioters, or of such circumstances as have an apparent tendency to force and violence, and calculated to strike terror into the public mind; 2 Camp. 369. See Sanders v. State, 60 Ga. 126; State v. Kempf, 26 Mo. 429. The definition requires that the offenders should assemble of their own authority, in order to create a riot; if, therefore, the parties act under the authority of the law, they may use any necessary force to enforce their mandate, without committing this offense. See, State v. Brooks, 1 Hill (S. C.) 362; State v. Hughes, 72 N. C. 25.

Thirdly, evidence must be given that the defendants acted in the riot and were participants in the disturbance; Scott v. U. S., Morr. (Ia.) 142. It is sufficient if they be present encouraging or giving countenance, support, or acquiescence to the act; Williams v. State, 9 Mo. 270. See Co. 3d Inst. 176; 4 Bla. Com. 146; Com. Dig. Women and infants above, but not those under, the age of discretion are punishable as rioters; 1 Russ. Cr. *387.

In a case growing out of the riots in Pittsburgh in 1877, under a statute making a county liable for the property "situated" therein, when destroyed by a mob, the liability was held to attach to property owned by a non-resident of the state, in transit in possession of a common carrier; County of Allegheny v. Gibson's Son & Co., 90 Pa. 397, 35 Am. Rep. 670.

In the absence of a statute giving a remedy, municipal corporations are not liable for damages resulting in loss of life from the acts of a mob or riotous assemblage, no matter what the negligence of the city officials may have been; City of New Orleans v. Abbagnato, 62 Fed. 240, 10 C. C. A. 361, 26 L. R. A. 329, 23 U. S. App. 533. As to suppression of a riot by militia, see 36 Am. L. Rev. 935. See RIOT ACT; MOB; UNLAWFUL ASSEMBLY; PUBLIC MEETING; AFFRAY; MARTIAL LAW; Borgar; Wise, Riot Law; 3 B. & Ad. 94, the leading case as to the duty of a magistrate.

RIOT ACT. The stat. 1 Geo. I. st. 2, c. 5. It forbade the unlawful assembling of twelve persons or more to the disturbance of the peace. If they continue together for one hour after the sheriff, mayor, etc., has commanded them to disperse, such contempt shall be felony. Stat. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 11, requires that, in order to constitute felony, the riotous act must consist in demolishing, or beginning to demolish, some building; Moz. & W.; Cox & S. Cr. Law 104.

By statute 1 Geo. I., the Riot Act, which is directed to be read in a loud voice by a justice of the peace or other person authorized by the act, is to be in the following words or in words of like effect: "Our Sovereign Lord the King chargeth and commandeth all persons, being assembled, immediately to disperse themselves, and peaceably to depart to their habitations, or to their lawful business, upon the pains contained in the act made in the first year of King George for preventing tumults and riotous assemblies. God save the King."

Persons who wilfully obstruct or hinder the reading of the proclamation are guilty of felony, and if the proclamation would have been read had it not been prevented by the interference of any person or persons, any twelve or more persons who remain together after the proclamation would have been read, are guilty of felony, as if the act had been read. See 21 St. Tr. 485.

RIOTOUSLY. In Pleading. A technical word, properly used in an indictment for a riot, which of itself implies violence. 2 Sess. Cas. Sc. 13; 2 Stra. 834; 2 Chitty, Cr. Law 489.

RIPA (Lat.). The banks of a river, or the place beyond which the waters do not in their natural course overflow.

An extraordinary overflow does not change the banks of the river. Pothier, Pand. lib. 50. See BANKS; RIVER; RIPARIAN PROPRIETORS.

RIPARIAN NATIONS. Those that possess opposite banks or different parts of banks of the same river.

RIPARIAN PROPRIETORS. Those who own the lands bounding upon a watercourse. Tyler v. Wilkinson, 4 Mas. 397, Fed. Cas. No. 14,312.

"One whose land is bounded by a navigable stream." Potomac Steamboat Co. v. Steamboat Co., 109 U. S. 672, 686, 3 Sup. Ct. 445, 4 Sup. Ct. 15, 27 L. Ed. 1070. In its common law sense, the owner of the ripa or bank of a stream not navigable. Gough v. Bell, 22 N. J. L. 441. An owner of land bounded generally on a stream. Bardwell v. Ames, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 333. It is said that the meaning of the term has been needlessly extended from rivers and streams to the shores of the sea; Com. v. Roxbury, 9 Gray (Mass.) 451. If it is necessary to express it by a single adjective, the term littoral proprietor as used in Boston v. Lecraw, 17 How. (U. S.) 426, 15 L. Ed. 118, is more accurate.

Land, to be riparian, must have the stream flowing over it or along its borders; Crawford Co. v. Hathaway, 67 Neb. 325, 93 N. W. 781, 60 L. R. A. 889, 108 Am. St. Rep. 647. Mere contiguity of quarter sections with another quarter section does not make the former riparian, although all are owned by the same person, where they were granted by separate patents, though issued to the same individual but based upon separate entries; Boehmer v. Irr. Dist., 117 Cal. 19, 48 Pac. 908.

Each riparian proprietor owns that portion of the bed of the river (not navigable) which is adjoining his land usque ad filum aquæ; or, in other words, to the thread or central line of the stream; Hargr. Tracts 5: 3 Dane. Abr. 4; King v. King, 7 Mass. 496; Canal Com'rs v. People, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 423; Griffin v. Kirk, 47 Ill. App. 258; Kaukauna Co. v. Canal Co., 142 U. S. 254, 12 Sup. Ct. 173, 35 L. Ed. 1004.

The technical title to the beds of navigable rivers of the United States is either in the states in which the rivers are situated or the riparian owners, depending on the local law. The title of the riparian owner is a qualified one and subordinate to the public right of navigation and subject to the absolute power of congress over the improvement of navigable rivers; U. S. v. Water Power Co., 229 U. S. 53, 33 Sup. Ct. 667, 57 L. Ed. 1063. Where the middle of a stream is the boundary between states or private landowners, that boundary follows any changes in the stream which are due to a gradual accretion or degradation of its banks; Nebraska v. Iowa, 143 U. S. 359, 12 Sup. Ct. 396, 36 L. Ed. 186; Fowler v. Wood, 73 Kan. 511, 85 Pac. 763, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 162, 117 Am. St. Rep. 534; but where a navigable stream suddenly changes its course, the owner of the shore does not acquire title to the abandoned channel; Cooley v. Golden, 117 Mo. 33, 23 S. W. 100, 21 L. R. A. 30.

Where one had obtained title by adverse possession of land bounded by a stream, it was held that he had not acquired title to the middle line of the stream; Stanberry v. Mallory, 101 Ky. 49, 39 S. W. 495, 72 Am. St. Rep. 389.

As to the rights of riparian owners over the bed of navigable waters between high and low water-mark, the decisions are somewhat conflicting, although the general rule is that the riparian owner holds the right of access to the water, subject to the right of the state to improve navigation; Philadelphia v. Scott, 81 Pa. 80, 22 Am. Rep. 738.

The raising over abutting property, by the improvement of the river, of water to a depth sufficient for navigation, vests a right of navigation in the public; Schulte v. Warren, 218 Ill. 108, 75 N. E. 783, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 745. Where the United States, to improve navigation, built a pier on submerged land, away from, but in front of, an owner's land, by which he lost access to navigability, such act is not within the prohibition of the constitution as to taking property for public use without just compensation; Scranton v. Wheeler, 179 U. S. 141, 21 Sup. Ct. 48, 45 L. Ed. 126.

That the riparian owner has a right of action where his access to the water is cut off by a structure erected between high and low water mark, by a corporation acting under its charter, see L. R. 5 H. L. 418; Yates v. Milwaukee, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 497, 19 L. Ed. 984; Delaplaine v. R. Co., 42 Wis. 214, 24 Am. Rep. 394; contra, Tomlin v. R. Co., 32 Ia. 106, 7 Am. Rep. 176; Lausing v. Smith, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 146; Stevens v. R. Co., 34 N. J. L. 532, 3 Am. Rep. 269. Where, by the action of the sea, the sea front was cut off between certain points, and a beach formed outside the mainland, divided from it by a navigable bay, the title to the new formation was held to be in the owners of the part cut off; Murphy v. Norton, 61 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 197. See Bristol v. Carroll Co., 95 Ill. 84. An owner does not lose his property in the soil by submersion or avulsion if he afterwards reclaims it by natural or artificial means, nor does the length of time during which the soil was submerged bar his rights; Chicago v. Ward, 169 Ill. 392, 48 N. E. 927, 38 L. R. A. 849, 61 Am. St. Rep. 185. Land lost by submergence may be regained by reliction unless the submergence has been followed by such a lapse of time as to preclude the identity of the land from being established. If, after a submergence, the water disappears from the land either by gradual retirement or by the elevation of the land by natural or artificial means, the proprietorship returns to the original owner; Mulry v. Norton, 100 N. Y. 424, 3 N. E. 581, 53 Am. Rep. 206; Fowler v. Wood, 73 Kan. 511, 85 Pac. 763, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 654, 117 Am. St. Rep. 490, 9 Ann. Cas. 459. If an island forms on the land submerged, it belongs to the original owner; id.

The title to an island in a navigable stream arises from the title to the submerged land on which it is formed; Norton v. White-side, 188 Fed. 356. Where the United States, in improving the navigation of a stream, transferred the channel to the opposite side of an island in the bed of a stream, this changed the title to the island to the opposite riparian owner; id.

Where the land of the riparian owner ended in an almost perpendicular bank from five to six feet high, to the foot of which the bed of the river reached, often rising some height above it, and by accretion caused by the planting of trees in the river a short distance from the bank by one who owned the bed of the river and a separate fishery, the accretion was held to be the property of the latter, and not of the riparian owner; [1896]

2 Ch. 1, practically reversing [1896] 1 Ch. 78. In the leading case of Gould v. R. Co., 6 N. Y. 522, it was held, Edmonds, J., dissenting, that "whatever rights the owner of the land has in the river, or in its shore below high-water mark, are public rights, which are under the control of the legislative power, and any loss sustained through the act of the legislature affecting them is damnum absque injuria." Government grants for lands bordering upon navigable waters extend only to high-water mark; Niles v. Cedar Point Club, 85 Fed. 45, 29 C. C. A. 5.

Where an act granted to a city the rights possessed by the state in the shore and soil under the Mobile River, it was held valid, and that the rights of the riparian proprietors were neither enlarged nor restricted by such act; Mobile Transportation Co. v. Mobile, 187 U. S. 487, 23 Sup. Ct. 174, 47 L. Ed. 266.

A mere grant of a right to erect wharves will not carry title beyond the land actually appropriated; Morris Canal & Banking Co. v. R. Co., 16 N. J. Eq. 419; Walsh v. Dock Co., 77 N. Y. 448; such a grant does not convey an absolute title which may be separated from the upland so as to cut off the riparian rights of the owner of such land; Shepard's Point Land Co. v. Atlantic Hotel, 132 N. C. 517, 44 S. E. 39, 61 L. R. A. 937.

A conveyance of ferry ways consisting of permanent structures of wood and stone is held to include the land owned and used with them; Gerrish v. Gary, 120 Mass. 132; a statute giving the right to construct and maintain wharves to the channel of a certain river is a legislative grant of the right to the soil as far as the channel; Hastings v. Grimshaw, 153 Mass. 497, 27 N. E. 521, 12 L. R. A. 617.

One riparian owner cannot build out into the stream, so as to injure the land of another riparian owner, even when armed with a license granted under act of parliament; L. R. 1 App. Cas. 662. The owner of lands situated on the sea cannot maintain ejectment for that portion of a wharf constructed on his land, which extends below low-water mark; Coburn v. Ames, 52 Cal. 385, 28 Am. Rep. 634.

The owner of both sides of a stream above tide-water has a right to the ice formed between his boundaries; 14 Chic. Leg. News 83. The intervention of a public road between an estate and a river does not prevent the owner of the estate from being considered as the front or riparian proprietor, when nothing susceptible of private ownership exists between the road and river; Delachaise v. Maginnis, 44 La. Ann. 1043, 11 South. 715. A riparian proprietor of land bordering upon a running stream has a right to the flow of its waters as a natural incident to his estate, and they cannot be lawfully diverted against his consent; Sturr v. Beck, 133 U. S. 541, 10 Sup. Ct. 350, 33 L. Ed. 761.

A riparian owner may generate electricity from the water power and convey it to non-riparian property; Mentone Irr. Co. v. Power Co., 155 Cal. 323, 100 Pac. 1082, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 382, 17 Ann. Cas. 1222. He may divert the water of a stream at a point on his property, carry it by an artificial channel to a point of use and return it to the stream on his property, if his use does not injure others who have a right to the water; Mentone Irr. Co. v. Power Co., 155 Cal. 323, 100 Pac. 1082, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 382, 17 Ann. Cas. 1222.

The right of a riparian owner to use water for irrigation is limited to riparian lands; Crawford Co. v. Hathaway, 67 Neb. 325, 93 N. W. 781, 60 L. R. A. 889, 108 Am. St. Rep. 647; Gould v. Eaton, 117 Cal. 539, 49 Pac. 577, 38 L. R. A. 181. In the east it is held that such right is confined to drinking and other domestic purposes and watering animals on the riparian lands; Williams v. Wadsworth, 51 Conn. 277. A riparian owner cannot divert water from a stream to sell it to others; McCarter v. Water Co., 70 N. J. Eq. 695, 65 Atl. 489, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 197, 118 Am. St. Rep. 754, 10 Ann. Cas. 116, affirmed in Hudson County Water Co. v. McCarter, 209 U. S. 349, 28 Sup. Ct. 529, 52 L. Ed. 828, 14 Ann. Cas. 560; Heilbron v. Canal Co., 75 Cal. 426, 17 Pac. 535, 7 Am. St. Rep. 183; Ir. L. R. 21 Eq. 560 (where there is a substantial diminution of the water); but it has been held that a riparian owner may take water from a stream and sell it to the inhabitants of a city, the only question being as to the reasonableness of the use; Jones v. Aqueduct, 62 N. H. 489. Many cases, however, take the opposite ground; Lord v. Water Co., 135 Pa. 122, 19 Atl. 1007, 8 L. R. A. 202, 20 Am. St. Rep. 864; Penrhyn Slate Co. v. Power Co., 84 App. Div. 92, 82 N. Y. Supp. 547; Elberton v. Hobbs, 121 Ga. 749, 49 S. E. 779; Osborn v. Norwalk, 77 Conn. 663, 60 Atl. 645. Cases hold that water cannot be diverted for the purpose of supplying railroad locomotives; Clark v. R. Co., 145 Pa. 438, 22 Atl. 989, 27 Am. St. Rep. 710; Garwood v. R. Co., 83 N. Y. 400, 38 Am. Rep. 452; or to a pond to form ice for sale; Samuels v. Armstrong, 46 Misc. Rep. 481, 93 N. Y. Supp. 24; or by a public institution, being a riparian owner, to supply a large number of its inmates; Salem Mills Co. v. Lord, 42 Or. 82, 69 Pac. 1033, 70 Pac. 832; Bank of Hopkinsville v. Asylum for Insane, 108 Ky. 357, 56 S. W. 525; L. R. 7 H. L. 705.

The right of a riparian proprietor to use the water for irrigating purposes has been held not to be limited to the tract of land bordering on the stream as first segregated and sold by the government, but to extend to lands lying back of such tracts and purchased by him from other persons; Jones v. Conn, 39 Or. 30, 64 Pac. 855, 65 Pac. 1068, 54 L. R. A. 630, 87 Am. St. Rep. 634, where it was said the only thing necessary to entitle one to the right of a riparian proprietor is to show that the body of land owned by him borders upon a stream. This being established, the law gives him certain rights in the water, the extent of which is limited and controlled less by the area of his land than by the volume of water, and the effect of its use over the rights of other riparian proprietors. He is entitled to a reasonable use of water which is defined as any use that does not work actual, material and substantial damage to the common right which each proprietor has, as limited and qualified by the precisely equal right of every other proprietor; Kinney, Irrigation, § 276.

Among other rights to which such an owner is entitled are access to the navigable part of the river from the front of his lot; the right to make a landing, wharf or pier for his own use or for the use of the public, subject to such general rules or regulations as the legislature may impose; Potomac Steamboat Co. v. Steamboat Co., 109 U. S. 672, 3 Sup. Ct. 445, 4 Sup. Ct. 15, 27 L. Ed. 1070.

An injunction will lie to restrain land owners on one side of a stream from maintaining a levee upon the bank thereof whereby the flood waters of the stream are made to overflow unnaturally the land of others on the opposite side of the stream; Jefferson v. Hicks, 23 Okl. 684, 102 Pac. 79, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 214. One proprietor cannot for his own benefit change or obstruct the ordinary course of water in a stream to the injury of other proprietors; O'Connell v. Ry. Co., 87 Ga. 246, 13 S. E. 489, 13 L. R. A. 394, 27 Am. St. Rep. 246; and he may not deflect the stream into a new channel; Fowler v. Wood, 73 Kan. 511, 85 Pac. 763, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 162, 117 Am. St. Rep. 534. Such owner may construct an embankment to protect his land from flood water but not so in times of ordinary floods, as to cause an overflow and injure other proprietors; Crawford v. Rambo, 44 Ohio St. 279, 7 N. E. 429. A railroad company in constructing such an embankment is bound to anticipate and provide not only for the ordinary blow, but for floods at long periods; Ohio & M. Ry. Co. v. Ramey, 139 Ill. 9, 28 N. E. 1087, 32 Am. St. Rep. 176; see to the same effect West v. Taylor, 16 Or. 165, 13 Pac. 665; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Bom, 76 S. W. 352, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 709; Sullivan v. Dooley, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 589, 73 S. W. 82.

ters of a stream, which they did for forty years, it was held that the lower riparian proprietors had no right to insist that the diversion should be continued for their benefit; Gould, Waters § 340; Lake Drummond C. & W. Co. v. Burnham, 147 N. C. 41, 60 S. E. 650, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 945, 125 Am. St. Rep. 527, where the doctrine was said to be that where the proprietor of an upper tenement constructs and maintains for his own benefit an artificial waterway or any artificial structure affecting the flow of water, and such structure invades no rights of the lower proprietor, and gives indication that it is for a temporary purpose or a specific purpose which may at any time be abandoned, the upper proprietor is under no obligation to maintain the structure and the conditions produced from it by lapse of time, though the incidental effect has been to confer a benefit on the lower owner. Nor in such case does the lower proprietor acquire any right which rests only on prescription. But, contra in Kray v. Muggli, 84 Minn. 90, 86 N. W. 882, 54 L. R. A. 473, 87 Am. St. Rep. 332, where a mill company acquired a right to maintain a dam by prescription, it was said that during the time such right was maturing a reciprocal right in the riparian owners to insist that it be maintained, or at least that no overt act be taken for its removal, was also maturing, which ripened and became equal to the right of the mill company upon the completion of the prescriptive period. The reciprocal right thus created was not merely a personal one, but a right appurtenant to the lands. Where the owners of a dominant tenement established an artificial channel so as to divert water naturally flowing upon the servient tenement, and such diversion was continued for more than twenty years, mutual and reciprocal rights were held to have been acquired by prescription, exempting the dominant owner from restoring the water to its original course, and releasing the servient estate from the burden of the drainage; Cleveland, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Drainage Dist., 213 Ill. 86, 72 N. E. 684.

Riparian rights are abrogated in Nevada and the doctrine of prior appropriation prevails; Anderson Land & S. Co. v. McConnell, 188 Fed. 818.

A riparian proprietor owns driftwood; Yuba Consol. Goldfields v. Hilton, 16 Cal. App. 228, 116 Pac. 712.

See RIVER; LAKES; LOGS; WATERCOURSE; WATERS; IRRIGATION.

RIPTOWELL, or REAPTOWEL. A gratuity or reward given to tenants after they had reaped their lord's corn, or done other customary duties. Cowell.

RIPUARIAN LAW. A code of laws of the Franks, who occupied the country upon the Rhine, the Meuse, and the Scheldt, who were collectively known by the name Ripuarians, and their laws as Ripuarian law.

RISE. Used of a court when it terminates its session.

RISKS AND PERILS. In Insurance. Those causes against loss from which the insurer is to be protected in virtue of the contract for insurance.

The risk or peril in a life policy is death; under a fire policy, damage by fire; and under a marine policy, by perils of the seas, usually including fire; and under a policy upon subjects at risk in lake, river, or canal navigation, by perils of the same. See INSURABLE INTEREST; INSURANCE; POLICY; WARRANTY.

Under a marine insurance the risks are from a certain place to a certain other, or from one date to another. The perils usually insured against as "perils of the seas" are—fire, lightning, winds, waves, rocks, shoals, and collisions, and also the perils of hostile capture, piracy, theft, arrest, bartrary, and jettisons. 1 Phill. Ins. § 1099. But a distinction is made between the extraordinary action of perils of the seas, for which underwriters are liable, and wear and tear and deterioration by decay, for which they are not liable; 1 Phill. Ins. § 1105. See PERILS OF THE SEA.

Perils of lakes, rivers, etc., are analogous to those of the seas; 1 Phill. Ins. § 1099, n.

Underwriters are not liable for loss occasioned by the gross misconduct of the assured or imputable to him; Biddle, Ins. 981; but if a vessel is seaworthy, with suitable officers and crew, underwriters are liable for loss though occasioned through the mistakes or want of assiduity and vigilance of the officers or men; 1 Phill. Ins. § 1049; Beach, Ins. 922. Underwriters are not answerable for loss directly attributable to the qualifications of the insured subject, independently of the specified risks; 1 Phillips, Ins. c. xiii. sect. v.; or for loss distinctly occasioned by the fraudulent or gross negligence of the assured.

Insurance against illegal risks—such as trading with an enemy, the slave-trade, piratical cruisers, and illegal kinds of business—is void; 1 Phill. Ins. §§ 210, 691. Policies usually contain express exceptions of some risks besides those impliedly excepted. These may be—in maritime insurance, contraband and illicit, interloping trade, violation of blockade, mobs and civil commotions; in fire policies, loss on jewelry, paintings, sculpture, by hazardous trades, etc.; in life policies, loss by suicide, risk in certain climates or localities, and in certain hazardous employments without express permission; 1 Phill. Ins. §§ 55, 63, 64. See Loss; TOTAL LOSS; AVERAGE; PERILS OF THE SEA.

RITUAL LAW. See ECCLESIASTICAL LAW.

RIVAGE. In French law, the shore, as of the sea. In English law, a toll anciently paid to the crown for the passage of boats or vessels on certain rivers. Cowell.

RIVER. A natural stream of water flowing betwixt banks or walls in a bed of considerable depth and width, being so called whether its current sets always one way or flows and reflows with the tide. Woolrych, Wat. 40; State v. Gilmanton, 14 N. H. 467.

A body of flowing water; a running stream of no specific dimensions, larger than a brook or rivulet, and pent on either side by walls or banks. Board of Com'rs v. Castetter, 7 Ind. App. 309, 33 N. E. 986, 34 N. E. 687.

Overflow waters that continue in a general course, although without defined banks, back into the water course from which they started or into another water course, do not become surface waters, but remain a part of the water course; Town of Jefferson v. Hicks, 23 Okl. 684, 102 Pac. 79, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 214.

Rivers are either public or private. Public rivers are divided into navigable and non-navigable,—the distinction being that the former flow and reflow with the tide, while the latter do not. Both are navigable in the popular sense of the term; Peyroux v. Howard, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 324, 8 L. Ed. 700; Com. v. Chapin, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 199, 16 Am. Dec. 386; Com'rs of Canal Fund v. Kempshall, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 404; 4 B. & C. 602.

At common law, the bed or soil of all rivers subject to the ebb and flow of the tide, to the extent of such ebb and flow, belongs to the crown; and the bed or soil of all rivers above the ebb and flow of the tide, or in which there is no tidal effect, belongs to the riparian proprietors, each owning to the centre or thread,—ad filum aque, which see,—where the opposite banks belong to different persons; Daveis 149; 5 B. & Ald. 268. In this country the common law has been recognized as the law of many of the states,—the state succeeding to the right of the crown; Ingraham v. Wilkinson, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 268, 16 Am. Dec. 342; Com'rs of Canal Fund v. Kempshall, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 404; Brown v. Chadbourne, 31 Me. 9, 50 Am. Dec. 641; Adams v. Pease, 2 Conn. 481; Stuart v. Clark's Lessee, 2 Swan (Tenn.) 9, 58 Am. Dec. 49; Walker v. Board, 16 Ohio, 540. See Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Illinois, 146 U. S. 387, 13 Sup. Ct. 110, 36 L. Ed. 1018. But in some states the common-law distinction founded on the tide is not recognized, and it is held that the ownership of the bed or soil of all rivers navigable for any useful purpose of trade or agriculture, whether tidal or fresh-water, is in the state; Shrunck v. Nav. Co., 14 S. & R. (Pa.) 71; Collins v. Benbury, 25 N. C. 277, 38 Am. Dec. 722; Cates Ex'rs v. Wadlington, 1 McCord (S. C.) 580, 10 Am. Dec. 699; McManus v. Carmichael, 3 Ia. 1; Com'rs of Homochitto River v. Withers, 29 Miss. 21, 64 Am. Dec. 126; Saunders v. R. Co., 71 Hun (N. Y.) 153, 23 N. Y. Supp. 927. See Shively v. Bowlby, 152 U. S. 1, 14 Sup. Ct. 548, 38 L. Ed. 331. At common law, the ownership of the crown extends to high-water mark; Ang. Tide-Wat. 69; 3 B. & Ald. 967; and in several states this rule has been followed; Gould v. R. Co., 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 616; Bell v. Gough, 23 N. J. L. 624; Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 53; Simons v. French, 25 Conn. 346; New Jersey Zinc & Iron Co. v. Canal & Banking Co., 44 N. J. Eq. 398, 15 Atl. 227, 1 L. R. A. 133; Hoboken v. R. Co., 124 U. S. 656, 8 Sup. Ct. 643, 31 L. Ed. 543; but in others it has been modified by extending the ownership of the riparian proprietor, subject to the servitudes of navigation and fishery, to low-water mark; Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. Trone, 28 Pa. 206; Thurman v. Morrison, 14 B. Monr. (Ky.) 367; Lessee of Blanchard v. Porter, 11 Ohio, 138; Webb v. Demopolis, 95 Ala. 116, 13 South. 289, 21 L. R. A. 62; unless these decisions may be explained as applying to fresh water rivers; 2 Smith, Lead. Cas. 224.

In Wisconsin the riparian ownership extends to the thread of the stream, subject, if such stream be navigable, to the right of the public to its use as a public highway for the passage of vessels; Kaukauna Water Power Co. v. Canal Co., 142 U. S. 254, 12 Sup. Ct. 173, 35 L. Ed. 1004. In Michigan, a grant of land bounded by a stream, whether navigable or not, carries with it the bed of the stream to the centre line thereof; Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Butler, 159 U. S. 87, 15 Sup. Ct. 991, 40 L. Ed. 85.

The banks of public rivers are private property of the adjacent owners as fully as their other land. The public has no right to land upon them or upon the shore adjacent thereto; Wetmore v. White Lead Co., 37 Barb. (N. Y.) 70. There is no right of way along the margin of lakes and navigable rivers unless acquired by express grant or prescription; Ledyard v. Ten Eyck, 36 Barb. (N. Y.) 102. One floating his property down a stream has no right, without a license, to use the banks of the stream to aid him; Olson v. Merrill, 42 Wis. 203. The right to raft timber does not carry with it the right to deposit it upon private property preparatory to being rafted; Compton v. Hankins, 90 Ala. 411, 8 South. 75, 9 L. R. A. 387, 24 Am. St. Rep. 823; Lorman v. Benson, 8 Mich. 18, 77 Am. Dec. 435; Smith v. Atkins, 110 Ky. 119, 60 S. W. 930, 53 L. R. A. 790, 96 Am. St. Rep. 424. The banks of a river are not subject to the servitude of use by navigators. They cannot land on the banks against the will of the owner except in case of peril, in which case vessels may land, either boat or cargo, at any point that safety may require; Ensminger v. People, 47 Ill. 384, 95 Am. Dec. 495.

Upon the acquisition of territory by the U. S., whether by cession from one of the states, or by treaty with a foreign country, or by discovery and settlement, the title and dominion over land under tide water passes to the United States for the benefit of the whole people and in trust for the several states; Shively v. Bowlby, 152 U. S. 1, 14 Sup. Ct. 548, 38 L. Ed. 331.

In England, many rivers originally private have become public, as regards the right of navigation, either by immemorial use or by acts of parliament; Woolr. Wat. 40. In this country, all rivers, whether tidal or fresh-water, are of common right, navigable highways, if naturally capable of use for the floating of vessels, boats, rafts, or even logs, or "whenever they are found of sufficient capacity to float the products of the mines, the forests, or the tillage of the country through which they flow, to market;" Browne v. Scofield, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 239; Brown v. Chadbourne, 31 Me. 9, 50 Am. Dec. 641; Scott v. Willson, 3 N. H. 321; People v. St. Louis, 5 Gilman (Ill.) 351, 48 Am. Dec. 339; Stuart v. Clark's Lessee, 2 Swan (Tenn.) 9, 58 Am. Dec. 49; Depew v. Board, 5 Ind. 8. As to the navigability of rivers, see NAVIGABLE WATERS. The state has the right to improve all such rivers, and to regulate them by lawful enactments for the public good; McCullough v. Wall, 4 Rich. (S. C.) 69, 53 Am. Dec. 715; Moor v. Veazie, 31 Me. 361; Board of Com'rs. v. Pidge, 5 Ind. 13. Any obstruction of them without legislative authority is a nuisance, and any persons having occasion to use the river may abate the same, or if injured thereby, may receive his damages from its author; Minturn v. Lisle, 4 Cal. 180; Arundel v. McCulloch, 10 Mass. 70; Missouri River Packet Co. v. R. Co., 1 McCrary 281, 2 Fed. 285; Seaman v. Mayor, 80 N. Y. 239, 36 Am. Rep. 612; Garitee v. Mayor, 53 Md. 422; Meyers v. St. Louis, 8 Mo. App. 266. See BRIDGE. One who seeks to abate an obstruction in a navigable stream and for an injunction must allege and show that the commerce for which he would utilize the stream is lawful; Spokane Mill Co. v. Post, 50 Fed. 429. By the ordinance of 1787, art. 4, relating to the northwestern territory, it is provided that the navigable waters leading into the Mississippi and St. Lawrence, and the carrying-places between the same, shall be common highways and forever free; Comr's of Homochitto River v. Withers, 29 Miss. 21, 64 Am. Dec. 126.

Congress has absolute power over the navigable waters of the U. S. and may declare what constitutes obstruction thereto. The act of March 1, 1893, created a California débris commission and prohibited hydraulic mining "directly or indirectly injuring the navigability" of the Sacramento and San Joaquin river systems; the commission may, on petition, grant permission to mine. The act is intended to prohibit such mining until such permission is granted; North Bloomfield Gravel Min. Co. v. U. S., 83 Fed. 2, 27 C. C. A. 395.

To bring obstructions and nuisances in navigable waters within a state within the cognizance of the federal courts, there must be a federal statute directly applicable to such streams; U. S. v. Boom Co., 81 Fed. 658, 26 C. C. A. 547.

Rivers, when naturally unfit for public use, as above described, are called private rivers. They are the private property of the riparian proprietors, and cannot be appropriated to public use, as highways, by deepening or improving their channels, without compensation to their owners; Walker v. Board of Public Works, 16 Ohio 540; Munson v. Hungerford, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 265. See WATER-COURSE.

A river, then, may be considered—as private in the case of shallow and obstructed streams; as private property, but subject to public use, when it can be navigated; and as public, both with regard to its use and property. Some rivers possess all these qualities. The Hudson is mentioned as an instance; in one part it is entirely private property; in another, the public have the use of it; and it is public property from the mouth as high up as the tide flows; Munson v. Hungerford, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 265.

Where the citizens of a state through which the upper waters of a river ran diverted a substantial part of the water for irrigation, in a bill filed by a lower state on the same river against the upper state, it was held that it did not appear that there had been more than an equitable use of the water in the upper state; Kansas v. Colorado, 206 U. S. 46, 27 Sup. Ct. 655, 51 L. Ed. 956.

See BOUNDARIES; FISHERY; RIPARIAN PROPRIETORS; POLLUTION; IRRIGATION.

In International Law. A river which is entirely within a state is part of its territory. Where a river forms a boundary between two states and flows to the ocean, it is "now generally considered that the right of navigation, for commercial purposes, is common to all the states inhabiting the different parts of its banks; but this is a right of innocent passage only, subject to the regulations of the abutting state. These rights have usually been adjusted by treaty; the Rhine is free in its whole navigable length, under the Congress of Vienna; and so of most of the other large rivers of Europe. In 1795, the free navigation of the Mississippi was secured to the United States by treaty. After much controversy, the St. Lawrence was, in 1871, stipulated to be free to the United States for the purposes of commerce, from the point where it ceased to be a boundary between it and Canada, to the sea, subject to the regulations of Great Britain or Canada, not inconsistent with such privilege. See 1 Halleck, Int. L., Baker's ed. 171.

Levees. The construction and maintenance of levees is an important subject of legislation in the states bordering on the Mississippi river and its tributaries. Such statutes usually provide for the construction of levees by some public authorities or under delegated power of eminent domain, and provide for a charge on the land benefited thereby for making and repairing the same. This tax is usually a lien on the land and applies to all lands lying within a certain specified distance of the Mississippi river. It has been held that such taxation is constitutional and that the power, whether exercised for general or local purposes, belongs to the legislature and is not subject to interference from the court; Williams v. Cammack, 27 Miss. 209, 61 Am. Dec. 508. The legislature has power to impose local taxation for such purposes, and laws imposing taxes upon certain districts, whether the citizens affected are of the same political division, subdivision, or district or not, are constitutional; Alcorn v. Hamer, 38 Miss. 652.

The building of the levees is a proper subject of legislation and a general tax may be levied therefor; State v. Clinton, 26 La. Ann. 564; Police Jury v. Tardos, 22 La. Ann. 58. In Louisiana, it has been made a criminal offense to cut levees; Laws 1875, 49. Crevasses in the district, do not release the owner of the land from the levee tax; there is in such case a greater necessity for its payment; Templeton v. Morgan, 16 La. Ann. 440. Every sovereign state may construct and maintain levees; Cubbins v. River Com'n, 204 Fed. 299.

See DRAINAGE DISTRICT; ASSESSMENT.

See RIPARIAN PROPRIETORS.

RIXA (Lat.). In Civil Law. A dispute; a quarrel. Dig. 48. 8. 17.

RIXATRIX (Lat.). A common scold.

ROAD. A passage through the country for the use of the people. Respublica v. Arnold, 3 Yeates (Pa.) 421. It is frequently used as a synonym of railroad; Central R. Co. v. Ry. Co., 46 N. J. L. 292; Parker v. R. Co., 33 Fed. 699; as when a charter power to take stock in companies for making "roads" to a city was held to authorize a subscription to the stock of a railroad; Evansville v. Deunett, 161 U. S. 434, 16 Sup. Ct. 613, 40 L. Ed. 760.

A state statute imposing a duty of two days' labor in every year on each person for the purpose of keeping roads in repair is not unconstitutional; Haney v. Com'rs of Bartow Co., 91 Ga. 770, 18 S. E. 28; Dennis v. Simon, 51 Ohio St. 233, 36 N. E. 832. As to the constitutionality of an act authorizing the establishment of a private way over property of another, see EMINENT DOMAIN, and also Witham v. Osburn, 4 Or. 318, 18 Am. Rep. 287, where such an act was held unconstitutional. See HIGHWAY; WAY; STREET; DEDICATION; EASEMENT.

In Maritime Law. An open passage of the sea, which, from the situation of the adjacent land and its own depth and width, affords a secure place for the common riding and anchoring of vessels. Hale, de Port. Mar. p. 2, c. 2. This word, however, does not appear to have a very definite meaning; 2 Chitty, Com. Law 4, 5. Often called "roadstead"; 2 Hugh 17.

ROADBED, ROADWAY. The roadbed of a railroad "is the foundation upon which the superstructure of a railroad rests;" the roadway is the right of way which has been held to be the property liable to taxation; Appeal of North Beach & M. R. Co., 32 Cal. 499, cited in Santa Clara Co. v. R. Co., 118 U. S. 413, 6 Sup. Ct. 1132, 30 L. Ed. 118. The roadbed does not include ends of ties of unusual length; Standard Ins. Co. v. Langston, 60 Ark. 381, 30 S. W. 427. A space of 10 ft. between railroad tracks is not the roadbed; Meadows v. Ins. Co., 129 Mo. 76, 31 S. W. 578, 50 Am. St. Rep. 427.

ROBBATOR. A robber. Bract.

ROBBER. One who commits a robbery. One who feloniously and forcibly takes goods or money to any value from the person of another by violence or putting him in fear.

ROBBERY. The felonious and forcible taking from the person of another, goods or money to any value, by violence or putting him in fear. 4 Bla. Com. 243; U. S. v. Wilson, Baldw. 102, Fed. Cas. No. 16,730. See Brown v. State, 33 Neb. 354, 50 N. W. 154.

In this offence the kind and value of the property taken is not material, but it must be of some value, however slight, to the person robbed; Wesley v. State, 61 Ala. 287; State v. Burke, 73 N. C. 83; State v. Howerton, 58 Mo. 581.

Robbery, by the common law, is larceny from the person, accompanied by violence or by putting in fear; and an indictment therefor must allege that the taking was from the person, and that it was by violence, or by putting in fear, in addition to the averments that are necessary in indictments for other larcenies; 1 Leach 195; Com. v. Humphries, 7 Mass. 242.

By "taking from the person" is meant not only the immediate taking from his person, but also in his presence when it is done with violence and against his consent; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 533; Kit v. State, 11 Humphr. (Tenn.) 167; Whart. C. L. 847. The taking must be by violence or putting the owner in fear; but both these circumstances need not concur; for if a man should be knocked down, and then robbed while he is insensible, the offence is still a robbery; Com. v. Snelling, 4 Binn. (Pa.) 379. And if the party be put in fear by threats and then robbed, it is not necessary there should be any greater violence; Com. v. Martin, 17 Mass. 359. The violence or putting in fear must be at the time of the act or immediately preceding; 1 C. & P. 304.

A person taking property from another under a bona fide claim of right, and with the purpose of applying it to the payment of a debt from the latter to himself, is not guilty of robbery, for in such case the animus furandi is lacking; Crawford v. State, 90 Ga. 701, 17 S. E. 628, 35 Am. St. Rep. 242.

One who is present and aids and abets a robbery is punishable as a principal, though he receives none of the money, and the amount taken is immaterial; State v. Brown, 104 Mo. 365, 16 S. W. 406.

ROE, RICHARD. A fictitious person who often appeared in England, prior to 1852, in certain actions. See EJECTMENT; PLEDGES.

ROGATORY LETTERS. See LETTERS ROGATORY.

ROGUE. A French word, which in that language signifies proud, arrogant. In some of the ancient English statutes it means an idle sturdy beggar, which is its meaning in law. Rogues are usually punished as vagrants. Although the word rogue is a word of reproach, yet to charge one as a rogue is not actionable; McClurg v. Ross, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 219. See Idol v. Jones, 13 N. C. 162; Caldwell v. Abbey, Hard. (Ky.) 529.

ROGUES' GALLERY. A court will not compel the delivery to one convicted of murder and afterwards, on a new trial, acquitted, of Bertillon measurements and photographs of him taken while in prison; In re Molineux, 177 N. Y. 395, 69 N. E. 727, 65 L. R. A. 104. See PRISONER.

RÔLE D'ÉQUIPAGE (Fr.). The list of a ship's crew; the muster roll.

ROLL. A schedule of parchment which may be turned up by the hand in the form of a pipe or tube. Jacob, Law Dict.; Colman v. Shattuck, 2 Hun (N. Y.) 502.

In early times, before paper came in common use, parchment was the substance employed for making records, and as the art of bookbinding was but little used, economy suggested as the most convenient mode the adding of sheet to sheet, as was found requisite, and they were tacked together in such a manner that the whole length might be wound up together in the form of rolls. The following list of English rolls is from 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L.:

The Pipe Rolls (q. v.) are the oldest records: Later, in the Exchequer, are the Memoranda Rolls (1199-1848); Originalia Rolls (1236-1837), recording the estreats or extracts transmitted from the Chancery to the Exchequer; the Liberate Rolls (1201-1436), containing the list of writs of Liberate, Allocate and Compute issued by the Chancery; the Wardrobe and Household Accounts (1199-1806), containing the accounts of the king's personal expenses and of the army, navy and civil service; the Receipt Rolls, containing an account of money received (superseded by the pells of issue and receipt, (which were journals of daily expenditure and receipt); Scutage Rolls (1215-1347), containing the accounts of the scutage (q. v.). Also there were other later subsidy rolls, containing accounts of later form of direct taxation.

Among Chancery enrollments the most important were the Charter Rolls (1199-1515); the Patent Rolls (1202 to the present day); and Close Rolls (1205 to the present day). By Charters the king's most solemn acts were declared; by Letters Patent his more public directions were promulgated, and by Letters Close his commands were addressed

ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH. The juristic personality of the Roman Catholic Church, with the right to sue and to take and hold property has been recognized by all systems of European law from the fourth century. It was formally recognized between Spain and the Papacy and by Spanish laws from the beginning of the settlements in the Indies, also by our treaty with Spain in 1898, whereby its property rights were solemnly safeguarded; Municipality of Ponce v. Roman Catholic Church in Porto Rico, 210 U. S. 296, 28 Sup. Ct. 737, 52 L. Ed. 1068. To the same effect as to the Philippines; Santos v. Roman Catholic Church, 212 U. S. 463, 29 Sup. Ct. 338, 53 L. Ed. 599.

That a municipality in Porto Rico may have furnished some of the funds for building or repairing churches cannot affect the title thereto of the Roman Catholic Church, to whom such funds were thus irrevocably donated; Municipality of Ponce v. Roman Catholic Church, 210 U. S. 296, 28 Sup. Ct. 737, 52 L. Ed. 1068.

See RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES; CATHOLIC SUPREMACY ACT.

ROMAN-DUTCH LAW. This law, as it prevails in South Africa, was derived from (1) the privileges granted by the counts of Holland and other feudal superiors; (2) collections of customary law and the municipal ordinances of the towns; (3) judicial decisions; (4) formulas of process; (5) legal treatises and projets de loi; (6) ordinances of the counts; and (7) codifications of provincial law.

It is said to be more Dutch than Roman; it has in the most part to be sought in the writings of the great Dutch jurists of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, but in case of doubt the Corpus Juris Civilis was the ultimate resort. The English law of evidence was introduced and English decisions and imperial legislation were strongly against the Dutch tradition. Each jurisdiction decides the cases in its own way in accordance with local usage and the traditions of its courts; judicial decisions are freely cited there; they are never cited in Ceylon. See Wessels' History of the Roman-Dutch Law, who complains of "the heterogeneous mass of legal systems" now prevalent in South Africa. See 10 Journal of Soc. of Comp. Leg. 261.

ROTA (Lat.). A court. A celebrated court of appeals at Rome, of which one judge must be a German, one a Frenchman, two Spaniards, and eight Italians. Encyc. Brit. Its decisions had great weight, but were not law, although judged by the law. There was also a celebrated rota at Genoa about the sixteenth century, or before, whose decisions in maritime matters form the first part of Straccha de Merc. See Ingersoll's Roccus.

ROTULI PIPEÆ. See PIPE ROLLS.

ROUT. A disturbance of the peace by persons assembled together with an intention to do a thing which if executed would have made them rioters, and actually making a motion towards the execution of their purpose. Hawk. Pl. C. 516.

It generally agrees in all particulars with a riot, except only in this: that it may be a complete offence without the execution of the intended enterprise; id. c. 65, s. 14; 1 Russ. Cr. 253; 4 Bla. Com. 140. Where a number of persons met, staked money, and agreed to engage in a prize-fight. It was held a rout; 2 Speers 599. RULE IN SHELLEY'S CASE. See SHELLEY'S CASE, RULE IN.

RULE NISI. A rule obtained on motion ex parte to show cause against the particular relief sought. Notice is served on the party against whom the rule is obtained, and the case is then heard like other motions, except that the party showing cause is entitled to open and reply. RULE OF COURSE. A rule which a court authorizes their officers to grant without formal application to a judge.

Rules of court are either general or special; the former are the laws by which the practice of the court is governed; the latter are special orders made in particular cases.

Disobedience to these is punished by giving judgment against the disobedient party, or by attachment for contempt.

See RULES OF PRACTICE.

RULE OF LAW. A general principle of law, recognized as such by authorities. It is called a rule because in new cases it is a rule for their decision; it embraces particular cases within general principles; 1 Bla. Com. 44; Ram, Judgm. 30; 3 B. & Ad. 34; 1 B. & C. 86; 4 Maule & S. 348. See MAXIM.

RULE OF 1756. The rule first enforced by Great Britain in 1756 that neutrals were not to be allowed in time of war to engage in commerce, such as coasting-trade and trade with the colonies of a belligerent, from which they were excluded in time of peace. The rule is also enforced by the United States and Japan. A proposal made at the London Naval Conference of 1908-1909 to incorporate the Rule of 1756 into the body of international law met with opposition and the Declaration of London (q. v.) merely states (Art. 57) that "the case where a neutral vessel is engaged in a trade which is closed in time of peace, remains outside the scope of, and is in no wise affected by, this rule," namely, that the neutral or enemy character of a vessel is determined by the flag which it is entitled to fly. 2 C. Rob. 186; 4 id. App.; 1 Kent 82.

RULE OF THE ROAD. See NAVIGATION RULES; HIGHWAY; BICYCLES. See 12 Encycl. Engl. Laws.

RULE OF 1793. The rule enforced by Great Britain in 1793 that when a commerce which had previously been considered a nominal monopoly is thrown open by a belligerent state, in time of war, to all nations, by a general regulation, neutrals have no right to avail themselves of the concession, and their entrance on such trade is a breach of the impartiality they are bound to observe. It differs from the Rule of 1756 (q. v.) in that the latter contemplates the granting by the belligerent of a special license to a particular neutral state. 2 Halleck, Int. L. 302.

RULE TO PLEAD. A rule of court requiring defendant to plead within a given time, entered as of course by the plaintiff on filing his declaration, or thereafter. On defendant's failure to put in his plea accordingly, a judgment in the nature of a judgment by default may be entered against him. In England, under the common-law Procedure Act of 1852, the rule to plead is abolished, a notice to plead indorsed on the declaration being sufficient. The Judicature Act of 1875 allows the defendant eight days for his defense after the delivery of the statement of claim.

RULE TO SHOW CAUSE. An order made by the court, in a particular case, upon motion of one of the parties calling upon the other to appear at a particular time before the court, to show cause, if any he have, why a certain thing should not be done.

This rule is granted generally upon the oath or affirmation of the applicant; but upon the hearing the evidence of competent witnesses must be given to support the rule, and the affidavit of the applicant is insufficient. See RULE ABSOLUTE; RULE NISI.

RULES. Certain limits without the actual walls of the prisons, where the prisoner, on proper security previously given to the proper authority, may reside. These limits are considered, for all legal and practical purposes, as merely a further extension of the prison walls. So used in America. See 3 Bibb 202. The rules or permission to reside without the prison may be obtained by any person not committed criminally; 2 Stra. 845; nor for contempt; id. 817; by satisfying the marshal or warden or other authority of the security with which he may grant such permission.

Proceedings in an action out of court, and in vacation time. See Southall's Adm'r v. Bank, 12 Gratt. (Va.) 312.

Rules is used in the plural to indicate rule day: Thus "May Rules." See Steam-Gauge & Lantern Co. v. Meyrose, 27 Fed. 215.

RULES OF PRACTICE. Certain orders made by the courts for the purpose of regulating the practice of members of the bar and others.

Every court of record has an inherent power to make rules for the transaction of its business; which rules they may from time to time change, alter, rescind, or repeal. While they are in force, they must be applied to all cases which fall within them; they can use no discretion, unless such discretion is authorized by the rules themselves. Rules of court cannot, of course, contravene the constitution or the law of the land. Thompson v. Hatch, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 512; Clarke v. Magruder, 2 Harr. & J. (Md.) 79; Fullerton v. Bank, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 604, 7 L. Ed. 280; Boas v. Nagle, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 253.

General rules are binding upon the court as well as upon the parties, except where in the original rule or body of rules there is power to exercise discretion in particular cases; Quynn v. Brooke, 22 Md. 288; Pratt v. Pratt, 157 Mass. 503, 32 N. E. 747, 21 L. R. A. 97; Magnuson v. Billings, 152 Ind. 177, 52 N. E. 803; Coyote G. & S. M. Co. v. Ruble, 9 Or. 121 (containing an elaborate discussion of the subject); so of rules of appeal; Taylor v. Leesnitzer, 31 App. D. C. 92; Royal Neighbors of America v. Simon, 135 Ill. App. 599. In many of the above cases the violation of its rule by the court was held to be reversible error. In Southern Pac. Co. v. Hamilton, 54 Fed. 474, 4 C. C. A. 441, it is said to be within the power of a court to suspend its rules. In the following cases there is a disposition to relax the operation of general rules where their enforcement would work injustice. An examination of many of them will show that what is said is obiter, while in others of them the rules in question are those of pleading and practice merely; Gillette-Herzog Mfg. Co. v. Ashton, 55 Minn. 75, 56 N. W. 576; Lance v. Bonnell, 105 Pa. 46; Eastman v. Mfg. Co., 44 N. H. 143, 82 Am. Dec. 201; Southern Pac. Co. v. Johnson, 69 Fed. 559, 16 C. C. A. 317; McNeish v. Oats Co., 57 Vt. 316. Rules were held binding in Hagar v. Mead, 25 Cal. 599, and Hanson v. McCue, 43 Cal. 178; but cases in People v. Williams, 32 Cal. 280, Pickett v. Wallace, 54 Cal. 147, and Sullivan v. Wallace, 73 Cal. 307, 14 Pac. 789, are conflicting with those cases. See note to 8 Del. Ch. 446.

A settled practice of printing the records in patent cases and taxing it as costs has the effect of a rule of court; Detroit Heating & Lighting Co. v. Kemp, 182 Fed. 847.

RUNNING AT LARGE. A term applied to animals estray, wandering apparently without owner or keeper, and not confined to any certain place. In Wright v. Clark, 50 Vt. 130, 28 Am. Rep. 496, a hound, in close pursuit of a fox, and out of sight and hearing of its master, was held not to be within the meaning of a statute permitting any one to kill a dog "running at large off the premises of the owner or keeper, without a collar with the keeper's name on it." Animals escaping from the owner's premises cannot be said to be running at large; the phrase implies permission or assent, or at least some fault, on the owner's part; Coles v. Burns, 21 Hun (N. Y.) 249; but contra, Welsh v. R. Co., 53 Ia. 632, 6 N. W. 13. See Thompson v. Corpestein, 52 Cal. 653. Where cattle, while being driven along a public highway, escaped, without negligence on the part of the driver and went upon adjoining, unfenced lands, it was held the landowner could recover for the trespass; Wood v. Snider, 187 N. Y. 28, 79 N. E. 858, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 912.

An animal running on the range where it was permitted to run by its owner has been held not an estray, especially where the owner was known to the person taking it up;

Bouv.—187

Shepherd v. Hawley, 4 Or. 206; Walters v. Glats, 29 Ia. 437. An owner is liable to a penalty for cattle lying about on a highway, but not when they are being driven and lie down only for a short time; 3 Q. B. 345.

S

S. C. Same case; supreme court.

S S. A collar formerly worn on state occasions by the Lord Chief Justice of England, and of the Common Pleas and the Lord Chief Baron—now only by the first named of these (q. v.).

The origin and history of this collar have given rise to much learned discussion. The letter "S" on the chain is accounted for in various ways as representing Souvenir or Soverayne of the ter sanctus of the Salisbury Liturgy. It appears to have originated with John of Gaunt. It became the badge of the Lancastrians and was worn by Henry V. The first Judge to wear it was Sir Richard Newton, Chief Justice of the King's Bench under Henry VI. It was still worn by the Chiefs of the three courts until 1875. It was worn by Lord Russell as Lord Chief Justice of England and has been by his successors. In derwick, "King's Peace" 175. See 136 Law Times 73. It was formerly the badge of the House of Lancaster. Oxford Dict. s. v. Collar.

SAC, SAK. An ancient privilege, which a lord of a manor claimed to have in his court, of holding plea in causes of trespass arising among his tenants, and imposing fines touching the same.

A term which seems to mean a cause or matter before a court what in later Latin was termed placitum. Soc seems to have the same meaning. It is apparently derived from a word which means seeking; 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 11; Maitland, Domesday 84, 259.

SACABURTH, SACABERE (from sac, cause, and burh, pledge). He that is robbed and puts in surety to prosecute the felon with fresh suit. Britton, c. 15, 29; Bracton, l. 3, c. 32; Cowell.

The voluntary or decisive oath of the civil law, where one of the parties to a suit, not being able to prove his case, offers to refer the decision of the cause to the oath of his adversary, who is bound to accept or make the same offer on his part, or the whole is considered as confessed by him. 3 Bla. Com. 342.

SAFE. A metal receptacle for the preservation of valuables. See INSURANCE.

SAFE-CONDUCT. A written permission given by a belligerent government, or one of its naval or military commanders, enabling an enemy subject to go to a particular place for a particular object. Risley, Law of War 156.

A distinction is sometimes made between a passport, conferring a general permission to travel in the territory belonging to, or occupied by, the belligerent, and a safe-conduct, conferring permission upon an enemy subject or others to proceed to a particular place for a defined object. II Opp. § 218.

Passports and safe-conducts are not binding upon the other belligerent; they may also be withdrawn by the belligerent granting them on grounds of military expediency, in which case the persons holding them must be allowed to withdraw in safety. They may be given for an indefinite period or for a limited time.

The grantor of the safe-conduct tacitly pledges himself to protect the holder of it and to punish any person subject to his command who may violate it. Should the holder be detained beyond the time limited, by illness or some cause over which he has no control, he should still be protected, but if he otherwise exceeds the limited time, he is subject to the ordinary rules of war or to penalties, if such are imposed by the law of the place; Risley, L. of War 156.

For a limited territory, they may be framed by a commander; but when general, they must proceed from the supreme authority.

The name of an instrument given to the captain or master of a ship to proceed on a particular voyage: it usually contains his name and residence, the name, description, and destination of the ship, with such other matters as the practice of the place requires. This document is indispensably necessary for the safety of every neutral ship.

The act of Congress of April 30, 1790, s. 27, punishes the violation of any safe-conduct or passport granted under the authority of the United States, on conviction, with imprisonment, not exceeding three years, and a fine at the discretion of the court.

SAFE DEPOSIT COMPANY. A company which maintains vaults for the deposit and safe-keeping of valuables in which compartments or boxes are rented to customers who have exclusive access thereto, subject to the oversight and under the rules and regulations of the company. It was formerly the custom for banks to accept gratuitously the custody of boxes containing securities for their customers; but this custom has been discontinued since the establishment of companies making that their special business. The relation of the company to the depositor is rather that of bailor and bailee, though it has been said that there is a resemblance to the relation of landlord and tenant, but that it exists merely in form; 9 Harv. L. Rev. 131; but a case of joint renting, cited infra, seems to the contrary. The reasons given for the relation of bailor and bailee are that by analogy to the case of an agreement for board and lodging, there is no interest acquired by the depositor in the real estate, and the agreement of the company for safe-keeping established the relation of bailor and bailee; id. 132. This view has been sustained in the courts; Roberts v. Safe Deposit Co., 123 N. Y. 57, 25 N. E. 294, 9 L. R. A. 438, 20 Am. St. Rep. 718. In the latter case the plaintiff had an allotment of space in a storage house for the safe-keeping of household furniture under an agreement that the same would be securely kept and guarded. The action was brought to recover damages for the loss of the property by theft committed by persons in charge of the building, and the relation of the parties was described by Earl, J., as "a species of bailment like that existing in the case of a depositor in a safe deposit company who hires a box for his valuables and keeps the key." In such case he says further, that the company, without special contract, would be held to at least ordinary care, the duty of which would arise from the nature of the business and the relation of the parties.

From this relation springs naturally the obligation and liability of the company, and where the contract was that the depositor was to "keep a constant and adequate guard and watch over and upon the safe," and the bonds were stolen, there being no evidence that the vault was broken or the lock tampered with, it was held to throw upon the company the burden of showing whether it was guilty of negligence, and that question was properly left to the jury; Safe Deposit Co. of Pittsburgh v. Pollock, 85 Pa. 391, 27 Am. Rep. 660.

Where property was taken from the safe under a search warrant against the depositor, the description in which did not actually correspond with the property taken, the company was held liable for not resisting so far as it was able to do, and contenting itself with a mere protest; Roberts v. Safe Deposit Co., 123 N. Y. 57, 25 N. E. 294, 9 L. R. A. 438, 20 Am. St. Rep. 718. The burden of proof in actions against such companies for damages on account of negligence is, in accordance with the general rule in similar cases, upon the plaintiff unless, as in the Pennsylvania case above cited, there is prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of the defendant which demands an explanation and a prima facie case is made by the bailor when he shows such loss or damage to the chattels as ordinarily does not happen if such care as the law requires has been exercised; Arnot v. Branconier, 14 Mo. App. 431; Collins v. Bennett, 46 N. Y. 490; 9 Harv. L. Rev. 134.

The relation of the renter of a box is that of bailor and bailee; National Safe Deposit Co. v. Stead, 250 Ill. 584, 95 N. E. 973, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 430; or that of a landlord of an office building and his tenant; People ex rel. Glynn v. Deposit Co., 159 App. Div. 98, 143 N. Y. Supp. 849.

An important question arises as to the position and duty of the company where legal proceedings are taken against the property of the depositor, and the conclusion from an examination of the subject is thus stated: "The extent of their duty is reached in satisfying themselves beyond question that the process is legal and regular; and that, this being so, the company is exempt from all responsibility for the subsequent acts of the officer under it; . . . that the company cannot be subjected to garnishment or trustee process; that the only process by which property deposited with it can be reached is through seizure by the sheriff under direct attachment; also that the company is not liable for property of third persons taken from the safe of the debtor, either as his property or because confused with this property." 9 Harv. L. Rev. 135. That there can be no garnishment in such case would seem to arise from the principle that to be subjected to it, a bailee must have more than constructive possession; as, in the case of baggage in transportation, horses in a livery stable, etc.; Waples, Attachment § 453. The point was directly decided with respect to a safe deposit company in Gregg v. Hilson, 8 Phila. (Pa.) 91; and as to a locked trunk deposited in a bank vault in Bottom v. Clarke, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 487.

It is held contra that a safe deposit company may be garnished for the contents of a sealed package in the box of a customer although it is ignorant of the contents, if the statute provides a method by which the court can ascertain such contents; Tillinghast v. Johnson, 34 R. I. 136, 82 Atl. 788.

The property in the safe may be seized under a direct attachment; U. S. v. Graff, 67 Barb. (N. Y.) 304; Roberts v. Deposit Co., 123 N. Y. 57, 25 N. E. 294, 9 L. R. A. 438, 20 Am. St. Rep. 718. The officer may be directed in the order of attachment to open the safe, and the company's officers may be required to give such assistance as will not lead to a breach of trust; 9 Harv. L. Rev. 139. It has been held that an officer may force the door of a warehouse if refused admittance by those in charge of it; Burton v. Wilkinson, 18 Vt. 186, 46 Am. Dec. 145; and in the case of a safe deposit company the officers and representatives of the company were not allowed to be present at the time of the opening of the safe by the sheriff; U. S. v. Graff, 67 Barb. (N. Y.) 304.

In case of a joint rental of a safe by two or more persons, they were treated as co-tenants of real estate, and a renewal of the lease obtained by one of the renters in his own name was held to inure to the benefit of the co-tenants; Hackett v. Patterson, 16 N. Y. Supp. 170. Where one co-tenant abstracted, without authority, a stock certificate and transferred it to an innocent purchaser for value, it was held that it had not been intrusted to the possession of the wrongdoer either directly or by implication, and he was not authorized to remove it from the box and the transfer passed no title; Rangor Electric Light & P. Co. v. Robinson, 52 Fed. 520.

A state may regulate the incidents of distribution of property within the state belonging to decedents and prescribe times and conditions for delivery thereof by safe deposit companies; and a statute operating to seal safe deposit boxes for a reasonable period after the death of the renter, is not unconstitutional; nor can a surviving joint renter of such box object, the statute having been in force when the contract was made; Nat. Safe Dep. Co. v. Stead, Atty.-Gen. of Ill., 232 U. S. 58, 34 Sup. Ct. 209, 58 L. Ed. —, affirming 250 Ill. 584, 95 N. E. 973, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 430.

SAFE LOADING PLACE. A place where a vessel can be rendered safe for loading by reasonable measures of precaution. 14 Q. B. D. 105; 54 L. J. Q. B. 121.

SAFE-PLEDGE. A surety given that a man shall appear upon a certain day. Bracton, l. 4, c. 1.

SAFEGUARD. A protection of the king to one who is a stranger, who fears violence from some of his subjects for seeking his right by course of law. Reg. Orig. 26.

A notification by a belligerent commander that buildings or other property upon which the notification is posted up are exempt from interference on the part of his troops. Holland, Laws and Customs of War 44.

The term is likewise used to describe a guard of soldiers who are detailed to accompany enemy subjects or to protect certain enemy property. Soldiers on this duty are inviolable on the part of the other belligerent; if they fall into the hands of the other belligerent they must be sent back in safety to their own army. II Opp. § 219.

SAFELY. "Safely and securely" in a declaration in bailment means with due care. 15 L. J. C. P. 182.

SAFETY APPLIANCE ACT. The act of Congress of March 2, 1893, provides that after January 1, 1898, it shall be unlawful for common carriers in interstate commerce by railroad to use locomotive engines not equipped with power driving-wheel brakes and appliances for operating the train brake system, or to run a train that has not a sufficient number of cars in it so equipped that the engineer on the locomotive can control its speed without requiring hand brakes; and to haul or use on its line any car in interstate traffic "not equipped with couplers coupling automatically by impact, and which can be uncoupled without the necessity of men going between the ends of the cars."

Section 3 provides that a carrier may refuse to receive from connecting lines or shippers any cars not sufficiently equipped.

Section 4 provides that it shall be unlawful for any railroad to use any car in such traffic which shall not have grab irons in the ends and sides of each car.

Section 5 provides that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall fix a standard for all such carriers as to the height of drawbars for freight cars, and that no cars, loaded or unloaded, shall be used in such traffic, which have not complied with the standard.

Section 8 provides that any employee who may be injured by any locomotive, etc., in use contrary to the act, shall not be deemed to have assumed the risk thereby occasioned, although continuing in the employment after the unlawful use, etc.; had been brought to his knowledge.

An amendment (April 14, 1910) provides that cars subject to the act must be equipped with secure sill steps and sufficient hand brakes, to be designated by the Interstate Commerce Commission, with the provision that if a car properly equipped shall have become defective while in use, it may be hauled from the place where the defect was first discovered to the nearest repair point without liability to a penalty, if such repairs cannot be made except at such point, but such hauling is at the sole risk of the carrier; and in such case defective cars cannot be hauled by chains in revenue trains or in association with other cars that are commercially used, unless such defective cars contain livestock or perishable freight.

In St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Taylor, 210 U. S. 281, 28 Sup. Ct. 616, 52 L. Ed. 1061, it was held that legislative power is not unconstitutionally delegated by the section of the act which provides that the American Railway Association shall designate to the Interstate Commerce Commission the standard height of drawbars.

The act extends to a stock yard company whose tracks are exclusively on its own premises, but which, with its own locomotives, hauls loaded cars to the transfer tracks of connecting interstate commerce lines; Williamsburgh City Fire Ins. Co. v. Willard, 164 Fed. 404, 90 C. C. A. 392, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 103; and to a terminal company which transfers cars from the lines of one interstate carrier to those of another; U. S. v. Terminal Co., 144 Fed. 861; also to a railroad the tracks of which are wholly within a county but which shifts between trunk lines cars en route from one state to another; Belt R. Co. of Chicago v. U. S., 168 Fed. 542, 93 C. C. A. 666, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 582.

Locomotive engines are covered by "any car" as used in the act; and are required to have automatic couplers; Johnson v. Southern Pac. Co., 196 U. S. 1, 25 Sup. Ct. 158, 49 L. Ed. 363; and (under the amendment of 1903) standard height of drawbars; Southern Ry. Co. v. Crockett, 234 U. S. 725, 34 Sup. Ct. 897, 58 L. Ed. —; a steam shovel car is within the act; Schlemmer v. Ry. Co., 205 U. S. 1, 27 Sup. Ct. 407, 51 L. Ed. 681; so is the tender of a switch engine placing cars in interstate commerce in a yard siding; Philadelphia & R. Ry. Co. v. Winkler, 4 Pennewill (Del.) 387, 56 Atl. 112; and a dining car which is in constant use while waiting for the making up of a train for its next interstate trip; Johnson v. Southern Pac. Co., 196 U. S. 1, 25 Sup. Ct. 158, 49 L. Ed. 363.

The act as amended embraces all locomotives, cars and similar vehicles used on any railway that is a highway of commerce and is not confined exclusively to vehicles engaged in such commerce; Southern Ry. Co. v. U. S., 222 U. S. 20, 32 Sup. Ct. 2, 56 L. Ed. 72. It is immaterial whether a car is full or empty; Johnson v. Ry. Co., 178 Fed. 643, 102 C. C. A. 89; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. U. S., 186 Fed. 280, 108 C. C. A. 326.

An inspector is not bound to inform a carrier of defects in its appliances; Norfolk & W. Ry. Co. v. U. S., 191 Fed. 302, 112 C. C. A. 46.

In Larabee v. R. Co., 182 Mass. 348, 66 N. E. 1032, it was held that a locomotive tender was not a car; so in Blanchard v. Ry. Co., 139 Mich. 694, 103 N. W. 170; automatic coupler acts do not apply to electric street railway cars; 24 Oh. C. C. 67.

The duty under the act to equip cars used in moving interstate traffic with couplers coupling automatically by impact which can be uncoupled without any necessity for men going between the ends of the cars, is absolute; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Taylor, 210 U. S. 281, 28 Sup. Ct. 616, 52 L. Ed. 1061; Chicago Junction R. Co. v. King, 169 Fed. 372, 94 C. C. A. 652; it is not a matter of due diligence, but of absolute duty; Delk v. R. Co., 220 U. S. 580, 31 Sup. Ct. 617, 55 L. Ed. 590; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. U. S., 220 U. S. 559, 31 Sup. Ct. 612, 55 L. Ed. 582; nor is the carrier's duty complete by supplying automatic couplers in the first instance. They must at all times be kept in such condition that they may be operated without the necessity of men going between the ends of the cars to couple and uncouple them; Southern R. Co. v. Snyder, 205 Fed. 868, 124 C. C. A. 60; Johnson v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 196 U. S. 1, 25 Sup. Ct. 158, 49 L. Ed. 363. The failure of the coupler to work sustains a charge of negligence; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Brown, 229 U. S. 317, 33 Sup. Ct. 840, 57 L. Ed. 1204. It is no defense that one side will couple; U. S. v. R. Co., 157 Fed. 893; U. S. v. Southern Pac. Co., 167 Fed. 699; nor for the carrier to show that a car with a defective coupler was moved without its knowledge; U. S. v. Southern Pac. Co., 167 Fed.

699; nor that it employed competent inspectors and repairers to care for such safety appliances; U. S. v. Southern R. Co., 135 Fed. 122; nor that the lowering of a draw bar was due to the breaking of a king pin and not to any defect of its own; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. U. S., 198 Fed. 637, 117 C. C. A. 341; nor that the grab iron was lost or the coupling became defective so recently as to make it impossible, with ordinary care, to replace or repair them; U. S. v. R. Co., 167 Fed. 198.

Every car in a train in interstate commerce is impressed with an interstate character; U. S. v. R. Co., 167 Fed. 198.

The penalty in the act is civil; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. U. S., 220 U. S. 559, 31 Sup. Ct. 612, 55 L. Ed. 582.

The act took away from the carrier the defence of assumption of risk by the employé, but did not affect that of contributory negligence; Schlemmer v. R. Co., 220 U. S. 590, 31 Sup. Ct. 561, 55 L. Ed. 596.

The scope of the act was fully considered in St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Taylor, 210 U. S. 281, 28 Sup. Ct. 616, 52 L. Ed. 1061; see Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. U. S., 220 U. S. 559, 31 Sup. Ct. 612, 55 L. Ed. 582.

SAID. Before mentioned.

In contracts and pleadings it is usual and proper, when it is desired to speak of a person or thing before mentioned, to designate them by the term said or aforesaid, or by some similar term; otherwise the latter description will be ill for want of certainty. Com. Dig. Pleader (C 18); Gould, Pl. § 63. Adopted in Brown v. State, 28 Tex. App. 379, 13 S. W. 150.

The reference of the word said is to be determined, in any given case, by the sense. Same refers to the next antecedent, but in the interpretation of a written instrument, the word said does so only when the plain meaning requires it; 2 Kent 555; Wilkinson v. State, 10 Ind. 373.

SAILING. It is sometimes important, in the construction of a charter party, or marine insurance policy, to know when a vessel commenced her voyage, and to this end to determine what constitutes a sailing. It has been held that complete readiness for the sea, with the intention of proceeding at once on the voyage, is sufficient, though head winds should prevent any actual progress; Bowen v. Hope Ins. Co., 20 Pick. (Mass.) 275, 32 Am. Dec. 213; see Pedersen v. Pagenstecher, 32 Fed. 842; but the word sail is held to be a technical word and to mean to start on a voyage; 34 L. J. C. P. 195; so a ship which drew out from its wharf and anchored in a river, whence it proceeded the next day, sailed on the latter day; [1898] 1 Q. B. 27.

Where a ship was ready for sea, and had made a measurable progress by towage, but not by sails, to the mouth of the harbor, she was held by Cadwalader, J., to have sailed; The Francesca Curro, 4 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 415; s. c. 2 Cadw. Dec. 520.

A ship by quitting her moorings on or before the day named, in a state ready for sea, with a bona fide intention of prosecuting the voyage, has sailed, notwithstanding her progress was soon after delayed by an unforeseen event; but if she was not ready for sea when she quit her moorings this is evidence that there was no such bona fide intention, any appearance to the contrary notwithstanding; it will be held that she had not sailed; Maclachlan, Merch. Shipp. 414.

If the vessel quits her moorings and removes, though only to a short distance, being perfectly ready to proceed upon her voyage, and is by some subsequent occurrence detained, that is, nevertheless, a sailing; 3 B. & Ad. 514. There can be no "sailing" without a clear intention on the part of the master to proceed directly on his voyage; [1898] 1 Q. B. 27. Moving from the wharf into the stream may be enough; id. See 37 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 201, an article by Erskine Hazard Dickson; Maclachlan, Mer. Ship. 414.

As advanced freight is frequently made payable at or within a certain time after final sailing from the port of loading, there has been much discussion as to the meaning of both of these terms. In the leading English case, Parke, B., considered that final sailing "meant more than if the word sailing were used alone," that it had reference to the particular port of Cardiff, out of which the vessel sailed, meaning a final departure and being out of the limits of the artificial port, at sea, ready to proceed upon her voyage; 23 L. J. Ex. 169. Where the ship left the harbor to anchor in the roadstead and lie there until the crew should be completed, without the intention of returning to the harbor, it was held that she had not sailed; 24 L. J. Q. B. 340; so also where the master took the vessel out of the port and left her in the roads under easy sailing, while he returned ashore to complete her papers; 26 id. 239. "Final sailing I apprehend means getting clear of the port for the purpose of proceeding on the voyage;" Lindley, L. J., in 9 Q. B. D. 679.

SAILING INSTRUCTIONS. Written or printed directions, delivered by the commanding officer of a convoy to the several masters of the ships under his care, by which they are enabled to understand and answer his signals, to know the place of rendezvous appointed for the fleet in case of dispersion by storm, by an enemy, or by any other accident.

Without sailing instructions no vessel can have the full protection and benefit of convoy. Marsh. Ins. 368.

SAILORS. Seamen; mariners. See SEAMEN; SHIPPING ARTICLES.

ST. MARTIN LE GRAND, COURT OF. An ancient court in London, of local importance, formerly held in the church from which it took its name.

SAIO. A tip-staff or sergeant-at-arms. Cowell; Cunningham.

SAISIE-ARRÊT. In French Law. An attachment of property in the hands of a third person.

SAISIE-EXECUTION. In French Law. A writ of execution by which the creditor places under the custody of the law the movables of his debtor, which are liable to seizure, in order that out of them he may obtain payment of the debt due by him. La. Code of Pract. art. 641; Dalloz, Dict. It is a writ very similar to the feri facias of the common law.

SAISIE-FORAIN. In French Law. A permission given by the proper judicial officer to authorize a creditor to seize the property of his debtor in the district which he inhabits. Dalloz, Dict. It has the effect of an attachment of property, which is applied to the payment of the debt due.

SAISIE-GAGERIE. In French Law. A conservatory act of execution, by which the owner or principal lessor of a house or farm causes the furniture of the house or farm leased, and on which he has a lien, to be seized, in order to obtain the rent due to him. It is similar to the distress of the common law. Dalloz, Dict.

SAISIE-IMMOBILIÈRE. In French Law. A writ by which the creditor puts in the custody of the law the immovables of his debtor, that out of the proceeds of their sale he may be paid his demand.

SAK AND SOC. See SAC.

SALADIN'S TENTH. A tax imposed in England and France, in 1188, by Pope Innocent III., to raise a fund for the crusade undertaken by Richard I. of England and Philip Augustus of France, against Saladin, Sultan of Egypt, then going to besiege Jerusalem. Encyc. Lond.; Whart.

SALARY. A reward or recompense for services performed.

It is usually applied to the reward paid to a public officer for the performance of his official duties. (Adopted in 24 Fla. 29.)

Salary is also applied to the reward paid for the performance of other services; but if it be not fixed for each year it is called honorarium. Pothier, Pand. According to M. Duvergier, the distinction between honorarium and salary is this. By the former is understood the reward given to the most elevated professions for services performed; and by the latter the price of hiring of domestic servants and workmen; 19 Toullier, n. 268, p. 292, note.

There is this difference between salary and price; the former is the reward paid for services or for the hire of things; the latter is the consideration paid for a thing sold; Leg. Elem. § 907. Salary seems to denote a higher degree of employment and is suggestive of a larger compensation for more important services than wages, which indicates inconsiderable pay; Meyers v. New York, 69 Hun 291, 23 N. Y. Supp. 484. See also 42 Alb. L. J. 332; Com. v. Butler, 99 Pa. 542; where salary is regarded as a per annum compensation, while wages are defined as compensation paid or to be paid by the day, week, etc.

"Wages and salary seem to be synonymous convertible terms, though use and general acceptance have given to the word 'salary' a significance somewhat different from the word 'wages' in this, that the former is understood to relate to position or office, to be the compensation given for official or other service as distinguished from 'wages,' the compensation for labor;" Bell v. Live Stock Co. (Tex.) 11 S. W. 344, 3 L. R. A. 642. Wages and salary have also been held to be synonymous in other cases; Com. v. Butler, 99 Pa. 535, 542; Morse v. Robertson, 9 Hawaii, 195, 197; White v. Hayden, 126 Cal. 621, 59 Pac. 118; there is no substantial difference in the application of exemption acts; Freem. Ex. § 234, where the subject is discussed at length, giving the language of state statutes. It has been held that the salary of a public official is in no fair sense wages; People v. Myers, 11 N. Y. Supp. 217; and is not exempt from garnishment under a statute exempting wages; McLellan v. Young, 54 Ga. 399, 21 Am. Rep. 276. Salary is suggestive of a larger compensation or higher degree of employment than wages, which indicates inconsiderable pay, in an act providing that no honorably discharged Union soldier receiving a salary shall be removed except for cause shown; Meyers v. New York, 69 Hun, 291, 23 N. Y. Supp. 484; People v. Brookfield, 13 Misc. Rep. 566, 34 N. Y. Supp. 674, where a laborer receiving $2 per day was held not to receive a salary. "Wages of laborers" means earnings of a laborer by manual toil; Smith v. Brooke, 49 Pa. 147; "wages of employees" in an order authorizing payment of wages by a receiver does not cover services of counsel for special purposes; Louisville, E. & St. L. R. Co. v. Wilson, 138 U. S. 501, 11 Sup. Ct. 405, 34 L. Ed. 1023.

SALE. An agreement whereby the seller transfers the property in goods to the buyer for a consideration called the price.

"A contract by which property is transferred from the seller to the buyer for a fixed price in money paid or agreed to be paid by the buyer." De Bary v. Dunne, 172 Fed. 940.

There is a fundamental distinction between a contract to sell in the future and a present sale—often expressed by "executory" and "executed" sales. It depends upon whether the property in the goods is transferred. If transferred, there is a sale though the price be not paid; if not transferred, it is a contract of sale, even though the price be paid; Williston, Sales, § 2. Conditional sales constitute an intermediate class—the assent to the transfer, though not the transfer, being given at the time the bargain is made. Such partake more of the nature of sales than of contracts of sale, the title being transferred by force of the original bargain; id. § 6.

An executed sale is both a contract and a conveyance.

The Uniform Sales Act, governing the sales of personal property, has been passed in Arizona, Connecticut, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Rhode Island, Wisconsin and Alaska. It followed substantially the English Act of 1893, but with important changes.

This contract differs from a barter or exchange in this that in the latter the price or consideration, instead of being paid in money, is paid in goods or merchandise susceptible of a valuation. Mitchell v. Gile, 12 N. H. 390; Stevenson v. State, 65 Ind. 409; Loomis v. Wainwright, 21 Vt. 520. See PRICE. It differs from accord and satisfaction, because in that contract the thing is given for the purpose of quieting a claim, and not for a price; and from bailment, because there the agreement is for the return of the subject-matter, in its original or an altered form, while in sale it is for the return of an equivalent in money; L. R. 3 P. C. 101; Frost v. Cattle Co., 81 Tex. 505, 17 S. W. 52, 26 Am. St. Rep. 831; and see Hunt v. Wyman, 100 Mass. 198; Sturm v. Boker, 150 U. S. 312, 14 Sup. Ct. 99, 37 L. Ed. 1093.

An absolute sale is one made and completed without any condition whatever.

A conditional sale is one which depends for its validity upon the fulfillment of some condition. The term is usually confined to sales in which the seller retains the title until the payment of the price.

A forced sale is one made without the consent of the owner of the property, by some officer appointed by law, as by a marshal or a sheriff, in obedience to the mandate of a competent tribunal. This sale has the effect to transfer all the rights the owner had in the property, but it does not, like a voluntary sale of personal property, guarantee a title to the thing sold; it merely transfers the rights of the person as whose property it has been seized. This kind of a sale is sometimes called a judicial sale.

A private sale is one negotiated and concluded privately between buyer and seller, and not made by advertisement and public outcry or auction. Barcello v. Hapgood, 118 N. C. 712, 24 S. E. 124.

A public sale is one made at auction to the highest bidder. Auction sales sometimes are voluntary, as when the owner chooses to sell his goods in this way, and then as between the seller and the buyer the usual rules relating to sales apply; or they are involuntary or forced when the same rules do not apply.

A voluntary sale is one made freely without constraint by the owner of the thing sold; this is the common case of sales, and to this class the general rules of the law of sale apply.

A sale in gross is one without regard to quantity. Yost v. Mallicote's Adm'r., 77 Va. 616.

An offer to sell imposes no obligations until accepted according to its terms; and an offer rejected cannot be afterward accepted; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Rolling Mill, 119 U. S. 149, 7 Sup. Ct. 168, 30 L. Ed. 376. See OFFER.

Parties. As a general rule, all persons sui juris may be either buyers or sellers; Story, Sales § 9. See PARTIES. But no one can sell goods and convey a valid title to them unless he be owner or lawfully represent the owner; nemo dat quod non habet; Benj. Sales § 6; 2 Ad. & E. 495; Klein v. Seibold, 89 Ill. 540; Bearce v. Bowker, 115 Mass. 129. And even an innocent purchaser from one not the owner, or his proper representative, acquires no valid title; 13 M. & W. 603; Benj. Sales § 6; Pease v. Smith, 61 N. Y. 477.

An innocent purchaser of property from a bailee for hire acquires no title, and on disposing of the property is liable to the bailor for its value; Miller Piano Co. v. Parker, 155 Pa. 208, 26 Atl. 303, 35 Am. St. Rep. 873. But see MARKET OVERT. Another exception is that one not the owner, even a thief, may make a valid transfer of negotiable instruments, if they are in the usual state in which they commonly pass on delivery, provided the buyer has been guilty of no fraud in taking them. The bona fide holder of such negotiable instruments, and also of bank-notes, or money, lost or stolen, who has paid a valuable consideration or furnished an equivalent, can retain title against any former owner; even against one from whom such chattel has been stolen; Wheeler v. Guild, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 545, 32 Am. Dec. 231; Roth v. Colvin, 32 Vt. 125; Hall v. Hale, 8 Conn. 336; 3 Burr. 1516; 5 B. & Ad. 909; Benj. Sales (4th ed.) § 15. So (arguendo) of coupon bonds of the ordinary kind; Murray v. Lardner, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 110, 17 L. Ed. 857, disapproving Gill v. Cubit, 3 B. & C. 466; and approving Goodman & Harvey, 4 Ad. & El. 870; also a lost or stolen bill or note; arguendo in Shaw v. R. Co., 101 U. S. 557, 25 L. Ed. 892; but otherwise of a lost or stolen bill of lading; id.

Where two parties in good faith buy the same property, the one first receiving possession is entitled to hold it; Thomas v. Ramsey, 47 Mo. App. 84.

There is a class of persons who are incapable of purchasing except sub modo, as infants, insane persons and drunkards; Benj. Sales § 21; and another class, who, in consequence of their peculiar relation with regard to the owner of the thing sold, are totally incapable of becoming purchasers while that relation exists; such as trustees, guardians, assignees of insolvents, and, generally, all persons who, by their connection with the owner, or by being employed concerning his affairs, have acquired a knowledge of his property, as attorneys, conveyancers, and the like.

Statute of Frauds. Sec. 17 provides: No contract for the sale of any goods, wares, and merchandise for the prices of ten pounds sterling or upwards, shall be allowed to be good, except the buyer shall accept part of the goods so sold, and actually receive the same, or give something in earnest to bind the bargain or in part payment, or some note or memorandum in writing of the said bargain be made and signed by the parties to be charged by such contract, or their agents hereunto lawfully authorized. In the United States a corresponding provision has been passed in all the states but Alabama, Arizona, Delaware, Illinois, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, New Mexico, North Carolina, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia and West Virginia. The language of these statutes is not uniform and is often not quite the same in meaning as that of the English statute.

By the Sales Act: (1) A contract to sell or a sale of any goods or choses in action of the value of $500 ($100 in Connecticut and to $2,500 in Ohio) or upwards shall not be enforceable by action unless the buyer shall accept part of the goods or choses in action so contracted to be sold or held, and actually receive the same, or give something in earnest to bind the contract, or in part payment, or unless some note or memorandum in writing of the contract or sale be signed by the party to be charged or his agent in that behalf. (2) The provisions of this section apply to every such contract or sale notwithstanding the goods may be intended to be delivered at some future time, or may not at the time of such contract or sale be actually made, procured or provided, or fit or ready for delivery, or some act may be requisite for the making or completing thereof or rendering the same fit for delivery; but if the goods are to be manufactured by the seller especially for the buyer and are not suitable for sale to others in the ordinary course of the seller's business, the provisions of this section shall not apply. (3) There is an acceptance of goods within the meaning of this section when the buyer, either before or after delivery of the goods, expresses by words or conduct his assent to becoming the owner of those specific goods.

Contracts for work and labor have never been within the terms of statutes of frauds and to determine whether there is such contract, the following rule was stated by Blackburn, J., in 1 B. & S. 272: "If the contract be such that, when carried out, it would result in the sale of a chattel, the party cannot sue for work and labor; but if the result of the contract is that the party has done work and labor which ends in nothing that can become the subject of a sale, the party cannot sue for goods sold and delivered." This rule has been carried to the extent of holding that a contract to paint a portrait is a contract for the sale of goods; 1 Cab. & E. 287. The rule most commonly adopted in America is what is known as the Massachusetts rule as stated by Shaw, C. J., in Mixer v. Howarth, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 205, 32 Am. Dec. 256, as follows: "When the contract is a contract of sale either of an article then existing, or of articles which the vendor usually has for sale in the course of his business, the statute applies to the contract, as well where it is to be executed at a future time, as where it is to be executed immediately. But where it is an agreement with a workman to put materials together and construct an article for the employer, whether at an agreed price or not, though in common parlance it may be called a purchase and sale of the article, to be completed in futuro, it is not a sale until an actual or constructive delivery and acceptance; and the remedy for not accepting is on the agreement; Flynn v. Dougherty, 91 Cal. 669, 27 Pac. 1080, 14 L. R. A. 230; Crockett v. Scribner, 64 Me. 447; Pitkin v. Noyes, 48 N. H. 294, 97 Am. Dec. 615, 2 Am. Rep. 218; Meincke v. Falk, 55 Wis. 427, 13 N. W. 545, 42 Am. Rep. 722.

The vegetable products of the earth have been classified as fructus naturales and fructus industriales. In the former class are included everything which grows spontaneously or without animal cultivation, such as trees or grass. In the second class are included crops which are the subject of yearly planting and cultivation. By an arbitrary rule, fructus industriales are treated in every case as goods, whether matured or not at the time when by the terms of the bargain they were to be sold; Bryant v. Crosby, 40 Me. 9; Whitmarsh v. Walker, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 313; Kerr v. Hill, 27 W. Va. 576; Bull v. Griswold, 19 Ill. 631. It has been held that a crop of peaches or other orchard fruit is to be classed as fructus industriales; Purner v. Piercy, 40 Md. 212, 17 Am. Rep. 591; Smock v. Smock, 37 Mo. App. 56. Water when separated from a stream or lake becomes personalty; Jersey City v. Harrison, 71 N. J. L. 69, 58 Atl. 100. Ice which has been cut is personal property; Higgins

v. Kusterer, 41 Mich. 318, 2 N. W. 13, 32 Am. Rep. 160. Minerals when severed from the realty become goods. Manure is (till the time when mixed with the soil) an incident of the real estate of such peculiar character that while it remains only constructively annexed, it will be personal property if the parties interested agree so to treat it; Strong v. Doyle, 110 Mass. 92. If the contract is to sell and deliver a house, even though the house is at the time of the bargain affixed to the realty, it is a contract for the sale of goods, for the parties contract to buy and sell a house separated from the realty and moved from its foundations; Long v. White, 42 Ohio St. 59. The decisions are conflicting upon the question as to whether choses in action are within the statute. Shares of stock, bonds and mortgages have been held within the statute; Banta v. Chicago, 172 Ill. 204, 50 N. E. 233, 40 L. R. A. 611; Greenwood v. Law, 55 N. J. L. 168, 26 Atl. 134, 19 L. R. A. 688; Somerby v. Buntin, 118 Mass. 279, 19 Am. Rep. 459. The sale of an undivided share of goods is within the statute; Gerndt v. Conradt, 117 Wis. 15, 93 N. W. 804. See FRAUDS, STATUTE OF; EXCHANGES.

Subject-Matter of the Contract. Potential possession. In Grantham v. Hawley, Hob. 132, it was held that in certain cases a seller might transfer title to goods which he did not then own. The case related to a future crop of corn and it was held that a buyer of the corn from a lessee of the land had a better title than the reversionary owner of the lease, though at the time of the litigation the lessee's estate had ended. The court said: "And though the lessor had it not actually in him, nor certain, yet he had it potentially; for the land is the mother and root of all fruits. Therefore he that hath it may grant all fruits that may arise upon it after, and the property shall pass as soon as the fruits are extant. But a man cannot grant all the wool that shall grow upon his sheep that he shall buy hereafter; for then he hath it neither actually or potentially."

In this country this doctrine has received frequent recognition in the cases of the transfer of crops to be thereafter grown. It is held in most of the states where the question has arisen that the owner of land may mortgage a future crop; Briggs v. U. S., 143 U. S. 346, 12 Sup. Ct. 391, 36 L. Ed. 180; Kelley v. Goodwin, 95 Me. 538, 50 Atl. 711; Weil v. Flowers, 109 N. C. 212, 13 S. E. 761; in a few states, however, the crop must be actually planted; Redd v. Burrus, 58 Ga. 574; Cole v. Kerr, 19 Neb. 553, 26 N. W. 598; Cudworth v. Scott, 41 N. H. 456. If the legal title to a future crop passes, it would seem that a man might mortgage the crops on his land any number of years in advance, and the fact that the mortgage must be recorded is immaterial, for the purchaser may have no means of knowing where the record is and hence in some states a limitation of time is imposed. Thus in Alabama, Arkansas, Minnesota, and South Carolina, the statutes prohibit such mortgages made either prior to the 1st of January preceding the planting of the crop, or more than a year before its planting. In the absence of such a statute, it has been held that an unlimited grant of the future crops is invalid; Shaw v. Gilmore, 81 Me. 396, 17 Atl. 314. This doctrine has been applied occasionally to transfers of the future young of animals; Andrews v. Cox, 42 Ark. 473, 48 Am. Rep. 68. The doctrine is considered objectionable since it means that when the goods come into existence, title to them passes free from any defects of title due to rights which have accrued since the time of the original bargain; Williston, Sales, § 133.

By the Sales Act: (1) The goods which form the subject of a contract to sell may be either existing goods, owned or possessed by the seller, or goods to be manufactured or acquired by the seller after the making of the contract to sell, in the act called future goods, the acquisition of which by the seller depends upon a contingency which may or may not happen. (3) Where the parties purport to effect a present sale of future goods, the agreement operates as a contract to sell the goods.

The English Sale of Goods Act makes no distinction between one class of future goods and another; and so it may be assumed that the doctrine of potential possession is abolished. The Sales Act aims to abolish the doctrine altogether from the law of sales, whatever may be the rule in regard to mortgages.

Undivided shares. In Kimberly v. Patchin, 19 N. Y. 330, 75 Am. Dec. 334, the buyer bought 6,000 bushels of wheat from two piles, aggregating 6,249 bushels, but of which the quantity had not been determined. The seller signed a receipt acknowledging that he held 6,000 bushels subject to the order of the buyer, and the buyer paid a portion of the price. The court held that title passed to the purchaser. The line of reasoning followed by the court was that it was possible for two or more persons to own goods confused in an undistinguishable mass of undetermined amount, and the parties, if they so intended, could by agreement bring about such ownership. England denies the possibility of transferring title to a specified portion of a mass; 13 East 522. In America this doctrine has received its fullest application in grain elevators; Woodward v. Semans, 125 Ind. 330, 25 N. E. 444, 21 Am. St. Rep. 225; Ledyard v. Hibbard, 48 Mich. 421, 12 N. W. 637, 42 Am. Rep. 474; James v. Plank, 48 Ohio St. 255, 26 N. E. 1107; Young v. Miles, 23 Wis. 643.

By the Sales Act: (1) There may be a contract to sell or a sale of an undivided share of goods. If the parties intend to effect a present sale, the buyer becomes an owner in common with the owner or owners of the remaining shares. (2) In the case of fungible goods there may be a sale of an undivided share of a specific mass, though the seller purports to sell and the buyer to buy a definite number, weight or measure of the goods in the mass, and though the number, weight and measure is undetermined. By such a sale the buyer becomes owner in common of such a share of the mass as the number, weight or measure bought bears to the number, weight or measure of the mass. If the mass contains less than the number, weight or measure bought, the buyer becomes the owner of the whole mass and the seller is bound to make good the deficiency from similar goods, unless a contrary intent appears.

Destruction of the Subject of the Sale. There must be a thing which is the object of the sale; for if the thing sold at the time of the sale had ceased to exist, it is clear there can be no sale; Benj. Sales § 76; 5 Maule & S. 228; Allen v. Hammond, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 63, 9 L. Ed. 633; Thompson v. Gould, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 139. Where the thing does not exist at the date of the contract the sale is void; as where, unknown to the parties, corn on a vessel not yet arrived, had, before the sale, been sold at an intermediate port; 5 H. L. C. 673. Where, after the sale, and without fault of the seller, the thing sold perished, the seller is released; Wells v. Calnan, 107 Mass. 514, 9 Am. Rep. 65; Gould v. Murch, 70 Me. 288, 35 Am. Rep. 325; but it is otherwise if property has passed, though the goods were left in the seller's possession; 32 L. J. Q. B. 164. On a contract of future sale, if the subject-matter perish before property has passed, the contract is avoided. It is evident, too, that no sale can be made of things not in commerce: as, the air, the water of the sea, and the like.

By the Sales Act: (1) Where the parties purport to sell specific goods, and the goods without the knowledge of the seller have wholly perished at the time when the agreement is made, the agreement is void. (2) Where the parties purport to sell specific goods, and the goods without the knowledge of the seller have perished in part or have wholly or in a material part so deteriorated in quality as to be substantially changed in character, the buyer may at his option treat the sale, (a) as avoided; (b) as transferring the property in all the existing goods or in so much thereof as have not deteriorated, and as binding the buyer to pay the full agreed price if the sale was indivisible or to pay the agreed price for the goods in which the property passes if the sale was divisible.

The above rules govern in the case of destruction of goods contracted to be sold before the risk passes to the buyer.

The price. To constitute a sale, there must be a price agreed upon. The presumption is that where the price is not definitely ascertained, the title remains in the vendor until a computation has been made; Blackb. Sales 122; Warren v. Buckminster, 24 N. H. 336; Love v. State, 78 Ga. 66, 3 S. E. 893, 6 Am. St. Rep. 234. But this may be rebutted by proof that the parties intended to have the right of property vest in the purchaser at once; Chapman v. Shepard, 39 Conn. 413; Kimberly v. Patchin, 19 N. Y. 330, 75 Am. Dec. 334. Upon the maxim id certum est quod reddi certum potest, a sale may be valid although it is agreed that the price for the thing sold shall be determined by a third person; Brown v. Bellows, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 179. A contract of sale is valid though no time of payment is agreed on, the law implying payment on delivery; Lamont v. Le Fevre, 96 Mich. 175, 55 N. W. 687.

By the Sales Act: (1) The price may be fixed by the contract or may be left to be fixed in such a manner as may be agreed, or it may be determined by the course of dealing between the parties. (2) The price may be made payable in any personal property. (3) Where transferring or promising to transfer any interest in real estate constitutes the whole or part of the consideration for transferring or for promising to transfer the property in goods, the act does not apply. (4) Where the price is not determined in accordance with the foregoing provisions the buyer must pay a reasonable price. What is a reasonable price is a question of fact dependent on the circumstances of each particular case. See PRICE.

Conditions and Warranties. See CONDITIONS; WARRANTY.

Transfer of Property between Buyer and Seller. The property is presumed to pass when the contract is made if the goods are identified, and nothing remains to be done other than delivery of the goods and payment of the price; Parsons v. Dickinson, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 352; Richardson v. Ins. Co., 136 N. C. 314, 48 S. E. 733; Com. v. Hess, 148 Pa. 98, 23 Atl. 977, 17 L. R. A. 176, 33 Am. St. Rep. 810. If there is something to be done by the seller to put the goods into a deliverable state, the natural inference is that the parties do not intend an immediate transfer of title. The rule, however, is but one of presumption and if the parties intend that the property shall pass and clearly manifest that intention, their intention will be effectual; Paine v. Young, 56 Md. 314; Martz v. Putnam, 117 Ind. 392, 20 N. E. 270. Delivery of the goods to the buyer would almost certainly indicate such an intention if it were not expressly stated that the property was retained; Bank of Huntington v. Napier, 41 W. Va. 481, 23 S. E. 800; Trigg Co. v. Bucyrus Co., 104 Va. 79, 51 S. E. 174. Payment of the whole price or of a considerable part of it would also seem some evidence of an intention to make an immediate transfer; Butterworth v. McKinly, 11 Humph. (Tenn.) 206. But it is no evidence if the payment is small, and apparently intended merely to bind the bargain; Elgee

Formerly if something remained to be done in the way of weighing or measuring in order to determine the price, the property would not pass even though the goods were specified; 6 East 614. This rule has been generally adopted; Jones v. Pearce, 25 Ark. 545; Wesoloski v. Wysoski, 186 Mass. 495, 71 N. E. 982; Gilman & Sanborn v. Hill, 36 N. H. 311; Miller v. Seaman, 176 Pa. 291, 35 Atl. 134; Pike v. Vaughn, 39 Wis. 499; and this presumption has been applied although the weighing or measuring was to be done by the buyer; Pinkham v. Appleton, 82 Me. 574, 20 Atl. 237; Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Noel, 77 Ind. 110. In other states, however, there is a general presumption that the property passes when all the terms of the bargain are fixed, although the buyer is subsequently to weigh or measure the goods in order to complete the calculation of the price; Graff v. Fitch, 58 Ill. 373, 11 Am. Rep. 85; Hagins v. Combs, 102 Ky. 165, 43 S. W. 222; Day v. Gravel, 72 Minn. 159, 75 N. W. 1. Where the rule exists that the property presumably does not pass if something remains to be done to ascertain the price, the rule is everywhere merely one of presumption, which will yield to evidence showing an intent to transfer the property immediately; Wheelock v. Starkweather, 146 Mich. 53, 108 N. W. 1085; Wadhams v. Balfour, 32 Or. 313, 51 Pac. 642.

Non-payment of the price is little or no evidence of an intention to retain the ownership. This is because cases where the buyer pays in advance and trusts the seller to perform his contract later are unusual, but cases where the seller transfers the property and gives the buyer credit for the price are so common that it is not a safe assumption that such a transaction was not intended. Where there is a "sale or return," or "sale on approval," it is a question of fact in every case whether the parties intended to make approval a condition, without which the property should not pass, or whether their intent was that the property should pass at once with the right to return the goods. Sometimes it is expressly provided that the seller shall retain title; Crocker v. Gullifer, 44 Me. 491, 69 Am. Dec. 118. Sometimes the contract may be put in the form of a bailment or lease, thus clearly indicating that the seller is to retain title until the buyer's option is exercised; Stiles v. Seaton, 200 Pa. 114, 49 Atl. 774. The use of the word "return" itself ordinarily implies a previous transfer of the property; Frye v. Burdick, 67 Me. 408. Whereas if it is agreed that goods shall be delivered on trial, or on approval, the language indicates that the buyer's approval is a condition precedent to the transfer of the property. Frequently the bargain of the parties will fix the time within which the buyer must return the goods; Butler v. School Dist., 149 Pa. 351, 24 Atl. 308. If the buyer fails to exercise the right thus given him, his title cannot thereafter be avoided; Stevens v. Hertzler, 109 Ala. 423, 19 South. 838. If the contract does not fix a time, the law adopts the rule of the time that is reasonable under the circumstances.

Rules for Ascertaining Intention. By the Sales Act: Where there is a contract to sell specific or ascertained goods, the property in them is transferred to the buyer at such time as the parties to the contract intend it to be transferred. For the purpose of ascertaining the intention of the parties, regard shall be had to the terms of the contract, the conduct of the parties, usages of trade, and the circumstances of the case. Unless a different intention appears, the following are the rules for ascertaining the intention of the parties: 1. Where there is an unconditional contract to sell specific goods, in a deliverable state, the property in the goods passes to the buyer when the contract is made, and it is immaterial whether the time of payment, or the time of delivery, or both, be postponed. 2. Where there is a contract to sell specific goods and the seller is bound to do something to the goods for the purpose of putting them into a deliverable state, the property does not pass until such thing be done. 3. (a) When goods are delivered to the buyer "on sale or return" or on other terms indicating an intention to make a present sale, but to give to buyer an option to return the goods instead of paying the price, the property passes to the buyer on delivery, but he may revert the property in the seller by returning or tendering the goods within the time fixed in the contract, or, if no time has been fixed, within a reasonable time. (b) When goods are delivered to the buyer on approval or on trial or on satisfaction, or other similar terms, the property therein passes to the buyer—(a) when he signifies his approval or acceptance to the seller or does any other act adopting the transaction; (b) if he does not do so but retains the goods without giving notice of rejection, then, if a time has been fixed for the return of the goods, on the expiration of such time, and if no time has been fixed, on the expiration of a reasonable time. 4. (1) Where there is a contract to sell unascertained or future goods by description, and goods of that description and in a deliverable state are unconditionally appropriated to the contract, the property, thereupon, passes to the buyer. (2) Where, in pursuance of a contract to sell, the seller delivers the goods to the buyer, or to a carrier or other bailee (whether named by the buyer or not) for the purpose of transmission to or holding for the buyer, he is presumed to have unconditionally appropriated the goods to the contract, with the exception provided for in rule 5, and where seller has reserved the right of possession or property. This presumption is applicable, although by the terms of the contract, the buyer is to pay the price before receiving delivery of the goods, and the goods are marked with the words "collect on delivery" or their equivalents. 5. If the contract to sell requires the seller to deliver the goods to the buyer, or at a particular place, or to pay the freight or cost of transportation to the buyer, or to a particular place, the property does not pass until the goods have been delivered to the buyer or reached the place agreed upon.

Subsequent Appropriation. In the cases of unascertained or future goods there must be some act of appropriation of the goods to the buyer, other than mere completion or preparation, and the act of appropriation should be assented to by both parties. The buyer may make the proposition by requesting the seller subsequently to appropriate goods to him, or the seller may make it by appropriating goods to the buyer and subsequently securing the latter's assent. It is immaterial which party by the terms of the contract is to make the appropriation; 1 Taunton 318; 5 B. & A. 942; 6 B. & C. 388; 10 Bing. 512; Mitchell v. Le Clair, 165 Mass. 308, 43 N. E. 117. To be distinguished from cases where the seller is subsequently to appropriate goods to the buyer are cases where the buyer furnishes the materials upon which the seller is to do the work. Where both furnish goods, then the proportion of goods furnished by one party or the other furnishes the best evidence of their intention as to subsequent appropriation in the absence of a direct expression of it; West Jersey R. R. Co. v. Trenton Car Works, 32 N. J. L. 517. Appropriation of the goods to the buyer can only be binding if made in accordance with authority previously given or if subsequently assented to by him. If, therefore, goods are appropriated by the seller which are not in conformity with the authority given, the property will not pass. The lack of conformity may be in kind or quantity. Where goods are necessarily appropriated in parts or instalments, the law takes the view, that presumptively the buyer does not intend to become owner of anything until there can be final appropriation of the whole; 4 M. & W. 775. The commonest and most important illustration of the transfer of the property in goods by subsequent appropriations by the seller, arises where the seller in fulfillment of a contract with, or an offer from, the buyer, delivers goods to a carrier for shipment to the buyer. That the property passes on delivery to the carrier, under these circumstances, was settled indeed before the general rules of the appropriation by the seller had been completely formulated; 1 Atk. 245, 248; 3 B. & P. 582. It is a common practice to send goods to the buyer marked "C. O. D." See C. O. D. It has been held by some authorities that the effect of this is to retain title in the seller until the price is paid; U. S. v. Cline, 28

Fed. 515; State v. U. S. Express Co., 70 Ia. 271, 30 N. W. 568; Hardy v. Am. Express Co., 182 Mass. 328, 65 N. E. 375, 59 L. R. A. 731. The weight of authority, however, supports the view that possession only is to be retained by the seller until the price is paid and that the property passes immediately on delivery to the carrier, assuming that the circumstances are such that the property would pass were it not for the requirement of payment of the price before delivery; U. S. v. Adams Ex. Co., 119 Fed. 240; Carthage v. Duvall, 202 Ill. 234, 66 N. E. 1099; State v. Intoxicating Liquors, 98 Me. 464, 57 Atl. 798; Higgins v. Murray, 73 N. Y. 252; Norfolk, etc., R. Co. v. Barnes, 104 N. C. 25, 10 S. E. 83, 5 L. R. A. 611; Com. v. Fleming, 130 Pa. 138, 18 Atl. 622, 5 L. R. A. 470, 17 Am. St. Rep. 763. Where goods are shipped "f. o. b." this means that the seller shall bear all expenses until the goods are delivered at the place where they are to be "f. o. b." and the presumption that the property is to pass then is applicable; Fruit Dispatch Co. v. Sturges, 73 Ohio St. 351, 78 N. E. 1125; a distinction is taken between "deliver f. o. b." and "bill f. o. b.," the latter not necessarily imposing on the seller the duty to deliver; Dannemiller v. Kirkpatrick, 201 Pa. 218, 50 Atl. 928. As to reservation of right of possession or property when goods are shipped, see BILLS OF LADING; STOPPAGE IN TRANSITU.

Sale by Auction. By Sales Act: (1) Where goods are put up for sale by auction in lots, each lot is the subject of a separate contract of sale. (2) A sale by auction is complete when the auctioneer announces its completion by the fall of the hammer, or in other customary manner. Until such announcement is made, any bidder may retract his bid; and the auctioneer may withdraw the goods from sale unless the auction has been announced to be without reserve. (3) A right to bid may be reserved expressly by or on behalf of the seller. (4) Where notice has not been given that a sale by auction is subject to a right to bid on behalf of the seller, it shall not be lawful for the seller to bid himself or to employ or to induce any person to bid at such sale on behalf of the seller or knowingly to take any bid from the seller or any person employed by him. Any sale contravening this rule may be treated as fraudulent by the buyer. See AUCTION.

Risk of Loss. By Sales Act. Unless otherwise agreed the goods remain at the seller's risk until the property therein is transferred to the buyer, the goods are at the buyer's risk whether delivery has been made or not, except that—(a) Where delivery of the goods has been made to the buyer, or to a bailee for the buyer, in pursuance of the contract and the property in the goods has been retained by the seller merely to secure performance by the buyer of his obligations under the contract, the goods are at the buyer's risk from the time of such delivery. (b) Where the delivery has been delayed through the fault of either buyer or seller the goods are at the risk of the party in fault as regards any loss which might not have occurred but for such fault.

Where goods are delivered to the buyer but title is retained by the seller until the price is paid, the buyer immediately acquires the right to use the goods as his own and it would seem to follow that if the goods are accidentally destroyed or injured, the buyer must stand the loss. The decisions are, however, in conflict, but the weight of authority sustains the view here expressed; Chicago Ry. Equipment Co. v. Bank, 136 U. S. 268, 283, 10 Sup. Ct. 990, 34 L. Ed. 349; Burnley v. Tufts, 66 Miss. 48, 5 South. 627, 14 Am. St. Rep. 540; American Soda Fountain Co. v. Vaughn, 69 N. J. L. 582, 55 Atl. 54; Whitlock v. Lumber Co., 145 N. C. 120, 58 S. E. 909, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1214; La Valley v. Ravenna, 78 Vt. 152, 62 Atl. 47, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 97, 112 Am. St. Rep. 898, 6 Ann. Cas. 684; Osborn v. Lumber Co., 91 Wis. 526, 65 N. W. 184; contra, Arthur & Co. v. Blackman, 63 Fed. 536; American Soda Fountain Co. v. Blue, 146 Ala. 682, 40 South. 218; Mountain City Mill Co. v. Butler, 109 Ga. 469, 34 S. E. 565; Sloan v. McCarty, 134 Mass. 245. Doubtless the question of risk may be settled by the parties in any way they please, and some of the apparently conflicting decisions may be reconciled on this basis. See BILLS OF LADING; RES PERUT DOMINO.

Transfer of Title between Buyer and Seller. No one but the owner can give title. If the owner is by his conduct precluded from denying the seller's authority to sell, the buyer may acquire a valid title although the seller has neither title nor authority to transfer title. See ESTOPPEL; FACTOR.

A cash sale is a kind of a sale where the payment of the price is a condition of the transfer of title to the buyer; Williston, Sales, 543.

A common kind of transaction where the transfer of the property in goods is conditional on the buyer's performance of his promise is where the buyer is by the terms of the bargain to give negotiable paper. The usual case is where a bill of lading for the goods is sent forward by the seller with a draft for the price attached. Payment or acceptance of the draft is a condition precedent to the buyer's right to the possession of the bill of lading. See C. O. D.

See MARKET OVERT.

Conditional Sales. As in every other kind of contract, so in a contract to sell, there may be inserted such conditions as the parties agree upon. The typical case of conditional sale is a sale in which the transfer of title is conditional upon payment of the price. Though sales upon other conditions may readily be imagined, the practice of selling goods with a retention of the title until payment of the price is so common that the ordinary meaning of the term "conditional sale" is confined to sales upon this particular condition. The seller is not estopped by his conduct in delivering possession of the goods to the buyer upon such a bargain from asserting his title against one who purchases from the buyer, relying upon the apparent title of the latter; [1895] 1 Q. B. 653; Harkness v. Russell, 118 U. S. 663, 7 Sup. Ct. 51, 30 L. Ed. 285; Lorain Steel Co. v. Street R. Co., 187 Mass. 500, 73 N. E. 646; Clayton v. Hester, 80 N. C. 275; Comer v. Cunningham, 77 N. Y. 391, 33 Am. Rep. 626; Baals v. Stewart, 109 Ind. 371, 9 N. E. 403. The effect of the decisions sustaining the seller's title is modified in many jurisdictions by recording acts, and in some jurisdictions, a bona fide purchaser from the buyer is protected; Van Duzor v. Allen, 90 Ill. 499; Lincoln v. Quynn, 68 Md. 299, 11 Atl. 848, 6 Am. St. Rep. 446; Dearborn v. Raysor, 132 Pa. 231, 20 Atl. 690; Greer v. Church, 13 Bush (Ky.) 430. In Louisiana a conditional sale is wholly impossible; Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. St. Louis Cypress Co., 121 La. 152, 46 South. 193. See infra. In Harkness v. Russell, supra, Bradley, J., discussed the cases fully.

Creditors of the seller, after the property has been delivered to the buyer, can have no right to take the property from the possession of the buyer, at least while he is in no default upon his contract. The buyer's right is a property right and the seller's creditors, no more than the seller, can disturb it, though the seller also has an interest in the property which should be subject to sale on execution; McMillan v. Larned, 41 Mich. 521, 2 N. W. 662. The buyer's creditors, apart from estoppel or statute, can take no greater right than the buyer had. The interest of the buyer may be subjected to the claims of creditors; Newhall v. Kingsbury, 131 Mass. 445, but not the goods as such. In some jurisdictions, the rights of a buyer's creditors have been treated in the same way as a mortgagor's creditors, namely, pay the portion of the price remaining due and by so doing acquire the right to treat the full ownership as belonging to the buyer; Bingham v. Vandegrift, 93 Ala. 283, 9 South. 280; Hervey v. Dimond, 67 N. H. 342, 39 Atl. 331, 68 Am. St. Rep. 673; Towner v. Bliss, 51 Vt. 59; United Shoe Machinery Co. v. Holt, 185 Mass. 97, 69 N. E. 1056; Pearne v. Coyne, 79 Conn. 570, 65 Atl. 973. An assignee for the benefit of creditors under a common law assignment can stand in no better position than an individual creditor; Adams v. Lee, 64 N. H. 421, 13 Atl. 786; Gayden v. Tufts, 68 Miss. 691, 10 South. 53; Campbell Printing Press & Mfg. Co. v. Walker, 114 N. Y. 7, 20 N. E. 625. By the express terms of the Bankruptcy Act, the trustee takes all the property "which might have been levied upon and sold under judicial process against" the bankrupt. In each case the question must depend upon the rights which the state law gives to creditors; York Mfg. Co. v. Cassell, 201 U. S. 344, 26 Sup. Ct. 481, 50 L. Ed. 782.

Conditional sales have become very common and are so deceptive both to purchasers from the buyer and to the buyer's creditors, since the buyer not only has possession of the property but ordinarily is entitled to use it and does use it as if it were his own, that recording acts have been passed in many states. The purpose of these acts is to give notice to the public of the seller's title and to invalidate that title unless the bargain is in writing and a record of it made. Such statutes have been passed in more than one-half of the states. In England the Factors' Act of 1889 has absolutely invalidated all conditional sales where the buyer has possession as against purchasers, whether by absolute sale or by mortgage or pledge, reaching, as to such parties, the same result that has been reached in a few jurisdictions without the aid of statute.

There can be no estoppel if a purchaser or creditor has notice. In the case of a purchaser, notice is important when he has entered into a bargain for the purchase of the goods. So far as the creditor is concerned, the time when notice is important might well be held not to be when the levy is made, but when the debt was created, if its creation was subsequent to the conditional sale; Vanmeter v. Estill, 78 Ky. 456.

Risk of loss and gain is upon the buyer, under the Sales Act, and was so held in Chicago Ry. Equipment Co. v. Bank, 136 U. S. 268, 283, 10 Sup. Ct. 999, 34 L. Ed. 349; American Soda Fountain Co. v. Vaughn, 69 N. J. L. 582, 55 Atl. 54; Osborn v. Lumber Co., 91 Wis. 526, 65 N. W. 184; Whitlock v. Lumber Co., 145 N. C. 120, 58 S. E. 909, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1214; Topp v. White, 12 Heisk. (Tenn.) 165; contra, Arthur & Co. v. Blackman, 63 Fed. 536; Bishop v. Minderhout, 128 Ala. 162, 29 South. 11, 52 L. R. A. 395, 86 Am. St. Rep. 134; Mountain City Mill Co. v. Butler, 109 Ga. 469, 34 S. E. 565; Sloan v. McCarty, 134 Mass. 245. Doubtless the question of risk may be settled by the parties in any way they please, and some of the apparently conflicting decisions may be reconciled on this basis. See a discussion in American Soda Fountain Co. v. Vaughn, 69 N. J. L. 582, 55 Atl. 54.

A conditional sale is distinguished from a so-called lease, in that the latter contemplates only the use of the property for a limited time, and its ultimate return to the lessor; whereas the former contemplates the ultimate ownership by the buyer together with the use in the meantime. Sellers desirous of making conditional sales of their goods, but who do not wish openly to make a bargain in that form, have resorted to the device of making contracts in the form of leases either with options to the buyer to purchase for a small consideration at the end of the term, provided the so-called rent has been duly paid, or with a stipulation that if the rent throughout the term is paid, the title shall thereupon vest in the lessee. Such transactions are leases only in name. Statutes and courts have disregarded the form of the transaction and hold such leases subject to the rules governing conditional sales; Heryford v. Davis, 102 U. S. 235, 26 L. Ed. 160; Manson v. Dayton, 153 Fed. 258, 82 C. C. A. 588; Warren v. Liddell, 110 Ala. 232, 20 South. 89; Hine v. Roberts, 48 Conn. 267, 40 Am. Rep. 170; Lucas v. Campbell, 88 Ill. 447; Puffer & Sons Mfg. Co. v. Lucas, 112 N. C. 377, 17 S. E. 174, 19 L. R. A. 682.

A conditional sale and a chattel mortgage are in essence the same, but are different in form, and by virtue of this difference they have been given different names. Accordingly, statutes providing for the recording of chattel mortgages are not generally held to cover conditional sales; White Sewing Machine Co. v. Conner, 111 Ky. 827, 64 S. W. 841.

In Pennsylvania on a sale of chattels, if the vendor and vendee agree that the possession shall pass to the vendee, but the property remain in the vendor until the whole purchase money is paid, such agreement, as respects creditors, is fraudulent. This principle was fully established in Clow v. Woods, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 275, 9 Am. Dec. 346, the opinion by Gibson, J., and Martin v. Mathiot, 14 S. & R. (Pa.) 214, 16 Am. Dec. 491, the opinion by Tilghman, C. J.; but if the possession is transferred under an express contract of bailment, the transaction is not fraudulent as to creditors, though there is a superadded executory agreement for the sale of the property to the bailee, upon the payment of a certain price; Stoddart v. Price, 143 Pa. 537, 22 Atl. 811; Kelley Springfield Road Roller Co. v. Schlimme, 220 Pa. 413, 69 Atl. 867, 123 Am. St. Rep. 707. The question of importance in Pennsylvania in cases of this kind is whether the transaction is a conditional sale or a bailment.

See CONFLICTS OF LAWS.

Delivery to the Buyer and Retention of Possession by Seller. By the Sales Act: Where a person having sold goods continues in possession of the goods, or of negotiable documents of title to the goods, the delivery or transfer by that person or by an agent acting for him, of the goods or documents of title under any sale, pledge, or other disposition thereof, to any person receiving and paying value for the same in good faith and without notice of the previous sale, shall have the same effect as if the person making the delivery or transfer were expressly authorized by the owner of goods to make the same.

Where a person having sold goods continues in possession of the goods, or of negotiable documents of title to the goods, and such retention of possession, is fraudulent in fact or is deemed fraudulent under any rule of law, a creditor or creditors of the seller may treat the sale as void.

In England retention of possession by the seller is at most, evidence tending to show fraud. The doctrine in regard to fraudulent retention of possession was originally based on the statute, 13 Eliz. c. 5, which had reference only to creditors. The statutes of many states and the decisions of others, have treated retention as fraudulent against subsequent purchasers from the seller, as well as against creditors. On account of the variety of statutes and decisions, reference should be had to the law of the jurisdiction that is desired.

In early times delivery was necessary to transfer property between buyer and seller, but in England delivery is no longer necessary; L. R. 2 C. P. 38, 51. In this country, although the decisions are not uniform, and although the doctrine has been much confused with the related doctrine of retention of possession in fraud of creditors, it has generally been held that delivery is necessary to perfect a buyer's rights either against such purchasers or the seller's attaching creditors. In view of the many differences or matters of detail in the law on this subject in the several states, reference should be had to the law of the particular jurisdiction in question.

Contractual Obligations of the Parties. 1. It is the duty of the seller to deliver the goods, and of the buyer to accept and pay for them, in accordance with the terms of the contract to sell or sale. Delivery and payment, unless otherwise agreed are concurrent conditions under the Sales Act. Whether it is for the buyer to take possession of the goods, or the seller to send them to the buyer, is a question depending in each case on the contract between them. Apart from such, the place of delivery is the seller's place of business, or if he does not have one, then his residence; Bliss Co. v. Gas Light Co., 149 N. Y. 300, 43 N. E. 859; but in case of specific goods which, to the knowledge of the parties, at the time the bargain was made, were in some other place, then that place is the place of delivery; Hatch v. Oil Co., 100 U. S. 124, 25 L. Ed. 554. 2. If goods are to be sent to the buyer and no time is specified, then they must be sent within a reasonable time. 3. If the goods are in the hands of a third party, the seller fulfills his obligation to deliver when the third party acknowledges to the buyer that he holds the goods on his behalf; but as against all others than the seller, the buyer shall be regarded as having received delivery from the time when such third person has notice of the sale. Where the seller is under a contract to deliver a specified quantity of goods, and tenders a smaller quantity, the buyer may reject the tender; Cleveland Rolling Mill v. Rhodes, 121 U. S. 255, 7 Sup. Ct. 882, 30 L. Ed. 920; Inman, Akers & Inman v. Elk Cotton Mills, 116 Tenn. 141, 92 S. W. 760. The buyer may, however, accept the offer, though defective; Norrington v. Wright, 115 U. S. 188, 6 Sup. Ct. 12, 29 L. Ed. 366. Where the seller delivers or offers to deliver a larger quantity than ordered or contracted for, it may conceivably be supposed that the seller is making his offer merely in lieu of the smaller quantity, and to make sure of the sufficiency of the offer, but not expecting to be paid for more than the order or contract required. In such a case the buyer would ordinarily have no just ground of objection; Shrimpton & Sons v. Warmack, 72 Miss. 208, 16 South. 494. But if more than a slight difference exists, then this must be regarded as a new offer by the seller. The buyer may accept the goods or the buyer may separate from the goods sent such a quantity as was ordered or contracted for, and reject the rest; Rommel v. Wingate, 103 Mass. 327; Martz v. Putnam, 117 Ind. 392, 20 N. E. 270. The buyer may, however, reject the offer altogether; Barton v. Kane, 17 Wis. 37, 84 Am. Dec. 728; Norrington v. Wright, 115 U. S. 188, 205, 6 Sup. Ct. 12, 29 L. Ed. 366. The preceding rules may be controlled by custom or agreement.

See DIVISIBLE CONTRACTS; BREACH; PERFORMANCE.

Where the seller is under a contract to sell goods to the buyer and ship them to him, usually the seller has thereby fulfilled all his obligations under the contract, but where bills of lading are issued by the carrier, the question is necessarily affected by the rules governing such documents. See BILLS OF LADING.

Buyer's rights. 1. Right to examine the goods. The buyer is entitled to examine the goods in order to decide whether he will become owner, and until the examination is completed, or waived, the property will not pass; McNeal v. Braun, 53 N. J. L. 617, 23 Atl. 687, 26 Am. St. Rep. 441. A refusal on the part of the seller to allow opportunity for inspection justifies the buyer in refusing to fulfill the contract; Charles v. Carter, 96 Tenn. 607, 36 S. W. 396.

Where, by the terms of the bargain, the property was to pass before delivery to the buyer, "the buyer has a reasonable time after the delivery in which to examine the goods, and, if they are not of a kind and quality ordered, he may then refuse to accept them, and thereby rescind the contract; but this right does not prevent the title from passing nor a recovery by the seller in an action for goods sold and delivered, if in fact they do conform to the terms of the contract; Brigham v. Hibbard, 28 Ore. 386, 388. Where the property is transferred and the goods paid for without opportunity for inspection, in such cases the right of inspection is that of a condition subsequent, enabling the buyer to return the goods of which he has already become owner, and to recover money which he has already paid; Weil v. Stone, 33 Ind. App. 112, 69 N. E. 698, 104 Am. St. Rep. 243. Where goods are taken into the buyer's possession and examination is deferred for his convenience until an indefinite time in the future, title passes, subject to the right of the buyer to throw back the title if the goods are not what the bargain required; Doane v. Dunham, 79 Ill. 131. If it is necessary, in order to determine whether goods conform to the contract or order, the buyer may test them even though the test involves the destruction of a portion of the goods; Lucy v. Montfort, 5 H. & N. 229; Philadelphia Whiting Co. v. Lead Works, 58 Mich. 29, 24 N. W. 881. A reasonable time is allowed for inspection but if the buyer fails to inspect them, he thereby waives the condition, and is thereafter to be treated as having assented to take or keep title to the goods. Since it is the duty of the seller to afford opportunity for examination, it would seem that the seller must bear the expense of affording such opportunity, but the expense of the inspection itself is another matter. The buyer need not inspect unless he likes, and if he chooses to do so he must bear the cost; Lincoln v. Gallagher, 79 Me. 189, 8 Atl. 883. If on inspection, however, it appears that the goods were not what the contract called for, it would seem to be a proper element of damage in an action against the seller for breach of his contract that reasonable expense had been incurred in examining the goods and testing their insufficiency. There are many decisions to the effect that a carrier must allow the buyer a reasonable opportunity to inspect them, and this right of inspection is a condition precedent to the obligation to pay freight; Old Colony R. Co. v. Wilder, 137 Mass. 536; Sloan v. R. Co., 126 N. C. 487, 36 S. E. 21; Union R. R. & Transp. Co. v. Riegel, 73 Pa. 72. The place of inspection is prima facie the place where the goods are delivered to the buyer; Holt v. Pie, 120 Pa. 425, 440, 14 Atl. 389. By the Sales Act, the buyer is deemed to have accepted the goods when he intimates to the seller that he has accepted them, or when the goods have been delivered to him, and he does any act in relation to them which is inconsistent with the ownership of the seller, or when, after the lapse of a reasonable time, he retains the goods without intimating to the seller that he has rejected them. But the acceptance of the goods does not indicate a release of liability for defective performance; Phillips & Colby Const. Co. v. Seymour, 91 U. S. 646, 23 L. Ed. 341; Frith v. Hollan, 133 Ala. 583, 32 South. 494, 91 Am. St. Rep. 54; Best v. Flint, 58 Vt. 543, 5 Atl. 192, 56 Am. Rep. 570. However, in some jurisdictions, acceptance of title waives right of damages for inferior quality; Staiger v. Soht, 191 N. Y. 527, 84

N. E. 1120; Miller v. Moore, 83 Ga. 684, 10 S. E. 360, 6 L. R. A. 374, 20 Am. St. Rep. 329; Jones v. McEwan, 91 Ky. 373, 16 S. W. 81, 12 L. R. A. 390.

See RESCISSION.

Rights of the seller. If an unpaid seller retains both title and possession of the goods, there can be no question as to his legal capacity to deal effectively with them. It is fundamental that unless the buyer and seller make a contrary agreement, the seller is entitled to the price at the same time that he transfers possession of the goods. Accordingly the seller always has a lien on the goods which he sells, until payment or tender of the price, unless the terms of the bargain indicate a contrary agreement. The various terms which indicate a contrary agreement may all be summed up in the single expression of sale on credit. But even where the parties agree upon a sale on credit, the seller's lien may revive, as for instance where the buyer has failed to take possession of the goods until the term of credit has expired and the price becomes due; Leahy v. Lobdell, 80 Fed. 665, 26 C. C. A. 75. The insolvency of the buyer also revives the lien of the seller, even though the time for payment of the price has not yet arrived; McElwee v. Lumber Co., 69 Fed. 302, 16 C. C. A. 232; Lennox v. Murphy, 171 Mass. 370, 50 N. E. 644; Tuthill v. Skidmore, 124 N. Y. 148, 26 N. E. 348; Wanamaker v. Yerkes, 70 Pa. 443. When part of the goods are delivered the seller has a lien upon the remainder for whatever portion of the price is unpaid; Ware River R. Co. v. Vibbard, 114 Mass. 447, 458; Williams v. Moore, 5 N. H. 235. The lien is lost by delivery to the buyer; Thompson v. Conover, 32 N. J. L. 466; or to an agent or bailee for the buyer; Schmertz & Blakely v. Dwyer, 53 Pa. 335, 338; or where the goods are already in the possession of the buyer at the time of the bargain; 12 A. & E. 632. The seller may waive his lien either by express agreement to that effect or by such conduct as estops him from asserting it. See ESTOPPEL.

As to seller's right to stoppage in transitu, see STOPPAGE IN TRANSITU; BILLS OF LADING.

Resale by the seller. The well recognized doctrine in the United States is thus stated in Tuthill v. Skidmore, 124 N. Y. 148, 153, 26 N. E. 348: "When the price of goods sold on credit is due and unpaid, and the vendee becomes insolvent before obtaining possession of them, the vendor's right to the property is often called a lien, but it is greater than a lien. In the absence of any express power, the lienor usually cannot transfer the title to the property on which the lien exists by a sale of it to one having notice of the extent of his right, but he must proceed by foreclosure. When a vendor rightfully stops goods in transitu or retains them before transitus has begun, he can, by a sale made on notice to the vendee, vest a purchaser with a good title; Dustan v. McAndrew, 44 N. Y. 72. His right is very nearly that of a pledgee, with power to sell at a private sale in case of default; the vendee having become insolvent and refused payment of the notes given for the purchase price of the property which remained in the vendor's possession, the vendor has a right to retain it as security, for the lien was revived as against the vendee and his attaching creditor; in accord, Putnam v. Glidden, 159 Mass. 47, 34 N. E. 81, 38 Am. St. Rep. 394; Arnold v. Carpenter, 16 R. I. 560, 18 Atl. 174, 5 L. R. A. 357. As to the manner in which the sale should be made, the law is satisfied with a fair sale made in good faith according to established business methods, with no attempt to take advantage of the vendee; Ackerman v. Rubens, 167 N. Y. 405, 60 N. E. 750, 53 L. R. A. 867, 82 Am. St. Rep. 728; and in every case it is a question of fact whether the resale complies with this requirement; id. In some cases it has been held that in order to bind the buyer by a resale, the seller must have given notice of his intention to make a resale; Ingram v. Wackernagel, 83 Ia. 82, 48 N. W. 998; Waples v. Overaker, 77 Tex. 7, 13 S. W. 527, 19 Am. St. Rep. 722; but by the weight of authority there is no such absolute requirement; Ullmann v. Kent, 60 Ill. 271; Redmond v. Smock, 28 Ind. 365; Van Brocklen v. Smeallie, 140 N. Y. 70, 35 N. E. 415; Pratt v. Freeman & Sons Mfg. Co., 115 Wis. 648, 92 N. W. 368. A resale of the goods involves an assertion by the seller that his obligation is terminated. The seller has the right to resell when the buyer is in default, and such default must be of an essential or material character; his default generally consists in failure to take the goods and pay for them. However, the delay of a day or an hour in a mercantile contract is not always fatal, and, generally, if the buyer's default consists merely in delay, the seller must wait a reasonable time before reselling the goods. What is a reasonable time will vary accordingly to the nature of the goods and the circumstances of the case. If goods are perishable, or of rapidly fluctuating value, the reasonable time will be very short. The seller may charge, in his account against the buyer, all reasonable expenses occurred in making the resale; Hill v. McKay, 94 Cal. 5, 29 Pac. 406. He cannot, however, make a charge for his own services in connection with the resale; Penn v. Smith, 93 Ala. 476, 9 South. 609; Gehl v. Milwaukee Produce Co., 105 Wis. 573, 81 N. W. 666. If the resale is for a higher price than that for which the original buyer was bound, the seller has the right to keep the profit; Warren v. Buckminster, 24 N. H. 336. This is expressly so provided in the Sales Act.

Rescission by the seller. "The seller, upon the buyer's default, whether the latter is insolvent or not, and whether his conduct is such as to show a settled determination to repudiate the contract or not, may, although title has passed to the buyer, elect to keep the property as his own and recover damages for the buyer's breach; Mechem, Sales, § 1681. By the Sales Act: 1. An unpaid seller having a right of lien or having stopped the goods in transitu, may rescind the transfer of title and resume the property in the goods, where he expressly reserved the right to do so in case the buyer should make default, or where the buyer has been in default in making payments for an unreasonable time. The seller shall not thereafter be liable to the buyer upon the contract to sell or the sale, but may recover from the buyer damages for any loss occasioned by the breach of contract or sale. The transfer of title shall not be held to have been rescinded by an unpaid seller until he has manifested by notice to the buyer or by some other overt act an intention to rescind. It is not necessary that such overt act should be communicated to the buyer, but the giving or failure to give notice to the buyer of the intention to rescind shall be relevant in any issue involving the question whether the buyer had been in default an unreasonable time before the right of rescission was asserted.

When goods are subject to a legal lien, as they are when an unpaid seller is in possession of them, a subsequent buyer can acquire only such right as the original buyer, from whom he bought them, had; Keeler v. Goodwin, 111 Mass. 490; Robinson v. Morgan, 65 Vt. 37, 25 Atl. 899.

Generally there can be no doubt that an unpaid seller may choose any of the remedies against the goods which the law allows; namely, a right to hold them, to resell them on account of the buyer, or to resume the property in the goods.

Remedies of the seller on the contract.

Where the property in the goods has passed and the buyer wrongfully neglects or refuses to pay for them, the seller may recover the price; Mitchell v. Le Clair, 165 Mass. 308, 43 N. E. 117; Doremus v. Howard, 23 N. J. L. 390. The general rule of the English law and of many of the states denies an action for the price unless the property has passed; Moody v. Brown, 34 Me. 107, 56 Am. Dec. 640; McCormick Harvesting Machine Co. v. Balfany, 78 Minn. 370, 81 N. W. 10, 79 Am. St. Rep. 393; Puritan Coke Co. v. Clark, 204 Pa. 556, 54 Atl. 350; American Hide & Leather Co. v. Chalkley, 101 Va. 458, 463, 44 S. E. 705. If the reason why the property in the goods has not passed to the buyer is because the buyer wrongfully refused to take title when offered to him, the seller, according to the weight of authority, may recover the full purchase price; Kinhead v. Lynch, 132 Fed. 692; Ames v. Moir, 130 Ill. 582, 22 N. E. 535; Rastetter v. Reynolds, 160 Ind. 133, 66 N. E. 612; Gordon v. Norris, 49 N. H. 376; Van Brocklen v. Smeallie, 140 N. Y. 70, 35 N. E. 415; Haynes v. Brown, 18 Okl. 389, 89 Pac. 1124. Some jurisdictions restrict the application of this doctrine to cases where the goods contracted for are of a peculiar kind, not readily salable on the market and as to which, therefore, a market price cannot readily be fixed; River Spinning Co. v. Atlantic Mills, 155 Fed. 466; Black River Lbr. Co. v. Warner, 93 Mo. 374, 6 S. W. 210; Ballentine v. Robinson, 46 Pa. 177. Where the price is payable on a day certain, irrespective of delivery or of transfer of title, and the buyer wrongfully neglects or refuses to pay such price, the seller may maintain an action for the price, although the property in the goods has not passed, and the goods have not been appropriated to the contract; Krebs Hop Co. v. Livesley, 51 Or. 527, 92 Pac. 1084; but it is a defense to such an action that the seller at any time before judgment has manifested an inability to perform the contract or sale on his part or an intention not to perform it, such as where he becomes insolvent; Lennox v. Murphy, 171 Mass. 370, 373, 50 N. E. 644; Pardee v. Kanady, 100 N. Y. 121, 2 N. E. 885; Lancaster Bank v. Huver, 114 Pa. 216, 6 Atl. 141; or makes a voluntary transfer to a third person of the property; Meyers v. Markham, 90 Minn. 230, 96 N. W. 335, 787; Brodhead v. Reinhold, 200 Pa. 618, 50 Atl. 229, 86 Am. St. Rep. 735; or a repudiation; Ripley v. McClure, 4 Ex. 345.

Conditional sales present the only class of cases where it is at all usual for the buyer to agree to pay the price before he acquires title to the property. The buyer, relying on his possession of the goods as sufficient to secure him for such portion of the price as he may pay before the property passes to him, is content to pay part of the price in advance. It is generally provided in such contracts that on default of the buyer, the seller may reclaim possession of the goods, and even in the absence of such a provision, it has been held to be implied; Ryan v. Wayson, 108 Mich. 519, 66 N. W. 370. If the seller exercises his right to reclaim the goods, it is generally held an election to rescind the contract, and thereafter an action for the price or any unsatisfied balance of it, is not allowed; Aultman & Co. v. Olson, 43 Minn. 409, 45 N. W. 852; Kelley Springfield Road Roller Co. v. Schlimme, 220 Pa. 413, 69 Atl. 867, 123 Am. St. Rep. 707. A seller should be allowed all the means that he has contracted for in order to get the price of the goods, and most courts do not compel the seller to account for any payment which he has received if he reclaims the goods because of the buyer's default; Fleck v. Warner, 25 Kan. 492; Lorain Steel Co. v. St. Ry. Co., 187 Mass. 500, 73 N. E. 646; Morgan v. Kidder, 55 Vt. 367. However, some cases hold that if the contract does not provide for the forfeiture of such payments as have been made before default, they may be recovered by the buyer, with only such deduction as is fair compensation for the use of the goods; Hill v. Townsend, 69 Ala. 286; Pierce v. Staub, 78 Conn. 459, 62 Atl. 760, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 785, 112 Am. St. Rep. 163; Latham v. Sumner, 89 Ill. 233, 31 Am. Rep. 79. And a few cases have also held that in an action brought to reclaim possession, the seller must either tender the portion of the price which has been paid, subject to proper reduction for temporary use, or that a money judgment will be rendered in which an equitable reduction is made from the value of the goods; Ilays v. Jordan & Co., 85 Ga. 741, 11 S. E. 833, 9 L. R. A. 373; National Cash Register Co. v. Cervone, 76 Ohio St. 12, 80 N. E. 1033.

If the buyer, without lawful excuse, fails to accept goods which he agreed to buy, he is liable on ordinary principles of contract for this breach of obligation. The amount of the plaintiff's recovery in such an action should be such a sum of money as will put him in as good a position as he would have been in had the defendant performed his legal obligation.

As to the effect of repudiation before the time for performance, see ANTICIPATORY BREACH; BREACH; PERFORMANCE.

Rescission by the seller. When the goods have not been delivered, and the buyer has repudiated the contract or sale, or has manifested his inability to perform his obligations thereunder, or has committed a material breach, the seller may totally rescind the contract or sale by giving notice of his election so to do to the buyer. It will generally be more favorable for a seller, if the buyer makes default, not to rescind the contract, but merely to rely on such default as his own excuse for not performing and sue the buyer for his default on the contract. Though the seller who has elected, for due cause, to rescind a contract, cannot thereafter sue upon it, he is entitled to recover the value of whatever he has delivered to the buyer by invoking the principles of quasi-contract. See QUASI-CONTRACT.

Remedies of the buyer. Where the buyer has fully performed all his own obligations under the contract which are precedent or concurrent with the seller's obligation to deliver the goods, and the property in the goods has passed to the buyer, then upon a failure to deliver, the seller is guilty of both a tort and a breach of contract, for he is detaining or converting without just excuse the property which belongs to the buyer, and he is also violating his contractual duty as seller. See CONVERSION; TROVER.

The amount of the buyer's recovery for the seller's failure to deliver the goods when the property has passed, whether he sues in contract or in tort, is prima facie the market value of the goods at the time and place when delivery should have been rendered; and if the price has been paid, such is the recovery actually allowed; Deere v. Lewis, 51 Ill. 254; Hill v. Smith, 32 Vt. 433. The ordinary rule is that of confining the plaintiff's damages to the value of the goods at the time of the defendant's breach of duty, but it has often been urged that the value of the goods at the time of the wrongful conversion or refusal to deliver may not fully compensate the buyer for the wrong done him. Accordingly, in some jurisdictions, especially in regard to the sale of stocks and other articles of rapidly fluctuating value, the rule has been suggested that the plaintiff ought to receive damages based on the highest market price up to the time of trial; Wright v. Bank, 110 N. Y. 237, 18 N. E. 79, 1 L. R. A. 289, 6 Am. St. Rep. 356. However, the United States Supreme Court qualified the rule by allowing only the highest intermediate value up to such time after the owner has received notice of the conversion as is reasonably needed to enable him to replace the converted property; Galigher v. Jones, 129 U. S. 193, 9 Sup. Ct. 335, 32 L. Ed. 658.

Where the property in the goods has not passed to the buyer, and the seller wrongfully neglects or refuses to deliver the goods, the buyer may maintain an action against the seller for damages for non-delivery. The measure of damages is identical with that of the seller where the buyer refuses acceptance, which has been considered supra. Where the seller repudiates and makes material default, the buyer may rescind the contract and recover the price or any part of it that he may have paid; 3 Bing. 724.

Courts of equity have very closely restricted their jurisdiction in regard to the specific performance of contracts for the sale of personal property, and it has been held that for breach of contracts for the sale of goods, damages are, as a rule, an adequate remedy. In a few exceptional cases specific performance has been granted, as for slaves; Womack v. Smith & Tinsley, 11 Humph. (Tenn.) 478, 54 Am. Dec. 51; works of art; Falcke v. Gray, 4 Drew. 651; valuable documents of various kinds; McMullen v. Vanzant, 73 Ill. 190; Dock v. Dock, 180 Pa. 14, 36 Atl. 411, 57 Am. St. Rep. 617. By the Sales Act, where the seller has broken a contract to deliver specific or ascertained goods, a court having the powers of a court of equity may, if it thinks fit on the application of the buyer, direct that the contract shall be performed specifically without giving the seller the option of retaining the goods on payment of damages. See EQUITY; SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

Remedies of the buyer for breach of warranty by the seller. The buyer may at his election keep the goods and set up against the seller the breach of warranty by way of recoupment in diminution of the price; Brad- ley v. Rea, 14 Allen (Mass.) 20; Huntington v. Lombard, 22 Wash. 202, 60 Pac. 414; or keep the goods and maintain an action or counterclaim for damages; or refuse to accept the goods and maintain an action for the breach of warranty; or rescind the contract or sale; Hodge v. Tufts, 115 Ala. 366, 22 South. 422; Upton Mfg. Co. v. Huiske, 69 Ia. 557, 29 N. W. 621; Horner v. Parkhurst, 71 Md. 110, 17 Atl. 1027; Byers v. Chapin, 28 Ohio St. 300; Optenberg v. Skelton, 109 Wis. 241, 85 N. W. 356; but, contra, the buyer is denied any right of rescission of an executed sale for breach of warranty in Woodruff v. Graddy, 91 Ga. 333, 17 S. E. 264, 44 Am. St. Rep. 33; Wulschuer v. Ward, 115 Ind. 219, 222, 17 N. E. 273; Day v. Pool, 52 N. Y. 416, 11 Am. Rep. 719; Eshleman v. Lightner, 169 Pa. 46, 32 Atl. 63; Hulet v. Achey, 39 Wash. 91, 80 Pac. 1105. Not simply in regard to rescission for breach of warranty but in regard to rescission of contracts generally, it is the law that the party seeking to rescind cannot do so if he has obtained a benefit under the contract which he cannot restore; Wald's Pollock, Contracts (3d Ed.), 342. See RESCISSION.

The buyer must act promptly with reference to the election of his remedies which are mutually exclusive, for if the buyer elects the remedy of rescission he is thereby precluded from bringing an action for damages; Mundt v. Simpkins, 81 Neb. 1, 115 N. W. 325, 129 Am. St. Rep. 670. The general measure of damage for breach of warranty of quality is the difference between the value of the article actually furnished the buyer and the value the article would have had if having the qualities which it was warranted to have; McDonald v. Kansas City Bolt Co., 149 Fed. 360, 79 C. C. A. 298, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1110. In some cases the buyer suffers special damage far exceeding the value of the goods promised him, and if the consequential damages thus caused are natural consequences of the breach of warranty, the plaintiff is generally allowed to recover them; Dushane v. Benedict, 120 U. S. 630, 7 Sup. Ct. 696, 30 L. Ed. 810. The Sales Act makes no distinction in regard either to remedies or the measure of damages for the breach of warranty of title and the breach of warranty of quality.

Considerable difference of decision exists in regard to warranties of title. Many jurisdictions hold that no right of action accrues to the buyer until his possession has been disturbed; Wanser v. Messler, 29 N. J. L. 256; Krumbhaar v. Birch, 83 Pa. 426; Barnum v. Cochrane, 143 Cal. 642, 77 Pac. 656. Even jurisdictions which do not deny the right of action often hold that while the buyer retains undisturbed possession, he can only recover nominal damages; Close v. Crossland, 47 Minn. 500, 50 N. W. 694; O'Brien v. Jones, 91 N. Y. 193.

Sales in Bulk. It is within the police powers of a state to regulate sales of entire stocks in trade of merchants so as to prevent fraud on innocent creditors, and a state statute prohibiting such sales except under reasonable conditions as to previous notice is not unconstitutional under the due process and equal protection clauses of the 14th Amendment; Lemieux v. Young, 211 U. S. 489, 29 Sup. Ct. 174, 53 L. Ed. 295, affirming Young v. Lemieux, 70 Conn. 434, 65 Atl. 436, 600, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 160, 129 Am. St. Rep. 193, 8 Ann. Cas. 452. The court, by White, J., considered this view as "too clear to require discussion," and quoted at length from the dissenting opinion of Vann, J., in Wright v. Hart, 182 N. Y. 350, 75 N. E. 404, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 338, 3 Ann. Cas. 263. Such acts have been upheld in Squire & Co. v. Teller, 185 Mass. 18, 69 N. E. 312, 102 Am. St. Rep. 322; Walp v. Moar, 76 Conn. 515, 57 Atl. 277; Neas v. Borches, 109 Tenn. 398, 71 S. W. 50, 97 Am. St. Rep. 851; McDaniels v. Connelly Shoe Co., 30 Wash. 549, 71 Pac. 37, 60 L. R. A. 947, 94 Am. St. Rep. 889. Acts declaring such sales to be presumptively fraudulent were assumed to be valid in Fisher v. Herrmann, 118 Wis. 424, 95 N. W. 392, and Hart v. Roney, 93 Md. 432, 49 Atl. 661. A contrary view was taken in Miller v. Crawford, 70 Ohio 207, 71 N. E. 631, 1 Ann. Cas. 558; Sol Block & Griff v. Schwarz, 27 Utah 387, 76 Pac. 22; Williams v. Bank, 15 Okl. 477, 82 Pac. 496, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 334, 6 Ann. Cas. 970.

Such acts do not apply to a sale by one partner to another; Taylor v. Folds, 2 Ga. App. 453, 58 S. E. 683; Fairfield Shoe Co. v. Olds, 176 Ind. 526, 96 N. E. 592; nor to giving a chattel mortgage on the goods; Hannah & Hogg v. Brewing Co., 149 Mich. 220, 112 N. W. 713, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 178, 119 Am. St. Rep. 674, 12 Ann. Cas. 344. They do apply to a sale to a creditor to pay his debt; Sanipson v. Grocery Co., 127 Ga. 454, 56 S. E. 488, 9 Ann. Cas. 331. Such sale is not fraudulent in law; Gorham v. Buzzell, 178 Fed. 596. It is voidable only; Dickinson v. Harbison, 78 N. J. L. 97, 72 Atl. 941.

Sale to Arrive. A sale of goods to arrive per Argo, or on arrival per Argo, is construed to be a sale of goods subject to a double condition precedent: that the ship arrives and the goods are on board; 5 M. & W. 639. In such case, title to the goods does not pass till their arrival; Benedict v. Field, 16 N. Y. 597.

Sale for Illegal Purpose. A sale of goods for the purpose of smuggling is invalid; 3 Term 454; but not when a foreigner sold the goods abroad having no concern in the smuggling; 1 Cowp. 34. The mere knowledge of the vendor that the goods sold would be used for an illegal purpose does not render the sale illegal; Hill v. Spear, 50 N. H. 253, 9 Am. Rep. 205; Gaylord v. Soragen, 32 Vt. 110, 76 Am. Dec. 154. See Benj. Sales, § 511, n.

Where a buyer is insolvent and has no intention to pay for goods, the sale may be avoided by the seller; Donaldson v. Farwell, 93 U. S. 631, 23 L. Ed. 993; Wright v. Brown, 67 N. Y. 1; but the mere knowledge on the buyer's part that he will be unable to pay for them, will not alone form a fraudulent intent; Tiedem. Sales, § 170; there must be other facts of a suspicious nature, such as re-selling them at a reduced price; id. In Pennsylvania, it is not enough to show that the buyer was insolvent and did not intend to pay for the goods; some artifice must be shown; Smith v. Smith, 21 Pa. 367, 60 Am. Dec. 51.

A Massachusetts act of 1884 makes it a crime for any one to sell any property under representation that anything other than what is specifically stated to be the subject of the sale is to be delivered, etc., as a part of the transaction. In a case under this act it appeared that a retail dealer in tobacco offered to each purchaser a selection of a photograph among a number exposed for his choice. A conviction under this act was set aside upon the ground that what was sold in this case was specifically understood to be the subject of the sale. In a case under a like act in New York, the buyer purchased coffee and received a present as a part of the transaction. It appeared that the presents were lying in full view of the purchasers who could make their choice if they bought as much as two pounds of coffee. The act was held to be unconstitutional; People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 389, 17 N. E. 343, 4 Am. St. Rep. 465. A Maryland act was held to be unconstitutional only so far as related to transactions which were dependent upon chance; Long v. State, 74 Md. 565, 22 Atl. 4, 12 L. R. A. 425, 28 Am. St. Rep. 268. See LOTTERY.

A New York act (1898) provides that a seller who publicly advertises statements with respect to quantity, quality, value, price, method of production, or manufacture, which are untrue or calculated to mislead, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

As to the interpretation of the Sales Act, see Williston on Sales, p. 1031 et seq.

See Williston on Sales, where the whole subject is very ably treated.

Real Estate. The above rules apply to sales of personal property. The sale of real estate is governed by other rules. When a contract has been entered into for the sale of lands, the legal estate in such lands still remains vested in the vendor, and it does not become vested in the vendee until he shall have received a lawful deed of conveyance from the vendor to him; and the only remedy of the purchaser at law is to bring an action on the contract and recover pecuniary damages for a breach of the contract. In equity, however, after a contract for the sale, the lands are considered as belonging to the purchaser, and the court will enforce his rights by a decree for a specific performance; and the seller will be entitled to the purchase-money; Wms. R. P. 127. See SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

In general, the seller of real estate does not guarantee the title; and if it be desired that he should, this must be done by inserting a warranty to that effect.

Section 3 of the statute of frauds provides that no interest in land shall be created unless by deed or note in writing signed by the party or his agent, authorized by writing, or by act of operation of law.

The question whether sales of standing timber involves any interest in land has been much mooted. The majority of cases seem to support the following propositions: 1. Where the vendor has expressly stipulated that the trees may remain standing on the land a given number of years if the purchaser elects. Here, as they derive more or less growth and increase from the soil, there is some reason to hold that the sale involves an interest in land. It has in fact been considered a sale, not only of the trees as they then are, but as they will be at the end of the stipulated period with all the additions to them subsequently acquired by the soil. See Vorebeck v. Roe, 50 Barb. (N. Y.) 302; Kingsley v. Holbrook, 45 N. H. 313, 86 Am. Dec. 173. 2. Where the trees are to stand for an indefinite time and to be severed solely at the pleasure of the buyer, the statute of frauds requires a written agreement. See Buck v. Pickwell, 27 Vt. 157.

Under the civil law, in a contract of sale the seller was not bound to make the buyer absolute master (dominus) of the thing sold, as he would have been in a stipulation. What he was bound to do was this: 1. To deliver the thing itself (præstare, tradere), to give free and undisturbed possession of it (possessionem vacuum tradere), and to give lawful possession of it (præstare, licere habere). 2. If the buyer was disturbed in his possession by the real owner (evictio), to recompense him for what was lost. 3. To secure the buyer against secret faults; if such faults were discovered, either compensation might be claimed by an actio æstimatoria, reducing the price to a greater or less amount, according as the seller had or had not knowledge of the defect, or at the option of the buyer, the contract might be rescinded by an action actio redhibitoria, and the thing returned (which was termed redhibitio: red-hibere est facere ut rursus habeat venditor quod habuerat). Just. Inst. (8th Ed.) 365.

SALE-NOTE. A memorandum given by a broker to a seller or buyer of goods, stating the fact that certain goods have been sold by him on account of a person called the seller to another person called the buyer. Sale-notes are also called bought and sold notes. See BOUGHT NOTE.

SALE ON APPROVAL. See SALE.

SALE OR RETURN. Contracts of sale or return exist where the privilege of purchase or return is not dependent upon the character or quality of the property sold, but rests entirely upon the option of the purchaser to retain or return; and the title passes to the purchaser subject to his option to return the property; Sturm v. Boker, 150 U. S. 312, 14 Sup. Ct. 99, 37 L. Ed. 1093; upon return the title reverts (a condition subsequent); Tiff. Sales, 93. See SALE.

SALESMAN. One who solicited orders for weather strips, and superintended the placing thereof by workmen acting under his direction, was held a salesman within the bankrupt act, although the bankrupt paid the workmen and furnished the material and paid the solicitor the entire proceeds of the work, less the cost of wages and material and fifteen per cent. of the price; In re Roebuck Weather Strip & Wire Screen Co., 180 Fed. 497.

SALFORD HUNDRED COURT. A court in England, still existing, having civil jurisdiction. It is an inferior court of record.

SALIC or SALIQUE LAW. The name of a code of laws, so called from the Salians, a people of Germany who settled in Gaul under their king Pharamond.

The most remarkable law of this code is that which regards succession. De terra vero salica nulla portio hæreditatis transit in mulierem, sed hoc virilis sexus acquirit; hoc est, filii in ipsa hæreditate succedunt: no part of the salique land passes to women, but the men alone are capable of taking; that is, the sons succeed to the inheritance. This has always excluded women from the throne of France.

It dates almost certainly from the reign of Chlodwig (486-511). It was written in Latin. It consists largely of a tariff of offences and atonements, but is said to contain "a few precious chapters," and to be, through the Norman Conquest, one of the ancestors of English Law. Maitland, in 1 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. L. H. 13. It is not a code, but a collection of Germanic folk laws. It was the custumal of the race which became overlords of half of Western Europe. See Hesses & Kern, Salic Law.

SALINE LAND. Land having salt deposits. To fourteen states congress has granted all the salt springs within them; to twelve, a limited grant of them was made. Eighteen states have received no such grant; Montello Salt Co. v. Utah, 221 U. S. 452, 31 Sup. Ct. 706, 55 L. Ed. 810, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 633.

SALMANNUS. A sale-man, found in the Sallie law in the fifth century, who was a third person called in to complete the transfer of property. 12 Harv. L. Rev. 445, Law in Science, etc., by O. W. Holmes, Jr.

SALOON. A place of refreshment. Kitson v. Mayor of Ann Arbor, 26 Mich. 325. An apartment for a specified public use. Clinton v. Grusendorf, 80 Ia. 117, 45 N. W. 408; Ex parte Livingstone, 20 Nev. 282, 21 Pac. 322. In common parlance, the word is used to designate a place where intoxicating liquors are sold, and this restricted meaning may be given to saloons, where the context or other circumstances requires it; McDougall v. Giacomini, 13 Neb. 434, 14 N. W. 150; Dewar v. People, 40 Mich. 401, 29 Am. Rep. 545; Cahill v. Campbell, 105 Mass. 40; but it does not necessarily import a place where liquors are sold; Kitson v. Mayor of Ann Arbor, 26 Mich. 325; Early v. State, 23 Tex. App. 364, 5 S. W. 122. The word has a much broader meaning than dram shop. To constitute a saloon it is not necessary that ardent spirits should be offered for sale and that it should be a business requiring a license under the revenue laws of the state; Snow v. State, 50 Ark. 561, 9 S. W. 306. See LIQUOR LAWS.

SALT. See SALINE LANDS.

SALUTE. A coin made by Henry V., after his conquests in France.

In the army and navy an honor paid to a distinguished personage, when troops or squadrons meet, when officers are buried, or to celebrate an event or show respect to a flag and on many other ceremonial occasions. Cent. Dict.

Upon the arrival of a man of war in a foreign port the salutes and other ceremonials toward the port and its authorities are prescribed in full detail by the naval regulations. A ship of war entering a harbor or passing by a port or castle should pay the first salute except when the sovereign or his ambassador is on board, in which case the salute should be made first on the shore; Woolsey, Introd. Int. Law, 4th ed. § 85.

No salute is to be fired in honor of any nation, or official of any nation not formally recognized by the United States; Snow, Lect. Int. Law 70.

SALVAGE. A compensation given by the maritime law for service rendered in saving property or rescuing it from impending peril on the sea or wrecked on the coast of the sea, or, in the United States, on a public navigable river or lake, where interstate or foreign commerce is carried on; Fretz v. Bull, 12 How. (U. S.) 466, 13 L. Ed. 1068.

A salvage service is a service which is voluntarily rendered to a vessel in need of assistance and is designed to relieve her from some distress or danger either present or to be reasonably apprehended, while a towage service is one which is rendered for the mere purpose of expediting her voyage without reference to any circumstances of danger; The Lowther Castle, 195 Fed. 604.

The property saved. The only proper subjects of salvage are vessels or ships used for the purpose of being navigated, and goods which at one time formed the cargoes of such vessels, whether found on board, or drifting, or cast on shore; [1897] A. C. 347. It has been held that there can be no salvage against a floating dry dock intended to be permanently moored to the shore; Cope v. Vallette Dry Dock Co., 119 U. S. 625, 7 Sup. Ct. 336, 30 L. Ed. 501; nor against coal barges on the Mississippi river, which were mere boxes without tackle, apparel, furniture, master, or crew, and which were sold with the coal or broken up for old lumber; Wood v. Two Barges, 46 Fed. 204; nor a floating structure intended to be moored alongside a wharf for carts containing refuse to drive over it to a dumping boat; Ruddiman v. A Scow Platform, 38 Fed. 158; nor a pile-driving machine erected on a floating platform; Pile Driver E. O. A., 69 Fed. 1005; nor a gas-float fifty feet long by twenty wide moored in a river to give light to vessels (not being a ship); [1897] A. C. 337; as to rafts of timber, quære; see id. Timber found drifting in deep water and out of control of the owners is a subject of salvage; Whitmire v. Cobb, 88 Fed. 91, 31 C. C. A. 395.

When a ship was almost becalmed on the high seas a floating chest was found and with but little trouble taken on board. It contained seventy doubloons. It was held that the finders were not entitled to the whole property, though there were no marks of ownership, but should be compensated by a moiety as for salvage services. The other moiety was directed to be paid into court; Hollingsworth v. Seventy Doubloons & Three Small Pieces of Gold, 19 Niles, Reg. 104; Fed. Cas. No. 6,620. See FINDER. Passengers' lives may be the subject of salvage services, by statute. See 55 Alb. L. J. 404.

A person who offers useful services to a vessel in distress without any previous contract, is a salvor; The Nebraska, 75 Fed. 598, 21 C. C. A. 448, 24 U. S. App. 559.

Salvage, after actual compensation for the services rendered, is a gratuity for the benefit of commerce, as an encouragement for like services and efforts; no amount of reward to owners and machinery will so stimulate efforts to save life and property as will moderate awards to master and crew who are the effective agents to set the machinery in motion; Compagnie Commerciale de Transport a Vapeur Francaise v. Charente

S. S. Co., 60 Fed. 921, 9 C. C. A. 202, 13 U. S. App. 662.

"Salvage consists (1) of an adequate compensation for the actual outlay of labor and expense made in the enterprise; and (2) of the reward as bounty allowed from motives of public policy, as a means of encouraging such exertions. In determining the amount of an award the leading considerations are: the degree of danger from which the rescue is made; value of the property saved; risk to the salvors; the value of property risked by salvors and the dangers to which it was exposed; the skill shown and the time and labor spent." The Rita, 62 Fed. 761, 10 C. C. A. 629, 23 U. S. App. 435.

Moral considerations and questions of policy enter largely into salvage cases; 2 Hagg. 3.

The peril. The peril from which property was saved must be real, not speculative merely; Talbot v. Seeman, 1 Cra. (U. S.) 1, 2 L. Ed. 15; 1 Ben. Adm. 166; but it need not be such that escape from it by any other means than by the aid of the salvors was impossible. It is sufficient that the peril was something extraordinary, something differing in kind and degree from the ordinary perils of navigation; Hennessey v. Versailles, 1 Curt. C. C. 353, Fed. Cas. No. 6365; The Independence, 2 Curt. C. C. 350, Fed. Cas. No. 7,014. See The Rumsey, 40 Fed. 909; Stone v. The Jewell, 41 Fed. 103. All services rendered at sea to a vessel in distress are salvage services; 1 W. Rob. 174; 3 id. 71. But the peril must be present and pending, not future, contingent, and conjectural; The Emulous, 1 Sumn. 216, Fed. Cas. No. 4,480; 3 Hagg. Adm. 344. It may arise from the sea, rocks, fire, pirates, or enemies; Talbot v. Seeman, 1 Cra. (U. S.) 1, 2 L. Ed. 15; or from the sickness or death of the crew or master; Robson v. Huntress, 2 Wall. Jr. 59, Fed. Cas. No. 11,971; 1 Swab. 84.

The saving. The property must be effectually saved; it must be brought to some port of safety, and it must be there in a state capable of being restored to the owner, before the service can be deemed completed; The Henry Ewbank, 1 Sumn. 417, Fed. Cas. No. 6,376; 1 W. Rob. 329, 406; The Angeline Anderson, 35 Fed. 796; The Golden Gate, 57 Fed. 661. The salvage services must be performed by persons not bound by their legal duty to render them; 1 Hagg. Adm. 227; 2 Spinks, Adm. 253. The property must be saved by the instrumentality of the asserted salvors, or their services must contribute in some certain degree to save it; Clarke v. The Dodge Healy, 4 Wash. C. C. 651, Fed. Cas. No. 2,849; Olc. 462; though, if the services were rendered on the request of the master or owner, the salvor is entitled to salvage though the services were slight and the property was saved mainly by a providential act; McGinnis v. The Pontiac, 5 McLean 359, 1 Newb. 130, Fed. Cas. No. 8,801; 2 W. Rob.

91; Allen v. The Canada, Bee 90, Fed. Cas. No. 219.

Towage services are sometimes the subject of compensation as salvage. Mere expediting the voyage of a vessel, by towing, is not salvage; but salvage was allowed in the case of a steamship who had broken her main shaft, but could sail fairly well, the weather also being favorable, in which condition she was towed ninety miles; 1 Spinks, A. & E. 169, said to be the extreme case; Kennedy, Civil Salvage 22; courts are liberal to such claims in respect of the amount of danger necessary to render towage a salvage source; id.

The assistance into port of an ocean steamer carrying passengers which was disabled by the loss of her propeller is a salvage service; The Roanoke, 209 Fed. 114.

The place. In England it has been held that the services must be rendered on the high seas, or, at least, extra corpus comitatus, but in this country it is held that the district courts of the United States have jurisdiction to decree salvage for services rendered on tide waters and on the lakes or rivers where interstate or foreign commerce is carried on, although infra corpus comitatus; Fretz v. Bull, 12 How. (U. S.) 466, 13 L. Ed. 1068; The A. D. Patchin, 1 Blatchf. 420, Fed. Cas. No. 87. Extinguishing a fire on a vessel in a dry dock is ground of salvage; The Jefferson, 215 U. S. 130, 30 Sup. Ct. 54, 54 L. Ed. 125, 17 Ann. Cas. 907.

The amount. Some foreign states have fixed by law the amount or proportion to be paid for salvage services; but in England and the United States no such rule has been established. In these countries the amount rests in the sound discretion of the court awarding the salvage, upon a full consideration of all the facts of the case. It generally far exceeds a mere remuneration pro opere et labore, the excess being intended, upon principles of sound policy, not only as a reward to the particular salvor, but also as an inducement to others to render like services; Mason v. The Blaireau, 2 Cra. (U. S.) 240, 2 L. Ed. 266; 1 C. Rob. 312, n.; 3 id. 355; 3 Hagg. Adm. 95. But it is equally the policy of the law not to provoke the salvor's appetite of avarice, nor encourage his exorbitant demands, nor teach him to stand ready to devour what the ocean has spared; Hand v. The Elvira, Gilp. 75, Fed. Cas. No. 6,015. Adequate rewards encourage the tendering and acceptance of salvage services; exorbitant demands discourage their acceptance and tend to augment the risk and loss of vessels in distress. 7 Notes of Cas. 579, Salvage viewed as a reward is not properly the subject of a binding contract in advance. Courts of admiralty fully examine into the circumstances of the service in the interest of the property saved, and award no more than a reasonable sum, and are not bound by the amount agreed on beforehand; The Schledam, 48 Fed. 923. But a salvage agreement for services to be performed on the high seas will not be set aside merely because only one of the contracting parties was at a disadvantage. But, if in addition to that circumstance, the sum required by the intending salvor appears to the court exorbitant, the agreement will be set aside as inequitable; [1891] P. 175. The amount is determined by a consideration of the peril to which the property was exposed, the value saved, the risk to life or property incurred by the salvors, their skill, the extent of labor or time employed, and the extent of the necessity that may exist in any particular locality to encourage salvage services; 3 Hagg. Adm. 121; The Henry Ewbank, 1 Sumn. 413, Fed. Cas. No. 6,376; The James T. Abbott, 2 Sprague 102, Fed. Cas. No. 7,202. An ancient rule of the admiralty allowed the salvors one-half of the property saved, when it was absolutely derelict or abandoned; but that rule has been latterly distinctly repudiated by the high court of admiralty and our supreme court, and the reward in cases of derelict is now governed by the same principles as in other salvage cases; 20 E. L. & E. 607; Post v. Jones, 19 How. (U. S.) 161, 15 L. Ed. 618. While there is no rule of giving salvors of a derelict a moiety, or other specific proportion of the value of the property saved, and the award is to be assessed as in other cases of salvage, still there are usually present three special elements which tend to increase the award: the high degree of danger to which the property is exposed; the difficulty of approaching a derelict vessel without any aid in boarding her; and the necessity of supplying men to steer her; [1897] Pr. Div. 59. But it is usual to give half of the value, and even seven-eighths have been given. See The Josephine, 2 Blatch. 323, Fed. Cas. No. 7,546.

Money found on an unknown dead body at sea, where the salvage involved no danger to vessels or crew, may be awarded one-half to the master and crew and the rest to the public administrator; Gardner v. Ninety-Nine Gold Coins, 111 Fed. 552.

Risking life to save the lives of others is an ingredient in salvage service which will enhance the salvage upon the property saved; The Emblem, Daves 61, Fed. Cas. No. 4,434; 3 Hagg. Eccl. 84. No salvage was formerly due for saving life merely, unaccompanied by any saving of property; 1 W. Rob. 330; unless it was the life of a slave; Flinn v. The Leander, Bee 260, Fed. Cas. No. 4,870. But the saving of life in addition to property was held to increase the award of salvage on the property; Br. & L. 344. By statute 17 & 18 Vict. salvage was extended to the saving of life and the award therefor was given priority over other salvage. If the vessel is not of large enough value to pay the award, it is payable out of the Mercantile Marine Fund.

"It is the value of the property which is restored to the owner that is to be considered, and of which a proportion is to be awarded as salvage in salvage cases, and not the original value imperilled. The exact value of the property saved, when large, is but a minor element in computing salvage, and as it increases, the rate per cent. given is rapidly reduced." Compagnie Commerciale de Transport a Vapeur Francaise v. Charente S. S. Co., 60 Fed. 921, 9 C. C. A. 292, 13 U. S. App. 662.

Where part of a cargo saved consists of specie, it must bear its share of the common burden; The St. Paul, 86 Fed. 340, 30 C. C. A. 70; up to the time when it was removed, but not of the expense of getting the ship afloat after the specie was removed; The St. Paul, 82 id. 104. There is no distinction in the proportion of salvage charges against different parts of a cargo; 4 Asp. 385.

The fact that a vessel receives injuries in the course of salvage operations will tend to reduce the amount of compensation; The Haxby, 83 Fed. 715, 28 C. C. A. 33.

A salvage award will not be set aside as too large, unless so grossly excessive as to shock the conscience of the appellate court; The R. R. Rhodes, 82 Fed. 751, 27 C. C. A. 258.

The value of the service performed is not to be estimated in the light of subsequent events, but of the facts which seemed to surround it at the time; The Lowther Castle, 195 Fed. 604.

The property saved. Salvage is properly a charge apportionable upon all the interests and property at risk in the voyage which derive any benefit from the salvage service; Peters v. Warren Ins. Co., 1 Stor. 469, Fed. Cas. No. 11,034. Qui sentit commodum sentire debet et onus. It follows that salvage expenses incurred in saving ship, cargo, and freight in one common and continuous service are apportionable upon them all, according to their respective values; but expenses incurred for any one interest separately, or any two interests only, are chargeable wholly to it or to them; 2 W. Rob. 315; 7 E. & B. 523; Bedford Commercial Ins. Co. v. Parker, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 1, 13 Am. Dec. 388; Revan v. Bank, 4 Whart. (Pa.) 301, 33 Am. Dec. 64; Nelson v. Belmont, 5 Duer (N. Y.) 310. No distinction can be made in the proportion of salvage charged against different portions of the cargo; The St. Paul, 82 Fed. 104; The St. Paul, 86 Fed. 340, 30 C. C. A. 70.

Goods of the government pay the same rate as if owned by individuals; U. S. v. Wilder, 3 Sumn. 308, Fed. Cas. No. 16,694; but not the mails; Marv. Salv. 132. Salvage may be recovered from the United States government where imported goods upon which duties have been paid are saved from total loss, and where the government would have been obliged to return the duties, had the merchandise been wholly lost; U. S. v. Steamboat

But, it is said, no proceedings in rem can be instituted against public ships or stores on them, or against property of the state on a private ship; though the question is not always raised, and the British Admiralty usually appeals and submits to the judgment of the court in the case of claims for saving public stores, and foreign governments have sometimes requested the British Admiralty to award as an arbitrator in respect of their property when salvaged; Kennedy, Civil Salv. 61. See 5 P. D. 197, where the subject is reviewed. Vessels of war belonging to a foreign neutral power cannot be arrested in our ports for salvage; The Exchange v. M'Faddon, 7 Cra. (U. S.) 116, 3 L. Ed. 287.

Salvage is not allowed on the clothing left by the master and crew on board the vessel which they abandon, but this should be returned free of charge; The Rising Sun, 1 Ware (378) 385, Fed. Cas. No. 11,858; or for saving from a wreck bills of exchange or other evidences of debt, or documents of title; The Amethyst, Daveis, 20, Fed. Cas. No. 330.

The wearing apparel of passengers is not liable for salvage services; 3 A. & E. 490; this extends only to apparel with the usual changes for the voyage and not to trunks in the hold; Heye v. North German Lloyd, 36 Fed. 705.

Wreck was formerly limited to those portions of ship or cargo which are stranded. But by the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, it includes jetsam and derelict, and, in salvage law, it includes any part of a ship or cargo aground or afloat; Kennedy, Civil Salv. 53.

The right to salvage for saving life depends upon something—ship, cargo, or freight—having been preserved; 8 P. D. 117; and such salvage can be recovered only against the party to whom the property belonged; 15 P. D. 146; i. e. from the ship if the cargo was lost; or from the cargo, if the ship was lost. The value of the property salvaged is the limit of recovery; 2 P. D. 157. Life salvors may claim against the property salvaged, although its preservation was not due to salvage services; 2 P. D. 145. Taking passengers from a burning vessel at sea is not the subject of salvage under the British act; L. R. 3 A. & Eccl. 487.

The liability to pay salvage is not confined to the actual legal owners of the property saved, but extends to those who have an interest in the property, and whose interests have been saved by the placing of the property itself in security; 15 Prob. Div. 142.

A tug being partly in fault in colliding with a schooner, is not entitled to salvage for towing the schooner into port; The Minnie C. Taylor, 52 Fed. 323; The Pine Forest, 129 Fed. 700, 64 C. C. A. 228, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 873.

Bar to salvage claim. An express explicit agreement, in distinct terms, to pay at all events, whether the property shall be saved or not, a sum certain, or a reasonable sum, for work, labor, and the hire of a vessel in attempting to save the property, is inconsistent with a claim for salvage; and when such agreement is pleaded in bar and proved, any claim for salvage will be disallowed; The Independence, 2 Curt. C. C. 350, Fed. Cas. No. 7,014; 2 W. Rob. 177. See The Excelsior, 123 U. S. 40, 8 Sup. Ct. 33, 31 L. Ed. 75. An agreement fairly made and fully understood by the salvors, to perform a salvage service for a stipulated sum or proportion to be paid in the event of a successful saving, does not alter the nature of the service as a salvage service, but fixes the amount of compensation. But such an agreement will not be binding upon the master or owner of the property unless the court can clearly see that no advantage has been taken of the party's situation, and that the rate of compensation agreed upon is just and reasonable; The Emulous, 1 Sumn. 207, Fed. Cas. No. 4,480.

A contract for salvage of a stranded vessel will not be set aside unless the master has been fraudulently induced to sign, or the amount is unreasonable, even if after the contract is made the amount of work necessary to free the ship is grossly disproportionate to the stipulated contract price; The Elfrida, 172 U. S. 186, 19 Sup. Ct. 146, 43 L. Ed. 413. A custom in any particular trade that vessels shall assist each other without claiming salvage is legal, and a bar to a demand for salvage in all cases where it properly applies; 1 W. Rob. 440. See supra.

Forfeiture or denial of salvage. Embezzlement of any of the goods saved works a forfeiture of the salvage of the guilty party; The Boston, 1 Sumn. 328, Fed. Cas. No. 1,673; and, in general, fraud, negligence, or carelessness in saving or preserving the property, or any gross misconduct on the part of the salvors in connection with the property saved, will work a total forfeiture of the salvage, or a diminution of the amount; 1 W. Rob. 497; 3 id. 122; 2 E. L. & E. 554; Tome v. Dubois, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 548, 18 L. Ed. 943; [1892] Prob. 58, 70. Salvors rescuing a derelict property are bound to care for its preservation while they retain possession; Serviss v. Ferguson, 84 Fed. 202, 28 C. C. A. 327.

A rescuing vessel which saves an abandoned ship, which is found in a sinking condition surrounded by a sea of ice, may use a part of her cargo and supplies to put her in a seaworthy condition in order to tow her to port; The Catherine Sudden, 1 Alaska, 607.

Distribution. The distribution of salvage among the salvors, like the amount, rests in the sound discretion of the court. In general, all persons, not under a pre-existing obligation of duty to render assistance, who have contributed by their exertions to save the property, and who have not forfeited their rights by their misconduct, are entitled to share in the salvage, as well those who remain on board the salvor vessel in the discharge of their duty, but are ready and willing to engage in the salvage enterprise, as those who go on board and navigate the wreck: The Centurion, 1 Ware (477) 483, Fed. Cas. No. 2,554; 2 Dods. 132; 2 W. Rob. 115; Mason v. The Blaireau, 2 Cra. (U. S.) 240, 2 L. Ed. 266. The apportionment between the owners and crew of the salvor ship depends upon the peculiar circumstances of each case: such as, the character, size, value, and detention of the vessel, its exposure to peril, and like considerations, and the number, labor exposure, and hazard of the crew. In ordinary cases, the more usual proportion allowed the owners of a salvor sail-vessel is one-third; Mason v. The Blaireau, 2 Cra. (U. S.) 240, 2 L. Ed. 266; The Nathaniel Hooper, 3 Sumn. 579, Fed. Cas. No. 10,032. The owner of a steam-vessel, if of considerable value, is often allowed a larger proportion; Marv. Wreck & Salv. 247. The master's share is usually double that of the mate, and the mate's double that of a seaman, and the share of those who navigate the derelict into port, or do the labor, double that of those who remain on board the salvor vessel. But these proportions are often varied according to the circumstances, so as to reward superior zeal and energy and discourage indifference and selfishness; 3 Hagg. Adm. 121. See Abb. Shipp., 13th Ed. 1021.

While the owner of a vessel which has performed salvage service may settle for the vessel's share in the compensation, he cannot exclude the crew from obtaining theirs; The Lowther Castle, 195 Fed. 604.

In marine insurance, the salvage is to be accounted for by the assured to underwriters in an adjustment of a total or salvage loss, or assigned to the underwriters by abandonment or otherwise; 2 Phill. Ins. § 1726. And so, also, the remnant of the subject insured or of the subject pledged in bottomry, and (if there be such) in that of a fire insurance, and of the interest in the life of a debtor (if so stipulated in this case), is to be brought into the settlement for the loss in like manner; Sussex County Mut. Ins. Co. v. Woodruff, 26 N. J. L. 541; The Draco, 2 Sumn. 157, Fed. Cas. No. 4,057.

The liability to pay salvage is not confined to the actual legal owners of the property saved, but it extends to all those who have an interest in the property and whose interests have been saved; 15 Prob. Div. 142.

Provision is made in R. S. § 4652 for salvage for the recapture of vessels or other property captured by any force hostile to the United States, before the capture. See the next titles; WRECK; RECAPTURE; FINDER.

SALVAGE CHARGES. In Insurance. All those costs, expenses, and charges necessarily incurred in and about the saving and preservation of the property imperilled, and which, if the property be insured, are eventually borne by the underwriters. Stevens, Av. c. 2, § 1.

SALVAGE LOSS. That kind of loss which it is presumed would, but for certain services rendered and exertions made, have become a total loss. It also means, among underwriters and average-adjusters, a mode of settling a loss, under a policy, in cases where the goods have been necessarily sold at a port short of the port of destination, in consequence of the perils insured against. In such cases, though the property be not abandoned to the underwriter, the principle of abandonment is assumed in the adjustment of the loss. The underwriter pays a total loss. The net proceeds of the sale of the goods, after deducting all the expenses, are retained by the assured, and he credits the underwriter with the amount; 2 Phill. Ins. § 1480.

SALVOR. In Maritime Law. A person who saves property or rescues it from impending peril on the sea or when wrecked on the coast of the sea, or, in the United States, on a public navigable river or lake where interstate commerce is carried on, and who is under no pre-existing contract or obligation of duty by his relation to the property to render such services. 1 Hagg. Adm. 236; Williamson v. The Alphonso, 1 Curt. C. C. 378, Fed. Cas. No. 17,749.

In general the crew cannot claim as salvors of their own ship or cargo, they being under a pre-existing obligation of duty to be vigilant to avoid the danger, and when in it to exert themselves to rescue or save the property, in consideration of their wages merely; 1 Hagg. Adm. 236; The Two Catharines, 2 Mas. C. C. 319, Fed. Cas. No. 14,288. But if their connection with the ship be dissolved, as by a capture, or the ship or cargo be voluntarily abandoned by order of the master, sine spe revertendi aut recuperandi, such abandonment taking place bona fide and without coercion on their part, and for the purpose of saving life, their contract is put an end to, and they may subsequently become salvors; 16 Jur. 572; Williams v. Suffolk Ins. Co., 3 Sumn. 270, Fed. Cas. No. 17,738; Mason v. The Blaireau, 2 Cra. (U. S.) 240, 2 L. Ed. 266. A passenger; 3 B. & P. 612, n.; Candee v. Sixty-Eight Bales Cotton, 48 Fed. 479; The Brabo, 33 Fed. 884; a pilot; Hobart v. Drogan, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 108, 9 L. Ed. 363; Lloyd's agent; 3 W. Rob. 181; an agent; [1892] Prob. 366; official persons; Le Tigre, 3 Wash. C. C. 567, Fed. Cas. No. 8,281; 1 C. Rob. 46; officers and crews of naval vessels; Robson v. The Huntress, 2 Wall. Jr. 67, Fed. Cas. No. 11,971; 1 Hagg. Adm. 158; coast guards; Bened. Adm. § 300 a; may all become salvors, and, as such, be entitled to salvage for performing services in saving property, when such services are not within or exceed the line of their proper official duties. But it is said that neither crew, pilot, ship's agent, nor public servants can, under ordinary circumstances, be salvors; Kennedy, Civil Salv. 25; nor can passengers; 2 Hagg. 3.

The fact that a part owner in a salvaging ship also has an interest in the salvaged property, will not prevent him from sharing in the salvage; A Lot of Whalebone, 51 Fed. 916. An incorporated wrecking and salvage company may be granted salvage awards as liberally as natural persons so engaged; The Kimberley, 40 Fed. 301. Persons rendering salvage service have a lien upon the property saved; Eads v. The Bacon, Fed. Cas. No. 4,232; Sturtevant v. The George Nicholas, Fed. Cas. No. 13,578; Taylor v. The Cato, Fed. Cas. No. 13,786; Central Stock Yard & Transit Co. v. Mears, 89 App. Div. 452, 85 N. Y. Supp. 795; The Sabine, 101 U. S. 384, 25 L. Ed. 982. The service creates a property in the thing saved, not a claim against the owner; The Carl Schurz, Fed. Cas. No. 2,414. In The Resolute, 168 U. S. 437, 18 Sup. Ct. 112, 42 L. Ed. 533, it was held that, where services are rendered by the crew of a wrecking tug or by a municipal fire department, no lien arises.

The finders of a derelict (that is, a ship or goods at sea abandoned by the master and crew without the hope or intention of returning and resuming the possession) who take actual possession with an intention and with the means of saving it, acquire a right of possession which they can maintain against all the world, even the true owner, and become bound to preserve the property with good faith and bring it to a place of safety for the owner's use. They are not bound to part with the possession until their salvage is paid, or the property is taken into the custody of the law preparatory to the amount of salvage being legally ascertained; The Amethyst, Daveis, 20, Fed. Cas. No. 330; The Bee, Ware 339, Fed. Cas. No. 1,219. If they cannot with their own force convey the property to a place of safety without imminent risk of a total or material loss, they cannot, consistently with their obligations to the owner, refuse the assistance of other persons proffering their aid, nor exclude them from rendering it under the pretext that they are the finders and have thus gained the right to the exclusive possession. But if third persons unjustifiably intrude themselves, their services will inure to the benefit of the original salvors; 1 Dods. 414; 3 Hagg. Adm. 156; Olc. 77. See SALVAGE.

If a first set of salvors fall into distress, and are assisted by a second or third set, the first or second do not lose their claim to salvage, unless they voluntarily and without fraud or coercion abandon the enterprise, but they all share together according to their respective merits; The Henry Ewbank, 1

Sumn. 400, Fed. Cas. No. 6,376; 1 W. Rob. 406; 2 id. 70. When a vessel stands by and renders services to another, upon request, even though no benefit result from her doing so, she is entitled to salvage; 8 Asp. Mar. L. Cas. 263. In cases of ships stranded or in distress, not derelicts, salvors do not acquire an exclusive possession as against the owner, the master, or his agent. While the master continues on board, he is entitled to retain the command and control of the ship and cargo and to direct the labor. The salvors are assistants and laborers under him; and they have no right to prevent other persons from rendering assistance, if the master wishes such aid; 3 Hagg. Adm. 383; 2 W. Rob. 307; 2 E. L. & E. 551. When the ship has been relieved from its peril, salvors forfeit no right and impair no remedy by leaving the ship; 1 Hagg. Adm. 156; Eads v. The Bacon, 1 Newb. 275, Fed. Cas. No. 4,232. Their remedy to recover salvage is by libel or suit in the district court of the United States.

SALVUS PLEGIUS. A safe pledge; called, also, "certus plegius," a sure pledge. Bract. 160 b.

SAME. Same does not always mean identical. It frequently means of the kind or species, not the specific thing. Crapo v. Brown, 40 Ia. 487, 493.

SAMPLE. A small quantity of any commodity or merchandise, exhibited as a specimen of a larger quantity called the bulk.

A part shown as a specimen. Webber v. Com., 33 Gratt. (Va.) 909.

When a sale is made by sample, the vendor warrants the quality of the bulk to be equal to that of the sample; Benj. Sales § 648; and if it afterwards turn out that the bulk does not correspond with the sample, the purchaser is not, in general, bound to take the property on a compensation being made to him for the difference; 1 Camp. 113. See Sands v. Taylor, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 395, 4 Am. Dec. 374; Borrekins v. Bevan, 3 Rawle (Pa.) 37, 23 Am. Dec. 85; 14 M. & W. 651. It is held that the vendor does not warrant goods, as fit for a particular purpose; Kauffman Milling Co. v. Stuckey, 37 S. C. 7, 16 S. E. 192.

To constitute a sale by "sample," the contract must be made solely with reference to the sample; Bradford v. Manly, 13 Mass. 139, 7 Am. Dec. 122. Not every sale where a sample is shown is a sale by sample; there must be an understanding, expressed or implied, that the sale is by sample; Barnard v. Kellogg, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 383, 19 L. Ed. 987; Gunther v. Atwell, 19 Md. 157. The mere exhibition of a sample is but a representation that it has been fairly taken from the full; Hargous v. Stone, 5 N. Y. 73. In Pennsylvania it has been held that in the absence of fraud or representation as to the quality, a sale by sample is not in itself a warranty of the quality of the goods, but simply a guaranty that the goods shall be similar in kind and merchantable; Boyd v. Wilson, 83 Pa. 319, 24 Am. Rep. 176; but the rule was changed by statute in 1887, the decision having been unsatisfactory to the profession and the public.

Although goods sold by sample are not in general deemed to be sold with an implied warranty that they were merchantable, the facts and circumstances may justify the inference that this implied warranty is superadded to the contract; L. R. 4 Ex. 40. If a manufacturer agrees to furnish goods according to sample, the sample is to be considered as if free from any secret defect of manufacture not discoverable on inspection, and unknown to both parties; L. R. 7 C. P. 438; but if the sale is made by a merchant, who is not a manufacturer, there is no implied warranty against secret defects; Dickinson v. Gay, 7 Allen (Mass.) 29, 83 Am. Dec. 656. It is an implied condition in a sale by sample that the buyer shall have a fair opportunity of comparing the bulk with the sample, and an improper refusal by the vendor to allow this will justify the buyer in rejecting the contract; 1 B. & C. 1. See Benj. Sales § 649; SALES; WARRANTY.

SANCTION. That part of a law which inflicts a penalty for its violation or bestows a reward for its observance. Sanctions are of two kinds,—those which redress civil injuries, called civil sanctions, and those which punish crimes, called penal sanctions. 1 Hoffm. Leg. Outl. 279; Ruth. Inst. b. 2, c. 6, s. 6; Toull. tit. préf. 86; 1 Bla. Com. 56. See LAW.

SANCTUARY. A place of refuge, where the process of the law cannot be executed.

Sanctuary existed among the Greeks. The Romans are said to have recognized the peculiar sacredness attached to particular places as well as to the altars of their temples and the statues of their emperors. It is probable that the church sanctuary came into existence from the time of Constantine, A. D. 303. The code of Theodosius, A. D. 392, enacted a law concerning the asylum and church. A later law, about 450, extended the limits to the precincts including the houses of the bishops and clergy, the cloisters, courts and cemeteries. About 680 the King of Wessex in his code of laws provided for sanctuary. Many subsequent acts were passed in England regulating the subject.

In the Dark Ages, the church succeeded in establishing the doctrine that the blood-feud should be suspended during certain seasons (see HOLIDAYS) and in certain places. If the accused could reach a place sheltered by the protection of the church, he could evade the challenge to battle. The privilege was confined to the locality and merely suspended the feud. The accused must remain in sanctuary, and the avenger could only watch to prevent his escape. Before the close of the Middle Ages, the accused could "abjure the realm" in the presence of the coroner, become an outlaw, and receive a safe-conduct abroad. In 1530, sanctuaries were confined to parish, cathedral and collegiate churches, the greater crimes were excluded from the privilege and the fugitives in any one place were limited to twenty. In 1623 the privilege was abolished; Jenks, Hist. E. L. 157. See Cox, Sanctuaries; Besant's London.

See ARREST.

SANÆ MENTIS. Of sound mind. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 7, § 1.

SANE. Whole; sound; in healthful state. It is applicable equally to the mind and to the body. Den v. Vaneleve, 5 N. J. L. 661.

SANE MEMORY. That understanding which enables a man to make contracts and his will, and to perform such other acts as are authorized by law. See LUNACY; MEMORY; NON COMPOS MENTIS.

SANG, SANC. Blood. These words are nearly obsolete.

SANGUINEM EMERE. A redemption by villeins, of their blood or tenure, in order to become freemen.

SANGUIS. The right or power which the chief lord of the fee had to judge and determine cases where blood was shed. Mon. Ang. t. i. 1021.

SANITARY AUTHORITIES. Persons having jurisdiction over their respective districts in regard to sewerage, drainage, supply of water, prevention of nuisances, etc. See HEALTH; QUARANTINE.

SANITY. The state of a person who has a sound understanding; the reverse of insanity. See INSANITY.

SANS CEO QUE. The same as Absque hoc, which see.

SANS FRAIS (Fr.). Without expense.

SANS IMPEACHMENT DE WASTE. Without impeachment of waste. Litt. § 152.

SANS NOMBRE (Fr. without number). In English Law. A term used in relation to the right of putting animals on a common. The term common sans nombre does not mean that the beasts are to be innumerable, but only indefinite, not certain; Willis 227; but they are limited to the commoner's own commonable cattle, levant et couchant, upon his lands, or as many cattle as the land of the commoner can keep and maintain in winter. 5 Term 48; 1 Wms. Saund. 28, n. 4.

SANS RECOURS (Fr. without recourse). Words which are sometimes added to an indorsement by the indorsee to avoid incurring any liability. 7 Taunt. 160; Wilson v. Codman's Ex'r, 3 Cra. (U. S.) 193, 2 L. Ed. 408. See INDORSEMENT.

SATISDATIO (Lat. satis, and dare). In Civil Law. Security given by a party to an action to pay what might be adjudged against him. It is a satisfactory security in opposition to a naked security or promise. Vicat, Voc. Jur.; 3 Bla. Comm. 291.

SATISFACTION (Lat. satis, enough, facio, to do, to make). In Practice. An entry made on the record, by which a party in whose favor a judgment was rendered declares that he has been satisfied and paid.

In many states provision is made by statute, requiring the mortgagee to discharge a mortgage upon the record, by entering satisfaction in the margin, or by separate instrument, to be recorded on the margin. The refusal or neglect to enter satisfaction after payment and demand renders the mortgagee liable to an action after the time given him by the respective statutes for doing the same has elapsed, and subjects him to the payment of damages, and, in some cases, treble costs. In Indiana and New York, the register or recorder of deeds may himself discharge the mortgage upon the record on the exhibition of a certificate of payment and satisfaction signed by the mortgagee or his representatives, and attached to the mortgage, which shall be recorded. See MORTGAGE. As to accord and satisfaction, see ACCORD.

In Equity. The donation of a thing, with the intention, expressed or implied, that such donation is to be an extinguishment of some existing right or claim in the donee. See LEGACY; CUMULATIVE LEGACY.

SATISFACTION, CONTRACTS TO. A term used to express a class of contracts in which one party agrees to perform his promise to the satisfaction of the other. The cases have been classified by Prof. Lawson, in 46 Cent. L. J. 360, as follows: 1. Where the fancy, taste, sensibility, or judgment of the promisor are involved. 2. Where the question is merely one of operative fitness or mechanical utility. In the first class the courts refuse to say that where a man agrees to pay if he is satisfied with the performance, he should be compelled to pay if some one else is satisfied with it. The courts recognize that in matters of taste or opinion there is no absolute standard as to what is good or bad. Hence, where the subject-matter is a suit of clothes; Brown v. Foster, 113 Mass. 136, 18 Am. Rep. 463; a bust of the defendant's husband; Zaleski v. Clark, 44 Conn. 218, 26 Am. Rep. 446; a portrait of the defendant's daughter; Gibson v. Cranage, 39 Mich. 49, 33 Am. Rep. 351; a cabinet organ; McClure Bros. v. Briggs, 58 Vt. 82, 2 Atl. 583, 56 Am. Rep. 557; a set of artificial teeth; 7 Pitts. L. J. 140; a carriage; 2 C. B. N. S. 779; a steam-heater for a house; Adams Radiator & B. Works v. Schnader, 155 Pa. 304, 26 Atl. 745, 35 Am. St. Rep. 893; a play to be written by an author for an actor; Haven v. Russell, 34 N. Y. Supp. 292; a design for a bank-note; Gray v. Bank, 10 N. Y. Supp. 5; the question is not one for the court or jury to decide, but for the promisee alone.

So where the contract gives the master a right to discharge a servant if he is satisfied that the servant is incompetent; Duplex Safety Boiler Co. v. Garden, 101 N. Y. 387, 54 Am. Rep. 714; or to employ him so long as he is satisfactory; Spring v. Clock Co., 24 Hun (N. Y.) 175; or to pay for services if they are satisfactory; Johnson v. Bindseil, 8 N. Y. Supp. 485.

In the second class of cases, Mr. Lawson maintains that the same principle of law should be applied, and gives a number of cases where it has been applied; where the subject-matter of the agreement was the making of a book-case; McCarren v. McNulty, 7 Gray (Mass.) 139; the sale of a harvesting machine; Wood Reap. & M. M. Co. v. Smith, 50 Mich. 565, 15 N. W. 906, 45 Am. St. Rep. 57; the sale of a steam fire engine; Silsby Mfg. Co. v. Chico, 24 Fed. 893; of a cord binder; McCormick H. M. Co. v. Chessrown, 33 Minn. 32, 21 N. W. 846; a steamboat; Gray v. R. Co., 11 Hun (N. Y.) 70; an elevator; Singerly v. Thayer, 108 Pa. 297, 2 Atl. 230, 56 Am. Rep. 207; steam fans; Exhaust Ventilator Co. v. Ry. Co., 66 Wis. 218, 28 N. W. 343, 57 Am. Rep. 257; a printing press; Campbell Printing-Press Co. v. Thorp, 36 Fed. 414, 1 L. R. A. 645; a grain binder; Plano Mfg. Co. v. Ellis, 68 Mich. 101, 35 N. W. 841; a gas machine; Aiken v. Hyde, 99 Mass. 183; a fanning mill; Goodrich v. Van Nortwick, 43 Ill. 445; the purchase of a saloon; Stuart & Peterson Co. v. Newton, 52 Pa. Super. Ct. 158.

The promisee must act in good faith; his dissatisfaction must be actual not feigned; real not merely pretended; Daggett v. Johnson, 49 Vt. 345; Singerly v. Thayer, 108 Pa. 297, 2 Atl. 230, 56 Am. Rep. 207. He must not act from caprice; Sidney School Furniture Co. v. School Dist., 130 Pa. 76, 18 Atl. 604. He must, if a test is necessary to determine its fitness, give that test or allow it to be made; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Brydon, 65 Md. 198, 611, 3 Atl. 306, 9 Atl. 126, 57 Am. Rep. 318; Exhaust Ventilator Co. v. R. Co., 66 Wis. 218, 28 N. W. 343, 57 Am. Rep. 257; Crane Elevator Co. v. Clark, 80 Fed. 705, 26 C. C. A. 100; Adams Radiator & B. Works v. Schnader, 155 Pa. 394, 26 Atl. 745, 35 Am. St. Rep. 893, holding that where the promisor dies before the test is made, the right to reject vests in his executor.

So an article to be manufactured cannot be rejected before it is substantially completed, so that the promisor will be able fairly to determine whether it was or would be satisfactory to him; Singerly v. Thayer, 108 Pa. 297, 2 Atl. 230, 56 Am. Rep. 207.

In sales of goods where the promisor can be put substantially in statu quo the promisee is the sole judge; Wood Reap. & M. M.

Co. v. Smith, 50 Mich. 565, 15 N. W. 906, 45 Am. Rep. 57; Exhaust Ventilator Co. v. R. Co., 66 Wis. 218, 28 N. W. 343, 57 Am. Rep. 257. In contracts for work and labor other than such as are to satisfy a matter of personal taste, where the work and labor would be wholly lost to the promisor if refused, the courts tend to the view that the promisee must be satisfied when he ought to be; Duplex Safety Boiler Co. v. Garden, 101 N. Y. 387, 4 N. E. 749, 54 Am. Rep. 709; Hawkins v. Graham, 149 Mass. 284, 21 N. E. 312, 14 Am. St. Rep. 422; Keeler v. Clifford, 165 Ill. 544, 46 N. E. 248; Boyd v. Hallowell, 60 Minn. 225, 62 N. W. 125.

There are a few cases which are apparently discordant, but which will be found, as Prof. Lawson observes, to rest on the difference between executory contracts of sale, and contracts for work and labor which have been done on the house or land of the promisee; Hawkins v. Graham, 149 Mass. 284, 21 N. E. 312, 14 Am. St. Rep. 422; Doll v. Noble, 116 N. Y. 230, 22 N. E. 406, 5 L. R. A. 554, 15 Am. St. Rep. 398; Clark v. Rice, 46 Mich. 308, 9 N. W. 427; McNeill v. Armstrong, 81 Fed. 943, 27 C. C. A. 16; Electric Lighting Co. of Mobile v. Elder, 115 Ala. 138, 21 South. 983; Pope Iron & Metal Co. v. Best, 14 Mo. App. 503. The cases of Mullally v. Greenwood, 127 Mo. 138, 29 S. W. 1001, 48 Am. St. Rep. 613, Folliard v. Wallace, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 395, and Burns v. Munger, 45 Hun (N. Y.) 75, appear to be really discordant. In Crawford v. Pub. Co., 163 N. Y. 404, 57 N. E. 616, it was held that where one is employed to do work which involves taste, fancy, interest, personal satisfaction and judgment, to the satisfaction of his employer, the employer is the sole judge of whether the work is satisfactory.

The rule is held to be otherwise in the case of a complete contract of an ordinary commercial nature. That which the law shall say a contracting party ought in reason to be satisfied with that the law will say he is satisfied with; Brooklyn v. R. Co., 47 N. Y. 475, 7 Am. Rep. 469. Referring to this case, Brown, D. J., in Campbell Printing Press Co. v. Thorp, 36 Fed. 414, 1 L. R. A. 645, points out that the differences between the New York decisions and those of other states are more apparent than real, and he cites the rule laid down in Silsby Mfg. Co. v. Chico, 24 Fed. 893, as "an accurate summary of the whole law on the subject:" Where a fire engine was to be made and delivered which should be satisfactory to the purchaser, it must in fact be satisfactory to him, or he is not bound to take it; but that where the purchaser was in fact satisfied, but fraudulently and in bad faith declared he was not satisfied, the contract had been fully performed by the vendor, and the purchaser was bound to accept the article.

If the goods are rejected as unsatisfactory, they must be returned to the vendor; Campbell Printing Co. v. Thorp, 36 Fed. 414, 1 L. R. A. 645; Savage Mfg. Co. v. Armstrong, 19 Me. 147; but it was held in Shupe v. Collender, 56 Conn. 489, 15 Atl. 405, 1 L. R. A. 339, that the dissatisfied buyer may retain the goods and recoup damages in an action for the price.

If the dissatisfaction of a third party designated as an arbiter is required, the contractor must show fraudulent collusion between the other party and such arbiter in order to recover; Thaler Bros. v. Greisser Const. Co., 229 Pa. 518, 79 Atl. 147, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 345.

Under an agreement to pay commissions for negotiating a "satisfactory lease" the lessor cannot arbitrarily refuse to accept a lease negotiated; Mullally v. Greenwood, 127 Mo. 138, 29 S. W. 1001, 48 Am. St. Rep. 613.

SATISFACTION PIECE. In English Practice. An instrument of writing in which it is declared that satisfaction is acknowledged between the plaintiff and defendant. It is signed by the attorney, and on its production and the warrant of attorney, to the clerk of the judgments, satisfaction is entered on payment of certain fees. Lee, Dict. of Pract. Satisfaction.

SATISFACTORY EVIDENCE. That which is sufficient to induce a belief that the thing is true; in other words, it is credible evidence. 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3049.

SATISFACTORY PROOF. Where a city charter authorized contracts for street improvements to be given to the lowest bidder "who shall give satisfactory proof of his" ability to properly perform the work, it was held that the board of public works could not exercise an arbitrary discretion in awarding the contract, but must base their discretion on facts reasonably tending to support its determination. McGovern v. Board of Public Works of Trenton, 57 N. J. L. 580, 31 Atl. 613.

SATISFIED. When applied to a note or bond, paid. Reynolds v. Bird, 1 Root (Conn.) 306.

SATISFIED TERMS ACT. The stat. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 112, passed to abolish satisfied outstanding terms of years in land. By this act, terms which shall henceforth become attendant upon the inheritance, either by express declaration or construction of law, are to cease and determine. This in effect abolishes outstanding terms; 1 Steph. Com., 11th ed. 296, 297; Wms. R. P. pt. iv. c. 1.

SAVING CLAUSE. In a legal instrument a clause exempting something which might otherwise be subjected to the operation of the instrument. In an act of parliament, a saving clause which is repugnant to the body of such act is void. 1 Co. 118. See CONSTRUCTION.

SAVINGS BANK. An institution in the nature of a bank, established for the purpose of receiving deposits of money, for the benefit of the persons depositing, to accumulate the produce of so much thereof as shall not be required by the depositors, their executors or administrators, at compound interest, and to return the whole or any part of such deposit, and the produce thereof to the depositors, their executors or administrators, deducting out of such produce so much as shall be required for the necessary expenses attending the management of such institution, but deriving no benefit whatever from any such deposit or the produce thereof. Grant, Bank., 5th ed. 262; Bolles, Banks & Dep. 177.

Savings banks are not banking institutions in the commercial sense of that phrase and are not to be classed as national banks in determining the validity of state taxation of the latter; National Bank of Redemption v. Boston, 125 U. S. 60, 8 Sup. Ct. 772, 31 L. Ed. 689. See BANK.

Savings banks cannot do business as banks of discount unless by statute; In re Jaycox, 12 Blatchf. 209, Fed. Cas. No. 7,237. It has been considered that savings banks are trustees for depositors; In re Newport Sav. Bk., 68 Me. 396; Stockton v. Bank, 32 N. J. Eq. 163; and therefore subject to the jurisdiction of equity; In re Newark Sav. Inst. Case, 28 N. J. Eq. 552; they have been held to be agents for the depositor; Bunnell v. Sav. Soc., 38 Conn. 203, 9 Am. Rep. 380; and debtors; People v. Sav. Inst., 92 N. Y. 7; Reed v. Sav. Bank, 130 Mass. 443, 39 Am. Rep. 468. That the rights of the depositors are of a two-fold character and occupy a position similar to that of stockholders in an ordinary corporation, see 1 Moraw. Corp. § 391; but as long as the institution is solvent the depositors are mere creditors; id.

Where the by-laws require the presentation of the pass-book, as a condition precedent to the withdrawal of the deposit and this regulation is printed in the book, it becomes a part of the contract between the parties; Peoples' Savings Bank v. Cupps, 91 Pa. 315; Kinins v. Sav. Bank, 141 Mass. 33, 6 N. E. 242, 55 Am. Rep. 441. In case of the loss of the pass-book, the depositor has the right to receive his money without producing it; Palmer v. Sav. Inst., 14 R. I. 68, 51 Am. Rep. 341.

It has been held that after payment to one who was apparently in lawful possession of the pass-book, the real depositor cannot recover unless upon proof of want of care on the part of the officers of the savings banks. See Smith v. Sav. Bank, 101 N. Y. 58, 4 N. E. 123, 54 Am. Rep. 653. And even where the pass-book contains a stipulation that the deposit may be paid to any one who presents the book, the officers are still bound to use reasonable care; Kimball v. Norton, 59 N. H. 1, 47 Am. Rep. 171. A by-law that a savings bank shall not be liable to pay a depositor when it has already paid the holder of his pass-book which had been stolen, is not binding unless the depositor has notice of it; Ackenhausen v. Bank, 110 Mich. 175, 68 N. W. 118, 33 L. R. A. 408, 64 Am. St. Rep. 338.

In case of insolvency the assets are distributable among the depositors; Roan v. Winn, 93 Mo. 503, 4 S. W. 736. In Re Newark Sav. Inst. Case, 28 N. J. Eq. 552, the court made an order scaling down the deposits and authorized the savings bank to continue business. By statute in New York courts may scale down deposits of insolvent savings banks and authorize them to continue business.

The surplus of a savings bank belongs in equity to its depositors, and is a part of its deposits in the same sense as the stipulated interest is; People v. Barker, 154 N. Y. 122, 47 N. E. 1103.

A law providing that deposits which have remained unclaimed for thirty years, where the claimant is unknown or the depositor cannot be found, shall be paid to the state treasurer and receiver general to be held by him for the owner or his legal representative, is constitutional; Provident Institution for Savings v. Malone, 221 U. S. 660, 31 Sup. Ct. 661, 55 L. Ed. 899, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1129.

The mere fact that a deposit stands in the depositor's name as "trustee" for another was held not ground for holding that an irrevocable trust was created, but to establish the creation of a "tentative" trust merely revocable by the depositor in his lifetime; In re Totten, 179 N. Y. 112, 71 N. E. 748, 70 L. R. A. 711, 1 Ann. Cas. 900. The transfer of the deposit and the bank book to another as trustee for a third person was held merely a tentative trust; Lattan v. Van Ness, 107 App. Div. 393, 95 N. Y. Supp. 97; 19 H. L. R. 207.

A provision in a state tax statute excepting from an exemption banks, savings banks and trust companies is not an unconstitutional discrimination against savings banks, the state court having held that there were reasonable grounds for the classification; Farmers' Bank v. Minnesota, 232 U. S. 517, 34 Sup. Ct. 354, 58 L. Ed. —.

Postoffice savings banks were established in England in 1861. Deposits are payable ten days after demand, with interest at the rate of two pounds ten shillings per cent. per annum. The deposits are paid over to the national debt commissioners and by them invested in such securities as are lawful for the funds of other savings banks. Any deficiency is made good out of the consolidated fund; 3 Steph. Com. 88.

Postal savings banks have been established in the United States; see POSTAL SAVINGS BANKS.

SAVOY. One of the ancient privileged places or sanctuaries. 4 Steph. Com. 227, n.

SAXON LAGE. The laws of the West Saxons. Cowell.

SAY ABOUT. Words frequently used in contracts to indicate an uncertain quantity. They have been said to mark emphatically the vendor's purpose to guard himself against being supposed to have made an absolute promise as to quantity; 21 W. R. 609. There a sale of all the spars manufactured, say about 600, was held to be complied with by tender of 496 spars. See 2 B. & Ad. 106; Pembroke Iron Co. v. Parsons, 5 Gray (Mass.) 589; Robinson v. Noble, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 181, 8 L. Ed. 910.

SCACCARIUM. A chequered cloth resembling a chess-board which covered the table in the Exchequer, and on which, when certain of the king's accounts were made up, the sums were marked and scored with counters. Hence the court of exchequer or curia scaccarii derived its name. 3 Bla. Com. 44.

SCALAM. The old way of paying money into the Exchequer. Cowell.

SCALING LAWS. A term used to signify statutes establishing the process of adjusting the difference in value between depreciated paper money and specie. Such statutes were rendered necessary by the depreciation of paper money necessarily following the establishment of American independence. And, more recently, to discharge those debts which were made payable in Confederate money. The statutes are now obsolete.

SCALPER. See TICKET; BROKEBAGE.

SCANDALOUS MATTER. In Equity Pleading. Unnecessary matter criminatory of the defendant or any other person, alleged in the bill, answer, or other pleading, or in the interrogatories to or answers by witnesses. Adams, Eq. 306. "Impertinent matter which is also criminatory, or which otherwise reflects on the character of an individual." Manhattan Trust Co. v. Traction Co., 188 Fed. 1008. It consists of an unnecessary allegation bearing cruelly on the moral character of an individual, or stating matter contrary to good manners, or unbecoming the dignity of the court to hear; McNulty v. Wiesen, 130 Fed. 1012.

The court has a right to preserve the purity of its records; its proceedings are not to be converted into a machinery for circulating scandal. It may strike out allegations which wound the character of one party without being of real service to the other; Riddle v. Stevens, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 537.

Matter which is relevant can never be scandalous; Story, Eq. Pl. § 270; 15 Ves. 477; the degree of relevancy is of no account in determining the question; Cooper, Eq. Pl. 19; 2 Ves. 24. Where scandal is alleged, whether in the bill; 2 Ves. 631; answer;

Mitt. Eq. Pl. 313; or interrogatories to or answer of witnesses; 2 Y. & C. 445; it will be referred to a master at any time; 2 Ves. 631; and, by leave of court, even upon the application of a stranger to the suit; 5 Beav. 82; and matter found to be scandalous by him will be expunged; Story, Eq. Pl. §§ 266, 862; 4 Hen. & M. 414; at the cost of counsel introducing it, in some cases; Story, Eq. Pl. § 266. The circuit court has an inherent power to strike out scandalous matter on their own motion and in the absence of pleading, and may order a bill to be struck from its files and to permit the complainant to file a new bill excluding such matter; Kelley v. Boettcher, 85 Fed. 55, 29 C. C. A. 14. The presence of scandalous matter in the bill is no excuse for its being in the answer; Langdon v. Pickering, 19 Me. 214. Parts of an answer, though immaterial as a defence and scandalous will not be suppressed when intended to meet charges of bad faith in the bill; Mercantile Trust Co. v. R. Co., 84 Fed. 379.

See IMPERTINENT.

SCANDALUM MAGNATUM (L. Lat. slander of great men). Words spoken in derogation of a peer, a judge, or other great officer of the realm. 1 Ventr. 60. This was distinct from mere slander in the earlier law, and was considered a more heinous offence. Bull. N. P. 4; Webb's Poll. on Torts, 288 b.

It depended on early English statutes which after being long obsolete in practice were repealed in 1887. See 3 Bla. Com. 124.

SCAVAGE, SCHEVAGE, SCHEWAGE, or SHEWAGE. A kind of toll or custom, exacted by mayors, sheriffs, etc., of merchant strangers, for wares showed or offered for sale within their liberties. Prohibited by 19 Hen. VII. c. 7. Cowell.

SCHEDULE. When an indictment is returned from an inferior court in obedience to a writ of certiorari, the statement of the previous proceedings sent with it is termed the schedule. 1 Sound. 309, a. n. 2.

Schedules are also frequently annexed to answers in a court of equity, and to depositions and other documents, in order to show more in detail the matter they contain than could otherwise be conveniently shown.

The term is frequently used instead of inventory.

The Interstate Commerce Act requires common carriers to publish and file schedules of their rates, fares and charges, which shall plainly state all privileges or facilities granted or allowed and any rules or regulations which in any way change, etc., the value of the service rendered. A provision in a ticket containing a provision not in the schedule is void; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Hamburger, 155 Fed. 849.

SCHIREMAN. A sheriff; the ancient name of an earl.

SCHIRRENS-GELD. A tax paid to sheriffs for keeping the shire or county court. Cowell.

SCHISM-BILL. An act passed in the reign of Queen Anne to restrain Protestant dissenters from educating their own children; it forbade all tutors and schoolmasters to be present at any dissenting place of worship.

SCHOOL. An institution of learning of a lower grade than a college or a university. A place of primary instruction. Webster, Dict. As used in the American reports, the term generally refers to the common or public schools existing under the laws of each state and maintained at the expense of the public.

Public school is synonymous with common school; but the term is not limited to a school of the lowest grade; it includes all schools from those lower than grammar schools to high schools, but not one founded by a charitable bequest which vests the order and superintendence of it in a board of trustees; Jenkins v. Andover, 103 Mass. 97.

A common school is one which is common to children of proper age and capacity, free and under the control of the qualified voters of the district. School Dist. No. 20, Spokane Co., v. Bryan, 51 Wash. 498, 99 Pac. 28, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1033.

Where a constitutional provision requires school funds to be applied exclusively to common schools, a model training school to be conducted in connection with various normal schools is not a common school; School Dist. No. 20, Spokane Co., v. Bryan, 51 Wash. 498, 99 Pac. 28, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1033; a normal school was held not to be a part of the public free school system; State Female Normal School v. Auditors, 79 Va. 233; Gordon v. Cornes, 47 N. Y. 608.

When the legislature has placed the management of public schools under the exclusive control of directors, trustees, and boards of education, the courts have no rightful authority to interfere by directing what instruction shall be given or what book shall be used therein; Board of Education of Cincinnati v. Minor, 23 Ohio St. 211, 13 Am. Rep. 233.

The establishment and regulations of public schools rest primarily with the legislative department; Stone v. Fritts, 169 Ind. 361, 82 N. E. 792, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1147, 14 Ann. Cas. 295; Cumming v. Richmond Co. Board of Education, 175 U. S. 529, 20 Sup. Ct. 197, 44 L. Ed. 262.

A statute establishing separate systems of schools for white and colored children is not in violation of the fourteenth amendment of the constitution of the United States. And where appropriate schools for colored children are maintained, such children may be lawfully excluded from schools established for white children; State v. Gray, 93 Ind. 303; Maddox v. Neal, 45 Ark. 121, 55 Am.

Rep. 540; Berea College v. Com., 123 Ky. 209, 94 S. W. 623, 124 Am. St. Rep. 344, 13 Ann. Cas. 337; nor did such exclusion violate any constitutional right before the fourteenth amendment was adopted; Roberts v. Boston, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 198. But it has been held that unless the legislature clearly confers upon boards of education the power to establish separate schools for white and colored children, the power does not exist; Knox v. Board of Education, 45 Kan. 152, 25 Pac. 616, 11 L. R. A. 830.

Where separate schools are provided, the educational advantages must be equal; Williams v. Board of Education, 79 Kan. 202, 99 Pac. 216, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 584.

A Chinese pupil cannot be excluded from a public school; Tape v. Hurley, 66 Cal. 473, 6 Pac. 129. Mandamus will lie compelling trustees to admit colored children to public schools where separate schools are not provided for them; State v. Duffy, 7 Nev. 342, 8 Am. Rep. 713.

See CIVIL RIGHTS.

Reading the Bible in schools is not sectarian teaching; Church v. Bullock, 104 Tex. 1, 109 S. W. 115, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 860; Billard v. Board of Education, 69 Kan. 53, 76 Pac. 422, 66 L. R. A. 166, 105 Am. St. Rep. 148, 2 Ann. Cas. 521; Hackett v. Brooksville Graded School Dist., 120 Ky. 608, 87 S. W. 792, 69 L. R. A. 592, 117 Am. St. Rep. 599, 9 Ann. Cas. 36; Stevenson v. Hanyon, 7 Pa. Dist. R. 585; Donahoe v. Richards, 38 Me. 379, 61 Am. Dec. 256; Spiller v. Woburn, 12 Allen (Mass.) 127; McCormick v. Burt, 95 Ill. 263, 35 Am. Rep. 163; Moore v. Monroe, 64 Ia. 367, 20 N. W. 475, 52 Am. Rep. 444; Board of Education of Cincinnati v. Minor, 23 Ohio St. 211, 13 Am. Rep. 233; contra, State v. Dist. Board of School Dist., 76 Wis. 177, 44 N. W. 967, 7 L. R. A. 330, 20 Am. St. Rep. 41. To do so does not make the school a place of worship; Moore v. Monroe, 64 Ia. 367.

A rule requiring the pupils to learn the Ten Commandments and repeat them once a week is not a violation of the constitutional provision which secures liberty of conscience and worship; Comm. v. Cooke, 7 Am. L. Reg. (Mass.) 417 (in the police court of Boston). A college rule requiring attendance at chapel does not violate a constitutional provision that "no person shall be required to attend * * * any place of worship against his consent;" North v. Trustees, 137 Ill. 296, 27 N. E. 54.

A tax payer's bill to restrain school directors from allowing a school house to be used as a religious meeting house was dismissed on demurrer; Nichols v. School Directors, 93 Ill. 61, 34 Am. Rep. 160. But it has been held that school directors have no authority to permit public school buildings to be used for holding sectarian religious meetings or public lyceum meetings, but they may permit them to be used for lectures, etc., of an educational nature; Bender v. Streabich, 182 Pa. 251, 37 Atl. 853.

A public school teacher has no authority to compel a pupil to pursue a certain study against the wishes of its parent; Morrow v. Wood, 35 Wis. 59, 17 Am. Rep. 471; Trustees of Schools v. People, 87 Ill. 303, 29 Am. Rep. 55; contra, State v. Webber, 108 Ind. 31, 8 N. E. 708, 58 Am. Rep. 30; Hodgkins v. Rockport, 105 Mass. 475; Ferriter v. Tyler, 48 Vt. 444, 21 Am. Rep. 133; Donahoe v. Richards, 38 Me. 379, 61 Am. Dec. 256; Kidder v. Cheilis, 59 N. H. 473; Sewell v. Board, 29 Ohio St. 89. A teacher has no right to punish a child for neglecting or refusing to study certain branches from which the parents of the child have requested that it might be excused, or which they have forbidden it to pursue, if those facts are known to the teacher. The proper remedy is to exclude the pupil from the school; State v. Mizner, 50 Ia. 145, 32 Am. Rep. 128; Morrow v. Wood, 35 Wis. 59, 17 Am. Rep. 471. But it is held that the school authorities have the power to classify and grade the scholars in their respective districts, and cause them to be taught in such departments as they may deem expedient; they may also prescribe the course of study and text books for the use of the schools, and such reasonable rules and regulations as they may think needful. They may require prompt attendance, respectful deportment, and diligence in studies; School Board Dist. No. 18, Garvin Co. v. Thompson, 24 Okl. 1, 103 Pac. 578, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 221, 138 Am. St. Rep. 861, 19 Ann. Cas. 1188. It has been said that the parent has a right to make a reasonable selection from the prescribed course of study for his child to pursue, and that this selection must be respected by the school authorities; id. where it was held that in this respect the right of the parent is superior to that of the school officers and teachers.

Directors; Hodgkins v. Rockport, 105 Mass. 475; and teachers; Ferriter v. Tyler, 48 Vt. 444, 21 Am. Rep. 133; may expel or suspend pupils for sufficient cause, as for breach of discipline; Scott v. School Dist. No. 2, 46 Vt. 452; or for general immoral character; Sherman v. Charlestown, 8 Cush. (Mass.) 160; for refusal to take part in musical exercises; State v. Webber, 108 Ind. 31, 8 N. E. 708, 58 Am. Rep. 30; for refusal to write English compositions; Guernsey v. Pitkin, 32 Vt. 224, 76 Am. Rep. 171; for absence contrary to rules; Ferriter v. Tyler, 48 Vt. 444; for refusal on the part of the parents to sign and return periodical written reports of the pupil's standing; Bourne v. State, 35 Neb. 1, 52 N. W. 710; for misbehavior outside of the school tending to injure the school and subvert the master's authority; Lander v. Seaver, 32 Vt. 114, 76 Am.

Dec. 156; for a father's refusal to permit the master to whip the child or to correct him himself; Fessman v. Seeley (Tex.) 30 S. W. 269; because a parent visited the school when in session and used offensive language to the teacher; Board of Education of Cartersville v. Purse, 101 Ga. 422, 28 S. E. 896, 41 L. R. A. 593, 65 Am. St. Rep. 312, in which case the court cited a letter from Bleckley, C. J., to the court relating to the case. In King v. Jefferson City School Board, 71 Mo. 628, 36 Am. Rep. 499, it was held that the proper remedy for truancy was not expulsion, but it is also held that the conduct of a pupil at a boarding school, in continually playing truant, and finally going home, is ground for expulsion; Fessman v. Seeley (Tex.) 30 S. W. 268.

School boards or a teacher may make rules to govern the conduct of the pupils after school hours and may suspend pupils for violation of such rules; Deskins v. Gose, 85 Mo. 485, 55 Am. Rep. 387; Hutton v. State, 23 Tex. App. 386, 5 S. W. 122, 59 Am. Rep. 776; Wayland v. Hughes, 43 Wash. 441, 86 Pac. 642, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 352; Kinzer v. Directors of Independent School Dist., 129 Ia. 441, 105 N. W. 686, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 496, 6 Ann. Cas. 996; Jones v. Cody, 132 Mich. 13, 92 N. W. 495, 62 L. R. A. 160. A pupil may be suspended for publishing a newspaper article tending to influence the conduct of other pupils in the schoolroom to set at naught the authority of the teachers and bring them into ridicule; State v. Dist. Board of School Dist. No. 1, 135 Wis. 619, 116 N. W. 232, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 730, 128 Am. St. Rep. 1050. He may be punished for disrespectful language regarding a teacher, though he has returned to his home, but is afterward passing the teacher's house; Lander v. Seaver, 32 Vt. 114, 76 Am. Dec. 156; also for being drunk and disorderly during the holidays; Douglass v. Campbell, 89 Ark. 254, 116 S. W. 211, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 205.

A rule may forbid pupils playing football in a game purporting to be played under the auspices of the school; Kinzer v. Directors of Independent School Dist., 129 Ia. 441, 105 N. W. 686, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 496, 6 Ann. Cas. 996; a rule may require children to be vaccinated and exclude those who refuse; Com. v. Pear, 183 Mass. 246, 66 N. E. 719, 67 L. R. A. 935; State v. Zimmerman, 86 Minn. 358, 90 N. W. 783, 58 L. R. A. 78, 91 Am. St. Rep. 351; Hutchins v. Durham, 137 N. C. 70, 49 S. E. 46, 2 Ann. Cas. 340; Blue v. Beach, 155 Ind. 138, 56 N. E. 89, 50 L. R. A. 64, 80 Am. St. Rep. 195; Duffield v. School Dist., 162 Pa. 483, 29 Atl. 742, 25 L. R. A. 152; In re Viemeister, 179 N. Y. 235, 72 N. E. 97, 70 L. R. A. 796, 103 Am. St. Rep. 859, 1 Ann. Cas. 334; State v. Cole, 220 Mo. 697, 119 S. W. 424, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 986; but a rule that children should not, during the school term, attend social parties is unreasonable, and where the child, with the consent of his parents, disobeyed such rule and was expelled, held, the school board had gone beyond its power; Dritt v. Snodgrass, 66 Mo. 286, 27 Am. Rep. 343.

Pupils may not be expelled merely for being members of a secret society, where it is not shown that the interests of the school are affected thereby; 82 Ind. 286; but where the board has made a rule that members of such societies may not represent the school, in any public capacity, the court will not interfere; Wilson v. Board, 233 Ill. 464, 84 N. E. 697, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1136, 13 Ann. Cas. 330; Wayland v. Hughes, 43 Wash. 411, 86 Pac. 642, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 352. They may not be expelled for the infraction of a rule that pupils shall stay at home and study in the evening from 7 to 9; Hobbs v. Germany, 94 Miss. 469, 49 South. 515, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 983.

A parent has no right of action for the wrongful expulsion of his child from a public school; Spear v. Cummings, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 224, 34 Am. Dec. 53; Sherman v. Charlestown, 8 Cush. (Mass.) 161; Stephenson v. Hall, 14 Barb. (N. Y.) 222; Donahoe v. Richards, 38 Me. 376, where it was held that the child alone was entitled to compensation; Sorrells v. Matthews, 129 Ga. 319, 58 S. E. 819, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 357, 12 Ann. Cas. 404.

Truancy is an offense not known to the common law, but it is held that boys between the ages of twelve and fifteen who refuse to attend school and wander about public places during school hours are truants under a statute; Cushing v. Friendship, 89 Me. 525, 36 Atl. 1001, which case see as to correction for that offense. Where the rules of a boarding school provide that there will be no reduction in case of withdrawals, and that all payments shall be forfeited on expulsion, there can be no recovery; Fessman v. Seeley (Tex.) 30 S. W. 268.

It is usually provided by constitution or statute that school facilities must be provided for children of the proper age, and compulsory education has been established in most of the states. Usually the mere fact that a child is actually living in a school district entitles him to school privileges; Yale v. West Middle School Dist., 59 Conn. 489, 22 Atl. 295, 13 L. R. A. 161; Board of Education v. Lease, 64 Ill. App. 60; School Dist. No. 2 in Brentwood v. Pollard, 55 N. H. 503; McNish v. State, 74 Neb. 261, 104 N. W. 186, 12 Ann. Cas. 896; but where the parents reside elsewhere, tuition must be paid for; School Dist. of Barnard v. Matherly, 90 Mo. App. 403; State v. School Dist., 55 Neb. 317, 75 N. W. 855; Gardner v. Board of Education, 5 Dak. 259, 38 N. W. 433; but this question is held to be for the school board to decide; Com. v. Wenner, 211 Pa. 637, 61 Atl. 247.

School boards may require pupils to attend a specified school, though outside of their district and at a greater distance than their nearest school; Lehew v. Brummell, 103 Mo. 546, 15 S. W. 765, 11 L. R. A. 828, 23 Am. St. Rep. 895; People v. Gallagher, 93 N. Y. 451, 45 Am. Rep. 232; the assignment of pupils is in the discretion of the directors; Com. v. School Directors, 4 Pa. Dist. R. 314.

School directors cannot terminate a contract with a teacher by doing away with the particular school; School Town of Milford v. Zeigler, 1 Ind. App. 138, 27 N. E. 303.

In the absence of any express stipulation to that effect, there is no contract to give a scholarship to the candidate who obtains the highest marks in the scholarship examination; [1895] 1 Ch. 480.

Within the scope of his powers the decision of a state superintendent of schools is conclusive and will be enforced by mandamus; Thompson v. Board of Education, 57 N. J. L. 628, 31 Atl. 168.

Statutes conferring upon a ministerial officer or board the power to issue or revoke teachers' licenses are not invalid as conferring judicial power; Spurgeon v. Rhodes, 167 Ind. 1, 78 N. E. 228. But it was held that the act of a superintendent in revoking a license under the laws of the state was a judicial act, and that, if in any case he proceeds without jurisdiction, the court may restrain him; Superintendent of Common Schools of Daviess Co. v. Taylor, 105 Ky. 387, 49 S. W. 38. He may revoke only for statutory cause, and, if attempting to proceed upon grounds outside the statute, equity may intervene; Stone v. Fritts, 169 Ind. 361, 82 N. E. 792, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1147, 14 Ann. Cas. 295.

One who accepts an appointment under the school law is bound by its provisions and has barred himself from having the propriety of his dismissal by the local school board reviewed in any tribunal, except those specially created by the Legislature for the purpose; Draper v. Comm'rs, 66 N. J. L. 54, 48 Atl. 556.

A regulation of the department of public instruction prohibiting teachers from wearing a distinctive religious garb while teaching is not unreasonable; O'Connor v. Hendrick, 184 N. Y. 421, 77 N. E. 612, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 402, 6 Ann. Cas. 432; but it is held that school districts might employ sisters of a religious order and permit them to wear their distinctive dress in school; Hysong v. School Dist., 164 Pa. 629, 30 Atl. 482, 26 L. R. A. 203, 44 Am. St. Rep. 632.

School buildings are not public buildings of a city within the meaning of a contract to furnish free water to public buildings of the city; Water Supply Co. of Albuquerque v. Board, 9 N. M. 441, 54 Pac. 969; Kensington Electric Co. v. Philadelphia, 187 Pa. 446, 41 Atl. 309; such a condition will be strictly construed in favor of the water company; Louisville Water Co. v. Clark, 143 U. S. 1, 12 Sup. Ct. 346, 36 L. Ed. 55.

SCHOUT. An officer appointed by a court in Holland with both judicial and administrative duties. He resembled a resident magistrate, though he could not act judicially without the schepenen. The schout and the schepenen looked after the well-being of the citizens, and saw that the city was properly policed. Wessels' History. In New Netherlands the schout was sheriff and collector of customs. Fiske, Hist. Writings VIII, 153.

SCIENCE. The knowledge of many methodically digested and arranged, so as to be attainable by one; a body of principles and deductions to explain the nature of some matter. Vredenburg v. Behan, 33 La. Ann. 637. See Jackson v. Waldron, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 205; BOOKS OF SCIENCE.

SCIENDUM (L. Lat.). The name given to a clause inserted in the record by which it is made "known that the justice here in court, in this same term, delivered a writ thereupon to the deputy sheriff of the county aforesaid, to be executed in due form of law." Lee, Dict. Record.

SCIENTER (Lat. knowingly). The allegation in a pleading of knowledge; Webb's Poll. Torts 614; on the part of a defendant or person accused, which is necessary to charge upon him the consequence of the crime or tort.

A man may do many acts which are justifiable or not, according as he is ignorant or not ignorant of certain facts. He may pass a counterfeit coin, when he is ignorant of its being counterfeit, and is guilty of no offence; but if he knew the coin to be counterfeit, which is called the scienter, he is guilty of passing counterfeit money.

Where evidence of the scienter has been given, it may be rebutted, as where the charge is passing counterfeit money, the defendant may show that the bill was genuine or that under the circumstances he had reason to suppose it was, or that he examined a counterfeit detector in regard to it; State v. Morton, 8 Wis. 352. Proof of a conspiracy to put forth counterfeit bills is admissible to show the scienter as against one of the parties to it; State v. Spalding, 19 Conn. 233, 48 Am. Dec. 158.

In an action against the owner of a dog, alleged to be a dangerous animal, the fact that it is a watch-dog, chained during the day and loosed at night, is sufficient without further proof of scienter; Montgomery v. Koester, 35 La. Ann. 1091, 48 Am. Rep. 253.

The averment of a scienter in an indictment is not sufficient to supply omission of the positive statement that the defendant did the act; State v. Halder, 2 McCord (S. C.) 377, 13 Am. Dec. 738; and a charge in an indictment that the defendant passed, etc., a counterfeit, without alleging that he knew it to be such, is insufficient even after verdict; U. S. v. Carll, 105 U. S. 611, 26 L. Ed. 1135.

SCILICET (Lat. scire, to know, licet, it is permitted; you may know; translated by to wit, in its old sense of to know). That is to say; to wit; namely.

It is a clause to usher in the sentence of another, to particularize that which was too general before, distribute what was too gross, or to explain what was doubtful and obscure. It neither increases nor diminishes the premises or habendum, for it gives nothing of itself; it may make a restriction when the preceding words may be restrained; Hob. 171; 1 P. Wms. 18; Co. Litt. 180 b, n. 1.

When the scilicet is repugnant to the precedent matter, it is rejected: for example, when a declaration in trover states that the plaintiff on the third day of May was possessed of certain goods which on the fourth day of May came to the defendant's hands, who afterward, to wit, on the first day of May, converted them, the scilicet was rejected as surplusage; Cro. Jac. 428. And see Haak v. Breidenbach, 6 Binn. (Pa.) 15; 3 Saund. 291, note 1.

Stating material and traversable matter under a scilicet will not avoid the consequences of a variance; 1 M'Cl. & Y. 277; 2 B. & P. 170, n. 2; Vail v. Lewis, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 450, 4 Am. Dec. 300; nor will the mere omission of a scilicet render immaterial matter material; 2 Saund. 206 a; even in a criminal proceeding; 2 Camp. 307, n. See 3 Maule & S. 173.

It is said to have been used interchangeably with videlicet. It came to be contracted into ss. Its chief use was in connection with the venue of an action. Scilicet was used to particularize a general statement, thus: "London ss. In the Ward of Cheap," meant at London, but more particularly in the ward of Cheap. When, in 1706, it was enacted that the jury should no longer be summoned de vicineto, and the parish and ward were dropped from the venue, the pleaders held fast to the ss. (as "London ss.") though it had become meaningless. But the prevalence of county courts in America has brought back its real use. It should be written thus:

Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, ss.

County of Philadelphia meaning: In the commonwealth of Pennsylvania, but more particularly in the county of Philadelphia. See 25 Green Bag 59, by J. O. Skinner.

The omission of "ss." in a legal document is not material so as to invalidate it; Babcock v. Kuntzsch, 85 Hun 33, 32 N. Y. Supp. 587; McCord & Nave M. Co. v. Glenn, 6 Utah, 139, 21 Pac. 500.

SCINTILLA OF EVIDENCE. The doctrine that where there is any evidence, however slight, tending to support a material issue, the case must go to the jury, since they are the exclusive judges of the weight of the evidence; Mercier v. Mercier, 43 Ga. 323; Brooks v. Somerville, 106 Mass. 271; Way v. R. Co., 35 Ia. 585; Lewis v. Pratt, 48 Vt. 358.

In the United States courts and in England, it has been decided that the more reasonable rule is, "that before the evidence is left to the jury, there is, or may be, in every case, a preliminary question for the judge, not whether there is literally no evidence, but whether there is any upon which a jury can properly proceed to find a verdict for the party producing it, upon whom the burden or proof is imposed"; Marim County Com'rs v. Clark, 94 U. S. 278, 24 L. Ed. 59; 3 C. B. N. S. 150.

The old rule is likewise exploded in several of the states, whose courts are now in the constant habit of ordering nonsuits; Connor v. Giles, 76 Me. 132; Bailey v. Kimball, 26 N. H. 351; Colt v. R. Co., 49 N. Y. 671; or giving peremptory instructions to the jury to find for one party or the other; Wittkowsky v. Wasson, 71 N. C. 451; Fort Scott Coal & Min. Co. v. Sweeney, 15 Kan. 244; or of sustaining demurrers to the evidence, in cases where there is confessedly some evidence supporting a material issue. This is done under the guise of various expressions, which seem to leave the ancient prerogative of the jury intact. In Maryland, the judge achieves this result by determining the legal sufficiency of the evidence; Cole v. Hebb, 7 Gill & J. (Md.) 20; and in Missouri by determining its legal effect; Harris v. Woody, 9 Mo. 113. See Thomps. Chrg. Jury § 30; Thomps. Jur. § 2246. Judge Dillon (Law and Jurisprudence 130) strongly disapproves the scintilla doctrine, quoting substantially the language above quoted, which was used also by Miller, J., in Pleasants v. Fant, 22 Wall. (U. S.) 116, 22 L. Ed. 780, which he says follows the English doctrine. He quotes the approval of certain judges of his view.

* See INSTRUCTIONS.

SCINTILLA JURIS (Lat. a spark of law or right). A legal fiction resorted to for the purpose of enabling feoffees to uses to support contingent uses when they come into existence, thereby to enable the statute of uses, 27 Hen. VIII., to execute them. For example, a shifting use: a grant to A and his heirs to the use of B and his heirs, until C perform an act, and then to the use of C and his heirs. Here the statute executes the use in B, which, being coextensive with A's seisin, leaves no actual seisin in A. When, however, C performs the act, B's use ceases, and C's springs up, and he enjoys the fee-simple; upon which the question arises, out of what seisin C's use is served. It is said to be served out of A's original seisin; for upon the cesser of B's use it is contended that the original seisin reverted to A for the purpose of serving C's use, and is a possibility of seisin, or scintilla juris. See 4 Kent 238, and the authorities there cited, for the learning upon this subject; Burton, R. P. 48; Wilson, Springing Uses 59; Washb. R. P.

SCIRE FACIAS (Lat. that you make known). The name of a writ (and of the whole proceeding) founded on some public record. Fost. Fed. Pr. 301.

A judicial writ at common law to revive judgments or to obtain satisfaction thereof, from sureties upon bail or other recognizances taken in the proceedings in which the judgment is rendered. Egan v. R. Co., 163 Fed. 344.

Public records, to which the writ is applicable, are of two classes, judicial and non-judicial.

Judicial records are of two kinds, judgments in former suits, and recognizances which are of the nature of judgments. When founded on a judgment, the purpose of the writ is either to revive the judgment, which because of lapse of time—a year and a day at common law, but now varied by statutes—is presumed in law to be executed or released, and therefore execution on it is not allowed without giving notice, by scire facias, to the defendant to come in, and show if he can, by release or otherwise, why execution ought not to issue; or to make a person, who derives a benefit by or becomes chargeable to the execution, a party to the judgment, who was not a party to the original suit. In both of these classes of cases, the purpose of the writ is merely to continue a former suit to execution. When the writ is founded on a recognizance, its purpose is, as in cases of judgment, to have execution; and though it is not a continuation of a former suit, as in the case of judgments, yet, not being the commencement and foundation of an action, it is not an original, but a judicial, writ, and at most is only in the nature of an original action. When founded on a judicial record, the writ must issue out of the court where the judgment was given or recognizance entered of record, if the judgment or recognizance remains there, or if they are removed out of the court where they are; 3 Bla. Com. 416, 421; Hanson v. Barnes' Lessee, 3 Gill & J. (Md.) 359, 22 Am. Dec. 322; 2 Wms. Saund. 71. See Challenor v. Niles, 78 Ill. 78.

Scire facias to revive a judgment being a continuation of the suit, jurisdiction thereon is in the court where the judgment was rendered, regardless of the residence of the parties; Schmidtke v. Miller, 71 Tex. 103, 8 S. W. 638. A scire facias to revive a judgment being regarded in Pennsylvania as a substitute for an action of debt on the judgment, a judgment so revived without service or appearance has no binding force as against a defendant who resides in another state; Owens v. Henry, 161 U. S. 642, 16 Sup. Ct. 693, 40 L. Ed. 837; and it is held that when judgment is thus revived the plaintiff cannot recover in another state thereon after the limitation has run against the original judgment; Betts v. Johnson, 68 Vt. 549, 35 Atl. 489. A judgment may be revived at common law on a writ and alias writ of sci. fa. with return of nihil as to each; Kratz v. Preston, 52 Mo. App. 231; but such revival on two returns of nihil operates merely to keep in force the local lien and does not stop the running of the statute of limitations in another state where the defendant resides; Owens v. Henry, 161 U. S. 642, 16 Sup. Ct. 693, 40 L. Ed. 837.

Non-judicial records are letters patent and corporate charters. The writ, when founded on a non-judicial record, is the commencement and foundation of an original action; and its purpose is always to repeal or forfeit the record. Quo warranto is the usual and more appropriate remedy to forfeit corporate charters and offices; and scire facias, though used for that purpose, is more especially applicable to the repeal of letters patent. When the crown is deceived by a false suggestion, or when it has granted anything which by law it cannot grant, or where the holder of a patent office has committed a cause of forfeiture, and other like cases, the crown may by its prerogative repeal by scire facias its own grant. And where by several letters patent the self-same thing has been granted to several persons, the first patentee is of right permitted, in the name and at the suit of the crown by scire facias, to repeal the subsequent letters patent; and so, in any case of the grant of a patent which is injurious to another, the injured party is permitted to use the name of the crown in a suit by scire facias for the repeal of the grant. This privilege of suing in the name of the crown for the repeal of the patent is granted to prevent multiplicity of suits; 2 Wms. Saund. 72, notes. A state may by scire facias repeal a patent of land fraudulently obtained; Carroll's Lessee v. Llewellyn, 1 H. & McH. (Md.) 162. See REPEAL; PATENT.

Scire facias is also used by government as a mode of ascertaining and enforcing the forfeiture of a corporate charter; 3 Wood, Ry. L. 208, n.; where there is a legal existing body capable of acting, but who have abused their power; it cannot, like quo warranto (which is applicable to all cases of forfeiture), be applied where there is a body corporate de facto only, who take upon themselves to act, but cannot legally exercise their powers. In scire facias to forfeit a corporate charter, the government must be a party to the suit; for the judgment is that the parties be ousted and the franchises be seized into the hands of the government; 2 Kent 313; 10 B. & C. 240; Centre & K. Turnpike Road Co. v. McConaby, 16 S. & R. (Pa.) 140;

Regents of University of Maryland v. Williams, 9 Gill & J. (Md.) 365, 31 Am. Dec. 72. See QUO WARRANTO.

Scire facias is also used to suggest further breaches on a bond with a condition, where a judgment has been obtained for some but not all of the breaches and to recover further instalments where a judgment has been obtained for the penalty before all the instalments are due; 1 Wms. Saund. 58; Young v. Reynolds, 4 Md. 375.

By statute, in Pennsylvania, scire facias is the method of proceeding upon a mortgage.

The pleadings in scire facias are peculiar. The writ recites the judgment or other record, and also the suggestions which the plaintiff must make to the court to entitle him to the proceeding by scire facias. The writ, therefore, presents the plaintiff's whole case, and constitutes the declaration, to which the defendant must plead; Lasselle v. Godfroy, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 297. And when the proceeding is used to forfeit a corporate charter, all the causes of forfeiture must be assigned in distinct breaches in the writ, as is done in the declaration or replication on a bond with a condition. And the defendant must either disclaim the charter or deny its existence, or deny the facts alleged as breaches, or demur to them. The suggestions in the writ, disclosing the foundation of the plaintiff's case, must also be traversed if they are to be avoided. The scire facias is founded partly upon them and partly upon the record; 2 Inst. 470, 679. They are substantive facts, and can be traversed by distinct pleas embracing them alone, just as any other fundamental allegation can be traversed alone. All the pleadings after the writ or declaration are in the ordinary forms. There are no pleadings in scire facias to forfeit a corporate charter to be found in the books, as the proceeding has been seldom used. There is a case in 1 P. Wms. 207, but no pleadings are given; also in Board of Com'rs for the Frederick Female Seminary, 9 Gill (Md.) 379, with a synopsis of the pleadings. Perhaps the only other case is in Vermont; and it is without pleadings. A defendant cannot plead more than one plea to a scire facias to forfeit a corporate charter: the statutes of 4 & 5 Anne, ch. 16, and 9 Anne, ch. 20, allowing double pleas, do not extend to the crown; 1 Chitty, Pl. 479; 1 P. Wms. 220.

SCIRE FACIAS AD AUDIENDUM ERRORES (Lat.). The name of a writ which is sued out after the plaintiff in error has assigned his errors. Fitzh. N. B. 20; Bac. Abr. Error (F). Where a scire facias ad audiendum errores describes correctly, in its recital, the parties to the judgment complained of, but in the citing part brings in parties whose names do not appear in the writ of error, the irregularity in the scire facias may be cured by amendment; U. S. Mut. Accident Ass'n of City of New York v. Weller, 30 Fla. 210, 11 South. 786.

SCIRE FACIAS AD DISPROBANDUM DEBITUM (Lat.). The name of a writ in use in Pennsylvania, which lies by a defendant in foreign attachment against the plaintiff, in order to enable him, within a year and a day next ensuing the time of payment to the plaintiff in the attachment to disprove or avoid the debt recovered against him. Act June 13, 1836. See a form in 60 Pittsb. Leg. J. 449.

SCIRE FACIAS FOR THE CROWN. The summary proceeding by extent is only resorted to when a crown debtor is insolvent, or there is good ground for supposing that the debt may be lost by delay. Whart. Law Lex.

SCIRE FACIAS QUARE RESTITUTIONEM NON. A writ which lies where execution on a judgment has been levied, but the money has not been paid over to the plaintiff, and the judgment is afterwards reversed in error or on appeal; in such a case a scire facias is necessary before a writ of restitution can issue. 1 Chitty, Pl. 582.

SCIRE FECI (Lat. I have made known). The return of the sheriff, or other proper officer, to the writ of scire facias, when it has been served.

SCIRE FIERI INQUIRY. In English Law. The name of a writ formerly used to recover the amount of a judgment from an executor.

The history of the origin of the writ is as follows: When on an execution de bonis testatoris against an executor the sheriff returned nulla bona and also a devastavit, a fieri facias de bonis propriis might formerly have been issued against the executor, without a previous inquisition finding a devastavit and a scire facias. But the most usual practice upon the sheriff's return of nulla bona to a fieri facias de bonis testatoris was to sue out a special writ of fieri facias de bonis testatoris, with a clause in it, "et si tibi constare poterit" that the executor had wasted the goods, then to levy de bonis propriis. This was the practice in the king's bench till the time of Charles I.

In the common pleas a practice had prevailed in early times upon a suggestion in the special writ of fieri facias of a devastavit by the executor, to direct the sheriff to inquire by a jury whether the executor had wasted the goods, and if the jury found he had, then a scire facias was issued out against him, and, unless he made a good defence thereto, an execution de bonis propriis was awarded against him.

The practice of the two courts being different, several cases were brought into the king's bench on error, and at last it became the practice of both courts, for the sake of expedition, to incorporate the fieri facias inquiry, and scire facias, into one writ, thence called a scire fieri inquiry,—a name compounded of the first words of the two writs of scire facias and fieri facias, and that of inquiry, of which it consists.

This writ recites the fieri facias de bonis testatoris sued out on the judgment against the executor, the return of nulla bona by the sheriff, and then, suggesting that the executor had sold and converted the goods of the testator to the value of the debt and damages recovered, commands the sheriff to levy the said debt and damages of the goods of the testator in the hands of the executor, if they could be levied thereof, but if it should appear to him by the inquisition of a jury that the executor had wasted the goods of the testator, then the sheriff is to warn the executor to appear, etc. If the judgment had been either by or against the testator or intestate, or both, the writ of fieri facias recites that fact, and also that the court had adjudged, upon a scire facias to revive the judgment, that the executor or administrator should have execution for the debt, etc. Chitt. Entr. 659; Lilly, Entr. 664.

Although this practice is sometimes adopted, yet the most usual proceeding is by action of debt, on the judgment, suggesting a devastavit because in the proceeding by scire fieri inquiry the plaintiff is not entitled to costs unless the executor appears and pleads to the scire facias; 1 Saund. 219, n. 8. See 2 Archb. Pr. 934.

SCIREWYTE. The annual tax or prestation paid to the sheriff for holding the assizes or county courts. Par. Ant. 573.

SCOLD. See COMMON SCOLD.

SCOPE. Design, aim, or purpose. Linblom v. Ramsey, 75 Ill. 246. As ordinarily used, extent, limits, etc.

SCOT AND LOT. See LOT AND SCOT.

SCOTALE. An extortion by officers of the forests who kept ale-houses and compelled people to drink there under fear of their displeasure. Manw. For. Laws, pt. 1, 216.

SCOTCH MARRIAGES. See GRETNA GREEN.

SCOTCH PEERS. Peers of the kingdom of Scotland; of these sixteen are elected by the entire body as representative peers in the House of Lords. They are elected for one parliament only. See PEERS.

SCOTLAND. See UNITED KINGDOM OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.

SCOUNDREL. An opprobrious title, applicable to a person of bad character.

General damages will not lie for calling a man a scoundrel, but special damages may be recovered when there has been an actual loss; 1 Chitty, Pr. 44.

SCRAWL. A mark which is to supply the place of a seal. 2 Pars. Contr., 8th ed. 589. See SCROLL.

SCRIBE. See CANCELLARIUS.

SCRIP. A certificate or schedule. Evidence of the right to obtain shares in a public company; sometimes called scrip certificate, to distinguish it from the real title to shares. Whart. L. Dict. Sometimes, in this country, it indicates a substitute for a cash dividend, usually payable out of future earnings. Land scrip is a certificate that the holder is entitled to take up so much (usually government) land. The possession of such scrip is prima facie evidence of ownership of the shares therein designated; Add. Contr. 203*. It is not goods, wares, or merchandise within the statute of frauds; 16 M. & W. 66. Scrip certificates have been held negotiable; L. R. 10 Ex. 337; Dos Passos, Stockbrokers 488.

South Carolina, by act of 1872, authorized revenue bond scrip of the state in the form of bills payable which resembled treasury notes. They bore no interest, but were made receivable for all bills due the state except taxes levied to pay interest on the public debt. When received by the treasurer they could be paid out again. It was held they were intended to circulate as money, and were bills of credit within the prohibition of the federal constitution; Wesley v. Eells, 177 U. S. 370, 20 Sup. Ct. 661, 44 L. Ed. 810.

See DIVIDEND; STORE ORDERS.

SCRIPT. The original or principal instrument, where there are part and counterpart.

SCRIVENER. A person whose business it is to write deeds and other instruments for others; a conveyancer.

Money scriveners are those who are engaged in procuring money to be lent on mortgages and other securities, and lending such money accordingly. They act also as agents for the purchase and sale of real estates.

An attorney, qua attorney, is not a scrivener; 18 E. L. & Eq. R. 402.

To be considered a money scrivener, a person must be concerned in carrying on the trade or profession as a means of making a livelihood. He must in the course of his occupation receive other men's money into his trust and custody, to lay out for them as occasion offers; 3 Camp. 538.

SCROLL. A mark intended to supply the place of a seal made with a pen on a deed or other instrument of writing. Mitch. R. E. & Conv. 454, 455. In Mississippi and Florida it has been held, that "a scroll attached to a written instrument has the effect of a seal, whenever it appears from the body of the instrument, the scroll itself, or the place where affixed, that such scroll was intended as a seal;" Hudson v. Poindexter, 42 Miss. 304. The word "seal" affixed to the name has been held equivalent to a seal or scroll; Whitley v. Davis' Lessee, 1 Swan (Tenn.) 333; Cochran v. Stewart, 57 Minn. 499, 59 N. W. 543; and so where the word seal is printed and appears opposite the name; Lorah v. Nissley, 156 Pa. 329, 27 Atl. 242; otherwise in Virginia and Indiana. In Wisconsin and Pennsylvania a printed "L. S.," inclosed in brackets, in the usual place of a seal, is sufficient; Williams v. Starr, 5 Wis. 549 (see Barnard v. Gantz, 140 N. Y. 249, 35 N. E. 430); or in the latter state a seal made with a flourish of the pen; Appeal of Hacker, 121 Pa. 192, 15 Atl. 500, 1 L. R. A. 861, a printed "L. S." annexed to the maker's signature constitutes a seal by adoption where the instrument recites that it is executed under the maker's hand and seal; Stansell v. Corley, 81 Ga. 453, 8 S. E. 868. An expression in the body of the instrument denoting that it is sealed is sufficient, whatever the scroll may be; Armstrong v. Pearce, 5 Harr. (Del.) 351; Bell v. Keefe, 13 La. Ann. 524. See SEAL.

SCRUET ROLL (called, also, Scruet Finium, or simply Scruet). In Old English Law. A record of the bail accepted in cases of habeas corpus. The award was set down in the remembrance roll, together with the cause of commitment, the writ and return were put on file, the bail was recorded in the scruet. 3 Howell, St. Tr. 134, arg. For remembrance roll, see Reg. Mich. 1654, § 15.

SCRUTATOR (Lat. from scrutari, to search). In Old English Law. A bailiff whom the king of England appointed in places that were his in franchise or interest, whose duty was to look after the king's water-rights: as, flotsam, jetsam, wreck, etc. 1 Hagr. Tracts 23; Pat. 27 Hen. VI. parte 2, m. 20; Pat. 8 Ed. IV. parte 1, m. 22.

SCUTAGE (from Lat. scutum, a shield). Knight-service. Littleton § 99. The tax which those who, holding by knight-service, did not accompany the king, had to pay on its being assessed by parliament. Scutage certain was a species of socage where the compensation for service was fixed. Littleton § 97; Reg. Orig. 88.

Payment in lieu of military service was the essential principle of scutage. It was the fixed sum due from mesne tenants to their lord. See Round, Feud. Engl. 270; 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 34; Vinogradoff, Engl. Soc. 15.

SCYREGEMOTE. The name of a court among the Saxons. It was the court of the shire, in Latin called curia comitatis, and the principal court among the Saxons. It was holden twice a year for determining all causes both ecclesiastical and secular.

SE DEFENDENDO (Lat.). Defending himself. Homicide se defendo may be justifiable.

SEA. The ocean; the great mass of water which surrounds the land, covering nearly three-quarters of the globe. Waters within the ebb and flow of the tide are to be considered the sea; Thackarey v. The Farmer of Salem, Gilp. 526, Fed. Cas. No. 13,852.

A large body of salt water communicating with the ocean is also called a sea; as, the Mediterranean sea, etc.

Very large inland bodies of salt water are also called seas; as, the Caspian sea, etc.

"A sea," in nautical language, may mean a general disturbance of the surface of the water occasioned by a storm, and breaking it up into the roll and lift of waves following or menacing each other; some particular wave or surge, separate from its fellows; Snowden v. Guion, 101 N. Y. 463, 5 N. E. 322.

As a boundary in a conveyance, it includes the beach to low water mark; Snow v. Real Estate Co., 84 Me. 14, 24 Atl. 429, 17 L. R. A. 280, 30 Am. St. Rep. 331.

The high seas include the whole of the seas below high water mark and outside the body of the county. Couls. & F. on Waters. See 2 Ex. Div. 62; HIGH SEAS.

The open sea is public and common property, and any nation or person has ordinarily an equal right to navigate it or to fish therein; 1 Kent 27; Ang. Tide-Waters 44; and to land upon the sea-shore. Bened. Adm. 224-257.

Every nation has jurisdiction over the person of its own subjects in its own public and private vessels when at sea; and so far territorial jurisdiction may be considered as preserved; for the vessels of a nation are in many respects considered as portions of its territory, and persons on board are protected and governed by the laws of the country to which the vessel belongs. The extent of jurisdiction over adjoining seas is often a question of difficulty, and one that is still open to controversy. As far as a nation can conveniently occupy, and that occupation is acquired by prior possession or treaty, the jurisdiction is exclusive; 1 Kent 29. This has been heretofore limited to the distance of a cannon-shot, or marine league, over the waters adjacent to its shore; Church v. Hubbard, 2 Cra. (U. S.) 187, 234, 2 L. Ed. 249; Bynkershoek, Qu. Pub. Juris. 61; 1 Azuni, Marit. Law 185, 204; Vattel 207. See LEAGUE; SEAMAN; ADMIRALTY; ARM OF THE SEA; LOW WATER MARK; LITUS MARIS; TERRITORIAL WATERS; SEA-SHORE; LEGISLATIVE POWER.

SEA BATTERIES. Assaults by masters in the merchant service upon seamen, at sea.

SEA DAMAGED. In a contract for sale of goods shipped or to be shipped, the phrase, "Sea damaged, if any, to be taken at a fair valuation," contemplates the risk of damage to the goods by perils of the sea, and does not restrict to any particular ship the subsequent transportation of such goods to their destination. Harrison v. Fortlage, 161 U. S. 57, 16 Sup. Ct. 488, 40 L. Ed. 616. See PERILS OF THE SEA.

SEA-LETTER. SEA-BRIEF. A document which should be found on board of every neutral ship; it specifies the nature and quantity of the cargo, the place from whence it comes and its destination. Chitty, Law of Nat. 197; I. & C. Slegt v. Rhineland, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 192. See SHIP'S PAPERS.

SEA PERILS. See PERILS OF THE SEA.

SEA POSTAGE. The difference reached by subtracting inland postage from the total postage. Pacific Mail S. S. Co. v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cl. 1.

SEA-SHORE. That space of land on the border of the sea which is alternately covered and left dry by the rising and falling of the tide; or, in other words, that space of land between high and low water mark. Hargrave, St. Tr. 12; Shively v. Bowlby, 152 U. S. 1, 14 Sup. Ct. 548, 38 L. Ed. 331; Bell v. Gough, 23 N. J. L. 624; Cutts v. Hussey, 15 Me. 237; 4 De G. M. & G. 206; Mather v.

Chapman, 40 Conn. 382, 16 Am. Rep. 51, n; Hathaway v. Wilson, 123 Mass. 361; Galveston v. Menard, 23 Tex. 358; Long Beach Land & W. Co. v. Richardson, 70 Cal. 206, 11 Pac. 695; Martin v. O'Brien, 34 Miss. 21. See TIDE; TIDE-WATER. In a deed, sea-shore is equivalent in its strict legal sense to foreshore and means the land between medium high and low water mark; [1905] 2 Ch. 164.

At common law, the sea-shore, in England, belongs to the crown; in this country, to the state; 3 Kent 347; 27 E. L. & E. 242; Storer v. Freeman, 6 Mass. 435, 4 Am. Dec. 155; Com. v. Charlestown, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 180, 11 Am. Dec. 161; Brookhaven's Trustees v. Strong, 60 N. Y. 56; Pollard's Lessee v. Hagan, 3 How. (U. S.) 221, 11 L. Ed. 565; Bell v. Gough, 23 N. J. L. 624. In England, the sovereign is not the absolute proprietor, but holds the sea-shore subject to the public rights of navigation and fishery; and if he grants it to an individual, his grantee takes subject to the same rights; Phear, Rights of Water 45; Ang. Tide-Wat. 21. So in this country it has been held that the rights of fishery and navigation remain unimpaired by the grant of lands covered by navigable water; Wilson v. Inloes, 6 Gill (Md.) 121. But the power of the states, unlike that of the crown, is absolute except in so far as it is controlled by the federal constitution; Ang. Tide-Wat. 59. The states, therefore, may regulate the use of their shores and the fisheries thereon, provided such regulations do not interfere with the laws of congress; Corfield v. Coryell, 4 Wash. C. C. 371, Fed. Cas. No. 3230; Smith v. Maryland, 18 How. (U. S.) 71, 15 L. Ed. 269; Townsend v. Brown, 24 N. J. L. 80; Wilson v. Black-Bird Creek Marsh Co., 2 Pet. (U. S.) 245, 7 L. Ed. 412. And see TIDE-WATER; RIVER; FISHERY.

The public right of fishing includes shrimp-ing and gathering all shell-fish or other fish whose natural habitat is between high and low water mark; Peck v. Lockwood, 5 Day (Conn.) 22; 2 B. & P. 472; Moore v. Griffin, 22 Me. 353.

In Massachusetts and Maine, by the colony ordinance of 1641, and by usage arising therefrom, the proprietors of the adjoining land on bays and arms of the sea, and other places where the tide ebbs and flows, own to low water mark, subject to the public easement, and not exceeding one hundred yards below high water mark; Sale v. Pratt, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 191; 3 Kent 429; Dane, Abr. c. 68, a. 3, 4. It was a question whether this ordinance extended to New Hampshire; Nudd v. Hobbs, 17 N. H. 527. A description of lands extending to the sea-shore will not include the shore itself; Niles v. Patch, 13 Gray (Mass.) 257; Littlefield v. Maxwell, 31 Me. 134, 50 Am. Dec. 653.

A conveyance of a wharf has been held to include flats in front of it: Doane v. Broad-St. Ass'n, 6 Mass. 332; Com. v. Alger, 7

Cush. (Mass.) 66; and as an incident sea weed cast upon them is prima facie an appurtenant belonging to the owner of the soil; East Hampton v. Kirk, 6 Hun (N. Y.) 257; Phillips v. Rhodes, 7 Mete. (Mass.) 322. See LAKE; WHARF.

See an article by Frederic R. Coudert in Col. L. Rev. (March, 1909), reviewing the cases.

An owner of land bounded by the sea has a private right of access thereto for the purpose of navigation, and this, even when the foreshore is left bare by the tide; [1906] Ir. R. Ch. Div. 519.

By the Roman law, the shore included the land as far as the greatest wave extended in winter: est autem littus maris quatenus hiernus fluctus maximus excurrit. Inst. l. 2, t. 1, s. 3. Littus publicum est eatenus quae maxime fluctus exstuat. Dig. 50, 16, 112.

The Civil Code of Louisiana seems to have followed the law of the Institutes and the Digest; for it enacts, art. 442, that the "sea-shore is that space of land over which the waters of the sea are spread in the highest water during the winter season."

See 5 Rob. 182; Dougl. 425; 2 Rolle, Abr. 170; Dy. 326; 5 Co. 107; Bacon, Abr. Courts of Admiralty (A); Mobile v. Eslava, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 234, 10 L. Ed. 948; Martin v. Waddell, 16 Pet. (U. Chapman, 40 Conn. 382, 16 Am. Rep. 54; FORESHORE.

SEA WEED. A species of grass which grows in the sea. When cast upon land, it belongs to the owner of the land adjoining the sea-shore, upon the grounds that it increases gradually, that it is useful as manure and a protection to the ground, and that it is some compensation for the encroachment of the sea upon the land; 3 B. & Ad. 967; Emans v. Turnbull, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 313, 3 Am. Dec. 427. See Rogers v. Judd, 5 Vt. 223, 26 Am. Dec. 299; Hall v. Lawrence, 2 R. I. 218, 57 Am. Dec. 715. But when cast upon the shore between high and low water mark it belongs to the public and may be lawfully appropriated by any person; Mather v. Chapman, 40 Conn. 382, 16 Am. Rep. 54. See ATLUVION.

SEAL. An impression upon wax, wafer, or some other tenacious substance capable of being impressed. Warren v. Lynch, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 239; 4 Kent 452. It does not seem necessary that an impression be made; 6 C. P. 411.

Lord Coke defines a seal to be wax, with an impression. 3 Inst. 169. "Sigillum," says he, "est cera impressa, quia cera sine impressione non est sigillum." The definition given above is the common-law definition of a seal; Perkins 129, 134; Brooke, Abr. Faits 17, 30; 2 Leon. 21; Warren v. Lynch, 5

Johns. (N. Y.) 239; Mill Dam Foundry v. Hovey, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 417; but any other material besides wax may be used; Tasker v. Bartlett, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 359.

Merlin defines a seal to be a plate of metal with a flat surface, on which is engraved the arms of a prince or nation, or private individual, or other device with which an impression may be made on wax or other substance, on paper or parchment, in order to authenticate them; the impression thus made is also called a seal; Répert. mot Secau; Kershaw's Ex'rs v. Whitaker, 3 McCord (S. C.) 583; Biery v. Haines, 5 Whart. (Pa.) 563.

Where the seal of a public officer does not contain the name of the state, but it is written in a blank left for that name, a verification authenticated by such a seal is insufficient; Oelbermann v. Ide, 93 Wis. 669, 68 N. W. 393, 57 Am. St. Rep. 947.

The seal came from the Frankish kings; its use was confined to counts and bishops; a man of lower degree could execute his bond by carrying it before his lord and having him affix his seal. Before the end of the 13th century the free and lawful man usually had a seal. 2 Poll. & Maitl. 223. See, also, Add. Contr. 6.

A person may adopt any seal as his own, or anything in place of a seal; In re Thomas, 35 Fed. 337; it is not necessarily of any particular form or figure, and may consist of an outline without an enclosure, or of a single dash or flourish of the pen; and its precise form in each case depends wholly upon the taste or fancy of the person who makes it; Appeal of Hacker, 121 Pa. 192, 15 Atl. 500, 1 L. R. A. 861.

In many states, a scroll or similar device may constitute a valid seal; California, Connecticut, Florida, Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, New Jersey, New Mexico, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Virginia, West Virginia, and Wisconsin. In several states the distinction between sealed and unsealed instruments is abolished; Arkansas, California, North Dakota, South Dakota, Mississippi, Indiana, Kentucky, and Tennessee. The use of seals by private persons is unnecessary in Arizona, Colorado, Idaho, Iowa, Kansas, Mississippi, Nebraska, Nevada, Ohio, Tennessee, Utah, and Washington. In some states official or corporate seals may be impressed on the paper itself; California, Connecticut, Dakota, Kansas, New York, Rhode Island, and Virginia. By U. S. R. S. § 6, an impression on the paper of any common process or instrument is sufficient.

When a seal is affixed to an instrument it makes it a specialty, and consideration is presumed; 2 Bla. Com. 446; Storm v. U. S., 94 U. S. 76, 24 L. Ed. 42; but the presumption does not extend to contracts in restraint of trade where actual consideration is wanting; 3 Bing. 327; or where the real consideration was illegal; Whart. Contr. § 495;

but where the distinction between sealed and unsealed instruments is abolished by statute, any failure of consideration may be shown; Williams v. Haines, 27 Ia. 251, 1 Am. Rep. 268; Carter v. Doe, 21 Ala. 88. One seal may serve for a number of signers; 36 Am. Dec. 511; although the contrary was held in Creswell's Lessee v. Lawson, 7 Gill & J. (Md.) 248; State v. Humbird, 54 Md. 327.

When an instrument concludes with the words, "witness our hands and seals," and is signed by two persons, with only one seal, the jury may infer from the face of the paper that the person who signed last adopted the seal of the first; Bowman v. Robb, 6 Pa. 302.

It is said the burden is upon a party to prove the adoption of another's seal; and the question of the adoption of a seal has been held to be for the jury; Yarborough v. Monday, 14 N. C. 420. The same contract may be the specialty of one and the parol agreement of another party to it; Eames v. Preston, 20 Ill. 389; whether a mark or character is a seal depends upon the intention of the executant, as shown by the paper; Jacksonville R. & Nav. Co. v. Hooper, 160 U. S. 514, 16 Sup. Ct. 379, 40 L. Ed. 515.

Whether an instrument be under seal or not is a question of law, to be solved by inspection; Duncan v. Duncan, 1 Watts (Pa.) 325.

It is not necessary to recite in a deed that it is under seal; Frevall v. Fitch, 5 Whart. (Pa.) 325, 34 Am. Dec. 558; Richardson v. Scott River W. & M. Co., 22 Cal. 157; Eames v. Preston, 20 Ill. 389; although the contrary is held in Virginia and Alabama; Baird v. Blaignrove, 1 Wash. (Va.) 170; Carter & Carter v. Penn, 4 Ala. 140, and is recognized in New Jersey; Corlies v. Vannote, 16 N. J. L. 324; and in many jurisdictions, conclusions are expressed as to what language in an instrument is a recognition of the seal, it being held that the use of the technical language of specialties is sufficient; Lindsay & Atkinson v. State, 15 Ala. 43; Van Santwood v. Sandford, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 197; or if the fact of the seal appears in the attestation clause; Burton v. Le Roy, 5 Sawy. 510, Fed. Cas. No. 2,217.

A recital in a bond that it is under seal estops the obligor from denying that it was a sealed instrument; Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Bender, 124 N. Y. 49, 26 N. E. 345, 11 L. R. A. 708.

Though a contract indicates an intention to contract under seal, if not sealed, it is a simple contract; Simpson v. Ritchie, 110 Me. 299, 86 Atl. 124.

Where an ancient document (an exemplification of a report of commissioners appointed to fix municipal limits) has a slip for a seal and no seal, it will be presumed that a seal was once there; 2 M. & Rob. 140; 1 Lewis's Gr. Evid. § 144.

The word "seal" written or printed within a scroll is held to be a sufficient seal; Hud- son v. Poindexter, 42 Miss. 304; Miller v. Binder, 28 Pa. 489; Jackson v. Life Ins. Co., 233 Ill. 161, 84 N. E. 198; contra, Jenkins v. Hurt's Com'rs., 2 Rand. (Va.) 446; Merritt v. Cornell, 1 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 335. A recital in an instrument that it is sealed, will not make it a specialty; Chilton v. People, 66 Ill. 501; Boothbay v. Giles, 68 Me. 160.

An executory contract under seal, ignorantly made in pursuance of a parol authority, will be sufficient to maintain an action, the seal being disregarded as mere excess; Jones v. Horner, 60 Pa. 214.

Where a corporation executed a promissory note, payable to the order of its president, attaching thereto, before delivery, its corporate seal, it was held that the note was not a negotiable note under the law merchant, but was a specialty; Coe v. R. Co., 8 Fed. 534. The Uniform Negotiable Instrument Act provides otherwise. The affixing of his private seal by a corporate officer to a contract of the corporation binds the latter only by simple contract; Bank of the Metropolis v. Guttschlick, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 19, 10 L. Ed. 335.

In the absence of evidence it will be presumed that the seal of a corporation attached to an instrument was attached by authority; 4 Leg. & Ins. Rep. 107, per Sharswood, J.; where an instrument is executed on behalf of the corporation and is signed by its agent, with the common seal attached, it will be presumed, on proof of the signature, that the seal was intended as that of the corporation; Penn Natural Gas Co. v. Cook, 123 Pa. 170, 16 Atl. 762; it is prima facie evidence that it was attached by corporate authority; Kirkpatrick v. Milling & Export Co., 135 Fed. 144; it is presumed to be such corporate seal as it purports to be; Boyce v. Gas Coal Co., 37 W. Va. 73, 16 S. E. 501; the seal is prima facie evidence that a contract has been duly entered into. It may be affixed by a less number than was competent to enter into the contract, provided it was done by a legal quorum; B. & D. Turnpike Road v. Myers, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 12, 9 Am. Dec. 402, per Gibson, C. J.

The seal of a foreign corporation (the city of London, attached to a proof of a deed before the Lord Mayor) must be proved; Chew v. Keck, 4 Rawle (Pa.) 163.

Where an affidavit in foreign attachment was sworn to before a mayor in another state, who attached the seal of the city, it was held that proof of the seal was not necessary; Woods v. Watkins, 40 Pac. 458.

The public seal of a foreign state proves itself; U. S. v. Johns, 4 Dall. (U. S.) 416, 1 L. Ed. 888; and public acts, decrees, and judgments exemplified under this seal are received as true and genuine; Griswold v. Pitcairn, 2 Conn. 85; Lincoln v. Battelle, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 475. But to entitle its seal to such authority the foreign state must have been acknowledged by the government within whose jurisdiction the forum is located; U. S. v. Palmer, 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 610, 4 L. Ed. 471; 9 Ves. 347.

While an action of covenant will lie on an unsealed instrument in the state where executed, it will not lie in the state requiring a sealed instrument to support such action; Bank of U. S. v. Donnelly, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 362, 5 L. Ed. 974; nor is the rule different where, by the lex loci contractus, a scroll or other device is recognized as a seal, but is not in the state of the forum; Prentice v. Zane, 8 How. (U. S.) 471, 12 L. Ed. 1160. Whether any seal is required upon a protest of a bill of exchange is determined by the lex loci contractus; Pierce v. Indseth, 106 U. S. 546, 1 Sup. Ct. 418, 27 L. Ed. 254. A scroll does not amount to a seal of office; Hendrix v. Boggs, 15 Neb. 470, 20 N. W. 28; or a corporate seal; Bates v. R. Co., 10 Allen (Mass.) 251.

The absence of a seal from a writ of attachment does not invalidate the writ, it being in a new county and not yet provided with one; Wehrman v. Conklin, 155 U. S. 329, 15 Sup. Ct. 129, 39 L. Ed. 167.

The seal of a notary public is taken judicial notice of the world over: 2 Esp. 700; Browne v. Bank, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 484, 9 Am. Dec. 463; Chanoine v. Fowler, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 173; Porter v. Judson, 1 Gray (Mass.) 175. Judicial notice is taken of the seals of superior courts; Com. Dig. Evidence (A 2); not so of foreign courts; 3 East 221; except admiralty or marine courts; Church v. Hubbard, 2 Cra. (U. S.) 187, 2 L. Ed. 249; Thompson v. Stewart, 3 Conn. 171, 8 Am. Dec. 168. See Story, Conf. Laws § 643.

In Louisiana and other civil-law jurisdictions the effects of a deceased person are taken into public custody by being sealed, and the details of the action of officials in connection therewith are carefully regulated by statute.

See Cooper v. Rankin, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 613, for some interesting history, and a suggestion that the use of seals by persons be abolished by law.

SEAL DAYS. In English Practice. Motion days in the court of chancery, so called because every motion had to be stamped with the seal, which did not lie in court in the ordinary sittings out of term. Whart. Dict.

SEAL FISHERIES. The controversy concerning the sealing interest in Bering sea between the United States and Great Britain has involved an elaborate discussion with respect to the characteristics and habits of the seals, and the question whether their custom of going in herds through the open sea to certain islands at stated periods of the year for breeding purposes, made them the lawful prey of any captor, or whether the United States could assert over them a property right growing out of the fact that unquestionably the home of the animal was in the territory of the United States. This subject occupied the attention of the Paris tribunal under the treaty for the settlement of claims growing out of the seizure of vessels engaged in the seal fishery. The discussions were of great interest and extended to the general question so much mooted by writers on the subject, whether international law had any real basis other than the mere consent of nations to specific propositions. That particular controversy was decided against the United States and the proceedings may be referred to for information on the subject. See INTERNATIONAL LAW.

Rev. St. § 1956 (as amended April 21, 1910) prohibits the killing within the limits of Alaska or its waters of fur seals and various other fur-bearing animals under penalty of fine or imprisonment, or both, and forfeiture of vessels found engaged in violating the section, but power is given to the secretary of commerce to make regulations authorizing the killing of such animals.

By the act of April 21, 1910, the killing of fur seals shall be exercised by officers, agents or employees of the United States or natives of Pribilof Islands acting under them and by no other person. Only males shall be killed and only ninety-five per cent. of three year old males killed in any one year. The skins are to be sold by the government. These islands are declared a special reservation, on which landing is forbidden except for unavoidable cause. Killing shall not be done by firearms. It is unlawful to kill any female seal or any seal less than one year old; and to kill any seal in the waters adjacent to the Pribilof Islands, or on the beaches or cliffs where they haul up. No citizen of the United States or person owing obedience to its laws, nor any person belonging to or on board a United States vessel, shall kill or hunt fur seals in the waters of the Pacific Ocean, whether in the territorial waters of the United States or in the open sea.

The act of congress of August 24, 1912, reciting a convention with Great Britain, Japan and Russia, provides that no United States citizen or person owing obedience to its laws shall kill or capture seals more than three miles from the coast line of any United States territory, excepting the aborigines when fishing in canoes or undecked boats manned by not more than five such. Killing seals on Pribilof Island is forbidden for five years. Pelagic sealing is defined as meaning the killing, capturing, or pursuing in any manner fur seals while the same are in the water.

It has been held by United States courts that the waters of Bering sea are those within the three-mile zone from Alaska: La Nina, 75 Fed. 513, 21 C. C. A. 434; In re Cooper, 143 U. S. 472, 12 Sup. Ct. 453, 36 L. Ed. 232. R. S. § 1956 is violated though the animals are taken by boats sent out to a distance from the vessel seized; The Alexander, 60 Fed. 914. See The James G. Swan, 50 id. 108. A vessel is liable to forfeiture if her boats take seals within the prohibited zone though she does not go there; U. S. v. The Jane Gray, 77 Fed. 908, under act of 1894.

See FISHERY.

SEAL OFFICE. In English Practice. The office at which certain judicial writs are sealed with the prerogative seal, and without which they are of no authority. The officer whose duty it is to seal such writs is called "sealer of writs."

SEAL OF THE UNITED STATES. The seal used by the United States in congress assembled shall be the seal of the United States, viz.: ARMS, paleways of thirteen pieces argent and gules; a chief azure; the escutcheon on the breast of the American eagle displayer proper, holding in his dexter talon an olive-branch, and in his sinister a bundle of thirteen arrows, all proper, and in his beak a scroll, inscribed with this motto, "E pluribus unum." For the CREST: over the head of the eagle which appears above the escutcheon, a glory, or breaking through a cloud, proper, and surrounding thirteen stars, forming a constellation argent on an azure field. REVERSE, a pyramid unfinished. In the zenith, an eye in a triangle, surrounded with a glory proper: over the eye, these words, "Annuit cœptis." On the base of the pyramid, the numerical letters MDCCLXXVI; and underneath, the following motto: "Novus ordo sectorum." Resolution of Congress, June 20, 1782; R. S. § 1793. See Marbury v. Madison (U. S.) 1 Cra. 158, 2 L. Ed. 60. It is in the custody of the secretary of state; R. S. § 1794.

The various departments and courts have each their own seal as provided by the Revised Statutes and the Judicial Code.

SEAL-PAPER. A document issued by the lord chancellor previously to the commencement of the sittings, detailing the business to be done for each day in his court, and in the courts of the lords justices and vice-chancellors. The master of the rolls in like manner issued a seal-paper in respect to the business to be heard before him. Sm. Ch. Pr. 9.

SEALED AND DELIVERED. The common formula of attestation of deeds and other instruments, written immediately over the witnesses' names.

SEALER. An officer in chancery who sealed the writs and instruments.

SEALING A VERDICT. The putting a verdict in writing, and placing it in an envelope, which is sealed. To relieve jurors after they have agreed, it is not unusual for the counsel to agree that the jury shall seal their verdict and then separate. When the court is again in session, the jury come in and give their verdict in all respects as if it had not been sealed; and a juror may dissent from it if since the sealing he has honestly changed his mind; Sutliff v. Gilbert, 8 Ohio, 405; Cook v. Scott, 1 Gilm. (Ill.) 333. A sealed verdict of guilty on certain counts of an indictment, without any finding as to the other counts, is held not to be invalidated by permitting the jury, after the verdict is opened, but before it is recorded, to amend it by adding not guilty as to the others; Hechter v. Maryland, 94 Md. 429, 50 Atl. 1041, 56 L. R. A. 457.

SEAMAN. A sailor; a mariner; one whose business is navigation. 2 Boulay-Paty, Dr. Com. 232; Laws of Oleron, art. 7; Laws of Wisby, art. 19; Bened. Adm. 277.

The term seamen, in its most enlarged sense, includes the captain as well as other persons of the crew; in a more confined signification, it extends only to the common sailors; 3 Pardessus, n. 667. But the mate; Atkins v. Burrows, 1 Pet. Adm. 246, Fed. Cas. No. 618; the cook and steward; Black v. The Louisiana, 2 Pet. Adm. 268, Fed. Cas. No. 1,461; and engineers, clerks, carpenters, firemen, deck-hands, porters, and chambermaids, on passenger-steamers, when necessary for the service of the ship; 1 Conkl. Adm. 107; 2 Pars. Marit. Law 582; are considered, as to their rights to sue in the admiralty, as common seamen; and persons employed on board of steamboats and lighters engaged in trade or commerce on tide-water are within the admiralty jurisdiction; while those employed in ferry-boats are not; Smith v. The Pekin, Gilp. 203, Fed. Cas. No. 13,090. Persons who do not contribute their aid in navigating the vessel or to its preservation in the course of their occupation, as musicians, are not to be considered as seamen with a right to sue in the admiralty for their wages; Trainer v. The Superior, Gilp. 516, Fed. Cas. No. 14,136. Persons employed upon a flat boat with an engine erected thereon, mainly employed in constructing bulkheads and to assist in moving materials to and fro, are to be regarded as rendering maritime services, so as to give them a lien on the vessel for their wages; Lawrence v. Flatboat, 84 Fed. 200. One who brings a vessel to her home port, and lays her up there i. e. anchors her out of the channel, pumps her out, dries her sails, sees to her fastenings, and renders other services usually performed by mariners, is entitled to a lien for his compensation; The Hattie Thomas, 59 Fed. 297. See LIEN.

Seamen in the merchant-vessels are required to enter into a contract in writing, commonly called shipping articles, which see. This contract being entered into, they are bound, under severe penalties, to render themselves on board the vessel according to the agreement; they are not at liberty to leave the ship without the consent of the captain or commanding officer; and for such absence, when less than forty-eight hours, they forfeit three days' wages for every day of absence; and when the absence is more than forty-eight hours at one time, they forfeit all the wages due to them, and all their goods and chattels which were on board the vessel, or in any store where they may have been lodged at the time of their desertion, to the use of the owners of the vessel; and they are liable for damages for hiring other hands. They may be imprisoned for desertion until the ship is ready to sail.

A consular officer of the United States may discharge a seaman on the application of the master, for any cause sanctioned by the usages and principles of maritime law, as recognized in the United States, on the payment of the wages then earned; and all claims for wages for the remainder of the voyage is thereby cut off and barred; The T. F. Oakes, 36 Fed. 442.

On board, a seaman is bound to do his duty to the utmost of his ability; and when his services are required for extraordinary exertions, either in consequence of the death of other seamen or on account of unforeseen perils, he is not entitled to an increase in wages, although it may have been promised to him; 2 Camp. 317; The Potomac, 72 Fed. 535, 19 C. C. A. 151, 38 U. S. App. 219. For disobedience he could formerly be imprisoned or punished with stripes; but the correction must be reasonable; U. S. v. Freeman, 4 Mas. 508, Fed. Cas. No. 15,162; Hempstead v. Bird, 2 Day (Conn.) 294; U. S. v. Wickham, 1 Wash. C. C. 316, Fed. Cas. No. 16,659; but see CORRECTION; ASSAULT; BATTERY; and, for just cause, may be put ashore in a foreign country; Relf v. The Maria, 1 Pet. Adm. 186, Fed. Cas. No. 11,692; 2 East 145. By act of congress, Sept. 28, 1850, it is provided that flogging in the navy and on board of vessels of commerce be abolished. And this prohibits corporal punishment by stripes inflicted with a cat, and any punishment which in substance amounts thereto; U. S. v. Cutler, 1 Curt. C. C. 501, Fed. Cas. No. 14,910. See The General Rucker, 35 Fed. 152. A master may punish a seaman who refuses to do his duty, and may, if he is incorrigible, discharge him, confine him, or deprive him of privileges; but forfeiture of wages cannot be superadded to corporal punishment, and it is not within the ordinary powers of a master to imprison a sailor on shore; The Stacey Clarke, 54 Fed. 533.

Seamen are entitled to their wages, of which one-third is due at every port at which the vessel shall unlade and deliver her cargo before the voyage be ended; and at the end of the voyage an easy and speedy remedy is given them to recover all unpaid wages. When taken sick, a seaman is entitled to medical advice and aid at the expense of the ship, such expense being considered in the nature of additional wages and as constituting a just remuneration for his labor and services; Harden v. Gordon, 2 Mas. 541, Fed. Cas. No. 6,047; Raymond v. The Ella S. Thayer, 40 Fed. 904. In case of sickness preventing a performance of duty, if the malady be not occasioned by the mariner's misconduct, the full wages are payable; and if a sailor dies on the voyage, his heirs shall have his full wages; Highland v. The Harriet C. Kerlin, 41 Fed. 224.

The right of seamen to wages is founded not in the shipping articles, but in the services performed; Maloon v. The Gloucester, Bee 395, Fed. Cas. No. 8,970; and to recover such wages the seaman has a triple remedy,—against the vessel, the owner, and the master; Bronde v. Haven, Gilp. 592, Fed. Cas. No. 1,924; Carey v. The Kitty, Bee 254, Fed. Cas. No. 2,401. But he cannot claim wages to the end of the voyage when he has obtained his discharge at his own solicitation and against the advice and even against the expostulation of the master; Raymond v. The Ella S. Thayer, 40 Fed. 903. The legislation of most maritime countries, ancient and modern, established that the contract of a seaman always involved, to a certain extent, the surrender of his personal liberty during the life of the contract, and the necessities, and perhaps the safety, of navigation have called into existence legislation, by nearly all maritime nations, for the purpose of securing the personal attendance of the crew on board and for their criminal punishment for their desertion or absence without leave; and it is, therefore, a natural and equitable result that the expenses of their confinement and the wages of their substitutes whilst they are refusing to work should be deducted from their wages; The W. F. Babcock, 85 Fed. 978, 29 C. C. A. 514. In cases of desertion of seamen, the proper expenses for their arrest and detention, and the cost of supplying substitutes whilst so detained, and also the cost of any damage to property by them, may be deducted from their wages; id.

When destitute in foreign ports, American consuls and commercial agents are required to provide for them and for their passage to some port of the United States, in a reasonable manner, at the expense of the United States; and American vessels are bound to take such seamen on board at the request of the consul. See R. S. §§ 4577–4579, as amended 1884 and 1886; SEAMEN'S FUND.

The arrest and return to their ships of deserting foreign seamen is required by the treaty with Russia and other treaties; whether, in the absence of a treaty, the courts have such power, is not decided; Tucker v. Alexandroff, 183 U. S. 424, 22 Sup. Ct. 195, 46 L. Ed. 264. That they have not, see Moore, Extrad. § 408; 6 Op. A. G. 209.

A seaman is one of the crew of a merchant vessel from the time he signs the shipping articles; of a man of war, as soon as he is detailed to her service; Tucker v. Alexandroff, 183 U. S. 424, 22 Sup. Ct. 195, 46 L. Ed. 264.

An alien enlisting as one of the crew of an American ship becomes a temporary subject of the United States so as to bring him within the jurisdiction of a United States consular tribunal in respect of an offence committed by him on board ship; In re Ross, 140 U. S. 453, 11 Sup. Ct. 897, 35 L. Ed. 531. So a German serving as a seaman on a Swedish ship becomes, for all purposes in relation to that ship, a Swedish subject; Hawaii v. Mankichi, 190 U. S. 216, 23 Sup. Ct. 787, 47 L. Ed. 1016.

If a seaman is seriously injured and requires medical attendance within a reasonable distance of a port it is the master's duty to go there but not in every instance; The Iroquois, 194 U. S. 240, 24 Sup. Ct. 640; 48 L. Ed. 955.

Where a seaman on a whaling voyage performed extra labor in connection with a trading venture carried on without his previous knowledge, he is entitled to the same share in the profits as his lay in the catch; Lopes v. Luce, 84 Fed. 465.

If the return of a whaling ship is unduly delayed, a seaman is allowed for his time and expenses in return, over and above his lay; The William Martin, 1 Spr. 564, Fed. Cas. No. 17,698.

Seamen on a whaler have no property in the oil; they may take their lay in kind, or get it in the cash value of the oil at the port of delivery; Bourne v. Smith, 1 Lowell, 547, Fed. Cas. No. 1,701. Seamen on a mackerel fishing vessel are not part owners of the catch; Lewis v. Chadbourne, 54 Me. 484, 92 Am. Dec. 558.

Seamen in the public service are governed by particular laws. See NAVY; LIEN; MARINER; DESEPTION OF A SEAMAN; SHIP; PARTIES; LAY.

SEARCH. An examination of a man's house, premises, or person, for the purpose of discovering proof of his guilt in relation to some crime or misdemeanor of which he is accused. See SEARCH WARRANT.

By act of March 2, 1799, s. 68, it is enacted that every collector, naval officer, and surveyor, or other person specially appointed by either of them for that purpose, shall, if they have reason to suspect the concealment of merchandise, in any place, have full power and authority to enter any ship or vessel or any dwelling house in the daytime, upon a warrant obtained on application from any justice of the peace, etc., or any federal district judge or commissioner, to search for goods forfeited for non-payment of duties; R. S. § 3066, as amended April 25, 1882.

In England a prisoner arrested for an indictable offence may be searched for the purpose of finding upon him any property which will afford material evidence for the prosecution or any weapon or instrument which might be used for the purpose of escape or of inflicting injury on himself or others. There does not appear to be any authority permitting the search of prisoners for other purposes than the above, and there have been cases in which the court has directed property taken from an unconvicted person and not necessary to be used for the purpose of evidence, to be returned to him. It is said that money not connected with the offence charged should not be taken from a prisoner. Women should be employed to search female prisoners. The person's lodgings and effects may also be searched. In England special statutory provisions as to searching are made in the case of numerous specified crimes; see Haycraft, Ex. Pow. in Rel. to Crime.

Where one was fined for drunkenness and the mayor, as a committing magistrate, found certain money on his person and applied it, against his protest, to the payment of the fine, and the prisoner insisted upon his right to accept imprisonment in place of a fine, it was held that the mayor was justified; McCann v. Barr, 19 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 669.

Officers making arrests may seize articles on a prisoner and retain them for the purposes of evidence against him, though they belong to other parties; 36 Wash. L. Rep. 421. See PRISONER.

An English act (1897) provides that police magistrates may order the return of such articles, or, if not claimed, may make such order as to their disposal as they deem proper.

See SEARCH WARRANT; SEARCH, RIGHT OF.

In Practice. An examination made in the proper lien office for mortgages, liens, judgments, or other incumbrances against real estate. The certificate given by the officer as to the result of such examination is also called a search. See RECORD; JUDGMENT; LIEN.

SEARCH, RIGHT OF. In International Law. In time of peace. The right of a public vessel to visit and search private vessels for the purpose of investigating their character. Within the territorial waters of a state it may be exercised by the public vessels of said state for the enforcement of revenue and other domestic laws. As it is a police measure it cannot, apart from treaty stipulations, be exercised upon the high seas, except after pursuit of an offending vessel which has escaped from the territorial waters of the state, and by public vessels generally where there is a well grounded suspicion of piracy (q. v.).

The right of visit and search was long a subject of controversy between the United States and Great Britain in connection with the suppression of the slave trade. Great Britain claimed that there was a distinction between the right of visit (q. v.) and the right of search, and that while the latter was strictly a belligerent right, the former might be exercised in time of peace for the purpose of ascertaining the nationality of suspected vessels. The United States held that the right of visit on the high seas was necessarily associated with the right of search and had no meaning apart from it, and that neither could be exercised in time of peace except under treaty. Finally, by the treaty of 1862, the two countries agreed to permit a reciprocal right of search within a specified zone. A similar agreement had previously been entered into, in 1841, between five of the great powers, and the right is now embodied in article 22 of the general act concluded between the great powers in 1890.

In time of war. The right of a belligerent to visit and search neutral merchant vessels. It is exercised, first, as an incident to the belligerent right to capture, upon the high seas, private property of enemy subjects. In the case of The Maria, 1 C. Rob. 340, Lord Stowell held that the "right is so clear in principle, that no man can deny it who admits the legality of maritime capture, because if you are not at liberty to ascertain, by such inquiry, whether there is property that can legally be captured, it is impossible to capture." Secondly, it is exercised as an incident to the recognized belligerent right to prevent the carriage of contraband (q. v.) by neutral vessels to the enemy, and to punish breaches of blockade. The Declaration of London, of 1909, embodies (article 63) the established rule that "forcible resistance to the legitimate exercise of the right of stoppage, search, and capture, involves in all cases the condemnation of the vessel;" but mere flight does not constitute resistance. In making the search the ship's papers are first examined, and if anything suspicious appear in them, the ship and cargo may be examined. If the ship's papers are missing or are fraudulent the ship may be captured.

Neutral vessels sailing under convoy (q. v.) of enemy war-ships have almost universally been held subject to capture as resisting search, though the principle was contested by the United States in 1810; 2 Opp. 542. The question whether sailing under the convoy of neutral war-ships confers exemption from search, has been one of long standing controversy. The British courts held that neutral convoy was equivalent to resistance to search; 1 C. Rob. 340; and this doctrine was followed by Kent, Story, and Wheaton in the United States, in spite of the fact that between 1782 and 1800 the United States had concluded treaties with several continental powers stipulating exemption from search under neutral convoy. Continental jurists held the contrary doctrine, which was recognized by the United States in the Navy Regulations of 1876 and in the Naval War Code of 1900 (article 30), and it is now embodied in the provision of the Declaration of London (article 61) that "neutral vessels under convoy of war-ships of their own nationality are exempt from search," but this is made conditional upon evidence in writing from the commander of the war-ship as to the character of the vessels and their cargoes; 2 Opp. 533-545; Bonfils, §§ 586-593, 1589-1605.

Great Britain formerly claimed, as an incident to the belligerent right of visit and search, the right to effect the impressment (q. v.) into her navy of British seamen found on board the vessels of other nations on the high seas. On the other hand, the United States contended that the fact that the vessels were American should be evidence that the seamen on board were such. The controversy, which was one of the causes of the War of 1812, was definitely settled, on the part of the United States, in 1842, when Webster declared that the American government was ready to protect the crew of every "regulated documented American merchant vessel;" 2 Moore, §§ 317-320.

See APPROACH.

SEARCH WARRANT. A warrant requiring the officer to whom it is addressed to search a house, or other place, therein specified, for property therein alleged to have been stolen, and, if the same shall be found upon such search, to bring the goods so found, together with the body of the person occupying the same, who is named, before the justice or other officer granting the warrant, or some other justice of the peace, or other lawfully authorized officer.

It should be given under the hand and seal of the justice, and dated.

The United States laws provide for the search in the daytime only, by any custom-house officer under a search warrant; R. S. § 3066. Ownership in some specific person must be alleged in the information; State v. Intoxicating Liquors, 64 Ia. 300, 20 N. W. 445.

See SEARCH.

The constitution of the United States, Amendm. art. 4, declares that "the right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated; and no warrants shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the person or thing to be seized." See Sailly v. Smith, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 500; Ex parte Burford, 3 Cra. (U. S.) 448, 2 L. Ed. 495; Boyd v. U. S., 116 U. S. 616, 6 Sup. Ct. 524, 29 L. Ed. 746. This does not apply to the states; Nat. Safe Dep. Co. v. Stead, 232 U. S. 58, 34 Sup. Ct. 209, 58 L. Ed. —.

Originally search warrants were used almost exclusively for the discovery of stolen property, but of late years their use has been extended to searches for intoxicating liquors; State v. Whiskey, 54 N. H. 164; Com. v. Intoxicating Liquors, 150 Mass. 164, 22 N. E. 628; gaming implements; Com. v. Gaming Implements, 119 id. 332; and the like. The constitutional provision does not prevent the issue of search warrants for the seizure of gambling paraphernalia and other illegal matter; Adams v. New York, 192 U. S. 585, 24 Sup. Ct. 372, 48 L. Ed. 575; or the seizure of articles and papers by internal revenue officers under a search warrant while making a raid on defendant's place of business for an alleged violation of the oleomargarine act; May v. U. S., 199 Fed. 53, 117 C. C. A. 431; nor under Chinese exclusion proceedings; Chin Wah v. Colwell, 187 Fed. 592, 109 C. C. A. 422; nor the seizure of infringing copies of copyrighted articles or the use thereof as evidence; American Tobacco Co. v. Werckmeister, 207 U. S. 284, 28 Sup. Ct. 72, 52 L. Ed. 208, 12 Ann. Cas. 595.

Hale, 2 Pl. Cr. 149, recommends great caution in granting such warrants:—first, that they be not granted without oath made before a justice of a felony committed, and that the complainant has probable cause to suspect that the goods are in such a house or place, and his reason for such suspicion; see 2 Wils. 283; 1 Dowl. & R. 97; State v. Mann, 27 N. C. 45; Humes v. Taber, 1 R. I. 464; second, that such warrants express that the search shall be made in the daytime (but in this country this limitation is not observed); State v. Brennan's Liquors, 25 Conn. 278; Com. v. Hinds, 145 Mass. 182, 13 N. E. 397; third, that they ought to be directed to a constable or other proper officer, and not to a private person; fourth, that they ought to command the officer to bring the stolen goods, and the person in whose custody they are, before some justice of the peace. See 6 B. & C. 332; Stone v. Dana, 5 Metc. (Mass.) 98. They should designate the place to be searched; 1 M. & W. 255; Com. v. Dana, 2 Metc. (Mass.) 329; Bell v. Clapp, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 263, 6 Am. Dec. 339.

The description "suspected place" is not sufficient; People v. Holcomb, 3 Parker, Cr. R. (N. Y.) 656. It has been said that "the description of the place to be searched should be as certain in a warrant as would be necessary in a deed to convey such place;" Jones v. Fletcher, 41 Me. 254. Trespass will not lie against a party who has procured a search warrant to search for stolen goods, if the warrant be duly issued and regularly executed; Beaty v. Perkins, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 382, but if the warrant itself shows that the magistrate had no jurisdiction, the officer who serves it will be a trespasser; 19 How. St. Tr. 1029; State v. Mann, 27 N. C. 45. And see Hayden v. Shed, 11 Mass. 500.

Search warrants are available only in public prosecutions and not to enforce private rights; Robinson v. Richardson, 13 Gray (Mass.) 454, where it was said: "Even in those cases, if we may rely on the authority of Lord Coke, their legality was formerly doubted; and Lord Camden said that they crept into the law by imperceptible practice. But their legality has long been considered to be established, on the ground of public necessity; because, without them, felons and other malefactors would escape detection." At common law they were confined to places, but it is held that a search warrant may be authorized by law for the person; Collins v. Lean, 68 Cal. 284, 9 Pac. 173.

The constitution does not prevent the federal government from requiring ordinary and reasonable tax returns such as are required by the corporation tax law; Flint v. Stone Tracy Co., 220 U. S. 107, 31 Sup. Ct. 342, 55 L. Ed. 389, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1312; nor the issuing of process to require the attendance and testimony of witnesses, the production of books and papers etc.; Interstate Com. Com. v. Brimson, 154 U. S. 447, 155 U. S. 3, 14 Sup. Ct. 1125, 15 Sup. Ct. 19, 38 L. Ed. 1047, 39 L. Ed. 49; Interstate Com. Com. v. Baird, 194 U. S. 25, 24 Sup. Ct. 563, 48 L. Ed. 860; Hale v. Henkel, 201 U. S. 43, 73, 26 Sup. Ct. 370, 50 L. Ed. 652; but a general subpœna duces tecum, which is too sweeping in its terms, may constitute an unreasonable search and seizure, and is equally indefensible as a search warrant would be, if couched in similar terms; Hale v. Henkel, 201 U. S. 76, 26 Sup. Ct. 370, 50 L. Ed. 652, citing Ex parte Brown, 72 Mo. 83, 37 Am. Rep. 426; 4 Ves. 66; L. R. 2 Eq. 59. A statute requiring corporations to produce their books and papers for investigation, even though they may have been kept outside the state, does not amount to an unreasonable search and seizure; Hammond Packing Co. v. Arkansas, 212 U. S. 322, 29 Sup. Ct. 370, 53 L. Ed. 530, 15 Ann. Cas. 645. The compulsory production of documentary evidence before the interstate commerce commission under the act does not infringe against unreasonable searches and seizures guaranteed by the fifth amendment, since that act, as amended (1893), expressly extends immunity from prosecution or forfeiture of estate because of testimony given in pursuance of the requirements of the law; Interst. Com. Com. v. Baird, 194 U. S. 25, 24 Sup. Ct. 563, 48 L. Ed. 860.

The seizure of documents and all books and papers of a defendant's firm, covering their business of importers of silks, laces, etc., was held improper; U. S. v. Mills, 185 Fed. 318. An act which provided for the issue of a search warrant upon the affidavit of a manufacturer of beverages that he has reason to believe, and does believe, that a person, in violation of the act, is using any of complainant's bottles, casks, etc., is unconstitutional; Lippman v. People, 175 Ill. 101, 51 N. E. 872; and where one searching for liq-door under a search warrant, removed the lath and plastering for a space two to four feet around all the rooms on the lower floor and left it for the owner to repair, it was an invasion of his rights; Buckley v. Beauhieu, 104 Me. 56, 71 Atl. 70, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 819; and so was taking away an iron safe and breaking it open, the owner refusing to open it till he had consulted his counsel; Blackmar v. Nickerson, 188 Mass. 399, 74 N. E. 932; but breaking open the cellar of a dwelling house after refusal of admission was held not illegal; Bell v. Clapp, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 263, 6 Am. Dec. 339; and so was breaking and entering a railway depot without first asking permission, there being no one to admit the officer; Androscoggin R. Co. v. Richards, 41 Me. 233.

When an engineer was indicted for causing the death of persons killed by a boiler explosion, entry on his employer's premises and taking of the boiler and engine into custody of the police was held to be an unconstitutional search and seizure; Newberry v. Carpenter, 107 Mich. 567, 65 N. W. 530, 31 L. R. A. 163, 61 Am. St. Rep. 346.

It does not require actual entry upon premises and search for and seizure of papers. A compulsory production of a party's private books and papers to be used against him or his property in a criminal or penal proceeding, or for a forfeiture, is within the spirit and meaning of the amendment and it is equivalent to a compulsory production of papers, to make the non-production of them a confession of the allegations which it is pretended they will prove; Boyd v. U. S., 116 U. S. 616, 6 Sup. Ct. 524, 29 L. Ed. 746; Hale v. Henkel, 201 U. S. 43, 71, 26 Sup. Ct. 370, 50 L. Ed. 652.

If officers armed with a search warrant, upon presenting it at the home of one accused of crime, are invited by his mother to enter and search the premises, so that they do not act under the warrant, evidence obtained during the search is admissible against the accused, though the act may have been a trespass against him; Com. v. Tucker, 189 Mass. 457, 76 N. E. 127, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1056.

See Cooley, Const. Lim. (6th Ed.) 364; 1 Archb. Cr. Pr. & Pl. 126, note; 1 Bish. New Cr. Proc. ch. 16; GENERAL WARRANT; SUBPENA; INCRIMINATION.

SEAT OF JUSTICE. The county seat; the place where the courthouse, jail, and county offices are located; the place where the chancery, circuit, and county courts are held, and where the county records are kept. Ellis v. State, 92 Tenn. 85, 20 S. W. 502.

SEATED LANDS. In the early land legislation of some of the United States, seated is used, in connection with improved, to denote lands of which actual possession was taken. Hawkins v. Barney, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 468, 8 L. Ed. 190.

Lands which are actually resided upon, cultivated, or occupied. Residence without cultivation or cultivation without residence, or both together, constitute seated lands. Kennedy v. Daily, 6 Watts (Pa.) 269; George v. Messinger, 73 Pa. 418. See UNSEATED LANDS.

SEAWORTHINESS. The sufficiency of the vessel in materials, construction, equipment, officers, men, and outfit, for the trade or service in which it is employed.

It is that quality which fits a ship for carrying safely the particular cargo which it takes on board for the voyage for which it is destined. The Thames, 61 Fed. 1014, 10 C. C. A. 232, 8 U. S. App. 580.

Under a marine policy on ship, freight, or cargo, the fitness for the service of the vessel, if there is no provision to the contrary at the outset, is an implied condition, non-compliance with which defeats the insurance; 2 B. & Ald. 73; American Ins. Co. v. Ogden, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 287; Myers v. Ins. Co., 26 Pa. 192; 4 H. L. C. 253; Augusta Ins. & B. Co. v. Abbott, 12 Md. 348.

It is of no consequence whether the insured was aware of the condition of the ship, or not. His innocence or ignorance is no answer to the fact that the ship was not seaworthy. When the want of seaworthiness arises from justifiable ignorance of the cause of the defect, and is discovered and remedied before any injury occurs, it is not to be considered as a defect; Patrick v. Hallett, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 241; McLanahan v. Ins. Co., 1 Pet. (U. S.) 183, 7 L. Ed. 98; 2 B. & Ald. 73. See Richelieu Nav. Co. v. Ins. Co., 136 U. S. 408, 10 Sup. Ct. 934, 34 L. Ed. 398.

The warranty of seaworthiness is absolute and extends to latent defects; 10 P. D. 103. Seaworthiness varies with the place of voyage, the class of ship, and the nature of the cargo; 2 F. & F. 263. She must be seaworthy in relation to the kind of cargo which she is to carry; The Silvia, 171 U. S. 462, 19 Sup. Ct. 7, 42 L. Ed. 241; L. R. 7 C. P. 421; if the voyage is to be by stages requiring different equipment, she must be ready for each stage at its commencement; [1899] P. 140 (C. A.).

A vessel offering to carry frozen meat impliedly warrants that the refrigerating machinery was at the time of shipment fit to carry such cargo in safety; [1895] L. R. 2 Q. B. 550, where there was loss to a shipment caused by the negligence of the crew in the management of the refrigerating apparatus it was a fault "in the management of" the "vessel;" [1903] 1 K. B. 114; and that the seaworthiness of the vessel engaged in the dressed meat trade relates and extends to the refrigerating apparatus necessary for the preservation of the meat during transportation, is held in The Southwark, 191 U. S. 1, 24 Sup. Ct. 1, 48 L. Ed. 65.

To be seaworthy a vessel must be sufficiently tight, staunch and strong to resist the ordinary attacks of winds and seas; Sanford

& Brooks Co. v. Columbia Dredging Co., 177 Fed. 878, 101 C. C. A. 92.

It includes a master having competent skill in navigation; 3 C. & P. 18; and a sufficient and competent crew; 7 B. & C. 798; and proper equipment, including proper medicines and necessities for the voyage; 3 Esp. 257.

A vessel is not seaworthy if the cargo is so badly stowed that it is difficult and dangerous to navigate the ship; 2 F. & F. 663; Harloff v. Barber & Co., 150 Fed. 185; or if she is not properly disinfected for the carriage of cattle; 12 Q. B. Div. 297; or has a defective crank-shaft; 10 P. D. 103; as to unseaworthiness by reason of not employing a pilot, it is said that if a vessel sails from a port where there is a pilot and the navigation requires one, the master must employ one; 3 B. & Ad. 383; but in entering a port, if the master uses due diligence to obtain a pilot but cannot find one, and, being competent himself, attempts to enter a harbor without one, it is not a breach of the warranty of seaworthiness; 3 B. & Ad. 383.

The warranty of seaworthiness in a time policy is complied with if the vessel be seaworthy at the commencement of the risk; Union Ins. Co. v. Smith, 124 U. S. 405, 8 Sup. Ct. 534, 31 L. Ed. 497. Where a vessel sprung a leak, and was lost without encountering any sea peril, it was held that she was not seaworthy, heavy seas not being a sea peril within the meaning of a policy of marine insurance; The Gulnare, 42 Fed. 861.

The opinion of carpenters who have repaired the vessel, however they may strengthen the presumption that the ship is seaworthy, when it is favorable, is not conclusive of the fact of seaworthiness; 4 Dowl. 269. The presumption prima facie is for seaworthiness; 1 Dowl. 336. See Earnmoor v. Ins. Co., 40 Fed. 847. And it is presumed that a vessel continues seaworthy if she was so at the inception of the risk; Martin v. Ins. Co., 20 Pick. (Mass.) 389, 32 Am. Dec. 220. Where nothing is said on the subject, seaworthiness is an implied condition of a hiring of shipping; Lyon v. Tiffany, 76 Mich. 158, 42 N. W. 1098. Any sort of disrepair left in the ship, by which she or the cargo may suffer, is a breach of the warranty of seaworthiness. A deficiency of force in the crew, or of skill in the master, mate, etc., is a want of seaworthiness; 1 Camp. 1; Draper v. Ins. Co., 4 Duer (N.Y.) 234; Holland v. Seven Hundred & Twenty-Five Tons of Coal, 36 Fed. 784. But if there was once a sufficient crew, their temporary absence will not be considered a breach of warranty; 2 B. & Ald. 73; Silva v. Low, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 184; McLanahan v. Ins. Co., 1 Pet. (U. S.) 183, 7 L. Ed. 98. A charge of unseaworthiness by reason of the pilot's intoxication is not sustained when there is no evidence that he was not perfectly capable when the vessel left port, or, if he was not, that the master knew the fact, and where the pilot, when sober, was one of the best; Earnmoor S. S. Co. v. Ins. Co., 44 Fed. 374. A vessel may be rendered not seaworthy by being overloaded; 2 B. & Ald. 320; or by having a defective compass; Richelieu Nav. Co. v. Ins. Co., 136 U. S. 408, 10 Sup. Ct. 934, 34 L. Ed. 398. The burden of the proof of seaworthiness is on the one who alleges it; 3 Q. B. Div. 594; but in The Southwark, 191 U. S. 1, 24 Sup. Ct. 1, 48 L. Ed. 65, it is held that the burden is on the owner to prove seaworthiness (citing the definition here given). The fact that a ship after being eleven hours at sea in fair weather began to leak so that she was obliged to run for a harbor of refuge, is sufficient to throw the burden of proof on the carrier even if it is not sufficient proof of unseaworthiness; The Queen of The Pacific, 75 Fed. 74.

A presumption of unseaworthiness is not rebutted by evidence of previous diligence nor by the proof of subsequent storms or perils of the sea, and where the bill of lading contains no exception as to seaworthiness the owners are not entitled to the benefit of the Harter Act; Carolina Portland Cement Co. v. Anderson, 186 Fed. 145, 108 C. C. A. 257.

An underwriter who knows the age and defective condition of a vessel, and charges nearly a double premium, cannot set up unseaworthiness as a defence; Farmers' Feed Co. of N. Y. v. Ins. Co., 162 Fed. 379.

It can never be settled by positive rules of law how far this obligation of seaworthiness extends in any particular case, for the reason that improvements and changes in the means and modes of navigation frequently require new implements, or new forms of old ones; and these, though not necessary at first, become so when there is an established usage that all ships of a certain quality, or those to be sent on certain voyages or used for certain purposes, shall have them; 2 Pars. Marit. Law 134. Seaworthiness is, therefore, in general, a question of fact; The Northern Belle, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 526, 19 L. Ed. 746; Palmer v. Ins. Co., 116 N. Y. 599, 23 N. E. 5.

The carrier of passengers by sea does not assume the same responsibility as to seaworthiness as the carrier of freight. He is held to a very high degree of care, prudence and foresight, but there is no implied warranty of seaworthiness at the beginning of the voyage; The Oregon, 133 Fed. 609, 68 C. C. A. 603; so in England; Machlachlan, Merchant Shipping 354.

See HARTER ACT; SHIP.

SEAWORTHY FOR THE VOYAGE. The words in the Merchant Shipping Act, 1876, mean that the ship must be "in a fit state, as to repairs, equipment, and crew, and in all other respects, to encounter ordinary perils of the voyage." They do not include "a neglect properly to use the appliances on board a vessel well equipped and furnished." [1894] App. Cas. 222.

SEBASTOMANIA. In Medical Jurisprudence. Religious insanity or monomania.

SECESSION. The act of withdrawing; separation.

The attempted secession of eleven of the states from the Union led to the War of Secession in 1861-65, and gave rise to many important decisions affecting the mutual relations of the national and state governments, and the rights of citizens under contracts made before and during the war.

As to the Right of Secession.

"The Union of the States never was a purely artificial and arbitrary relation. It began among the colonies, and grew out of common origin, mutual sympathies, kindred principles, similar interests, and geographical relations. It was confirmed and strengthened by the necessities of war, and received definite form, and character, and sanction from the Articles of Confederation. By these the Union was solemnly declared to 'be perpetual.' And when these Articles were found to be inadequate to the exigencies of the country, the Constitution was ordained 'to form a more perfect Union.' It is difficult to convey the idea of indissoluble unity more clearly than by these words. What can be indissoluble if a perpetual Union, made more perfect, is not?"

"But the perpetuity and indissolubility of the Union by no means implies the loss of distinct and individual existence, or of the right of self-government by the States. Under the Articles of Confederation each State retained its sovereignty, freedom, and independence, and every power, jurisdiction, and right not expressly delegated to the United States. Under the Constitution, though the powers of the States were much restricted, still, all powers not delegated to the United States, nor prohibited to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people. Not only, therefore, can there be no loss of separate and independent autonomy to the States, through their union under the Constitution, but it may be not unreasonably said that the preservation of the States, and the maintenance of their governments, are as much within the design and care of the Constitution as the preservation of the Union and the maintenance of the National government. The Constitution, in all its provisions, looks to an indestructible Union, composed of indestructible States.

"When, therefore, Texas became one of the United States, she entered into an indissoluble relation. All the obligations of perpetual union, and all the guaranties of republican government in the Union, attached at once to the State. The act which consummated her admission into the Union was something more than a compact; it was the incorporation of a new member into the political body. And it was final. The union between Texas and the other States was as complete, as perpetual, and as indissoluble as the union between the original States. There was no place for reconsideration, or revocation, except through revolution, or through consent of the States." Texas v. White, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 700, 724, 19 L. Ed. 227.

As to the Validity of Contracts. Where one engaged actively in the service of the Confederate government purchased cotton which was afterwards seized by the military forces of the United States, sold, and the proceeds paid into the treasury, held, that his purchase of the cotton was illegal and void and gave him no title thereto; Desmare v. U. S., 93 U. S. 605, 23 L. Ed. 959; Mitchell v. U. S., 21 Wall. (U. S.) 350, 22 L. Ed. 584. The Confederate government had no corporate power to take, hold, or convey a valid title to property, real and personal, and a purchaser of cotton from said government during the rebellion acquired no title thereto; Sprott v. U. S., 8 Ct. Cl. 499.

Confederate Bonds. The bonds issued by the seceding states do not constitute a valid consideration for a promissory note; Hanauer v. Woodruff, 15

Wall. (U. S.) 439, 21 L. Ed. 224; and so of the securities known as Confederate treasury notes; Bailey v. Milner, 1 Abb. U. S. Rep. 261, Fed. Cas. No. 740; but a promise to pay in "Confederate notes" in consideration of the receipt of such notes and of drafts payable by them, is neither a nudum pactum nor an illegal contract; Planters' Bank v. Bank, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 483, 21 L. Ed. 473.

Validity of Statutes. When the military forces of the Confederate government were overthrown, it perished, and with it all its enactments. But the legislative acts of the several states forming the confederacy stand on different grounds, and so far as they did not impair or tend to impair the supremacy of the national authority or the just rights of citizens under the constitution, they are in general to be treated as valid and binding; Williams v. Bruffy, 96 U. S. 177, 24 L. Ed. 716; Ford v. Surget, 97 U. S. 594, 24 L. Ed. 1018; Keppel v. R. Co., 1 Chase's Dec. 167, Fed. Cas. No. 7,722; Texas v. White, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 733, 19 L. Ed. 227; U. S. v. Ins. Co., 22 Wall. (U. S.) 99, 22 L. Ed. 816.

Payments made under the Confederate sequestration acts were void and gave no title. See Dewing v. Perdicaries, 96 U. S. 193, 24 L. Ed. 654.

Decisions of the Confederate Courts. Judgments of such courts merely settling the rights of private parties actually within their jurisdiction, not tending to defeat the just rights of citizens of the United States, nor in furtherance of laws passed in aid of the rebellion, are valid; Cook v. Oliver, 1 Woods 437, Fed. Cas. No. 3,164; Coleman v. Tennessee, 97 U. S. 509, 24 L. Ed. 1118; and a judgment of a court of Georgia in November, 1861, for the purchase-money of slaves, was held a valid judgment when entered, and enforceable in 1871; French v. Tumlin, 10 Am. Law Reg. (N. S.) 641, Fed. Cas. No. 5104 (with note by James T. Mitchell, late Chief Justice of Pennsylvania). But during the war, the courts of states in rebellion had no jurisdiction of parties residing in states which adhered to the national government; Livingston v. Jordan, 10 Am. L. Reg. (N. S.) 53, Fed. Cas. No. 8,415, by Chase, C. J. See further Gunn v. Barry, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 610, 21 L. Ed. 212; 12 Op. Att. Gen. 141, 182; 13 id. 149; Macon & A. R. Co. v. Little, 45 Ga. 370; Griffin v. Cunningham, 20 Gratt. (Va.) 31; White v. Hart, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 646, 20 L. Ed. 685; Hurd's Theory of Nat. Govt.; RECONSTRUCTION; CONFEDERATE STATES; CONFEDERATE MONEY; WAR.

William Rawle, in his "View of the Constitution" (Philadelphia, 1825, 2d Ed. 1829), in treating the guarantee of the constitution to every state in the Union of a republican form of government, expressed the opinion that a state had the right to withdraw from the Union. He said (2d Ed.):

"If a faction should attempt to subvert the government of a state for the purpose of destroying its republican form, the paternal power of the Union could thus be called forth to subdue it. Yet it is not to be understood that its interposition would be justifiable, if the people of a state should determine to retire from the Union, whether they adopted another or retained the same form of government." (Page 296.)

"The states, then, may wholly withdraw from the Union, but while they continue, they must retain the character of representative republics." (Page 297.)

"The secession of a state from the Union depends on the will of the people of such state." (Page 302.)

The editor of this Revision of Bouvier found among the papers of William Rawle, some years ago, his "Notes on the Constitution" evidently intended to be used in the preparation of a third edition. Apparently they were prepared during the Nullification excitement; President Jackson's Nullification Proclamation was issued December 10, 1832. He died in 1836 without completing the third edition. He says in these notes:

"The distressing agitation of the public mind now prevailing in two of the Southern States has induced the author carefully to review this chapter with much anxiety to discover whether his opinions on this important subject are correct and with a full determination candidly to avow any error which he should find in them. The exact question is whether the people of one state may withdraw that state from the Union without the consent of the other states, or the rest of the people of the Union." And he concludes: "Very gratifying would it have been to the author of this work had his reconsideration of this most interesting question terminated in a different conviction, but he cannot retract in this edition what he continues to think nor expunge what has already been laid before the public."

Among the same papers was a letter from Mr. Justice Story, written to Mr. Rawle soon after the publication of his first edition, in which he expressed his dissent from Mr. Rawle's view of the right of secession, and accepted an invitation to visit him in Philadelphia on his way from Washington to Boston, after the adjournment of the Supreme Court, to discuss the subject. Unfortunately this letter has been mislaid.

Charles Francis Adams, in a letter to the editor of May 18, 1914, from which the editor is authorized to quote, refers to the "crystallization of United States nationality." He says:

"As you, doubtless, know, I have made rather a specialty of this subject. The result has left my mind perfectly clear. Your grandfather's statement is correct both historically and legally. When approached with an open mind his position is unassailable.

"He wrote of a condition of affairs, and of a law, prevailing anterior to the year 1830. I do not think that his statement and conclusions admit of question. The process of crystallization,—or, to put it in other terms, the growth of the idea of nationality,—may be dated from that time. It is a most interesting historical development. Story initiated it in his Comments on the Constitution. Webster developed it in his debate with Hayne. The Nullification Question presented it as a concrete fact at issue to the community at large. The result was apparent in the growth of the generation which grew up, and took control of public affairs in 1860.

"Lawyers and judges, as a result of a profession living by contention, are always disposed to stand for a written law, everlasting, fixed and invariable. The historian, seeing things from a different point of view, recognizes growth and elasticity. These two elements of law had in my judgment curious exemplification in the case of the constitution; and in this connection the record contained in Rawle's Commentaries has in my judgment great historic value. But it needs to be developed historically; and people should be made to understand the process of crystallization which went on in this country from 1642, when the New England Confederacy was formed, and which reached its final climax at Appomattox, some 220 years later. The last pretence of the right of secession then was reluctantly abandoned, as something outgrown.

"I hope, therefore, you will not hesitate to revive what I consider by no means a 'dead question,' but, on the contrary, an historical fact of great constitutional moment."

It may be added that the question of whether this work on the Constitution was used as a text book and the right of secession was taught at the West Point Military Academy has received much discussion in the last few years. The evidence is not conclusive; the last and fullest treatment of the question is by James W. Latta, a member of the Philadelphia bar and a student of military affairs, in a paper read before the Loyal Legion, in 1909. He reaches the conclusion that Rawle on the Constitution (published in 1825) could not have been used as a text book at West Point for more than two years from the date of its publication, that it may have been so used during that period, and that constitutional law was a part of the course of only the graduating class.

The reader is referred to Charles F. Adams' "Studies Military and Diplomatic," and "Trans-Atlantic Historical Solidarity," for his further consideration of this subject.

SECK. A want of remedy by distress. Littleton, s. 218. See RENT. Want of present fruit or profit, as in the case of the reversion without rent or other service, except fealty. Co. Litt. 151 b, n. 5.

SECOND COUSINS. Those who are related, being descended from the same great-grandfather, or great-grandmother. L. R. 19 Ch. Div. 204. See LEGACY.

SECOND DELIVERANCE. The name of a writ given by statute of Westminster 2d, 13 Edw. I. c. 2, founded on the record of a former action of replevin. Co. 2d Inst. 341. It commands the sheriff, if the plaintiff make him secure of prosecuting his claim and returning the chattels which were adjudged to the defendant by reason of the plaintiff's default, to make deliverance. On being nonsuited, the plaintiff in replevin might, at common law, have brought another replevin, and so ad infinitum, to the intolerable vexation of the defendant. The statute of Westminster restrains the plaintiff when nonsuited from so doing, but allows him this writ, issuing out of the original record, in order to have the same distress delivered again to him, on his giving the like security as before; 3 Bla. Com. 150.

SECOND DISTRESS. See DISTRESS.

SECOND-HAND EVIDENCE. This term is sometimes applied to hearsay evidence, and should not be confounded with secondary evidence. See POW. EV.

SECOND SURCHARGE, WRIT OF. The name of a writ issued in England against a commoner who has a second time surcharged the common. 3 Bla. Com. 239.

SECONDARY. An officer who is second or next to the chief officer; as, secondaries to the prothonotaries of the courts of king's bench or common pleas; secondary of the remembrancer in the exchequer, etc. Jacob, L. Dict.

SECONDARY BOYCOTT. See BOYCOTT.

SECONDARY CONVEYANCES, or derivative conveyances, are those which presuppose some other conveyance precedent, and only serve to enlarge, confirm, alter, restrain, restore, or transfer the interest granted by such original conveyance. 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 234.*

SECONDARY EVIDENCE. See EVIDENCE.

SECONDARY LIABILITY. A liability which does not attach until or except upon the fulfillment of certain conditions; as that of a surety, or that of an accommodation indorser. See SURETYSHIP; INDORSEMENT.

SECONDARY USE. A use limited to take effect in derogation of a preceding estate, otherwise called a "shifting use" as a conveyance to the use of A and his heirs, with a proviso that when B returns from India, then to the use of C and his heirs. 1 Steph. Com. 546.

SECONDS. In Criminal Law. Those persons who assist, direct, and support others engaged in fighting a duel.

Where the principal in deliberate duelling would be guilty of murder, the second is considered equally guilty. It has been contended that the second of him who is killed is equally guilty with the second of the successful principal; but this is denied by Hale, who considers such a one guilty only of a great misdemeanor; 2 Bish. Cr. Law § 311. See ACCESSORY.

SECRET COMMITTEE. A secret committee of the house of commons is a committee especially appointed to investigate a certain matter, and secrecy being deemed necessary in furtherance of its objects, its proceedings are conducted with closed doors. All other committees are open to members of the house, although they may not be serving upon them. Brown.

SECRET PARTNERSHIP. One where the existence of certain persons as partners is not avowed to the public. Deering v. Flinders, 49 N. H. 225. See PARTNERS.

SECRET PROCESS. See TRADE SECRET.

SECRET SERVICE. A branch of government service concerned with the detection of counterfeiting and other offences, civil or political, committed or threatened by persons who operate in secrecy. It is under the charge of the treasury department. Its rules and regulations, promulgated by the department, are laws within R. S. U. S. § 753 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 592), authorizing the issuance by a federal court of the writ of habeas corpus in case of a prisoner in custody for an act done in pursuance of a law of the United States; U. S. v. Fuelhart, 106 Fed. 911.

SECRETARY. An officer who, by order of his superior, writes letters and other instruments. He is so called because he is possessed of the secrets of his employer. This term was used in France in 1343, and in England the term secretary was first applied to the clerks of the king, who being always near his person were called clerks of the secret, and in the reign of Henry VIII. the term secretary of state came into use.

In the United States the term is used to denote the head of a department: as, secretary of state, etc. See DEPARTMENT; CABINET.

SECRETARY OF EMBASSY. An officer appointed by the sovereign power to accompany a minister of the first or second rank, and sometimes, though not often, of an inferior rank.

He is, in fact, a species of public minister; for, independently of his protection as attached to an ambassador's suite, he enjoys in his own right the same protection of the law of nations, and the same immunities, as an ambassador. But private secretaries of a minister must not be confounded with secretaries of embassy or of legation. Such private secretaries are entitled to protection only as belonging to the suite of the ambassador.

SECRETARY OF LEGATION. An officer employed to attend a foreign mission and to perform certain duties as clerk. In the United States his position does not differ, except in point of salary, from that of secretary of embassy (q. v.); by R. S. § 1674, he is classed among diplomatic officers.

SECRETARY OF STATE. See DEPARTMENT; CABINET. The name was first given by Queen Elizabeth in 1601. See Taylor, Jurispr. 352.

SECRETS OF STATE. The production in court of documents containing secrets of state will not be compelled if it would be injurious to the public interest and if the officer in custody of them claims the privilege; Beatson v. Skene, 5 H. & N. 838, per Pollock, C. B.; this is said to include confidential communications made by servants of the Crown to each other; 21 Q. B. D. 512; the question of their production is to be decided by the head of the department having custody of them and not by the court; 5 H. & N. 838; [1900] 1 Ch. 347; 13 Low. Can. 33 (where the cases were fully considered); Appeal of Hartranft, 85 Pa. 433, 27 Am. Rep. 667 (in which Agnew, C. J., vigorously dissented), where a ruling in the trial of Aaron Burr was cited as a precedent. That it is for the judge to pass on the question, see Wigm. Evid. § 2376. In 21 Q. B. D. 515, Field, J., said that if he were sitting, he should consider himself entitled to examine the documents privately, and ascertain the real motive of the refusal to produce.

SECTA (Lat. sequor, to follow). The persons, two or more in number, whom the plaintiff produced in court, in the ancient form of proceedings, immediately upon making his declaration, to confirm the allegations therein, before they were called in question by the defendant's plea. Bracton 214 a. The word appears to have been used as denoting that these persons followed the plaintiff into court; that is, came in a matter in which the plaintiff was the leader or one principally concerned. The actual production of suit was discontinued very early; 3 Bla. Com. 295; but the formula "et inde producit sectam" (for which in more modern pleadings "and thereupon he brings suit" is substituted) continued till the abolition of the Latin form of pleadings. Steph. Pl., And. ed. 171. The count in dower and writs of right did not so conclude, however; 1 Chitty, Pl. 399.

A suit or action. Hob. 20; Bracton 399 b.

A suit of clothes. Cowell; Spelman, Gloss.

SECTA AD CURIAM. A writ that lay against him who refused to perform his suit either to the county court or the court-baron. Cowell.

Ad Furnum. Suit due a public bakehouse. 3 Bla. Com. 235.

Ad Molendinum. A service arising from the usage, time out of mind, of carrying corn to a particular mill to be ground. 3 Bla. Com. 235. A writ adapted to the injury lay at the old law. Fitzh. N. B. 123.

Ad Torrale. Suit due a man's kiln or malt-house. 3 Bla. Com. 235.

Curia. Suit at court. The service due from tenants to the lord of attending his courts-baron, both to answer complaints alleged against themselves, and for the trial of their fellow-tenants. 2 Bla. Com. 54.

SECTA FACIENDA PER ILLAM QUÆ HABET ÆNICIAM PARTEM. A writ to compel the heir, who has the elder's part of the co-heirs, to perform suit and services for all the coparceners. Reg. Orig. 177.

SECTA REGALIS. A suit or service by which all persons were bound twice in a year to attend the sheriff's tourn.

SECTA UNICA TANTUM FACIENDA PRO PLURIBUS HÆREDITATIBUS. A writ for an heir who was distrained by the lord to more suits than one, that he should be allowed to do one suit only in respect of the land of divers heirs descended to him. Cowell.

SECTARIAN. A Roman Catholic orphanage where the pupils are instructed in the doctrines of their church is a sectarian institution within a constitutional provision forbidding the use of public funds for sectarian purposes. State v. Hallock, 16 Nev. 373. See RELIGION.

SECTATORES. A man's followers. Suitors of court among the Saxons. 1 Reeve's Hist. Eng. L. 22.

SECTION. A part separated from the rest, a division, a portion, as, specifically, a distinct part of a book or writing; the subdivision of a chapter; the division of a law or other writing, a paragraph, an article. State v. Babcock, 23 Neb. 128, 36 N. W. 348. The smallest numbered subdivision of a statute, code, text-book, etc., which contains a distinct subject. A paragraph (q. v.); an article. Id.

SECTION OF LAND. A parcel of government land containing six hundred and forty acres. The lands of the United States are surveyed into parcels of six hundred and forty acres; each such parcel is called a section. These sections are divided into half-sections, each of which contains three hundred and twenty acres, and into quarter-sections of one hundred and sixty acres each. See 2 Washb. R. P.

SECTIS NON FACIENDIS. A writ for a woman, who, for her dower, ought not to perform suit of court. Reg. Orig. 174.

SECTORES (Lat.). In Roman Law. Bidders at an auction. Babington, Auct. 2.

SECULAR. Temporal things; of the world; worldly. Allen v. Deming, 14 N. H. 139, 40 Am. Dec. 179.

SECURED CREDITOR. Under the bankrupt act it includes a creditor who has security for his debt upon the property of the bankrupt, of a nature to be assignable under the act, or who owns a debt for which some indorser, surety or other person secondarily liable for the bankrupt has such security upon the bankrupt's assets. A creditor of a bankrupt holding a mortgage on exempt property is not a secured creditor; In re Bailey, 176 Fed. 99.

SECURITATIS PACIS. A writ that lay for one who was threatened with death or bodily harm by another, against him who so threatened. Reg. Orig. 98.

SECURITY. That which renders a matter sure; an instrument which renders certain the performance of a contract. A person who becomes the surety for another, or who engages himself for the performance of another's contract. See Brown v. White, 3 Blackf. (Ind.) 431. Collateral security is security given for the payment of a debt, or the performance of some other act.

SECURITY FOR COSTS. In some courts there is a rule that when the plaintiff resides abroad he shall give security for costs, and until that has been done, when demanded, he cannot proceed in his action.

This is a right which the defendant must claim in proper time; for if he once waives it he cannot afterwards claim it: the waiver is seldom or perhaps never expressly made, but is generally implied from the acts of the defendant. When the defendant had undertaken to accept short notice of trial; 2 H. Bla. 573; or after issue joined, and when he knew of plaintiff's residence abroad, or, with such knowledge, when the defendant takes any step in the cause, these several acts will amount to a waiver; 5 B. & Ald. 702; Swift v. Stine, 3 Wash. T. 518, 19 Pac. 63. It is never too late, however, if the motion do not delay the trial; Shaw v. Wallis, 1 Yeates (Pa.) 176.

The fact that the defendant is out of the jurisdiction of the court will not alone authorize the requisition of security for costs: he must have his domicile abroad; 1 Ves. 396. A wife petitioning for a writ of habeas corpus to obtain from her husband, who resides in the state, the custody of their child, cannot be required without proofs to give bond as a non-resident, since her domicile is prima facie the same as her husband's; Curtis v. Curtis, 131 Ind. 489, 30 N. E. 18. When the defendant resides abroad, he will be required to give such security although he is a foreign prince. See McFarland v. Brown, 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 121. A general affidavit is sufficient on moving for security for costs; the particulars of the defence need not be specified; Sheridan v. Cassidy, 1 W.

N. Cas. (Pa.) 134; a rule of court requiring non-residents to enter security for costs does not violate article iv. sec. 2 of the federal constitution, which provides that citizens of each state shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of the citizens in the several states; Haney v. Marshall, 9 Md. 194; Coleman v. Waters, 13 W. Va. 299.

SECUS (Lat.). Otherwise.

SEDERUNT, ACTS OF. Ancient ordinances of the court of session in Scotland, by which authority is given to the court to make regulations equivalent to the Regule Generales of the English courts. Various modern acts give the court such power; Whart. Dict.

SEdge FLAT. A tract of land below high water mark. Church v. Meeker, 34 Conn. 421.

SEDITION. In Criminal Law. The raising commotions or disturbances in the state: it is a revolt against legitimate authority. Erskine, Inst. 4. 4. 14.

According to the English criminal libel act of 1820, it is to compose, print or publish any words tending to bring into hatred or contempt the king, government, or either house of parliament, or to incite subjects to attempt the alteration of any matter in church or state as by law established, otherwise than by lawful means. No act is seditious unless its full consequences are felt over considerable area or felt by a considerable number of persons. It does not include an isolated breach of the peace. It is sufficient that the acts or words tend to produce the result. An attempt to incite mutiny in the army and navy is seditious. Certain ancient forms of sedition were punished under the writ of præmunire which is now practically obsolete. See Odgers, C. L. 149; RIOR.

The distinction between sedition and treason consists in this: that though the ultimate object of sedition is a violation of the public peace, or at least such a course of measures as evidently engenders it, yet it does not aim at direct and open violence against the laws or the subversion of the constitution. Alison, Crim. Law 580.

The obnoxious and obsolete act of July 14, 1798, 1 Story, Laws 543, was called the sedition law, because its professed object was to prevent disturbances.

SEDUCING TO LEAVE SERVICE. See ENTICE.

SEDUCTION. The act or crime of persuading a female, by flattery or deception, to surrender her chastity. Webster.

The corrupting, deceiving and drawing aside from the path of virtue which she was pursuing of a virtuous woman, by such acts and wiles, in connection with a promise of marriage, as were calculated to operate upon a virtuous woman. State v. Eckler, 106 Mo. 585, 17 S. W. 814, 27 Am. St. Rep. 372.

The wrong of inducing a female to consent to unlawful sexual intercourse, by enticements and persuasions overcoming her reluctance and scruples. Hood v. Sudderth, 111 N. C. 215, 16 S. E. 397. And seduction may occur whether the woman is conscious or not; Marshall v. Taylor, 98 Cal. 55, 32 Pac. 867, 35 Am. St. Rep. 144. In civil cases, seduction and debauching are generally used as substantially similar terms; Stoudt v. Shepherd, 73 Mich. 582, 41 N. W. 696.

Mere illicit intercourse is not seduction, although a promise of marriage be made; People v. Clark, 33 Mich. 112; there must be some promise, deception, art, or influence of the seducer whereby chastity is surrendered; Dinkey v. Com., 17 Pa. 126, 55 Am. Dec. 542; State v. Reeves, 97 Mo. 668, 10 S. W. 841, 10 Am. St. Rep. 349. Force is not an element of seduction, although force is used after consent is obtained; People v. De Fore, 64 Mich. 693, 31 N. W. 585, 8 Am. St. Rep. 863. That force was used makes no difference; Velthouse v. Alderink, 153 Mich. 217, 117 N. W. 76, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 587, 15 Ann. Cas. 1111.

The complainant must be chaste at the time of the seduction, and a reasonable doubt as to such fact is fatal to a recovery; State v. Detrick, 51 Ia. 467, 1 N. W. 732. Chastity, in the civil or criminal action, means actual personal virtue, and not reputation; Andre v. State, 5 Ia. 389, 68 Am. Dec. 708; and requires specific acts of lewdness for impeachment; Kenyon v. People, 26 N. Y. 203, 84 Am. Dec. 177. Previous chastity is presumed; State v. Wenz, 41 Minn. 196, 42 N. W. 933; Mills v. Com., 93 Va. 815, 22 S. E. 863. As to what may be shown to establish lack of chastity, see State v. Wheeler, 94 Mo. 252, 7 S. W. 103; State v. Primm, 98 Mo. 368, 11 S. W. 732; State v. Patterson, 88 Mo. 88, 57 Am. Rep. 374. Chastity must be affirmatively shown where the statute requires that the person seduced be of good repute; Oliver v. Com., 101 Pa. 215, 47 Am. Rep. 704. Although a woman may have fallen, if she repent and reform, she is the object of seduction; State v. Carron, 18 Ia. 372, 87 Am. Dec. 401; Wilson v. State, 73 Ala. 527.

Most states have enacted statutes making seduction a crime. What allurements are sufficient to constitute seduction, is for the jury to determine; State v. Higdon, 32 Ia. 262; and the courts allow considerable latitude in the evidence; Lewis v. People, 37 Mich. 518; State v. Thompson, 79 Ia. 703, 45 W. 293.

The indictment should allege the essential elements of the crime as defined by statute; Wilson v. State, 73 Ala. 527. Where there are several counts the prosecution cannot be compelled to elect; Armstrong v. People, 70 N. Y. 38.

The statutes generally require:—that seduction be accomplished by promise of marriage; Rice v. Com., 102 Pa. 408; which need not be valid; Callahan v. State, 63 Ind. 198, 30 Am. Rep. 211; provided the seduced was ignorant of its invalidity; Kelley v. Riley, 106 Mass. 339, 8 Am. Rep. 336, and it may have been made some time prior to the seduction; Armstrong v. People, 70 N. Y. 38; and the defendant may have intended to fulfil it; State v. Bierce, 27 Conn. 319; and he need not be of lawful age to marry; Polk v. State, 40 Ark. 482, 48 Am. Rep. 17. The previous character of the prosecutrix is to be determined by the jury; State v. Carron, 18 Ia. 372, 87 Am. Dec. 401. Chastity is always an issue; Hussey v. State, 86 Ala. 34, 5 South. 484; but is always presumed, and the burden of impeaching it is on the defendant; State v. McClintic, 73 Ia. 663, 35 N. W. 696.

The statutes generally require the evidence of the complainant to be corroborated; State v. McCaskey, 104 Mo. 644, 16 S. W. 511; but as to what must be corroborated there is much confusion; State v. Timmens, 4 Minn. 325 (Gil. 241); People v. Kearney, 110 N. Y. 188, 17 N. E. 736; Wilson v. State, 73 Ala. 527.

The seduction of a married woman is known as criminal conversation, for which the husband has an action against the seducer; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 40. In England the statute 20 and 21 Vict. ch. 85, § 59, deprives the husband of the action but allows him damages in a suit for divorce where the seducer is made co-respondent. See CRIM. CON.

As to the seduction or alienation of a husband's affections, see ENTICE.

At common law the woman herself has no action for damages, though practically the end is reached by a suit for breach of promise of marriage, in many cases, but in some states the rule has been altered by statute. The parent, as being entitled to the services of his daughter, may maintain an action in many cases grounded upon that right, but only in such cases; 6 M. & W. 55; McDaniel v. Edwards, 29 N. C. 408, 47 Am. Dec. 331; Lee v. Hodges, 13 Gratt. (Va.) 726; Vossell v. Cole, 10 Mo. 634, 47 Am. Dec. 136; Lawyer v. Fritcher, 130 N. Y. 239, 29 N. E. 267, 14 L. R. A. 700, 27 Am. St. Rep. 521. (But this rule was not followed in Baumann v. Kuslan, 164 Cal. 582, 129 Pac. 986, 44 L. R. A. [N. S.] 757; Hood v. Sudderth, 111 N. C. 215, 16 S. E. 397.) In England the parent's right of action terminates when the child leaves the parent's house without the intention of returning; 5 East 45; where an employer seduces the maid, no action lies; [1901] 2 K. B. 722; the maid is no longer the servant of her parent; 36 Ir. L. T. R. 189; but in America the right of action depends on the will of the parent, not the child; if he has not divested himself of a right to require his child's services, he may recover, even though at the time of the injury she was in another's service with his permission; Martin v. Payne, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 387, 6 Am. Dec. 288; s. c. Big. L. C. Torts 286; Simpson v. Grayson, 54 Ark. 404, 16 S. W. 4, 26 Am. St. Rep. 52; otherwise if his power over the child was gone at the time of the seduction. If the control was divested by fraud, the parent has still a right of action; 2 Stark. 493. Specific acts of service are not necessary to a right of action: the right to the service is enough; Big. Torts 146. The right of action continues after the majority of the child, if the relation of master and servant continues; Sutton v. Huffman, 32 N. J. L. 58; Hahn v. Cooper, 84 Wis. 629, 54 N. W. 1022; Bayles v. Burgard, 48 Ill. App. 371. It is not necessary that pregnancy should ensue; Big. Torts 147; contra, 1 Exch. 61; where the proper consequence of the defendant's act was a loss of the child's health, resulting in an incapacity for service, an action lies; Abrahams v. Kidney, 104 Mass. 222, 6 Am. Rep. 220; especially where sexual disease is communicated to the child; Big. Torts 147. The daughter's consent does not affect the parent's right to recover; Damon v. Moore, 5 Lans. (N. Y.) 454. If the mother, after the father's death, is the child's guardian, she has a right of action; Big. Torts 149; apart from the mother's guardianship, she has a right of action so long as the daughter continues to give her services to her mother. See Gray v. Durland, 51 N. Y. 424. Where the daughter in her illness returns to her mother and is taken care of by her, the mother may sue for the seduction; Sargent v. —, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 106; contra, South v. Denniston, 2 Watts (Pa.) 474; Roberts v. Connelly, 14 Ala. 235. See, generally, as to the mother's right of action, Big. L. C. Torts 302. Any one standing in loco parentis, and entitled to, or receiving, in his own right, the services of a minor, is entitled to maintain the action; Big. Torts 152; 2 C. & P. 303. If the parent consented to the seduction, or rendered it easy by his misconduct or neglect, he cannot recover; Peake 240; Big. Torts 151.

While the loss of services is the gist of the action, yet, when that has once been established, the jury may give damages commensurate with the real injury inflicted on the plaintiff. See Big. L. C. Torts 294.

See PROMISE OF MARRIAGE.

It is competent to show that the seduced yielded to defendant's solicitations under promise of marriage; Badder v. Keefer, 91 Mich. 611, 52 N. W. 60; but the mere promise of marriage as the inducement is not sufficient, where she was not seduced by any arts, wiles, or blandishments; State v. Reeves, 97 Mo. 668, 10 S. W. 841, 10 Am. St. Rep. 349. The prosecutrix, on a trial for seduction under promise of marriage, may be permitted to testify that she yielded in reliance upon the promise; Ferguson v. State, 71 Miss. 805, 15 South. 66, 42 Am. St. Rep. 492; Kenyon v. People, 26 N. Y. 203, 84 Am. Dec. 177; but she cannot be asked if she would have yielded in the absence of such a promise: Cook v. People, 2 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 404.

SEE. The diocese of a bishop.

SEED. Generally the sale of seed as and for a certain kind—that is, a sale by description—constitutes a warranty of the seed. A sale of seed as rape seed constitutes a warranty that the seed is true to name, where the purchaser is ignorant of the appearance of rape seed, and hence an inspection of it by him would not aid him to determine the true character of the seed; Hoffman v. Dixon, 105 Wis. 315, 81 N. W. 491, 76 Am. St. Rep. 916. The sale of turnip seed as “skirvings seed” constituted a warranty that the seed is of that kind; 18 Q. B. 560; also a sale of turnip seed as and for “early strap-leaf red-top turnip seed”; Wolcott v. Mount, 38 N. J. L. 496, 20 Am. Rep. 425. A sale of seed for seed purposes as and for “Arlington white spine cucumber seed” constitutes a warranty that the seed will produce that kind of cucumbers; Vaughan's Seed Store v. Stringfellow, 56 Fla. 708. Selling seed for sowing or planting as being a particular kind of seed constitutes a warranty that it is true to name, which is breached by delivering seed of a different kind, utterly unproductive; Van Wyck v. Allen, 69 N. Y. 61, 25 Am. Rep. 136. In a few jurisdictions the theory of a warranty being created on a sale of seeds is denied. In Kircher v. Conrad, 9 Mont. 191, 23 Pac. 74, 7 L. R. A. 471, 18 Am. St. Rep. 731, the court held that a statement made by a seller that certain wheat was “spring wheat” was not a warranty. The court relied on Shisler v. Baxter, 109 Pa. 443, 58 Am. Rep. 738; but the law of Pennsylvania is peculiar, for it requires, in order to constitute a warranty, that a warrantor intends to contract or agree to be bound, and it is not enough that he intends to affirm.

By the Sales Act: “Any affirmation of fact or any promise by the seller relating to the goods is an express warranty if the natural tendency of such affirmation or promise is to induce the buyer to purchase the goods, and if the buyer purchases the goods relying thereon. No affirmation of the value of the goods, nor any statement purporting to be a statement of the seller's opinion only, shall be construed as a warranty.”

The sale of seed with the intent upon the part of both buyer and seller that it is to be used in planting or sowing raises an implied warranty of fitness for that purpose; that is, that it is clean seed, possessing no defects in germinating power; Moore v. Koger, 113 Mo. App. 423, 87 S. W. 602; as to rice; Reiger v. Worth, 130 N. C. 268, 41 S. E. 377, 89 Am. St. Rep. 865; as to peas; Landreth v. Wyckoff, 67 App. Div. 145, 73 N. Y. Supp. 388; as to onions; Ferris v. Comstock, 33 Conn. 513. A sale of seed for seed purposes by the grower thereof raises an implied warranty that it is free from noxious weed seed; Bell v. Mills, 78 App. Div. 42, 80 N. Y. Supp. 34; and that there is no impurity in the seed from cross fertilization; Landreth v. Wyckoff, supra.

There is a split of authority as to the effect of a notice accompanying seed sold for planting or sowing, containing a clause in effect that the seller does not warrant the seed in any respect, and that if the purchaser is not willing to take it without warranty he must return it. In some jurisdictions a distinction is made between a warranty and a condition, and it is held that a sale by description constitutes a condition rather than a warranty, and hence that such a clause does not cover the rights of the parties claiming a violation of the condition; [1911] A. C. 394. In other jurisdictions, the clause is held binding upon the purchaser, if it comes to his notice, but is not unless it does; Bell v. Mills, 78 App. Div. 42, 80 N. Y. Supp. 34; Blizzard Bros. v. Growers' Canning Co., 152 Ia. 257, 132 N. W. 66.

The purchaser is not entitled to rely entirely upon representations as to the kind or quality of seed, but he should make an inspection of it before using and if he fails to do so the question of his negligence in that regard is a question for the jury; Fox v. Everson, 27 Hun (N. Y.) 355.

The purchaser upon discovering a breach of warranty may rescind the sale within a reasonable time and return the property, or he may retain it and avail himself of the damages he has suffered, either by bringing a cross action for breach of warranty, or proving the real value and abating the recovery pro tanto; Frith v. Hollan, 133 Ala. 583, 32 South. 494, 91 Am. St. Rep. 54.

Where seed is not as warranted and the purchaser discovers this fact before using it, he may retain the seed and recover in damages the difference between the market price of the seed he received and the purchase price of the seed had it been as warranted; Dunn v. Bushnell, 63 Neb. 568, 88 N. W. 693, 93 Am. St. Rep. 474.

Where the seller is not informed that the buyer intends to mix the seed before sowing or planting it, the purchaser is not entitled to recover the value of the seed thus mixed with the impure seed purchased; Fox v. Everson, 27 Hun (N. Y.) 355.

For breach of warranty that seed is true to name, the measure of damages recoverable is the value of the crop, had the seed been true to name, such as would ordinarily have been produced that year, deducting the expense of raising the crop and also the product and value of the crop actually raised; White v. Miller, 71 N. Y. 118, 27 Am. Rep. 13. So also where seed is warranted as to kind and quality, but because of poor quality it does not properly germinate and grow, but only a partial crop results; Flick v. Wetherbee, 20 Wis. 392.

The purchaser is not entitled to recover interest on the damages from the time the crop would have been harvested and sold, since the demand is unliquidated and the amount cannot be determined by computation simply or reference to market values; White v. Miller, 78 N. Y. 393, 34 Am. Rep. 544.

See SALES; WARRANTY; NURSERY. As to damages recoverable, see MEASURE OF DAMAGES; note in 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 79.

SEED GRAIN LOANS. An act appropriating state funds to loaning money to farmers for the purchase of seed grain is unconstitutional; William Deering & Co. v. Peterson, 75 Minn. 118, 77 N. W. 568.

SEEDS. Seeds which have been sown in the earth immediately become a part of the land in which they have been sown: quæ sata solo cedere intelliguntur. Inst. 2. 1. 32.

SEIGNIOR, SEIGNEUR. Among the feudists, this name signified lord of the fee. Fitzh. N. B. 23. Seigneur is still used in French Canada. The most extended signification of this word includes not only a lord or peer of parliament, but is applied to the owner or proprietor of a thing: hence the owner of a hawk, and the master of a fishing vessel, is called a seigneur. 37 Edw. III, c. 19; Barrington, Stat. 258. Seignior in gross, a lord without a manor.

SEIGNIORAGE. A royalty or prerogative of the sovereign, whereby an allowance of gold and silver, brought to a mint in the mass to be exchanged for coin, is claimed. Cowell. Mintage, the charge for coining bullion into money at the mint. Black, L. Dict.

SEIGNIORY. In English Law. The rights of a lord, as such, in lands. Swinb. Wills 174.

SEISIN. The completion of the feudal investiture, by which the tenant was admitted into the feud and performed the rights of homage and fealty. Stearns, Real Act. 2; Mitchell, R. E. & Conv. 225.

Possession with an intent on the part of him who holds it to claim a freehold interest. Towle v. Ayer, 8 N. H. 58; 1 Washb. R. P. 35.

Ex vi termini, the whole legal title. Allen v. Allen, 48 Minn. 462, 51 N. W. 473.

"Seisin is a technical term to denote the completion of that investiture, by which the tenant was admitted into the tenure, and without which no freehold could be constituted or pass." 1 Burr. 110, per Lord Mansfield.

This definition is said to be more applicable to the ceremony of livery of seisin than to seisin itself, while the definition of seisin as possession, does not lay sufficient stress on what is really the most important element in seisin—the element of title; 12 L. Quart. Rev. 240.

It is said that seisin is of practical importance at the present day in England in those rare cases where land is conveyed by an infant under the custom of gavelkind, and where a man claims an estate by curtesy. If feoffments were abolished and the law of curtesy made similar to that of dower, seisin would be completely obsolete, as it is in all other respects; 12 L. Quart. Rev. 246, 251.

Immediately upon the investiture or livery of seisin the tenant became tenant of the freehold; and the term seisin originally contained the idea of possession derived from a superior lord of whom the tenant held. There could be but one seisin, and the person holding it was regarded for the time as the rightful owner; Littleton § 701; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 136. In the early history of the country, livery of seisin seems to have been occasionally practised. See 1 Washb. R. P. *344; Colony Laws (Mass.) 85, 86; Smith, Landl. & T. 6, n.

In Connecticut, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, and Ohio, seisin means merely ownership, and the distinction between seisin in deed and in law is not known in practice; Bush v. Bradley, 4 Day (Conn.) 305; Bates v. Norcross, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 224. A patent by the commonwealth, in Kentucky, gives a right of entry, but not actual seisin; Speed v. Buford, 3 Bibb (Ky.) 57.

Seisin in fact is possession with intent on the part of him who holds it to claim a freehold interest.

Seisin in law is a right of immediate possession according to the nature of the estate. Cowell; Com. Dig. Seisin (A 1, 2).

If one enters upon an estate having title, the law presumes an intent in accordance, and requires no further proof of the intent; Means v. Welles, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 357; Barr v. Gratz, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 213, 4 L. Ed. 533; but if one enters without title, an intent to gain seisin must be shown; Bradstreet v. Huntington, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 402, 8 L. Ed. 170. Seisin once established is presumed to continue till the contrary is shown; Brown v. King, 5 Metc. (Mass.) 173. Seisin will not be lost by entry of a stranger if the owner remains in possession; 1 Salk. 246; Hall v. Stevens, 9 Metc. (Mass.) 418. Entry by permission of the owner will never give seisin without open and unequivocal acts of disseisin known to the owner; Clarke v. McClure, 10 Gratt. (Va.) 305; Hall v. Stevens, 9 Metc. (Mass.) 418. Simple entry by one having the freehold title is sufficient to regain seisin; Spaulding v. Warren, 25 Vt. 316; Ellicott v. Pearl, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 412, 9 L. Ed. 475. The heir is invested with the seisin by law upon descent of the title; Green v. Chelsea, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 78. As a general proposition, by the law in this country, the making, delivery, and recording of a deed of lands passes the seisin without any formal entry being necessary. This is generally by force of the statutes of the several states,—in some such a deed being in terms declared to be equivalent to livery of seisin, and in others dispensing with any further act to pass a full and complete title; 4 Greenl. Cruise, Dig. 45, n., 47, n.; Smith, Landl. & T. 6, n.; McKee's Lessee v. Pfout, 3 Dall. (U. S.) 489, 1 L. Ed. 690.

The seisin could never be in abeyance; 1 Prest. Est. 255; and this necessity gave rise to much of the difficult law in regard to estates enjoyable in the future. See 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 156.

A tenant for years had no seisin; nor had a remainderman. It was a fundamental principle that seisin could not be in abeyance; there must always be a feudal representative of any piece of land; Jenks, Mod. Land L. 95. The statute of uses (q. v.) entirely changed the meaning of the word "seisin." Before the statute seisin had been exclusively a state of fact—the condition of the person actually possessed, by himself or his tenant for years as feudal owner. But it then came to signify the state of the person entitled to possession and to be treated as in possession by the statute of uses; Jenks, Mod. Land L. 110.

As to the seisin of chattels, see 29 L. Q. R. 383; and see the "Mystery of Seisin" by Maitland in 3 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. L. H. 591.

See TURF AND TWIG; LIVERY OF SEISIN.

SEISINA HABENDA. A writ for delivery of seisin to the lord, of lands and tenements, after the sovereign, in right of his prerogative, had had the year, day, and waste, on a felony committed, etc. Reg. Orig. 165.

SEIZING OF HERIOTS. Taking the best beast, etc., where an heriot is due, on the death of the tenant. 2 Bla. Com. 422.

SEIZURE. In Practice. The act of taking possession of the property of a person condemned by the judgment of a competent tribunal to pay a certain sum of money, by a sheriff, constable, or other officer lawfully authorized thereto, by virtue of an execution, for the purpose of having such property sold according to law to satisfy the judgment. Carey v. Ins. Co., 84 Wis. 80, 54 N. W. 20, 20 L. R. A. 267, 36 Am. St. Rep. 907. The taking possession of goods for a violation of a public law; as, the taking possession of a ship for attempting an illicit trade; The Caledonian, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 100, 4 L. Ed. 523; The Bolina, 1 Gall. 75, Fed. Cas. No. 1,608; Le Tigre, 2 Wash. C. C. 567, Fed. Cas. No. 8,281; Francis v. Ins. Co., 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 404.

The seizure is complete as soon as the goods are within the power of the officer; Haggerty v. Wilber, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 287, 8 Am. Dec. 321; Collins v. Montgomery, 2 Nott & McC. (S. C.) 392; Wats. Sher. 172, approved Carey v. Ins. Co., 84 Wis. 80, 54 N. W. 18, 20 L. R. A. 267, 36 Am. St. Rep. 907.

The taking of part of the goods in a house, however, by virtue of a feri facias in the name of the whole, is a good seizure of all; 8 East 474. As the seizure must be made by virtue of an execution, it is evident that it cannot be made after the return-day; Vail v. Lewis, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 450, 4 Am. Dec. 300. See DOOR; HOUSE; SEARCH WARRANT.

SEIZURE QUOUSQUE. Where the heir on the death of his ancestor postpones claiming admittance from the lord, the lord may, after a reasonable time, and after due proclamation at three successive courts, seize the tenement into his hands quousque, i. e. until an heir appears and claims admittance; Jenks, Mod. Land L. 208.

SELECTI JUDICES (Lat.). In Roman Law. Judges who were selected very much like our juries. They were returned by the praetor, drawn by lot, subject to be challenged and sworn. 3 Bla. Com. 366.

SELECTMEN. The name of certain town officers in several states of the United States, who are invested by the statutes of the states with extensive powers for the conduct of the town business.

SELF-DEFENCE. In Criminal Law. The protection of one's person and property from injury. Whart. Crim. Law 97. A man may defend himself, and even commit a homicide for the prevention of any forcible and atrocious crime which if completed would amount to a felony; Oliver v. State, 17 Ala. 587; Monroe v. State, 5 Ga. 85; Staten v. State, 30 Miss. 619; and, of course, under the like circumstances, mayhem, wounding, and battery would be excusable at common law; 4 Bla. Com. 180. A man may repel force by force even to the taking of life; State v. Patterson, 45 Vt. 308, 12 Am. Rep. 200; Fields v. State, 134 Ind. 46, 32 N. E. 780; in defence of his person, property, or habitation, or of a member of his family, against any one who manifests, intends, attempts, or endeavors, by violence or surprise, to commit a forcible felony, such as murder, rape, robbery, arson, burglary, and the like; Logue v. Com., 38 Pa. 265, 80 Am. Dec. 481; Bohannon v. Com., 8 Bush (Ky.) 481, 8 Am. Rep. 474. In these cases he is not required to retreat; Runyan v. State, 57 Ind. 80, 26 Am. Rep. 52; but he may resist, and even pursue his adversary, until he has secured himself from all danger; Gray v. Combs, 7 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 478, 23 Am. Dec. 431; 4 Bingh. 628; State v. Thompson, 45 La. Ann. 969, 13 South. 392; but see People v. Sullivan, 7 N. Y. 396. A man may defend his dwelling to any extremity; and this includes whatever is within the curtilage of his dwelling-house; Pond v. People, 8 Mich. 150. Where one finds another trying to break into his house in the night-time he may employ such force as to prevent his doing so, and if the other threatens to kill him and makes a motion as if to do so and puts him in fear of his life, he is not bound to retreat, but may use such force as is necessary to repel the assault; Alberty v. U. S., 162 U. S. 499, 16 Sup. Ct. 864, 40 L. Ed. 1051. In deciding what force is necessary, a person need only act upon the circumstances as they appear to him at the time. See Hinton v. State, 24 Tex. 454; Schnier v. People, 23 Ill. 17.

In the case of homicide, the law permits the resistance of force or seriously threatened force, actually impending or reasonably apparent, by force sufficient to repel the actual or apparent danger, and no more; Springfield v. State, 96 Ala. 81, 11 South. 250, 38 Am. St. Rep. 85. The law of self-defence justifies an act done "in an honest and reasonable belief of immediate danger;" New Orleans & N. E. R. Co. v. Jopes, 142 U. S. 18, 12 Sup. Ct. 109, 35 L. Ed. 919. To justify a homicide, however, on the ground of self-defence, there must have been not only the belief but also reasonable ground for believing that at the time of killing the deceased, he was in imminent or immediate danger of his life or great bodily harm; Wilson v. State, 30 Fla. 234, 11 South. 556, 17 L. R. A. 654; People v. Hyndman, 99 Cal. 1, 33 Pac. 782; Kelly v. State, 27 Tex. App. 562, 11 S. W. 627; Baum v. Bell, 28 S. C. 201, 5 S. E. 485; People v. Kennedy, 159 N. Y. 346, 54 N. E. 51, 70 Am. St. Rep. 557; and to justify shooting, on apparent necessity, the circumstances must have been such as to induce the mind of a reasonably prudent person to entertain the belief that the defendant was in imminent peril of his life or great bodily harm; Roden v. State, 97 Ala. 54, 12 South. 419; there must be a reasonable apprehension of immediate danger justified by the circumstances; Field v. Com., 89 Va. 690, 16 S. E. 865; if there is manifestly no adequate or reasonable ground for such belief, the plea will not avail; Anderson v. U. S., 170 U. S. 481, 18 Sup. Ct. 689, 42 L. Ed. 1116; it is good if it appeared to the accused, at the time, acting as a reasonable man, that it was necessary for him to kill the deceased in order to prevent injury to himself; Owens v. U. S., 130 Fed. 279, 64 C. C. A. 525.

One on trial for homicide, and setting up self-defence, may testify as to what he thought the deceased intended to do; Taylor v. People, 21 Colo. 426, 42 Pac. 652; and that he believed it was necessary to kill the deceased in order to save himself; State v. Harrington, 12 Nev. 126; Lane v. State, 44 Fla. 105, 32 South. 896, where the deceased had threatened the accused and just before the killing had made a demonstration against him with his hand, declaring that he would kill the accused, the latter may testify what he believed the former would do; Wallace v. U. S., 162 U. S. 466, 16 Sup. Ct. 859, 40 L. Ed. 1039; the accused may testify that he struck the deceased because he believed that the deceased was going to strike him; Com. v. Woodward, 102 Mass. 155; the accused may explain his motives in drawing his revolver at the time of the assault; Ryan v. Territory, 12 Ariz. 208, 100 Pac. 770.

One setting up this defence must have acted on facts as they appeared to him. If, without fault, or carelessness, he is misled concerning them and defends himself correctly according to what he supposes the facts to be, though they are in truth otherwise, and he has really no occasion for the extreme measures, the defence is made out; 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 384; State v. Harris, 46 N. C. 193; Pond v. People, 8 Mich. 150. It need not appear that the killing was absolutely necessary; State v. Collins, 32 Ia. 39.

Reasonable fear does not mean the fear of a coward, but the fear of a reasonably courageous man; Gallery v. State, 92 Ga. 463, 17 S. E. 863; fear that one's life is in danger will not excuse a homicide in the absence of an overt act or hostile demonstration on the part of the deceased.

A question whether a homicide is committed in repelling an attack is a question of fact not necessarily dependent upon the duration or quality of the reflection by which the act may have been preceded; Hickory v. U. S., 151 U. S. 303, 14 Sup. Ct. 334, 38 L. Ed. 170. One assailed on his own grounds, without provocation, by a person armed with a deadly weapon and apparently seeking his life, is not obliged to retreat and may defend himself with such means as are within his control; Beard v. U. S., 158 U. S. 550, 15 Sup. Ct. 962, 39 L. Ed. 1086; Eversole v. Com., 95 Ky. 623, 26 S. W. 816. So a person who has had an angry altercation with another person may be justified in arming himself for self-defence; and if, on meeting his adversary afterwards, he kills him, but not in necessary self-defence, his crime may be manslaughter or murder, according to the circumstances on the occasion of the killing, and is not necessarily murder by reason of his having previously armed himself; Thompson v. U. S., 155 U. S. 271, 15 Sup. Ct. 73, 39 L. Ed. 146. Accordingly it is wrong to charge that the intentional arming of himself with a pistol by a defendant, even if with a view to self-defence, would make a case of murder unless the actual affray developed a case of self-defence; Allen v. U. S., 157 U. S. 675, 15 Sup. Ct. 720, 39 L. Ed. 854.

Where the accused embarks in the quarrel with no felonious intent or malice or purpose of doing bodily harm or killing, and, under reasonable belief of imminent danger, inflicts a deadly wound, it is not murder; Wallace v. U. S., 162 U. S. 466, 16 Sup. Ct. 859, 40 L. Ed. 1039; but where a difficulty is intentionally brought on for the purpose of killing the deceased, the fact of imminent danger to the accused constitutes no defence; Wallace v. U. S., 162 U. S. 466, 16 Sup. Ct. 859, 40 L. Ed. 1039.

In Beard v. U. S., 158 U. S. 550, 15 Sup. Ct. 962, 39 L. Ed. 1086; the following rule was quoted with approval: "A true man, who is without fault, is not obliged to fly from an assailant who by violence or surprise maliciously seeks to take his life or to do him enormous bodily harm"; in Alberty

v. U. S., 162 U. S. 499, 16 Sup. Ct. 864, 40 L. Ed. 1051, the rule was stated: "He may lawfully kill the assailant... provided he use all the means in his power otherwise to save his own life, or prevent the intended harm, such as retreating as far as he can, or disabling him without killing him, if it be in his power." Quoting these two inconsistent rules, Prof. Beale (16 Harv. L. Rev. 567) considers the cases on this subject at length. On one or two points the authorities agree. If retreat would not diminish the danger, the person assailed may stand his ground; People v. Macard, 73 Mich. 15, 40 N. W. 784; Bird v. State, 77 Wis. 276, 45 N. W. 1126 (that he must retreat unless it would increase the danger; Carter v. State, 82 Ala. 13, 2 South. 766); so if he is assailed in his own dwelling house; Alberty v. U. S., 162 U. S. 499, 16 Sup. Ct. 864, 40 L. Ed. 1051; Eversole v. Com., 95 Ky. 623, 26 S. W. 816.

In Com. v. Drum, 58 Pa. 9, it was finely said by Agnew, J.: "Ordinary defence and the killing of another evidently stand upon different footing. When it comes to a question whether one man shall flee or another shall live, the law decides that the former shall rather flee than that the latter shall die."

It is not the duty of a police officer, when not exceeding his authority, to fly when assaulted. He may defend himself with such force as may be necessary, but he may not take life except when the assault is so violent as to put him in danger of death or great bodily harm; but he is not required to flee to the wall; Com. v. Crowley, 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 124.

What is or what is not an overt demonstration of violence sufficient to justify a resistance which ends in the death of the party making the demonstration varies with the circumstances and is a question for the jury; Allison v. U. S., 160 U. S. 203, 16 Sup. Ct. 252, 40 L. Ed. 395.

If a person, under the provocation of offensive language, assaults the speaker personally, but in such a way as to show that there is no intention to do him serious bodily harm, and then retires under such circumstances as show that he does not intend to do anything more, but in good faith withdraws from further contest, his right of self-defence is restored when the person assaulted, in violation of law, pursues him with a deadly weapon, and seeks to take his life, or do him great bodily harm; Rowe v. U. S., 164 U. S. 546, 17 Sup. Ct. 172, 41 L. Ed. 547; Parker v. State, 88 Ala. 4, 7 South. 98; Whart. Hom. § 483; Beard v. U. S., 158 U. S. 550, 564, 15 Sup. Ct. 962, 39 L. Ed. 1086; but there must be a real and bona fide surrender and withdrawal on the part of the original aggressor, otherwise he will continue to be so regarded; Whart. Cr. L., 9th ed. § 486. The meaning of the principle is that the law will always leave the original aggressor an opportunity to respond before he takes the life of his adversary; Bish. Cr. L., 7th ed. § 871; 1 Bish. N. Cr. L. § 702. It is "for the jury to say whether the withdrawal was not in good faith or was a mere device by the accused to obtain some advantage of his adversary"; Rowe v. U. S., 164 U. S. 546, 17 Sup. Ct. 172, 41 L. Ed. 547. It is said of the two United States cases cited that they "consistently united in expressing a judicial policy on the subject of self-defence which is not only logical in principle, but commends itself to the practical sense of justice"; 55 Alb. L. J. 268; to the same effect in substance are recent cases in state courts; State v. Evans, 124 Mo. 397, 28 S. W. 8; Page v. State, 141 Ind. 236, 40 N. E. 745.

A person assaulted may do more than ward off a blow; he may strike back; Carman Deana, Cr. App. Rep. (Engl. 1909) 75.

The possession of a good conscience is not an indispensable prerequisite to justification of action in the face of imminent and deadly peril, nor does the intrinsic rightfulness of the occupation or situation of a party, having in itself no bearing upon or connection with an assault, impose a limitation upon the right to repel it; Starr v. U. S., 153 U. S. 614, 14 Sup. Ct. 919, 38 L. Ed. 841.

It has been said that the justification of self-defence must be established by a preponderance of evidence; State v. Ballou, 20 R. I. 607, 40 Atl. 861; State v. Welsh, 29 S. C. 4, 6 S. E. 894; but see Gearty v. New York, 171 N. Y. 71, 63 N. E. 804; and perhaps the doctrine is too broadly stated. One who starts an affray with intent to kill the deceased cannot plead self-defence; Anderesen v. U. S., 170 U. S. 481, 18 Sup. Ct. 689, 42 L. Ed. 1116; so of one who provoked an affray by insulting language; State v. Scott, 41 Minn. 365, 43 N. W. 62; Shaw v. State (Tex.) 73 S. W. 1046. Where one sought a meeting to provoke an assault, but was attacked without provocation, he may plead self-defence; 1 Hale, P. C. 479; contra, State v. Neeley, 20 Ia. 108; Vaiden v. Com., 12 Gratt. (Va.) 717.

The doctrine of constructive self-defence comprehends the principal civil and domestic relations; therefore master and servant, parent and child, husband and wife, killing an assailant in the necessary defence of each, respectively, are excused, the act of the relation being construed the same as the act of the party himself; 4 Bla. Com. 186; Hathaway v. State, 32 Fla. 56, 13 South. 592; strangely enough, there seems to be no authority for placing a brother or sister in this category, though they doubtless occupy as good a position as a stranger; 25 Alb. L. J. 187. See 2 Bish. Cr. L. 877.

A man may defend himself when no felony has been threatened or attempted. First, when the assailant attempts to beat another and there is no mutual combat: as where one meets another and attempts to commit or does commit an assault and battery on him, the person attacked may defend himself; Bartlett v. Churchill, 24 Vt. 218; Hazel v. Clark, 3 Har. (Del.) 22; Com. v. Ford, 5 Gray (Mass.) 475; 3 C. & P. 31; but it is not true as a general proposition, that one who is assaulted by another with a dangerous weapon is justified in taking the life of the person so assaulting him; State v. West, 45 La. Ann. 14, 12 South. 7; and in case of an offer or attempt to strike another, when sufficiently near, so that there is danger, the person assailed may strike first, and is not required to wait until he has been struck; Bull. N. P. 18. Second, when there is a mutual combat upon a sudden quarrel. In these cases both parties are the aggressors; and if in the fight one is killed, it will be manslaughter at least unless the survivor can prove two things, viz.: that before the mortal stroke was given he had refused any further combat, and had retreated as far as he could with safety; Hodges v. State, 15 Ga. 117; Stewart v. State, 1 Ohio St. 66; and that he killed his adversary from necessity, to avoid his own destruction; Shorter v. People, 2 N. Y. 193, 51 Am. Dec. 286; Dill v. State, 25 Ala. 15.

A person assaulted by another, whom he kills, cannot set up the plea of self-defence if he could have safely retreated or have disarmed the other without danger to himself, and believed himself able to do so; Fallin v. State, 86 Ala. 13, 5 South. 423; State v. Dillon, 74 Ia. 653, 38 N. W. 525.

The settled rule that where a person having authority to arrest and using the proper means for that purpose is resisted, he can repel force with force, and, if the party making the resistance is unavoidably killed, the homicide is justifiable, may be invoked by a person who resists and kills the officer, if he was ignorant of the fact that he was an officer; Starr v. U. S., 153 U. S. 614, 14 Sup. Ct. 919, 38 L. Ed. 841.

A man may defend himself against animals, and he may during the attack kill them, but not afterwards; 1 C. & P. 106; Credit v. Brown, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 365. See Horr. & T. Cas. on Self-Defence, where the cases are collected.

In early English law killing in self-defence was not justifiable homicide. The party indicted was not entitled to an acquittal by a jury. He was sent back to prison and must trust to the king's mercy for a pardon. And although he obtained a pardon, he forfeited his goods for the crime. But by 1400, self-defence had become a bar to an action for a battery. Pardons for killing in self-defence became a matter of course; ultimately the jury was permitted to give a verdict of not guilty in such cases, and the practice of forfeiting the goods of the defendant died out. Ames, Lect. Leg. Hist. 436.

See DEFENCE; COOLING TIME; JUSTIFICATION; MURDER; HOMICIDE.

SELF-DESTRUCTION. This term in an insurance policy is synonymous with, not more comprehensive than, suicide. It does not include an intentional though insane killing of one's self. "The act, whether described by words of Saxon or of Latin origin, or partly of the one and partly of the other, 'dying by his own hand,' 'self-killing,' 'self-slaughter,' 'suicide,' 'self-destruction,' without more, cannot be imputed to a man who, by reason of insanity (as is commonly said), 'is not himself';" Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Akens, 150 U. S. 468, 14 Sup. Ct. 155, 37 L. Ed. 1148. See SUICIDE.

SELF-DISSERVING EVIDENCE. See SELF-REGARDING EVIDENCE.

SELF-EXECUTING PROVISIONS. See CONSTITUTIONAL; and also Thomps. Corp. § 3004.

SELF-REGARDING EVIDENCE. That evidence for or against a party which is afforded by the language or demeanor of himself or of those who represent him. When in favor of the party supplying it, the evidence may be said to be "self-serving," when otherwise, "self-disserving," and these terms are also applicable to the statement and demeanor of witnesses.

Self-serving evidence is not originally admissible except where part of the document is used against the party, who is entitled to have the whole of it laid before the jury who may consider such statements as are self-serving, and give such weight to them as they see fit; 5 Taunt. 245; 2 D. & Ryl. 358. See CONFESSION.

Self-disserving statements are termed "admissions" in civil cases and "confessions" in criminal cases. See those titles. They are also classified as "plenary" when the statements are not absolutely inconsistent with the existence of fact different from those indicated by it. See, generally, Best, Evidence §§ 518-577.

SELF-SERVING EVIDENCE. See SELF-REGARDING EVIDENCE.

SELION OF LAND. A ridge of ground rising between two furrows, containing no certain quantity, but sometimes more and sometimes less. Termes de la Ley.

SELLER. One who disposes of a thing in consideration of money; a vendor.

This term is more usually applied in the sale of chattels, and that of vendor in the sale of estates. See SALE.

SELLETTE (Fr.). A kind of wooden seat set up in criminal courts in France, on which they placed the accused to undergo his last interrogatory when the conclusions of the counsel for the prosecution went against him with regard to capital punishment or at least penal corporal punishment. It implied moral degradation and was therefore limited to persons accused of crimes entailing corporal punishment. See Ord. Cr. de 1670, Titre IV, art. 21. Abolished by Edict of May 1, 1788. Called a "stool of repentance."

SELLING PUBLIC OFFICES. Buying or selling any office in the gift of the crown, or making any negotiation relating thereto, was deemed a misdemeanor under stats. 5 & 6 Edw. VI. c. 16, and 49 Geo. III. c. 126. 2 Steph. Com., 11th ed. 631.

SEMBLE (Fr. it seems). A term frequently used before the statement of a point of law which has not been directly settled, but about which the court have expressed an opinion and intimated what a decision would be.

SEMESTRIA. The collected decisions of the emperors in their councils. Whart. Dict.

SEMI-COLON. According to well-established grammatical rules, this is a point only used to separate parts of a sentence more distinctly than a comma. Lambert v. People, 76 N. Y. 220, 32 Am. Rep. 293.

SEMI-MATRIMONIUM. Half-marriage. Concubinage was so called in the Roman law. Tayl. Civ. L. 273.

SEMI-PROOF. In Civil Law. Presumption of fact. This degree of proof is thus defined: "Non est ignorandum probationem semiplenam eam esse per quam rei gestæ fides aliqua fit judici; non tamen tanta ut jure debeat in pronuncianda sententia eam sequi." Mascardus, de Prob. vol. 1, Quæst. 11, n. 1, 4.

SEMINARY. A place of education. Any school, academy, college, or university in which young persons are instructed in the several branches of learning which may qualify them for their future employments. Webster, Dict.

The word is said to have acquired no fixed and definite legal meaning. Chegaray v. New York, 13 N. Y. 229.

SEMINAUFRAGIUM (Lat.). A term used by Italian lawyers, which literally signifies half-shipwreck, and by which they understand the jetsam, or casting merchandise into the sea to prevent shipwreck. Locré, Esp. du Code de Com. art. 409. The state of a vessel which has been so much injured by tempest or accident that to repair the damages, after being brought into port, and prepare her for sea, would cost more than her worth. 4 Bost. L. Rep. 120.

SEMPER PARATUS (Lat. always ready). The name of a plea by which the defendant alleges that he has always been ready to perform what is demanded of him. 3 Bla. Com. 303. The same as Tout temps prêt.

SEN. Said to be an ancient word which signified justice. Co. Litt. 61 a.

SENAGE. Money paid for synodals.

SENATE. The name of the less numerous of the two bodies constituting the legislative branch of the government of the United States, and of the several states. See the articles upon the various states.

Bouv.—191

The Senate of the United States is composed of two senators from each state; and each senator has one vote. Under the 17th amendment to the federal constitution, senators are elected by popular vote. See CONSTITUTION OF UNITED STATES. The equal representation of states in the senate is secured to them beyond the ordinary power of amendment; no state can be deprived thereof without its consent. Art. 5. The senate has been, from the first formation of the government, divided into three classes. The rotation of the classes was originally determined by lot, and the seats of one class were vacated at the end of the second year, so that one-third of the senate is chosen every second year. Const. art. 1, s. 3. This provision was borrowed from a similar one in some of the state constitutions, of which Virginia gave the first example.

The qualifications which the constitution requires of a senator are that he should be thirty years of age, have been nine years a citizen of the United States, and, when elected, be an inhabitant of that state for which he shall be chosen. Const. art. 1, s. 3. See CONGRESS. They do not hold their places "under the government of the United States" within the meaning of the Revised Statutes that any one convicted under its provisions shall be incapable of holding any office of honor, trust or profit under that government; Burton v. U. S., 202 U. S. 344, 26 Sup. Ct. 688, 50 L. Ed. 1057, 6 Ann. Cas. 392.

SENATUS. In Roman Law. The senate. Also the place where the senate met. Calv. Lex.

SENATUS CONSULTUM (Lat.). In Roman Law. A decree or decision of the Roman senate, which had the force of law.

When the Roman people had so increased that there was no place where they could meet, it was found necessary to consult the senate, instead of the people, both on public affairs and those which related to individuals. The opinion which was rendered on such an occasion was called senatus consultum. Inst. 1. 2. 5; Clef des Lois Rom.; Merlin, Répert. These decrees frequently derived their titles from the names of the consuls or magistrates who proposed them; as senatus-consultum Claudianum, Libonianum, Velleianum, etc., from Claudius, Libonius, Valleius. Ayliffe, Pand. 30.

SENATUS DECRETA. (Decisions of the senate.) Private acts concerning particular persons merely.

SENESCHAL. A steward; also one who has the dispensing of justice. Co. Litt. 61 a.

SENESCHALLO ET MARESHALLO QUOD NON TENEAT PLACITA DE LIBERO TENEMENTO. A writ addressed to the steward and marshal of England, inhibiting them to take cognizance of an action in their court that concerns freehold. Reg. Orig. 185.

SENESCHALLUS (Lat.). A steward. Co. Litt. 61 a.

SENILE DEMENTIA. See DEMENTIA.

SENILITY. The state of being old.

When on account of senility the party is unable to manage his affairs, a committee will be appointed as in case of lunacy; 1 Collier, Lun. 66; In re Barker, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 232; Darling v. Bennet, 8 Mass. 129; 19 Ves. Jr. 285.

SENIOR. The elder. This addition is sometimes made to a man's name, when two persons bear the same, in order to distinguish them. In practice, when nothing is mentioned, the senior is intended; Neil v. Dillon, 3 Mo. 59. See NAME; JUNIOR.

One older in office, or whose entrance upon an office was anterior to that of another. State v. Hueston, 44 Ohio St. 6, 4 N. E. 471.

SENTENCE. A judgment, or judicial declaration made by a judge in a cause. The term judgment is more usually applied to civil, and sentence to criminal, proceedings.

Sentences are final, when they put an end to the case; or interlocutory, when they settle only some incidental matter which has arisen in the course of its progress. See Aso & Man. Inst. b. 3, t. 8, c. 1.

A sentence exceeding the term allowed by law will be reversed upon certiorari; White v. Com., 3 Brews. (Pa.) 30. Under some circumstances a sentence may be suspended after conviction; State v. Addy, 43 N. J. L. 113, 39 Am. Rep. 547; Com. v. Dowdican's Bail, 115 Mass. 133; but not indefinitely; Ex parte Bugg, 163 Mo. App. 44, 145 S. W. 831. But a single sentence exhausts the power of the court to punish the offender, after the term is ended or the judgment has gone into operation; Ex parte Lange, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 163, 21 L. Ed. 872; Com. v. Foster, 122 Mass. 317, 23 Am. Rep. 326; Com. v. Mayloy, 57 Pa. 291.

The court may set a day for the execution of a prisoner after the time originally fixed has elapsed. The prisoner may be held in confinement after the first day fixed for execution has passed; In re Cross, 146 U. S. 271, 13 Sup. Ct. 109, 36 L. Ed. 969. Upon the affirmance of a judgment, sentencing a prisoner to death, there is nothing which requires that he shall be sentenced anew by the trial court; Schwab v. Berggren, 143 U. S. 442, 12 Sup. Ct. 525, 36 L. Ed. 218. See EXECUTION.

When a sentence different from that authorized by law has been imposed and the judgment has been reversed for that error, and the cause remanded to the trial court with instructions to proceed therein according to law, the trial court resumes jurisdiction of the cause at the point where the error supervened and may resentence the defendant and impose the penalty provided by law, although part of the void sentence has been executed; U. S. v. Harman, 68 Fed. 472.

Where a court has jurisdiction of the person and the offence, the imposition of a sentence in excess of what the law permits does not render the authorized portion of the sentence void, but only such part as may be in excess; U. S. v. Pridgeon, 153 U. S. 48, 14 Sup. Ct. 746, 38 L. Ed. 631; State v. Williams, 77 Mo. 310; so, on a plea of guilty, if the court had authority to impose the punishment actually adjudged on a conviction of a higher grade of the offence; In re Paschal, 56 Kan. 123, 42 Pac. 373.

Where the judgment on the first count is reversed and there is arrest of judgment under the second, a term of imprisonment under the third may be made to commence on the day fixed for the first count; Blitz v. U. S., 153 U. S. 308, 14 Sup. Ct. 924, 38 L. Ed. 725.

Where a sentence is imposed after a general verdict on an indictment containing several counts, some of which were subsequently found bad, such sentence will be sustained, where it is no heavier than what might properly have been imposed upon the good counts; Haynes v. U. S., 101 Fed. 817, 42 C. C. A. 34.

Failure in the sentence to name the crime for which the prisoner was sentenced may be supplied by reference to the rest of the record; Pointer v. U. S., 151 U. S. 396, 14 Sup. Ct. 410, 38 L. Ed. 208.

Statutes providing for a severer punishment when a criminal is convicted of a second or third offence are not in violation of the constitutional provision that no one shall be twice put in jeopardy for the same offence; Moore v. Missouri, 159 U. S. 673, 16 Sup. Ct. 179, 40 L. Ed. 301. The doctrine is that the subsequent punishment is not for the first offence, but for persistence in crime; People v. Stanley, 47 Cal. 113, 17 Am. Rep. 401; Kelly v. People, 115 Ill. 583, 4 N. E. 644, 56 Am. Rep. 184; Sturtevant v. Com., 158 Mass. 598, 33 N. E. 648; Ingalls v. State, 48 Wis. 647, 4 N. W. 785. For the same reason, they are not open to the objection that they are ex post facto, even when the prior convictions occurred before the passage of the act imposing the additional penalty; Ex parte Gutierrez, 45 Cal. 429; Com. v. Graves, 155 Mass. 163, 29 N. E. 579, 16 L. R. A. 256; Blackburn v. State, 50 Ohio St. 428, 36 N. E. 18; Rand v. Com., 9 Gratt. (Va.) 738. Such statutes cannot apply to the case of a conviction for an offence committed after that for which the prisoner is on trial, but for which he is first tried; Rand v. Com., 9 Gratt. (Va.) 738. The indictment must allege that the defendant had been previously convicted, sentenced, and imprisoned (once or twice, as the case may be) in some penal institution for felonies (as such penalties are usually only prescribed for felonies or penitentiary offences), describing each separately; Sturtevant v. Com., 158 Mass. 598, 33 N. E. 648; State v. Austin, 113 Mo. 538, 21 S. W. 31; Blackburn v. State, 50 Ohio St. 428, 36 N. E. 18. As a general rule the courts have no discretion in the matter of imposing sentence under the habitual criminal acts; Sturtevant v. Com., 158 Mass. 598, 33 N. E. 648; Blackburn v. State, 50 Ohio St. 428, 36 N. E. 18. It is not necessary, unless required by statute, that the subsequent conviction or convictions should be for the same identical offence or character of offence. It is sufficient if the accused has been convicted of any one of the offences of the grade named; Kelly v. People, 115 Ill. 583, 4 N. E. 644, 56 Am. Rep. 184. The previous offences must have been penitentiary offences, and not merely made so by repeated convictions for what would otherwise have been misdemeanors; Stover v. Com., 92 Va. 780, 22 S. E. 874.

A statute permitting the supreme court to reduce a sentence imposed by a trial court is not unconstitutional as an exercise of pardoning power by the judiciary; Palmer v. State, 70 Neb. 136, 97 N. W. 235; nor is a statute allowing the governor to fix a new date for execution when the date in the judgment has passed, since it is a ministerial and not a judicial act; Bullitt v. Sturgeon, 127 Ky. 332, 105 S. W. 468, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 268.

Where one is found guilty of manslaughter on an indictment for murder, and on a new trial granted on appeal he is subsequently found guilty of murder, the case will be remanded with directions to sentence for manslaughter only; People v. Farrell, 146 Mich. 264, 109 N. W. 440.

A prisoner who is paroled without statutory authority cannot, upon violation of his parole, be required to remain in prison beyond the time when the original sentence expired; Scott v. Chichester, 107 Va. 933, 60 S. E. 95, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 304.

A person who commits a felony while enjoying his liberty under a bond given to stay execution of a judgment for a previously committed felony must serve such second sentence upon the expiration of the first; State v. Finch, 75 Kan. 582, 89 Pac. 922, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 273; but a death sentence in a subsequent prosecution will be put into effect although the prisoner is serving a previously imposed life sentence; Brown v. State, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 114, 95 S. W. 1039.

Where, under an indeterminate sentence act, the court fixes a maximum term below the statutory period, the prisoner cannot bring a writ of habeas corpus to be released at the expiration of the maximum period, since he is subject to the statutory maximum; In re Duff, 141 Mich. 623, 105 N. W. 138. On an indictment charging separate offences under the same statute, the court may impose separate and cumulative sentences; but a single sentence for a term longer than is authorized by the statute for one offense is void as to the excess; U. S. v. Peeke, 153 Fed. 166, 82 C. C. A. 340, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 314. An act authorizing a board of commissioners of a county workhouse to deduct from sentence for good conduct, leaving the whole matter to arbitrary discretion, is an unconstitutional delegation of legislative authority; Fite v. State, 114 Tenn. 646, 88 S. W. 941, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 520, 4 Ann. Cas. 1108; People v. Cummings, 88 Mich. 249, 50 N. W. 310, 14 L. R. A. 285; Com. v. Halloway, 44 Pa. 210, 84 Am. Dec. 431; State v. Board, 18 Utah 478, 52 Pac. 1090; contra, State v. Peters, 43 Ohio 629, 4 N. E. 81; Opinion of Justices, 13 Gray (Mass.) 618; State v. Austin, 113 Mo. 538, 21 S. W. 31; State v. Patterson (N. J.) 22 Atl. 802.

A Pennsylvania act (1911) provides that the court shall "pronounce upon such facts a sentence of imprisonment for a definite term and state in such sentence the minimum and maximum limits thereof and the maximum limit shall never exceed the maximum time now or hereafter prescribed as a penalty for such offence." It is said that the act does not fix punishment; it relates exclusively to the manner of sentence. As was first pointed out by Judge Sulzberger a maximum sentence is the only portion of the sentence which is valid; the minimum sentence is merely an administrative notice by the court to the executive department calling attention to the policy that when a man's so-called minimum sentence is about to expire . . . the propriety of granting a qualified pardon may be determined; Com. v. Kalck, 239 Pa. 541, 87 Atl. 61, where it was held that such an act is constitutional, following State v. Perkins, 143 Ia. 55, 120 N. W. 62, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 931, 20 Ann. Cas. 1217; In re Conditional Discharge of Convicts, 73 Vt. 414, 51 Atl. 10, 56 L. R. A. 658; People v. Illinois State Reformatory, 148 Ill. 413, 36 N. E. 76, 23 L. R. A. 139; State v. Peters, 43 Ohio 629, 4 N. E. 81; Com. v. Brown, 167 Mass. 144, 45 N. E. 1; Davis v. State, 152 Ind. 34, 51 N. E. 928, 71 Am. St. Rep. 322; People v. Hayes, 140 N. Y. 484, 35 N. E. 951, 23 L. R. A. 830, 37 Am. St. Rep. 572. To the same effect, Berry v. Com., 141 Ky. 422, 132 S. W. 1030.

The suspension of civil rights of a person sentenced to the penitentiary for a term less than life begins at the date of his imprisonment; Harmon v. Bowers, 78 Kan. 135, 96 Pac. 51, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 502, 16 Ann. Cas. 121.

In England where one convicted of an offense is not less than 16 nor more than 21 years old, and by reason of bad associates it is expedient to subject him to instruction and discipline, the court may pass a sentence of detention under penal discipline in a Borstal institution for not less than one nor more than three years; here he is drilled and taught a trade and trained morally and physically. Act of 1908.

See CUMULATIVE SENTENCE; JUDGMENT; HABITUAL CRIMINALS' ACT; PRISONER; TICKET OF LEAVE; SOLITARY CONFINEMENT.

As to the formal address of the court to the prisoner before sentence, see ALLOCUTION.

SENTENCE OF DEATH RECORDED. A custom in the English courts, now disused, of entering sentence of death on the record which is not intended to be pronounced. The effect was the same as if it had been pronounced and the offender relieved.

SENTENTIA. See MAXIM.

SEPARALITER (Lat. separately). A word sometimes used in indictments to show that the defendants are charged separately with offences which without the addition of this word would seem, from the form of the indictment, to be charged jointly: as, for example, when two persons are indicted together for perjury, and the indictment states that A and B came before a commissioner, etc., this is alleging that they were both guilty of the same crime, when by law their crimes are distinct, and the indictment is vicious; but if the word separaliter is used, then the affirmation is that each was guilty of a separate offence. 2 Hale, Pl. Cr. 174.

SEPARATE ACTION. An action is so called which each of several persons must bring when they are denied the privilege of joining in one suit. See JOINDER.

SEPARATE ESTATE. That which belongs to one only of several persons: as, the separate estate of a partner, which does not belong to the partnership. 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1519.

The separate estate of a married woman is that which belongs to her and over which her husband has no right in equity. It may consist of lands or chattels. Firemen's Ins. Co. of Albany v. Bay, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 409.

See MARRIED WOMAN.

SEPARATE MAINTENANCE. The allowance made by a husband to his wife for her separate support and maintenance. In general, if a wife is abandoned by her husband, without fault on her part, and left without adequate means of support, a bill in equity will lie to compel the husband to support her, without asking for or procuring a decree of divorce; Schoul. Hus. & W. § 485; Garland v. Garland, 50 Miss. 694; Van Arsdalen v. Van Arsdalen, 30 N. J. Eq. 359.

When this allowance is regularly paid, and notice of it has been given, no person who has received such notice will be entitled to recover against the husband for necessities furnished to the wife, because the liability of the husband depends on a presumption of authority delegated by him to the wife, which is negatived by the facts of the case; 2 Stark. Ev. 699.

SEPARATE TRIAL. See JOINDER.

SEPARATION. A cessation of cohabitation of husband and wife by mutual agreement.

After much diversity of opinion in the English cases, the House of Lords upheld an agreement to live apart, and decreed specific performance of its covenants; 1 H. L. C. 538, followed in 4 De G., F. & J. 221; separation deeds are not per se against public policy; 12 Ch. Div. 605, per Jessel, M. R. See an interesting historical review of the English cases by R. J. Peaslee in 15 Harv. L. Rev. 638.

In this country the weight of authority is that there may be a valid agreement for a separation directly between the husband and wife, without the intervention of a trustee, which the courts will sanction; Carey v. Mackey, 82 Me. 516, 20 Atl. 84, 9 L. R. A. 113, 17 Am. St. Rep. 500; Randall v. Randall, 37 Mich. 563; Stebbins v. Morris, 19 Mont. 115, 47 Pac. 642; Hilbish v. Hattle, 145 Ind. 59, 44 N. E. 20, 33 L. R. A. 783; Sumner v. Sumner, 121 Ga. 1, 48 S. E. 727; the husband will be treated as trustee; Com. v. Richards, 131 Pa. 209, 18 Atl. 1007.

When subject to such an agreement, the court will prevent the husband from decreasing the alimony, and will not aid the wife to increase the alimony; Martin v. Martin, 65 Ia. 255, 21 N. W. 595; Henderson v. Henderson, 37 Or. 141, 60 Pac. 597, 61 Pac. 136, 48 L. R. A. 766, 82 Am. St. Rep. 741.

But it is held that a husband and wife cannot contract to renounce their marital rights; Hill v. Hill, 74 N. H. 288, 67 Atl. 406, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 848, 124 Am. St. Rep. 966; Rogers v. Rogers, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 516, 27 Am. Dec. 84, where it is said that the law does not sanction such agreements, but merely tolerates them when made in such a manner that they can be enforced by or against a third person acting on behalf of the wife; and to the same effect see Clark v. Post, 113 N. Y. 27, 20 N. E. 573; Baum v. Baum, 109 Wis. 47, 85 N. W. 122, 53 L. R. A. 650, 83 Am. St. Rep. 854, where such an agreement was held to be against public policy, as substituting the will of the parties for the judgment of the court, and involving the assumption of a false character in both parties contrary to the marriage contract and subversive of the interests of society.

The wife's allowance is not forfeited by adultery unless so provided, which is usually by the "dum casta" (while chaste) clause. If made in view of future separation, it is not good; 6 B. & C. 200. It is avoided by reconciliation; 31 Ch. D. 524; unless otherwise provided; [1904] 2 Ch. 121. But reconciliation does not necessarily put an end to a separation deed; e. g. where the husband had made in the separation deed a settlement on the children; [1904] 1 Ch. 451; but when the parties changed their mind and did not separate, it was held that the consideration had failed and the settlement was avoided; L. R. 7 Eq. 343; the distinction raised in this case is said to be a fine one; 20 L. Q. R. 234.

Reconciliation after separation supersedes special articles of separation, in courts of law and equity; 1 Dowl. P. C. 245; Wells v. Stout, 9 Cal. 479.

Articles of separation are no bar to proceedings for divorce for subsequent cause; Rogers v. Rogers, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 516, 27 Am. Dec. 84; J. G. v. H. G., 33 Md. 401, 3 Am. Rep. 183.

SEPARATION A MENSA ET THORO. A partial dissolution of the marriage relation.

By the ecclesiastical or canon law of England, which had exclusive jurisdiction over marriage and divorce, marriage was regarded as a sacrament and indissoluble. This doctrine originated with the church of Rome, and became established in England. After the reformation it ceased to be the doctrine of the church of England, yet the law remained unchanged until the statute of 20 & 21 Vict. (1857) c. 85, and amendments; Bish. Marr. & D. § 65, n. 225; 1 Bish. M. Div. & S. § 1377. Hence a valid marriage could not be dissolved in England except by what has been termed the omnipotent power of parliament.

This gave rise, in the ecclesiastical courts, to the practice of granting divorces from bed and board, as they used to be called, or judicial separation, as they are called in the statute 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, § 7; Bish. Marr. & D. § 65, n. 225; 1 Bish. M. D. & S. § 1377. From England this practice was introduced into this country; and though in some of the states it has entirely given way to the divorce a vinculo matrimonii, in others it is still in use, being generally granted for causes which are not sufficient to authorize the latter.

The legal consequences of a separation from bed and board are much less extensive than those of a divorce a vinculo matrimonii or a sentence of nullity. Such a separation works no change in the relation of the parties either to each other or to third persons, except in authorizing them to live apart until they mutually come together. In coming together, no new marriage is required; neither, it seems, under the general law, are any new proceedings in court necessary; but the reconciliation, of its own force, annuls the sentence of separation; Dean v. Richmond, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 461; Barrere v. Barrere, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 187; Thompson v. Thompson, 2 Dall. (Pa.) 128, 1 L. Ed. 317; Cro. Eliz. 908.

Nor does such a separation, at common law and without statutory aid, change the relation of the parties as to property. Thus, it neither takes away the right of the wife to dower, nor the right of the husband to the wife's real estate, either during her life or after her death, as tenant by the curtesy; neither does it affect the husband's right in a court of law to reduce into possession the choses in action of the wife; though in equity it may be otherwise; Kriger v. Day, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 316; Clark v. Clark, 6 Watts & S. (Pa.) 85; Cro. Eliz. 908; Holmes v. Holmes, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 295.

It should be observed, however, that in this country the consequences of a judicial separation are frequently modified by statute. See Bishop. Marr. & D. §§ 660-695, Bish. M. D. & S. § 1832.

Of those consequences which depend upon the order and decree of the court, the most important is that of alimony. See ALIMONY. In respect to the custody of children, the rules are the same as, in case of divorce a vinculo matrimonii; Bish. Marr. & D. c. 25.

SEPTENNIAL ACT. An act which fixed the extreme duration of a Parliament at seven years. See PARLIAMENTARY ACT.

SEPTUM. An enclosure. Cowell.

SEPULCHRE. The place where a corpse is buried. The violation of sepulchres is a misdemeanor at common law.

See DEAD BODY; CEMETERY.

SEQUATUR SUB SUO PERICULO. A writ that lay where a summons ad warrantizandum was awarded, and the sheriff returned that he had nothing whereby he might be summoned, then issued an alias and a pluries, and if he came not in on the pluries, this writ issued. O. N. B. 163.

SEQUELA CAUSÆ. The process and depending issue of a cause for trial. Cowell.

SEQUELA CURIÆ. Suit of court. Cowell.

SEQUELA VILLANORUM. The family retinue and appurtenances to the goods and chattels of villeins, which were at the absolute disposal of the lord. Par. Ant. 216.

SEQUESTER. In Civil and Ecclesiastical Law. To renounce. Example: when a widow comes into court and disclaims having anything to do or to intermeddle with her deceased husband's estate, she is said to sequester. Jacob, Law Dict.

SEQUESTRATIO. The separating or setting aside of a thing in controversy, from the possession of both the parties that contend for it; it is twofold—voluntary, done by consent of all parties; and necessary, when a judge orders it.

SEQUESTRATION. In Chancery Practice. A writ of commission, sometimes directed to the sheriff, but usually to four or more commissioners of the complainant's own nomination, authorizing them to enter upon the real or personal estate of the defendant, and to take the rents, issues, and profits into their own hands, and keep possession of or pay the same, as the court shall order or direct, until the party who is in contempt shall do that which he is enjoined to do and which is especially mentioned in the writ. Newl. Ch. Pr. 18; Blake, Ch. Pr. 103. See Asburner, Equity 38-45, for an interesting account of the development of the process of equity. Sequestration is the practice in the king's bench division of the High Court in England to enforce an order to pay money into court or to do any other act in a limited time; it goes against the rents and profits of the real estate and all the personal estate of the person who disobeys the order; 3 Steph. Com. 566.

A process for contempt, used by chancery courts, to compel a performance of their orders and decrees. Ryan v. Kingsbery, 88 Ga. 361, 14 S. E. 596.

Upon the return of non est inventus to a commission of rebellion, a sergeant-at-arms may be moved for; and if he certifies that the defendant cannot be taken, a motion may be made upon his certificate for an order for a sequestration; 2 Madd. Ch. Pr. 203; Blake, Ch. Pr. 103. It is the process formerly used instead of an attachment to secure the appearance of persons having the privilege of peerage or parliament, before a court of equity; Adams, Eq. 326.

Under a sequestration upon mesne process, as in respect of a contempt for want of appearance or answer, the sequestrators may take possession of the party's personal property and keep him out of possession, but no sale can take place, unless perhaps to pay expenses; for this process is only to form the foundation of taking the bill pro confesso. After a decree it may be sold. See 3 Bro. C. C. 72, 372; 2 Cox, Ch. 224.

A judgment of sequestration does not dissolve the corporation against which it is rendered, but it may appeal from an adverse judgment in an action brought by it and pending when the judgment of sequestration was rendered; Auburn Button Co. v. Sylvester, 68 Hun (N. Y.) 401, 22 N. Y. Supp. 891.

See, generally, as to this species of sequestration, 19 Viner, Abr. 325; Bac. Abr. Sequestration; Com. Dig. Chancery (D 7, Y 4); 1 Hov. Suppl. to Ves. 25; 7 Vern., Raithby ed. 58, n. 1, 421, n. 1.

In England the glebes and tithes of a parsonage are not liable to be seized on execution to satisfy a judgment, but they are made liable to sequestration; 2 Steph. Com. 715. In some cases the bishop may sequester the profits of a benefice and apply them according to law; id. 742.

In Contracts. A species of deposit which two or more persons, engaged in litigation about anything, make of the thing in contest with an indifferent person, who binds himself to restore it, when the issue is decided, to the party to whom it is adjudged to belong. La. Code, art. 2942; Story, Bailm. § 45. See 19 Viner, Abr. 325; 1 Vern. 58, 420; 2 Ves. 23.

In Louisiana. A mandate of the court, ordering the sheriff, in certain cases, to take in his possession, and to keep, a thing of which another person has the possession, until after the decision of a suit, in order that it be delivered to him who shall be adjudged entitled to have the property or possession of that thing. This is what is properly called a judicial sequestration. See Pitot v. Elmes, 1 Mart. O. S. (La.) 79; La. Civ. Code 2941, 2948.

SEQUESTRATOR. One to whom a sequestration is made.

A depositary of this kind cannot exonerate himself from the care of the thing sequestered in his hands, unless for some cause rendering it indispensable that he should resign his trust. La. Civ. Code, art. 2947.

Officers appointed by a court of chancery and named in a writ of sequestration. As to their powers and duties, see 2 Madd. Ch. Pr. 205.

SERF. In Feudal Law. A term applied to a class of persons who were bound to perform very onerous duties towards others. Pothier, Des Personnes.

The serf cannot be spoken of as a slave; in relation to his lord, the general rule makes him rightless, but as to all other men he was treated as a free man. Except where the lord was concerned, criminal law made no difference between bond and free. In his relation to the state, it is highly probable that he could not act as a judge of free men, unless perhaps in the manorial courts; he could not be a juror in civil causes. He filled lower offices in the manorial courts; he paid taxes and was expected to have arms. Almost always the serf was a born serf; a person born free rarely became a serf. There were no degrees of personal freedom; there was no such thing as mere praedial serfage. The serf could be emancipated by the lord by a charter of manumission, or impliedly by a grant of land to be held freely by the serf and his heirs, for a serf can have no heir but his lord, or by certain acts which treat him as free. He becomes free by dwelling for a year and day on the king's demesne or in a privileged town; by being knighted (but the knighted serf can be degraded when his servility is proved); by entering religion or receiving holy orders. This is a bare outline of what is said (1 Poll. & Maitl. 395-415) to be the law of serfage in the 13th century. See Maitl. Domesday Book 26.

SERGEANT-AT-ARMS. An officer appointed by a legislative body, whose duties are to enforce the orders given by such bodies, generally under the warrant of its presiding officer.

SERIATIM (Lat.). In a series; severally: as, the judges delivered their opinions seriatim.

SERIOUS. Important, weighty, momentous, and not trifling. Lawlor v. People, 74 Ill. 231. A serious injury is defined by statute in Ohio to be any such injury as shall permanently or temporarily disable a person receiving it from earning a livelihood by manual labor; Ohio L. 1892, 136; and serious bodily injury is held to be one which gives rise to apprehension, or is attended with great danger. George v. State, 21 Tex. App. 317, 17 S. W. 351.

SERJEANT-COUNTEUR. See COUNTEUR.

SERJEANTS-AT-LAW. A very ancient and the most honorable order of advocates at the common law.

They were called, formerly, countors, or serjeant-countors, or countors of the bench (in the old law-Latin phrase, banci narratores), and are mentioned by Matthew Paris in the life of John I., written in 1255. They are limited to fifteen in number, in addition to the judges of the courts of Westminster, who were always admitted before being advanced to the bench. This legal monopoly of the bench lasted, in theory, till 1875, though in recent years a judge designate was made a serjeant as a preliminary to being sworn into office. Jenks, Hist. E. L. 199.

The most distinctive feature in the Serjeant's dress in olden times was the "coif," a close-fitting head-covering of lawn or silk. He was invested with this on the day of his call by the chief justice of the king's bench, and it was not doffed even in the presence of the sovereign. It is supposed that the coif was invented for the purpose of hiding the clerical tonsure. This concealment became desirable after the law of 1217, which debarred churchmen from their lucrative practice in the courts.

The most valuable privilege formerly enjoyed by the serjeants was the monopoly of the practice in the court of common pleas. A bill was introduced into parliament for the purpose of destroying this monopoly, in 1755, which did not pass. In 1833, a warrant under the sign manual was directed to the judges of the common pleas, commanding them to open that court to the bar at large. The order was received and complied with. In 1839, the matter was brought before the court and decided to be illegal; 10 Bingh. 571; 6 Bingh. N. C. 187, 232. The exclusive privilege of serjeants to appear at the bar of the common pleas was argued before the privy council by Lord Brougham in 1839; see Manning's Scrivens ad Legem.

The statute 9 & 10 Vict. c. 54, has since extended the privilege to all barristers; 3 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 27, n. Upon the Judicature Act coming into operation, the institution and office of serjeant-at-law virtually came to an end; Weeks, Att. at Law § 33.

In 1812 Mr. Justice Story made an order in the United States circuit court for the first circuit conferring upon Jeremiah Smith and Jeremiah Mason "the honorable decree of Serjeant-at-Law"; Charles Warren, in 46 Am. L. Rev. 667.

The last surviving serjeant-at-law was Lord Justice Lindley, who was admitted to Serjeant's Inn in 1875.

See Experiences of Serjeant Ballantine, Lond. 1882; Pulling, Order of Coif; INNS OF COURT; FARYNDON INN.

SERJEANTS' INN. The Inn to which the serjeants-at-law belonged, near Chancery Lane, formerly called Faryndon Inn. See INNS OF COURT; 3 Steph. Com. 292. It no longer exists.

SERJEANTY. In English Law. A species of service which cannot be due or performed from a tenant to any lord but the king, and is either grand or petit.

"The exact idea of serjeanty as conceived in the thirteenth century," says a recent writer on this subject, "is not one easily defined." Several different classes of men were grouped together under one heading, the bond between them being very slight, and the distinction between serjeanty and knight's service on the one hand and socage on the other is hard to determine; 1 Poll. & Maitl. 262.

Serjeanty means service. The serjeant means primarily one who serves. Those who follow the law are serjeants-at-law. The tenants by serjeanty are no doubt the descendants of the servientes of Domesday Book, who held land in many counties as the servants, in many capacities, of the king and the great nobles. There were many peculiar features of this tenure in the 13th century. Land so held went back to the donor when the tenant died. When it descended to the heir, the relief was arbitrary. The land was never partitioned, because personal services could not be partitioned. Land long remained inalienable. Of the non-military serjeanties held under the king, there were services which were rather regarded as conferring dignity than as service: to carry the king's banner and the like. Many tenants held by the tenure of doing a variety of humbler services. Similarly, the great lords let lands to be held by serjeanty, the tenants being the servants of the lord. The importance of this class of tenants was very great.

In the 12th and 13th centuries the military serjeanties supplied the feudal army with light auxiliary troops, attendants on the knights, material for war, etc., and this both to the king and the mesne lord. In the 14th century there was a tendency to substitute the contract with the hired servant for the status of the tenant in serjeanty. As a result, little was left except the tenure of those who held by the tenure of dignified services to the king, or some service pertaining to war.

In Britton's day, serjeanty was specially, but not exclusively, connected with war and the idea arose that all tenure by serjeanty must be tenure in chief; Litt. § 161. The distinction, in a social sense, between these two surviving classes was expressed by the terms "grand" and "petit." They came to have a technical meaning, due probably to the need for settling the question whether tenure by serjeanty gave rise to the incidents of wardship and marriage; 1 Poll. & Maitl. 304. As the greater number of the old serjeanties dropped out, there remained only the serjeanties performed by the great nobility on state occasions and the smaller military serjeanties. Tenure by the latter class came to be "but socage in effect"; Litt. § 160; and tenure by the former class came to be similar to tenure by knight service, till it also was turned into tenure by socage by an act in 1660 which abolished military tenures, but preserved the honorary services due from the tenant by grand serjeanty; 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 39. Estates conferred by the crown in recognition of distinguished public services are generally held by petit serjeanty; Jenks, Mod. Land Law 23.

SERVAGE. Where a tenant, besides his rent, finds one or more workmen for his lord's service. King John brought the Crown of England in servage to the see of Rome; 2 Inst. 174; Whart. Dict.

SERVANTS. Domestics; those who receive wages, and who are lodged and fed in the house of another and employed in his service. Such servants are not particularly recognized by law.

One who serves, or does service, voluntary or involuntary; a person who is employed by another for menial offices or for other labor, and is subject to his command;

a person who labors or exerts himself for the benefit of another, his master or employer; a subordinate helper. Webst., approved in Flesh v. Lindsay, 115 Mo. 1, 21 S. W. 907, 37 Am. St. Rep. 374. They are called menial servants, or domestics, from living infra mœnia, within the walls of the house. 1 Bla. Com. 324; Wood, Inst. 53.

The right of the master to their services in every respect is grounded on the contract between them.

Laborers or persons hired by the day's work or any longer time are not considered servants; Boniface v. Scott, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 351. See 12 Ves. 114; Delphine v. Deveze, 2 Mart. N. S. (La.) 652; DOMESTIC; OPERATIVE; MASTER AND SERVANT.

In the branch of the law called master and servant, the latter word has a much broader meaning than mere domestic servants.

SERVI. See SERVUS.

SERVICE. In Contracts. The being employed to serve another.

In cases of seduction, the gist of the action is not the injury which the seducer has inflicted on the parent by destroying his peace of mind and the reputation of his child, but for the consequent inability to perform those services for which she was accountable to her master or her parent, who assumes this character for the purpose. See SEDUCTION.

In Feudal Law. That duty which the tenant owed to his lord by reason of his fee or estate.

The services, in respect of their quality, were either free or base, and in respect of their quantity, and the time of exacting them, were either certain or uncertain. 2 Bla. Com. 62.

In Civil Law. A servitude.

In Practice. The execution of a writ or process. Thus, to serve a writ of capias signifies to arrest a defendant under the process; Kirb. 48; Gage v. Graffam, 11 Mass. 181; to serve a summons is to deliver a copy of it at the house of the party, or to deliver it to him personally, or to read it to him: notices and other papers are served by delivering the same at the house of the party, or to him in person. The manner of service is usually statutory.

But where personal service is impossible, through the non-residence or absence of a party, constructive service by publication is, in some cases, permitted, and is effected by publishing the paper to be served in a newspaper designated in the order of court and, by mailing a copy of the paper to the last known address of the party, or as regulated by statute.

Substituted service is a constructive service made upon some recognized representative, as where a statute requires a foreign insurance company doing business in the state of Massachusetts to appoint the insurance commissioner of the state their attorney, "upon whom all lawful processes in any proceeding against the company may be served with like effect as if the company existed in that commonwealth." Questions are constantly arising as to the validity of service on some particular agent of a foreign corporation within state statutes giving jurisdiction in suits against such corporations. It was held in Louisiana that any service sufficient as against a domestic corporation might be, by law, sufficient against a foreign one, and consequently, that such service might be made upon the president of the latter while temporarily within the jurisdiction of the court in which the suit was commenced; In re Curtis, 115 La. 918, 40 South. 334, 112 Am. St. Rep. 284, 5 Ann. Cas. 950; but the rule laid down by the federal courts is that such service is insufficient; Goldey v. Morning News, 156 U. S. 518, 15 Sup. Ct. 559, 39 L. Ed. 517; Fidelity Trust & Safety Vault Co. v. R. Co., 53 Fed. 850. See FOREIGN CORPORATION. But it was held by the circuit court that when the manager of a corporation goes into another state on business of the corporation, service of summons against the corporation in a suit relating to that business may be made on him there; Houston v. Filer & Stowell Co., 85 Fed. 757.

"It is useful in all cases to consult the careful opinion in U. S. v. Tel. Co., 29 Fed. 17, and to re-state the three conditions which it is there said must concur or co-exist in order to give the federal courts jurisdiction in personam over a corporation created in another state: (1) It must appear as a matter of fact that the corporation is carrying on its business in the state where it is served with process; (2) that such business is transacted or managed by some agent or officer appointed by and representing the corporation in such state; and (3) the existence of some local law making such corporation, or foreign corporations generally, amenable to suit there, as a condition, express or implied, of doing business in the state." Union Associated Press v. Printing Co., 83 Fed. 823.

Where one was brought into a state by extradition proceedings, and had given bail for his appearance, and later returned for trial, and after acquittal was served with civil process, it was held that he was privileged from such service; Murray v. Wilcox, 122 Ia. 188, 97 N. W. 1087, 64 L. R. A. 534, 101 Am. St. Rep. 263; contra, Clark v. McFarland, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 636; Com. v. Daniel, 4 Clark (Pa.) 49. One going into another state as a witness or as a party defendant in a suit therein, either nominally or as a defendant in interest, is exempt from process in such state, while necessarily attending in respect to such trial; Skinner & Mounce Co. v. Waite, 155 Fed. 828.

The privilege from service of summons accorded to suitors going to, attending, or returning from court, extends to both residents and non-residents; Barber v. Knowles, 77 Ohio St. 81, 82 N. E. 1065, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 663, 11 Ann. Cas. 1144; but it is held that a non-resident coming into the state to attend trial upon an indictment is not exempt from service of process in a civil suit; Netograph Mfg. Co. v. Scruggam, 197 N. Y. 377, 90 N. E. 962, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 333, 134 Am. St. Rep. 886. One who voluntarily goes into the jurisdiction on business with the third parties takes the risk of being served there with process; Case v. Smith, Lineaweaver & Co., 152 Fed. 730.

Service obtained by inviting an officer of a New York corporation to come into New Jersey for an interview was considered as obtained by fraud; Cavanagh v. Transit Co., 133 Fed. 818.

Service of a subpoena in New York on a foreign steamship company may be made on its financial agent who is the head of a firm which is the general agent of the company; In re Hohorst, 150 U. S. 653, 14 Sup. Ct. 221, 37 L. Ed. 1211.

The residence of a corporate officer in a state does not necessarily give a corporation a domicile in the state. He must be there officially representing the corporation in its business; Conley v. Alkali Works, 190 U. S. 406, 23 Sup. Ct. 728, 47 L. Ed. 1113; Goldey v. Morning News, 156 U. S. 518, 15 Sup. Ct. 559, 39 L. Ed. 517; a mere travelling agent of a foreign corporation cannot receive service for it; Saxony Mills v. Wagner, 94 Miss. 233, 47 South. 899, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 834, 136 Am. St. Rep. 575, 19 Ann. Cas. 199.

A salaried agent, empowered to solicit advertisements for a non-resident newspaper corporation, and to make contracts therefor, and receive payment, and who carries on business at an office having the name of the newspaper on its windows, is a "managing agent," on whom valid service of process against the corporation may be made under the New York Code; Brewer v. George Knapp & Co., 82 Fed. 694.

In an action against a foreign corporation, service on an officer who is also the attorney in fact of the plaintiff to institute and prosecute the action is invalid and confers no jurisdiction; George v. Ginning Co., 46 S. C. 1, 24 S. E. 41, 32 L. R. A. 764, 57 Am. St. Rep. 671. Service cannot be made upon the deputy of a public officer, who has been designated as the proper agent of a foreign corporation to receive service; Bennett v. Supreme Tent of K. of M. of W., 40 Wash. 431, 82 Pac. 744, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 389. The statutory agent of a foreign corporation cannot admit or waive service where it has not been properly made; Bennett v. Supreme Tent of K. of M. of W., 40 Wash. 431, 82 Pac. 744, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 389.

Service by publication is in general held valid only in proceedings in rem, where the subject-matter is within the jurisdiction of the court, as in suits in partition, attachment, for the foreclosure of mortgages, and the enforcement of mechanics' liens.

Where non-residents hold real property within a state, jurisdiction over them may be obtained, under a statute, by publication of notice; Connor v. R. Co., 109 Fed. 931, 48 C. C. A. 730, 54 L. R. A. 687. The appointment of a trustee to convey land in an action for a specific performance is a proceeding in rem, and notice by publication may be given to non-resident defendants; Hollander v. Supply Co., 109 Md. 131, 71 Atl. 442, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1135.

A state may make reasonable discriminations in regard to service of process for enforcement of liens for taxes and assessments on real estate between resident and non-resident owners, providing for personal service on the former and service by publication on the latter; Ballard v. Hunter, 204 U. S. 241, 27 Sup. Ct. 261, 51 L. Ed. 461. But in the absence of statutory authority, there is no power to order personal service of process upon the defendant outside the jurisdiction. Jennings v. Johnson, 148 Fed. 337, 78 C. C. A. 329; and statutes authorizing substituted services are to be strictly construed; Gage v. Trust Co., 156 Fed. 1002.

Service out of the jurisdiction is "all but annulled in England"; 19 L. Q. Rev. 123.

An act providing for service on a domestic corporation by advertising, in cases where no service can be had in the county, does not violate the federal Constitution; Ward Lumber Co. v. Mfg. Co., 107 Va. 626, 59 S. E. 476, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 324.

A judgment against a domestic corporation based upon service by publication is good; Clearwater Mercantile Co. v. Shoe Co., 51 Fla. 176, 40 South. 436, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 117, 120 Am. St. Rep. 153. Service by publication is valid in an action for tort, where the defendant is a resident of the state, but cannot be personally served in the county; Nelson v. R. Co., 225 Ill. 197, 80 N. E. 109, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1186, 116 Am. St. Rep. 133; the legislature may provide for the re-establishment of lost records of title to real estate upon process served by publication against unknown claimants; Title & Document Restoration Co. v. Kerrigan, 150 Cal. 289, 88 Pac. 356, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 682, 119 Am. St. Rep. 99, 11 Ann. Cas. 465.

Where an ancillary bill was filed in the court where the principal case was pending, substituted service on the defendant's counsel in the principal case was held good; Pike v. Gregory, 94 Fed. 373, 36 C. C. A. 299.

In many of the states statutes have been passed to meet this class of cases. In purely personal actions, service by publication is invalid, upon the well-settled principle that the person or thing proceeded against must be within the jurisdiction of the court entertaining the cause of action. Neal v. Scruggs, 95 U. S. 704, 24 L. Ed. 586; Insurance Co. v. Bangs, 103 U. S. 439, 26 L. Ed. 580;

Story, Conf. L. § 539. No court can exercise, at common law, jurisdiction over a party unless he is served with the process within the jurisdiction of the court or voluntarily appears; Mexican Cent. R. Co. v. Pinkney, 149 U. S. 194, 13 Sup. Ct. 859, 37 L. Ed. 699; or service is upon some one authorized to accept service on his behalf, or the want of due service is waived by a general appearance, or otherwise; Caledonian Coal Co. v. Baker, 196 U. S. 432, 25 Sup. Ct. 375, 49 L. Ed. 540.

Where suit was brought in Massachusetts against a non-resident, and he, in Pennsylvania, accepted service of process, it was held that this did not give the court jurisdiction; Hocking Valley Bk. v. Barton, 72 Pa. 110; to the same effect; White v. White, 66 W. Va. 79, 66 S. E. 2, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1279, 135 Am. St. Rep. 1013.

Substituted service will be allowed upon a defendant who was within the jurisdiction when the writ issued, but had left the country (though not to evade service), before service could be made; 77 L. T. R. 335.

Where a suit is brought to enforce a lien on real estate in the district to remove a cloud on the title, the plaintiffs are entitled to get substituted service on a non-resident party in order to bring him within the jurisdiction of the court; Compton v. Jesup, 68 Fed. 263, 15 C. C. A. 397, 31 U. S. App. 486.

Proceedings in divorce are sometimes recognized as forming an exception to the rule; 1 Bish. Marr. Div. & Sep. § 837; Bish. Mar. & D. § 159.

A suit in equity in the federal court is commenced by suing out process and a hona fide attempt to serve it; U. S. v. Lumber Co., 85 Fed. 827, 29 C. C. A. 431.

Priority of jurisdiction between two courts of concurrent jurisdiction is determined by the date of the service of process; Schuehle v. Reiman, 86 N. Y. 271; In re Alexander, 84 Fed. 633; as to criminal cases, see Taylor v. Taintor, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 366, 21 L. Ed. 287. As to the effect of service in relation to the commencement of actions see LIMITATION.

See DIVORCE; FOREIGN JUDGMENT; NON-RESIDENT.

When the service of a writ is prevented by the act of the party on whom it is to be served, it will, in general, be sufficient if the officer do everything in his power to serve it; 1 Mann. & G. 238.

Service of summons on a director of a company who was unfriendly to it and failed to report the service, but without collusion with the plaintiff, was ground for setting aside a default judgment thereon; Farrar v. Min. Co., 12 S. D. 237, 80 N. W. 1079.

Where the invalidity, irregularity or defect in service appears on the face of the papers, the objection may be taken by a motion to quash, but where it is necessary to prove such facts allunde it should be made by plea in abatement; Electric Vehicle Co. v. Motor Co., 157 Fed. 316 (S. D. of N. Y.). An order setting aside a return of service of a writ is a final order from which an appeal lies; Ben Franklin Coal Co. v. Water Co., 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 628.

If the service of a summons is not illegal, but slightly irregular, and the irregularity does not appear on the face of the return, it will not be set aside on motion, but the objection must be raised by plea; Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. Novak, 61 Fed. 573, 9 C. C. A. 629, 15 U. S. App. 400.

SERVITIIS ACQUIETANDIS. A judicial writ for a man distrained for services to one, when he owes and performs them to another, for the acquittal of such services. Reg. Jud. 27.

SERVITIUM DEBITUM (Lat.). Service due, under the feudal system, for land granted.

Royal service, or the prerogatives that within a royal manor, belonged to the lord of it, viz.: power of judicature in matters of property; of life and death in felonies and murders; right to waifs and estrays; remitting of money; assize of bread and beer, and weights and measures. Whart. Dict.

SERVITORS OF BILLS. Such servants or messengers of the marshal belonging to the king's bench as were heretofore sent abroad with bills or writs to summon men to that court, being now called "tip-staves." Blount; 2 Hen. IV. c. 23.

SERVITUDE. In Civil Law. The subjection of one person to another person, or of a person to a thing, or of a thing to a person, or of a thing to a thing.

A right which subjects a land or tenement to some service for the use of another land or tenement which belongs to another master. Domat, Civ. Law, Cushing's ed. § 1018.

A mixed servitude is the subjection of persons to things, or things to persons.

A natural servitude is one which arises in consequence of the natural condition or situation of the soil.

A personal servitude is the subjection of one person to another: if it consists in the right of property which a person exercises over another, it is slavery. When the subjection of one person to another is not slavery, it consists simply in the right of requiring of another what he is bound to do or not to do; this right arises from all kinds of contracts or quasi-contracts. Lois des Bât. p. 1, c. 1, art. 1.

A real or prædial servitude is a charge laid on an estate for the use and utility of another estate belonging to another proprietor. La. Code, art. 643. When used without any adjunct, the word servitude means a real or prædial servitude. Lois des Bât. p. 1, c. 1; Mitch. R. E. & Conv. 49. Real servitudes are divided into rural and urban.

Rural servitudes are those which are due by an estate to another estate, such as the right of passage over the serving estate, or that which owes the servitude, or to draw water from it, or to water cattle there, or to take coal, lime, and wood from it, and the like.

Urban servitudes are those which are established over a building for the convenience of another, such as the right of resting the joists in the wall of the serving building, of opening windows which overlook the serving estate, and the like. Dalloz, Dict. Servitudes.

This term is used as a translation of the Latin term servitus in the French and Scotch Law, Dalloz, Dict.; Paterson, Comp., and by many common-law writers, 3 Kent 434; Washb. Easem., and in the Civil Code of Louisiana. Service is used by Wood, Taylor, Harris, Cowper, and Cushing in his translation of Domat. Much of the common-law doctrine of easements is closely analogous to, and probably in part derived from, the civil-law doctrine of servitudes.

In common law the use of the word servitude is as a correlative of easement; where one person has an easement which creates a burden upon the property of another, the latter is said to be burdened with a servitude. All servitudes are stereotyped and cannot be varied at the pleasure of parties; Mershon v. Safe Deposit Co., 208 Pa. 295, 57 Atl. 569.

SERVITUS (Lat.). In Roman Law. Servitude; slavery; a state of bondage; a disposition of the law of nations by which, against common right, one man has been subjected to the dominion of another. Inst. 1. 2. 3; Bracton 4 b; Co. Litt. 116.

A service or servitude; a burden imposed by law, or the agreement of parties, upon one estate for the advantage of another, or for the benefit of another person than the owner.

Servitus actus, a right of way on horseback or in a carriage. Inst. 2. 3. pr.

Servitus altius non tollendi, a servitude preventing the owner of a house from building higher than his neighbor. Inst. 2. 3. 4; Paterson, Comp.

Servitus aquæ ducendæ, a right of leading water to one's own land over that of another. Inst. 2. 3. pr.

Servitus aquæ educendæ, a right of conducting water from one's own land upon a neighbor's. Dig. 8. 3. 29.

Servitus aquæ hauriendæ, a right of drawing water from another's spring or well. Inst. 2. 3. 2.

Servitus cloacæ mittendæ, a right of having a sewer through a neighbor's estate. Dig. 8. 1. 7.

Servitus fumi immittendi, a right of conducting smoke or vapor through a neighbor's chimney or over his ground. Dig. 8. 5. 8.

Servitus itineris, a right of way on horseback or in a carriage. This includes a servitus actus. Inst. 2. 3.

SERVUS (Lat.). A slave.

The institution of slavery is traced to the remotest antiquity. It is referred to in the poems of Homer; and all the Greek philosophers mention it without the slightest censure. Aristotle justified it on the ground of a diversity of race. The Roman jurists rest the institution of slavery on the law of nations: in a fragment of Florentinus copied in the Institutes of Justinian, servitude is defined, Servitus autem est constitutio juris gentium, qua quis dominio alieno contra naturam subicitur. D. 1. 5. 4. 1; Inst. 1. 3. 2. The Romans considered that they had the right of killing their prisoners of war, manu capti; and that by preserving their lives, servati, they did not abandon but only postponed the exercise of that right. Such was, according to their ideas, the origin of the right of the master over his slave. Hence the etymology of the words servi, from servati, and mancipia, from manu capti, by which slaves were designated. It is, however, more simple and correct to derive the word servus from servire. Inst. 1. 3. 3. Children born of a woman who was a slave followed the condition of their mother; servi nascuntur aut fiunt.

A free person might be reduced to slavery in various ways: by captivity, ex captivitate. The Roman who was taken prisoner by the enemy lost all his rights as a citizen and a freedman: thus, when Regulus was brought to Rome by the Carthaginian ambassadors he refused to take his seat among the senators, saying that he was nothing but a slave. But if he had made his escape and returned to Rome, all his rights would have been restored to him by the jus postliminii; and the whole period of his captivity would have been effaced, and he would have been considered as if he had never lost his freedom. According to the law of the Twelve Tables, the insolvent debtor became the slave of his creditor, by a judgment rendered in a proceeding called manus injectio,—one of the four leges actiones. The thief taken in the act of stealing, or while he was carrying the thing stolen to the place where he intended to conceal it, was deprived of his freedom, and became a slave. So was a person, who, for the purpose of defrauding the state, omitted to have his name inscribed on the table of the census. The illicit intercourse of a free woman with a slave without the permission of his master, the sentence to a capital punishment and the sentence to work perpetually in the mines,—in metallum dati,—made the culprit the slave as his punishment (servi pœnæ). The ingratitude of the emancipated slave towards his patron or former master and the fraud of a freeman who had suffered himself to be sold by an accomplice (after having attained the age of twenty years) in order to divide the price of the sale, were so punished.

Liberty being inalienable, no one could sell himself; but in order to perpetrate a fraud on the purchaser, a freeman was offered for sale as a slave and bought by an innocent purchaser: after the price had been paid and divided between the confederates, the pretended slave claimed and, of course, obtained his freedom. To remedy this evil and punish this fraud, a senatus consultum issued under Claudius provided that the person who had thus suffered himself to be sold should lose his liberty and remain a slave. In the social and political organization slaves were not taken into consideration; they had no status. Quod attinet ad jus civile, servi pro nullis habentur. Servitutem mortalitati fere comparamus. With regard to the master there was no distinction in the condition of slaves: they were all equally subject to the domini potestas. But the master some times established a distinction between the servi vicarii and the servi ordinarii: the former exercised a certain authority over the latter. But there was a marked difference between those slaves of whom we have been speaking and the coloni censiti, ascripti and tributarii, who resembled the serfs of the middle ages. 1 Ortolan 27; 1 Etienne 68 et seq.; Lagrange 93. See SLAVE. As to the distinction between servus and serf, see SERF.

SESSION. The time during which a legislative body, a court, or other assembly, sits for the transaction of business: as, a session of congress, which commences on the day appointed by the constitution, and ends when congress finally adjourns before the commencement of next session; the session of a court which commences at the day appointed by law, and ends when the court finally rises. Cited in People v. Auditor of Public Accounts, 64 Ill. 86; Ralls v. Wyand, 138 Pac. 158, 12 Okl. L. J. 265.

A term.

SESSION LAWS. A term used to designate the printed statutes as passed at the successive legislative sessions of the various states. In Pennsylvania they are usually called pamphlet laws. See PAMPHLET LAWS.

SESSIONAL ORDERS. Certain orders agreed to by both houses of parliament at the commencement of each session, and in force only during that session. May, P. L.

SESSIONS OF THE PEACE. In English Law. Sittings of justices of the peace for the execution of the powers which are confided to them as such.

Petty sessions (or petit sessions) are sittings held by one or more justices for the trial of minor offences, admitting to bail prisoners accused of felony, and the like purposes.

When sitting for purposes of preliminary inquiry, the public cannot claim admittance; but it is otherwise when sitting for purposes of adjudication.

Special sessions are sittings of two or more justices on a particular occasion for the exercise of some given branch of their authority, upon reasonable notice given to the other magistrates of the hundred or other division of the county, city, etc., for which they are convened. See stat. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 33.

The counties are distributed into divisions, and authority given by various statutes to the justices acting for the several divisions to transact different descriptions of business, such as licensing alehouses, or appointing overseers of the poor, surveyors of the highways, etc., at special sessions. 3 Steph. Com., 11th ed. 37.

General sessions of the peace are courts of record, holden before the justices, whereof one is of the quorum, for execution of the general authority given to the justices by the commission of the peace and certain acts of parliament.

See COURT OF GENERAL QUARTER SESSIONS OF THE PEACE.

SET ASIDE. To annul; to make void: as, to set aside an award.

When proceedings are irregular, they may be set aside on motion of the party whom they injuriously affect.

SET OF EXCHANGE. The different parts of a bill of exchange, taken together. Each part is a perfect instrument by itself; but the parts are numbered successively, and upon payment of any one the others become useless. See Chitty, Bills 175; Pars. Notes & B.

SETI. As used in mining laws, lease. Brown.

SET-OFF. In Practice. A demand which a defendant makes against the plaintiff in the suit for the purpose of liquidating the whole or a part of his claim. See Mitchell v. McLean, 7 Fla. 329.

A set-off is generally considered to be a matter which will be capable of use as an offset to any recovery by the plaintiff. A counterclaim is a matter which is capable of use as a basis for a judgment for relief against the plaintiff, and, of course, may be used as a set-off as well. Marconi Wireless Tel. Co. v. Signaling Co., 206 Fed. 295.

A set-off was unknown to the common law; according to which mutual debts were distinct, and inextinguishable except by actual payment or release; Waterm. Set-Off; Com. v. Clarkson, 1 Rawle (Pa.) 293; Babingt. Set-Off 1.

The statute 2 Geo. II. c. 22, which has been generally adopted in the United States, with some modifications, in cases of mutual debts, however, allowed the defendant to set his debt against the other, either by pleading it in bar, or giving it in evidence, when proper notice had been given of such intention, under the general issue. The statute, being made for the benefit of the defendant, is not compulsory; Himes v. Barnitz, 8 Watts (Pa.) 39; the defendant may waive his right, and bring a cross-action against the plaintiff; 2 Camp. 594; Hinckly v. Walters, 9 Watts (Pa.) 179.

It seems, however, that in some cases of intestate estates and of insolvent estates, perhaps owing to the peculiar wording of the law, the statute has been held to operate on the rights of the parties before action brought or an act done by either of them; App v. Dreisbach, 2 Rawle (Pa.) 293, 21 Am. Dec. 447; Murray v. Williamson, 3 Binn. (Pa.) 135; Bac. Abr. Bankrupt (K). See Stetson v. Exch. Bk., 7 Gray (Mass.) 425.

Set-off takes place only in actions on contracts for the payment of money: as, assumpsit, debt, and covenant; and where the claim set off grows out of a transaction independent of the contract sued on; Avery v. Brown, 31 Conn. 398; the claims to be set off against each other must both be due. In a suit by a railroad company, the company's coupons which had matured during the suit are admissible under a set-off, but not those that had matured after the appointment of a receiver of the plaintiff company; Wheeling Bridge & Terminal Ry. Co. v. Cochran, 68 Fed. 141, 15 C. C. A. 321, 25 U. S. App. 306. An unliquidated claim cannot be set off against one which is for a stipulated amount. Damages for malicious prosecution cannot be set off in an action for rent; Dietrich v. Ely, 63 Fed. 413, 11 C. C. A. 266, 24 U. S. App. 21. A set-off is not allowed in actions arising ex delicto; as, upon the case, trespass, replevin, or detinue; Bull. N. P. 181; Donohue v. Henry, 4 E. D. Sm. (N. Y.) 162. And an independent tort cannot be made a defense against another tort, either by way of set-off or counter-claim; Keller v. B. F. Goodrich Co., 117 Ind. 556, 19 N. E. 196, 10 Am. St. Rep. 88; Christy v. Jones, 39 Kan. 183, 18 Pac. 56; nor is a set-off available as a defence to an action of tort; Marlowe v. Rogers, 102 Ala. 510, 14 South. 790. Nor can there be a set-off to a set-off; Hill v. Roberts, 86 Ala. 523, 6 South. 39. The right of set-off, except in equity, is a matter of local legislation, and the federal court will follow the rules established by the tribunals of the state in which it is sitting; Charnley v. Sibley, 73 Fed. 980, 20 C. C. A. 157.

In Pennsylvania, if it appear at the trial that the plaintiff is overpaid, then defendant has a certificate of the amount due to him, which has the effect of a verdict against the plaintiff; Moore's Appeal, 10 Pa. 436. But the plaintiff may suffer a nonsuit, notwithstanding a plea of set-off; McCredy v. Fey, 7 Watts (Pa.) 496.

The matters which may be set off may be mutual liquidated debts or damages; but unliquidated damages cannot be set off; Cumings v. Morris, 16 N. Y. Super. Ct. 560; McCracken v. Elder, 34 Pa. 239; Walker v. McCoy, 34 Ala. 659; Bodman v. Harris, 20 Tex. 31.

Damages for malicious prosecution cannot be set off in an action for rent; Dietrich v. Ely, 63 Fed. 413, 11 C. C. A. 266, 24 U. S. App. 21. There must be a mutuality in claims to authorize a set-off; Kinney v. Tabor, 62 Mich. 517, 29 N. W. 86, 512. The statutes refer only to mutual unconnected debts; for at common law, when the nature of the employment, transaction, or dealings necessarily constitute an account consisting of receipts and payments, debts and credits, the balance only is considered to be the debt, and therefore in an action it is not necessary in such cases either to plead or give notice of set-off; 4 Burr. 2221. By joining his wife in a suit for her legacy, a husband exercises his election to treat it as joint property; and in such case her debt, dum sola, may be set off, but not his own debt; if he sues alone, his debt may be set off, but not hers dum sola; Wingate v. Parsons, 4 Del. Ch. 117.

A purchaser of goods from the agent of a known principal cannot set off a sum owing to him from the agent; Moline Malleable Iron Co. v. Iron Co., 83 Fed. 66, 27 C. C. A. 442.

A claim, an action to recover which would be barred by statute, is also barred as a set-off; Parker v. Ins. Co., 61 Vt. 65, 17 Atl. 724; but a plea of set-off cannot be defeated by the statute of limitations, where the claim offered to be set off was a legal subsisting claim at the time the right of action accrued to the plaintiff on the claim in the suit; Patrick v. Petty, 83 Ala. 420, 3 South. 779.

Set-off against the government will only be allowed after the claim has been rejected by the accounting department, or where a statute permits it; U. S. v. Giles, 9 Cra. (U. S.) 213, 3 L. Ed. 708. There can be no recovery on an independent claim against a state; Com. v. Matlack, 4 Dall. (U. S.) 303, 1 L. Ed. 843.

A depositor in an insolvent bank, who had indorsed a note that was subsequently discounted by said bank, can, in a suit by the bank to recover the amount of the note, set off his deposit against this amount, when the note matured after the insolvency of the bank; Yardley v. Clothier, 49 Fed. 337. A debt from an insolvent not due at the time of his making an assignment for the benefit of creditors, may be set off by the creditor against a debt due from him to the insolvent at the time of the assignment; Rothschild v. Mack, 42 Hun (N. Y.) 72. Where mutual obligations have grown out of the same transaction insolvency on the one hand justifies the set-off of the debt due upon the other; Scott v. Armstrong, 146 U. S. 499, 13 Sup. Ct. 148, 36 L. Ed. 1059. A stockholder indebted to an insolvent corporation for unpaid shares cannot set off against this trust fund for creditors a debt due him by the corporation; Handley v. Stutz, 139 U. S. 417, 11 Sup. Ct. 530, 35 L. Ed. 227.

Judgments in the same rights may be set off against each other, at the discretion of the court; Burns v. Thornburgh, 3 Watts (Pa.) 78; McMahan v. Crabtree, 30 Ala. 470; Goodenow v. Buttrick, 7 Mass. 140, 144; Alexander v. Durkee, 112 N. Y. 655, 19 N. E. 514. In equity judgments may be set off, in the discretion of the court, if substantial justice is thereby done; this rule is generally settled; Reed v. Smith, 158 Fed. 889; Hendrickson v. Brown, 39 N. J. Law 239. They need not be judgments in the same courts nor even in the same state, and one may be in tort and the other in contract; Reed v. Smith, 158 Fed. 889; see Caldwell v. Ryan, 210 Mo. 17, 108 S. W. 533, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 494, and note, 124 Am. St. Rep. 717, 14 Ann. Cas. 314.

The right is recognized by the bankruptcy act; Studley v. Bank, 229 U. S. 523, 33 Sup. Ct. 806, 57 L. Ed. 1313; equitable set-off cannot be pleaded by way of answer, but the relief sought must be invoked by bill or cross-bill; American N. Bk. v. Elevator Co., 36 S. W. 960. See Montague, Babington, Set-Off; Helwig v. Laschowski, 82 Mich. 619, 46 N. W. 1033, 10 L. R. A. 378; DEFALCATION; LIEN; RECOUPMENT.

SET ON FOOT. Arrange; place in order; set forward; put in the place of being ready. U. S. v. Ybanez, 53 Fed. 538. See NEUTRALITY.

SETTLE. To adjust or ascertain; to pay. Two contracting parties are said to settle an account when they ascertain what is justly due by one to the other; when one pays the balance or debt due by him, he is said to settle such debt or balance. Houston v. Stanton, 11 Ala. 419.

SETTLED CASE ON APPEAL. That part of the record on appeal which consists of a statement prepared by the appellant's counsel setting forth so much of the testimony and proceedings had in the court below as may be material to the questions intended to be inquired of in the appellate court, subject to amendments of the opposing counsel and to a statement of the trial judge. In other states the word appeal book or paper book is applied. 15 Alb. L. J. 242.

SETTLEMENT. A residence under such circumstances as to entitle a person to support or assistance in case of becoming a pauper.

It is obtained in various ways, to wit: by birth; by the legal settlement of the father, in the case of minor children; by marriage; by continued residence; by the payment of requisite taxes; by the lawful exercise of a public office; by hiring and service for a specified time; by serving an apprenticeship; and perhaps some others, which depend upon the local statutes of the different states. See 1 Bla. Com. 363; Guardians of the Poor of Philadelphia v. Overseers, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 565.

In Contracts. An agreement by which two or more persons who have dealings together so far arrange their accounts as to ascertain the balance due from one to the other; payment in full.

The conveyance of an estate for the benefit of some person or persons. See ANTE-NUP-TIAL CONTRACT; MARRIAGE SETTLEMENT; WIFE'S EQUITY.

SETTLEMENT, DEED OF. A deed made for the purpose of settling property, i. e. arranging the mode and extent of the enjoyment thereof. The party who settles property is called the settler; Brown. See SETTLEMENT. In England, the term was used prior to 1862, as indicating in relation to a corporation the same things as articles or memorandum of association. Cook, St. & Stockh. § 15.

SETTLER. A person who, for the purpose of acquiring a pre-emption right, has gone upon the land in question, and is actually resident there. See Peterson v. R. Co., 27 Minn. 222, 6 N. W. 615. See LANDS, PUBLIC; SETTLEMENT, DEED OF.

SETTLING A DECREE. A hearing of counsel and the approval of the court in fixing the terms of a decree in equity. Settling a bill of exceptions relates to the final approval of a bill of exceptions by the court, with the aid of counsel.

SETTLING DAY. The day on which transactions for the "account" are made up on the Stock Exchange. Whart. Dict. The settling days for English and foreign stocks and shares occur twice a month, the middle and the end. Those for consols are once in every month, generally near the commencement of the month; Moz. & W. A conspiracy to obtain a settling day by fraudulent means in order to defraud buyers of shares, or a conspiracy by fraudulent means to raise or lower the price of shares with intent to defraud buyers or sellers, is an indictable offence; 1 Q. B. D. 730; 3 M. & S. 67; 2 Lind. Part. *711, 816.

SETTLING ISSUES. In English Practice. Deciding the forms of the issues to be determined in a trial, according to the provisions of the Judicature Act of 1875. Sched. I. ord. 26; 3 Steph. Com., 11th ed. 549.

SEVER. In Practice. To separate; to insist upon a plea distinct from that of other co-defendants.

SEVERAL. Separate; distinct. Exclusive, individual, appropriated. In this sense it is opposed to common; and it has been held that the word could not be construed as equivalent to respective; Colton v. Fox, 67 N. Y. 348; though it has been construed to mean all; Outcalt v. Outcalt, 42 N. J. Eq. 501, 8 Atl. 532.

More than two, but not very many. Einstein v. Marshall, 58 Ala. 153, 29 Am. Rep. 729; several hundred dollars includes seven hundred dollars. Id. See JOINT AND SEVERAL.

SEVERAL FISHERY. See FISHERY.

SEVERAL ISSUES. This occurs where there is more than one issue involved in a case. 3 Steph. Com. 560.

SEVERAL OBLIGATION. See OBLIGATION.

SEVERAL TAIL. An entail severally to two; as, if land is given to two men and their wives, and to the heirs of their bodies begotten; here the donees have a joint estate for their two lives, and yet they have a several inheritance, because the issue of the one shall have his moiety, and the issue of the other the other moiety. Cowell.

SEVERAL TENANCY. A tenancy which is separate, and not held jointly with another person.

SEVERALLY. Distinctly, separately, apart from others. State Nat. Bk. v. Reilly, 124 Ill. 471, 14 N. E. 657. When applied to a number of persons the expression severally liable usually implies that each one is liable alone. Pruyn v. Black, 21 N. Y. 301.

SEVERALTY, ESTATE IN. An estate which is held by the tenant in his own right only, without any other being joined or connected with him in point of interest during the continuance of his estate. 2 Bla. Com. 179.

SEVERANCE. The separation of a part of a thing from another; for example, the separation of machinery from a mill is a severance, and in that case the machinery, which while annexed to the mill was real estate, becomes by the severance personalty, unless such severance be merely temporary. Morgan v. Varick, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 587.

In Pleading. When an action is brought in the name of several plaintiffs, in which the plaintiffs must of necessity join, and one or more of the persons so named do not appear, or make default after appearance, the other may have judgment of severance, or, as it is technically called, judgment ad sequendum solum.

But in personal actions, with the exception of those by executors, and of detinue for charters there can be no summons and severance; Co. Litt. 139.

After severance, the party severed can never be mentioned in the suit nor derive any advantage from it.

When there are several defendants, each of them may use such plea as he may think proper for his own defence; and they may join in the same plea, or sever, at their discretion; Co. Litt. 303 a; except, perhaps, in the case of dilatory pleas; Hob. 245, 250. But when the defendants have once united in the plea they cannot afterwards sever at the rejoinder, or other later stage of the pleading. See, generally, Brooke, Abr. Summ. and Sev.; 2 Rolle 488.

Of Estates. The destruction of any one of the unities of a joint tenancy. It is so called because the estate is no longer a joint tenancy, but is severed.

A severance may be effected in various ways, namely: by partition, which is either voluntary or compulsory; by alienation of one of the joint tenants, which turns the estate into a tenancy in common; by the purchase or descent of all the shares of the joint tenants, so that the whole estate becomes vested in one only. Comyns, Dig. Estates by Grant (K. 5); Simpson's Lessee v. Ammons, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 175, 2 Am. Dec. 425.

SEVERE. Within the meaning of a life insurance policy, severe illness means such an illness as has, or ordinarily does have, a permanent, detrimental effect upon the physical system. Boos v. Life Ins. Co., 64 N. Y. 236.

SEWAGE PURPOSES. Where the effluent water from a sewage farm flows into a pool, the cleansing, levelling, and concreting the bottom of that pool to prevent the accumulation of sewage is a work for "sewage purposes." 56 L. J. Ch. 159; 32 Ch. D. 421; Stroud.

SEWER. A subterranean passage for drainage, usually constructed and maintained by a municipal corporation.

Properly, a trench artificially made for the purpose of carrying water into the sea, river, or some other place of reception. Crabb, R. P. s. 113; Bennett v. New Bedford, 110 Mass. 433.

The authority to construct public sewers is not incident to corporate powers, if ample provision is made by general statutes; Bulger v. Eden, 82 Me. 352, 19 Atl. 829, 9 L. R. A. 205.

The sewers of a city are its private property, and the citizens are alone interested therein; the general public of the state at large have no interest in them, and therefore the city may be liable for negligence in their construction; Donahoe v. Kansas City, 136 Mo. 657, 38 S. W. 571. The construction of a sewer is a private municipal enterprise, for the negligent control of which the city will be liable, under a charter providing for a revenue from its use; Ostrander v. Lansing, 111 Mich. 693, 70 N. W. 332.

Merely granting a city authority by its charter to construct sewers to carry off refuse to a river does not make such use of the sewers a governmental act, freeing the city from personal liability for injuries therefrom; Platt v. Waterbury, 72 Conn. 531, 45 Atl. 154, 48 L. R. A. 691, 77 Am. Rep. 335. Legislative authority to a municipality to open and construct a sewer in a public street does not exempt the municipality from the duty of exercising due care in performing the work; Koontz v. District of Columbia, 24 App. D. C. 59; but a city is held not liable for damages resulting from its negligent and defective construction of a sluice for drainage, which it undertook without any authority, and not in the execution of any power conferred on it, since, to create such liability, the injurious act must have been within the scope of its corporate powers as prescribed by its charter; Betham v. Philadelphia, 196 Pa. 302, 46 Atl. 448.

Damages for the negligent construction of a sewer must be confined to actual, not prospective, damages at the time of suit; Nashville v. Comar, 88 Tenn. 415, 12 S. W. 1027, 7 L. R. A. 465.

A municipal corporation owes to the public a duty in the construction of its sewers not to injure the gas mains or other underground conveniences and is responsible to any one injured in consequence of a breach of that duty, although the performance of it had been delegated to an independent contractor; [1896] 1 Q. B. 335, where it was held that when a gas main was broken by the negligence of the contractors, and an explosion took place in a private house because of the escape of the gas from the broken main, the municipality was liable, the damages not being too remote.

Generally a city will be enjoined from using or building a sewer so as to create a nuisance; Dierks v. Com'rs. of Highways, 142 Ill. 197, 31 N. E. 496; Stoddard v. Saratoga Springs, 127 N. Y. 261, 27 N. E. 1030; a license for discharge of sewage draining a particular district will not authorize the discharge from a larger one; New York Cent. & H. R. Co. v. Rochester, 127 N. Y. 591, 28 N. E. 416. Authority to carry a sewer under a highway does not grant power to discharge it in a river at a place that destroys navigation or the use of a dock; Breed v. Lynn, 126 Mass. 367; or into a private canal; Boston Rolling Mills v. Cambridge, 117 Mass. 396.

A borough has a right to make a sewer which empties into a natural stream, though it increased the flowage; Munn v. Pittsburgh, 40 Pa. 364; and may permit citizens to lay a drain pipe into it to carry off their surplus water; Wood v. McGrath, 150 Pa. 451, 24 Atl. 682, 16 L. R. A. 715.

A drain passing through private ground, but receiving the drainage of more than one building, is held to be a sewer; [1894] 1 Q. B. 233.

One who permits noxious vapors, gases, oils, etc., to escape into a sewer is usually held liable for injuries resulting therefrom; Brady v. Steel & Spring Co., 102 Mich. 277, 60 N. W. 687, 26 L. R. A. 175 (crude oil); Fuchs v. St. Louis, 133 Mo. 168, 31 S. W. 115, 34 S. W. 508, 34 L. R. A. 118 (crude petroleum); Richmond v. Gay's Adm'x., 103 Va. 320, 49 S. E. 482 (gas); even though a contributing cause of the injury might be found in the sewer gas; Hunt v. Gaslight Co., 8 Allen (Mass.) 169, 85 Am. Dec. 697. Where gas escaped through a sewer, owing to the negligence of the city in building it, and injured plants in a greenhouse, the gas company was held liable for the loss; Butcher v. Gas Co., 12 R. I. 149, 34 Am. Rep. 626.

If a gas company knows or ought to know of the construction of a sewer near to its mains, it is its duty to guard against the damage likely to be sustained thereby, if the injury to such mains is the natural and probable consequence of the construction of the sewer; Koelsch v. Philadelphia Co., 152 Pa. 355, 25 Atl. 522, 18 L. R. A. 759, 34 Am. St. Rep. 653.

A permit to turn clear water into a sewer is not equivalent to a license to turn steam into it; Walker Ice Co. v. Steel & Wire Co., 185 Mass. 463, 70 N. E. 937.

The construction of sewers does not impose an additional burden on a highway; West v. Bancroft, 32 Vt. 367; Cone v. Hartford, 28 Conn. 363; Turner v. Dartmouth, 13 Allen (Mass.) 291; but in Pennsylvania consent of abutting owners is required, where they are constructed by private corporations; McDevitt v. Gas Co., 160 Pa. 372, 28 Atl. 948. See POLLUTION.

SEXTERY LANDS. Lands given to a church for maintenance of a sexton or sacristan. Cowell.

SEXTON. An attendant or care-taker in a church building, usually with care of the attached burying ground. A woman may be a sexton; 2 Stra. 1114.

SHACK. See COMMON.

SHALL. The various meanings of this word range under two general classes according as it is used as implying futurity or implying a mandate; the words shall be born in a will in the absence of a context are words of futurity; 6 App. Cas. 471; and where a statute declares a thing shall be done, it is a peremptory mandate; Stroud, L. Dict., which see for a classification of cases in which the word has been held to be used in a directory, and others in which it is used in a peremptory, sense. It is held that it is to be construed as may, unless a contrary intention is shown; Cairo & Fulton R. Co. v. Hecht, 95 U. S. 170, 24 L. Ed. 423.

SHAM PLEA. See PLEA.

SHANGHAING OF SAILORS. Procuring or inducing, or attempting to do so, by force, or threats, or by representations which one knows or believes to be untrue, or while the person is intoxicated or under the influence of any drug, to go on board of any vessel, or agree to do so, to perform service or labor thereon, such vessel being engaged in interstate or foreign commerce, on the high seas or any navigable water of the United States, or knowingly to detain on board such vessel such person, so procured or induced, or knowingly aiding or abetting such things, is an offence punishable by a fine of not over $1,000, or imprisonment of not more than one year, or both. U. S. Cr. Code § 82.

SHARE. A portion of anything. Sometimes shares are equal, at other times they are unequal.

As to shares in corporation law, see CORPORATION; PERSONAL PROPERTY; STOCK; STOCKHOLDER.

The proportion which descends to one of several children from his ancestor is called a share. The term share and share alike signifies in equal proportions. See PURPART.

SHARE CERTIFICATE. See STOCK.

SHAREHOLDER. See STOCKHOLDER.

SHARPING CORN. A customary gift of corn which, at every Christmas, the farmers in some parts of England give to their smith for sharpening their plough-irons, harrow-tines, etc. Blount.

SHAVE. To buy any security for money at a discount. Stone v. Cooper, 2 Denio (N. Y.) 293; also, to obtain the property of another by oppression and extortion. Id.

SHEADING. A riding, tithing, or division in the Isle of Man, where the whole island is divided into six sheadings, in each of which there is a coroner or chief constable appointed by a delivery of a rod at the Tinewald court or annual convention. King, Isle of Man 7.

SHEEP. A wether more than a year old. 4 C. & P. 216.

SHEEP SILVER. A service turned into money which was paid because anciently the tenants used to wash the lord's sheep.

SHELLEY'S CASE, RULE IN. "When the ancestor, by any gift or conveyance, taketh an estate of freehold, and in the same gift or conveyance an estate is limited, either mediately or immediately, to his heirs in fee or in tail, the heirs are words of limitation of the estate, and not words of purchase." 1 Co. 104.

This rule has been the subject of much comment. Its origin can be deduced from feudal tenure; 4 Kent 217. It is given by Preston, Estates, pp. 263, 419, as follows: When a person takes an estate of freehold, legally or equitably, under a deed, will, or other writing, and in the same instrument there is a limitation by way of remainder, either with or without the interposition of another estate, of the same legal or equitable quality, to his heirs, or heirs of his body, as a class of persons to take in succession from generation to generation, the limitation to the heirs entitles the ancestor to the whole estate. See Stephenson v. Hagan, 15 B. Monr. (Ky.) 282; Hargr. Law Tracts 489, 551; 2 Kent 214.

The rule in Shelley's case is not a rule of construction, but an absolute rule of property; Van Grutten v. Foxwell, [1897] A. C. 658 (Lord MacNaghten's historical discussion).

If the limitation be to one and the heirs of the body, he takes an estate tail; if to one and his heirs generally, a fee-simple; Bishop v. Selleck, 1 Day (Conn.) 299; Baughman v. Baugman, 2 Yeates (Pa.) 410.

It does not apply where the ancestor's estate is equitable and that of the heirs legal; Ward v. Amory, 1 Curt. C. C. 419, Fed. Cas. No. 17,146.

It does not extend to bequests of personal-ty; Jones v. Rees, 6 Pennewill (Del.) 504, 69 Atl. 785, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 734, see, as to this, Bennett v. Bennett, 217 Ill. 434, 75 N. E. 339, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 470.

The rule was adopted as a part of the common law of this country, and in many of the states still prevails. It has been abolished in most of them. The subject has been exhaustively treated in Pennsylvania, and the numerous decisions will be found analyzed and arranged in tabular form in an essay by J. P. Gross. (Harrisburg, 1877.) The rule has been held applicable to instruments in which the words, "heir" or "heirs;" Elliott v. Pearsoll, 8 W. & S. (Pa.) 38; "issue;" Walker v. Milligan, 45 Pa. 179; "child" or "children;" Stewart v. Kenower, 7 W. & S. (Pa.) 288; "son" or "daughter;" Appeal of Yarnall, 70 Pa. 335; "next of kin;" "offspring;" Allen v. Markle, 36 Pa. 117; "descendants;" and similar expressions are used in the technical sense of the word heirs. Chief Justice Gibson states the operation of the rule as follows: "It operates only on the intention (of the devisor) when it has been ascertained, not on the meaning of the words used to express it. The ascertainment is left to the ordinary rules of construction peculiar to wills. . . . It gives the ancestor an estate for life, in the first instance, and, by force of the devise to his heirs, general or special, the inheritance also, by conferring the remainder on him, as the stock from which alone they can inherit;" Hileman v. Bouslaugh, 13 Pa. 344, 354, 53 Am. Dec. 474. Although a fee is given in the first part of a will, it may be restrained by subsequent words, so as to convert it into a life estate; Appeal of Ulrich, 86 Pa. 386, 27 Am. Rep. 707. See Hayes on Est. Tail *53; Polk v. Faris, 9 Yerg. (Tenn.) 209, 30 Am. Dec. 400; 77 L. J. Rep. (H. of L.) 170. See Smith v. Proctor, 139 N. C. 314, 51 S. E. 889, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 172.

When applicable it is not affected by the testator's intention; 28 Atl. Rep. (N. J.) 587. It is equally applicable to conveyances by deed and limitations by will; 4 Kent *217. If applied to real estate, it enlarges the estate for life into an inheritance, and makes the tenant for life a tenant in fee; it makes the tenant for life of personalty an absolute owner; 4 Kent 227.

A deed to one for life, and at his death to his surviving heirs, vests a fee in the first taker, the word "surviving" not being sufficient to prevent an application of the rule, at least not where the warranty runs to him and to his assigns forever; Price v. Griffin, 150 N. C. 523, 64 S. E. 372, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 935; so where the remainder is to "his then surviving heirs" and "heirs then living" or "heirs living at the time of their deaths"; Hiester v. Yerger, 166 Pa. 445, 31 Atl. 122; it applies only to limitations in which the word heirs is used unless it clearly appears that testator used some other word to mean heirs. The word "children" is not ordinarily equivalent to heirs so as to bring a devise within the rule; Hanes v. Utilities Co., 262 Ill. 86, 104 N. E. 156.

SHEPWAY, COURT OF. See COURTS OF THE CINQUE PORTS.

SHERIFF (Sax. scyre, shire, reve, keeper). A county officer representing the executive or administrative power of the state within his county.

As to the history of the office, it is said by Holdsworth (1 Hist. E. L. 39): "The immediate result of the large jurisdiction assumed by the Curia Regis was an increase in the power of the sheriff. He grew to be the ruler of the county, responsible for its revenues, military force, police, gaols, and courts, and the execution of the writs of the Curia Regis. By the 13th century it is clear that he was not an hereditary official. By Edward III's reign, he came to be appointed by the crown and was not elective. He was appointed annually and must own land in the county. In the reign of Richard III, he could not be reappointed till three years had elapsed from the expiration of his year of office. In Henry II's reign, he must appear twice a year to settle for the revenues of his county. His control over the military force ceased with the appointment of lord lieutenants in Mary's reign, though he could still summon the posse comitatus; and in the same reign he was prevented from acting as a justice of the peace. By the 14th and 15th centuries, he ceased to have control over prisoners, except those condemned to death. He came to be an attendant of the courts of law, the itinerant justices and the justices of the peace in quarter sessions—to summon juries, give notice to prosecutors and others, prepare the judge's lodgings and attend upon him during the assizes. Royal writs were addressed to him and still are, and their execution is his chief duty. This gives him control over parliamentary elections."

Maitland says (Justice and Police 69) that "the whole history of English justice and police might be brought under this rubric—the Decline and Fall of the Sheriff."

It is the sheriff's duty to preserve the peace within his bailiwick or county. To this end he is the first man within the county, and may apprehend and commit to prison all persons who break or attempt to break the peace, or may bind them over in a recognizance to keep the peace. He is bound, ex officio, to pursue and take all traitors, murderers, felons, and rioters; has the safekeeping of the county jail, and must defend it against all rioters; and for this, as well as for any other purpose, in the execution of his duties he may command the inhabitants of the county to assist him, which is called the posse comitatus. And this summons every person over fifteen years of age is bound to obey, under pain of fine and imprisonment; Dalt. Sheriff 355; 2d Inst. 454.

In his ministerial capacity he is bound to execute, within his county, all processes that issue from the courts of justice, except where he is a party to the proceeding, in which case the coroner acts in his stead. On mesne process he is to execute the writ, to arrest and take bail; when the cause comes to trial he summons and returns the jury, and when it is determined he carries into effect the judgment of the court. In criminal cases he also arrests and imprisons, returns the jury (now usually provided by statute), has the custody of the prisoner, and executes the sentence of the court upon him, whatever it may be.

It is a settled principle of the common law that every man's house is his castle; accordingly, in the service of civil process, an officer may not break open the outer door of a dwelling-house. He must await his opportunity to enter peaceably without force or violence; 5 Co. 91; Hooker v. Smith, 19 Vt. 151, 47 Am. Dec. 679; People v. Hubbard, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 369, 35 Am. Dec. 628; but having, without force, obtained admission to the house, he may go from one room to another and forcibly open any inner doors, chests, trunks, or other places where property is kept in order to make a levy; Cowp. 1; Prettyman v. Dean, 2 Harring. (Del.) 494; Williams v. Spencer, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 352; State v. Thackam, 1 Bay (S. C.) 358. Where a building was kept by several tenants and had an outer door through which they all passed to gain their several apartments, it was held that an officer who entered this door might enter any other; Cantrell v. Conner, 6 Daly (N. Y.) 39. A building occupied for business as a work-shop, any other building not being a dwelling-house, but connected therewith, may be entered by breaking through the outer door; [1895] 2 Q. B. 663. Where a building is occupied partly as a dwelling and partly for business, a common outer door through which both parties are approached may be broken to make a levy in the store; Stearns v. Vincent, 50 Mich. 209, 15 N. W. 86, 45 Am. Rep. 37; but where a milliner carried on her business and resided in one room, it was held to be a trespass, when an officer made an entry by breaking; Welsh v. Wilson, 34 Minn. 92, 24 N. W. 327.

In England it was formerly held that although an officer who forced the outer door of a dwelling was a trespasser, the levy made by him was good; 5 Co. 93; Year Book 18 Edw. IV. fol. 4, pl. 19; but it is now doubtful; 7 Ex. 72; 6 H. L. Cas. 443; and in the United States the doctrine is said to have met with no favor; Freem. Ex. 256; and it is held that such a levy is void; Ilsley v. Nichols, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 270, 22 Am. Dec. 425; People v. Hubbard, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 369, 35 Am. Dec. 628; Closson v. Morrison, 47 N. H. 482, 93 Am. Dec. 459.

He also possesses a judicial capacity, and may hold a court and summon a jury for certain purposes; this jurisdiction, in this respect, is at common law quite extensive. See SHERIFF'S TOUR. This branch of his powers, however, is circumscribed in this country by the statutes of the several states, and is generally confined to the execution of writs of inquiry, of damages, and the like, sent to him from the superior courts of law; 1 Bla. Com. 389.

He has no power or authority out of his own county, except when, he is commanded by a writ of habeas corpus to carry a prisoner out of his county; and then if he conveys him through several counties the prisoner is in custody of the sheriffs of each of the counties through which he passes; Plowd. 37 a; 2 Rolle 163; Jones v. State, 26 Tex. App. 7, 9 S. W. 53, 8 Am. St. Rep. 454. If, however, a prisoner escapes and flies into another county, the sheriff or his officers may, upon fresh pursuit, take him again in such county. But he may do mere ministerial acts out of his county, if within the state, such as making out a panel or return, or assigning a bail-bond, or the like; 2 Ld. Raym. 1455; 2 Stra. 727.

To assist him in the discharge of his various duties, he may appoint an under-sheriff, and as many general or special deputies as the public service may require, who may discharge all the ordinary ministerial duties of the office, such as the service and return of process and the like, but not the execution of a writ of inquiry, for this is in the nature of a judicial duty, which may not be delegated. All acts of the under-sheriff or of the deputies are done in the name of the sheriff, who is responsible for them, although such acts should amount to a trespass or an extortion on the part of the officer; for which reason he usually takes bonds from all his subordinates for the faithful performance of their duties; Cro. Eliz. 294; Dougl. 40. But a deputy sheriff cannot, as such, engage to guard the property of a private person not in the custody of the law; Railway Co. v. Hackett, 58 Ark. 381, 24 S. W. 881, 41 Am. St. Rep. 105; an infant cannot be appointed deputy sheriff, but might be deputed to serve a particular writ; McCracken v. Todd, 1 Kan. 169.

The sheriff also appoints a jailer, who is usually one of his deputies. The jailer is responsible for the escape of any prisoner committed to his charge, and is bound to have sufficient force at his disposal to prevent a breach of the prison by a mob or otherwise; and nothing will excuse him but an act of God or the public enemy. He must not be guilty of cruelty, without sufficient cause; but he may defend himself at all hazards if attacked. In a case where a prisoner, notwithstanding his remonstrances, was confined by the jailer in a room in which was a person ill with the small-pox, which disease he took and died, it was held to be murder in the jailer; Viner, Abr. Gaol (A); 4 Term 789; 4 Co. 84; Co. 3d Inst. 34; 2 Stra. 856.

A deputy cannot depute another person to do the duty intrusted to him; although it is not necessary that his should be the hand that executes the writ: it is sufficient if he is present and assists. A deputy sheriff's return of process in his own name, with the words "deputy sheriff" added, is void; Gib-bens v. Pickett, 31 Fla. 147, 12 South. 17, 19 L. R. A. 177; but a return of a levy may properly be indorsed on an execution by a third person at the discretion and in the presence of the sheriff; Lewis v. Watson, 98 Ala. 479, 13 South. 570, 22 L. R. A. 297, 39 Am. St. Rep. 82. In the execution of criminal process, he may, after demanding admittance, break open the outer door of a house; but in civil actions he may not forcibly enter a dwelling-house, for every man's house is said to be his castle and fortress, as well for defence as for repose. But a warehouse, store, or barn, or the inner door of a dwelling-house after the officer has peaceably entered, is not privileged. Process or writs of any description may not be served on Sunday, except in cases of treason, felony, or breach of the peace; nor may the sheriff on that day retake a prisoner who has escaped from custody; People v. Brush, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 454; Cro. Eliz. 908; Cro. Car. 537; W. Jones, 429; 3 B. & P. 223.

In the absence of representations of title made at a sheriff's sale of property on execution, the purchaser has no remedy against the plaintiff or sheriff for failure of title; Lewark v. Carter, 117 Ind. 206, 20 N. E. 119, 3 L. R. A. 440, 10 Am. St. Rep. 40.

A sheriff is not liable on his bond, but is personally liable, for acts done under process void on its face; and the order of a criminal court in excess of its jurisdiction, directing him to redeliver a certain person to prison, is no protection to a sheriff, no matter what the decision of the court having jurisdiction of the habeas corpus proceeding might be; McLendon v. State, 92 Tenn. 520, 22 S. W. 200, 21 L. R. A. 738; but he is not liable for acts done by order of a court of competent jurisdiction; Crow v. Manning, 45 La. Ann. 1221, 14 South. 122; or by a court in excess of its jurisdiction, if the process does not show that fact on its face; Clarke v. May, 2 Gray (Mass.) 410, 61 Am. Dec. 470. He is not required to question apparently regular process; Hatch v. Saunders, 66 Mich. 181, 33 N. W. 178. He is bound to serve voidable process; Rogers v. Marlboro County, 32 S. C. 555, 11 S. E. 383; if the error may be amended; Archibald v. Thompson, 2 Col. 388. See FALSE IMPRISONMENT.

If a court having jurisdiction issues a writ against specific property, the sheriff is protected in seizing it; Bullis v. Montgomery, 50 N. Y. 355; whoever owns it; Sample v. Broadwell, 87 Ill. 617; if he take it from the defendant in the writ; Billings v. Thomas, 114 Mass. 570; although the plaintiff had no claim; Cannon v. Sipples, 39 Conn. 507. See infra.

A levy on the goods of a stranger to an execution amounts to a trespass, although the goods are not touched and there is no actual taking, and to maintain the action the plaintiff must have the right of, or be in actual possession of the property at the time of the levy; and the sheriff may abandon or restrict the levy to the defendant's interests, and be thereby discharged, even though the return was not altered until after the action of trespass is begun; Dixon v. Sewing Mach. Co., 128 Pa. 397, 18 Atl. 502, 5 L. R. A. 659, 15 Am. St. Rep. 683.

A sheriff may not serve a writ to which he is a party; Thayer v. Ray, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 166; or in which he is interested; Barker v. Remick, 43 N. H. 238. In such case the coroner must act; if he cannot, then elisors are appointed, which see.

Where there are several writs, it is the sheriff's duty to serve them in the order of their receipt; Freeman, Exec. § 197; Knox v. Webster, 18 Wis. 406, 86 Am. Dec. 779. Where the judgment is a lien, it is his duty to apply the proceeds to the oldest lien; Polk County v. Sypher, 17 Ia. 358, 85 Am. Dec. 568; but if the defendant gives him money to apply to a junior execution, he must so apply it; Rudy v. Com., 35 Pa. 166, 78 Am. Dec. 330.

A sheriff cannot arrest in civil proceedings without a writ; 8 Term 187; which the person arrested is entitled to see; Com. v. Field, 13 Mass. 321; and the writ must contain the correct name of the person arrested; Gurnsey v. Lovell, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 319; unless he is known by either name; Griswold v. Sedgwick, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 132; but the officer is liable for arresting the wrong person, whose name is the same as that in the writ; Hallowell & Augusta Bk. v. Howard, 14 Mass. 184. Misnomer in an execution in which the same mistake occurred as in the original writ, does not affect the officer; Smith v. Bowker, 1 Mass. 76. See ARREST.

Where a person in custody on civil process escapes, the sheriff is liable to the plaintiff for the value of the claim; State v. Falls, 63 N. C. 188. At common law, voluntary escape made the sheriff liable for the plaintiff's claim, and discharged the defendant; Hopkinson v. Leeds, 78 Pa. 396; but if the escape was through negligence, or was involuntary, recaption before suit by the plaintiff was a bar; Stone v. Wilson, 10 Gratt. (Va.) 529.

The sheriff must act with diligence; Andrews v. Keep, 38 Ala. 315; and, in the absence of instructions, execute the process according to its terms; Smith v. Judkins, 60 N. H. 127; Ransom v. Halcott, 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 56. Special instructions regarding a general writ should be followed; Perkins v. Pitman, 34 N. H. 261; in the absence of which he should make reasonable search for the defendant and his property; Freeman, Exec. § 252. If he has doubt as to the title of the defendant, he may require indemnity; Burnett v. Handley, 8 Ala. 685; which is implied by instructions to proceed in a special manner; State v. Koontz, 83 Mo. 323. If he seize the property of one not named in the writ he is liable as a trespasser; Hanchett v. Williams, 24 Ill. App. 56; if he remain in a house a long time in possession of goods taken in execution, he becomes a trespasser ad initio; 8 Ex. 237.

An officer may continue to levy until the return day in order to satisfy the writ; Moses v. Thomas, 26 N. J. L. 124; but is liable for an excessive levy; Sexey v. Adkison, 40 Cal. 408; and must take due care to preserve the lien on the property attached; Cooper v. Mowry, 16 Mass. 5; in moving goods; Gilbert v. Meriam, 2 La. Ann. 162; but if the property attached perishes without his fault, he is not liable; Shaw v. Laughton, 20 Me. 266.

See EXECUTION; ARREST; ELISORS; ESCAPE; LEVY; SERVICE; PROCESS; RETURN OF WRITS.

For example, a feoffment in fee is made to the use of W and his heirs till A pays £40 to W, and then to the use of A and his heirs. A very common application is in the case of marriage settlements. Wms. R. P., 16th ed. 330. The doctrine of shifting uses furnished a means of evading the principle of law that a fee could not be limited after a fee. See 2 Washb. R. P. 284; Wms. R. P. 330; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 452; 1 Vern. 402; 1 Edw. Ch. 34.

SHIFT MARRIAGE. "When a man died having debts which his widow was unable to pay, she was obliged, if she contracted a second marriage, to leave her clothes in the hands of the creditors, and to go through the ceremony in her shift. Gradually, however, the ceremony was mitigated by the bridegroom lending her clothes for the occasion." Said by Lecky, Hist. of Eng. 18th Cent., IV, p. 23, to be a curious relic of a standard of commercial integrity which had long since passed away.

SHILLING. In English Law. The name of an English coin, of the value one-twentieth part of a pound. In the colonies there were coins of this denomination; but they varied greatly in their value.

SHIN-PLASTER. Formerly a jocose term for a bank-note greatly depreciated in value; also for paper money of a denomination less than a dollar. Webster. See Madison Ins. Co. v. Forsythe, 2 Ind. 483.

SHIP. A vessel employed in navigation. Ben. Ad. § 215; for example, the terms the ship's papers, the ship's husband, shipwreck, and the like, are employed whether the vessel referred to be a brig, a schooner, or a sloop, or a three-masted vessel.

The word comprehends every description of vessel navigating on any sea or channel, lake or river, to which the provisions of revised statutes, title "Merchant Marine," may be applicable; R. S. § 4612; The St. Louis, 48 Fed. 312. See Cope v. Dry Dock Co., 119 U. S. 629, 7 Sup. Ct. 336, 30 L. Ed. 501. See Wood v. Two Barges, 46 Fed. 204, as to what is not a ship.

A vessel with three masts, employed in navigation; U. S. v. Kelly, 4 Wash. C. C. 528, Fed. Cas. No. 15,516; the boats and rigging; 2 Marsh. Ins. 727; together with the anchors, masts, cables, and such like objects, are considered as part of the ship; Pardessus, n. 599.

A ship is born when she is launched and lives so long as her identity is preserved; Tucker v. Alexandroff, 183 U. S. 424, 22 Sup. Ct. 195, 46 L. Ed. 264. Prior to her launching she is an ordinary piece of personal property and subject only to mechanic's liens created by state law and enforceable in state courts. From the moment her keel touches the water, she is transformed and becomes a subject of admiralty jurisdiction. She acquires a personality of her own and becomes competent to contract, and is individually liable for her obligations, upon which she may sue in the name of her owner and be sued in her own name. Her owner's agents may not be her agents, and her agents may not be her owner's agents; Thorp v. Hammond, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 408, 20 L. Ed. 419; Workman v. New York, 179 U. S. 552, 21 Sup. Ct. 212, 45 L. Ed. 314; Homer Ramsdell Transp. Co. v. La Compagnie Générale Transatlantique, 182 U. S. 406, 21 Sup. Ct. 831, 45 L. Ed. 1155. She is capable of committing a tort, and is responsible in damages therefor. She may also become a quasi-bankrupt; may be sold for the payment of her debts, and thereby receive a complete discharge from all prior liens, with liberty to begin a new life, contract further obligations, and, perhaps, be subjected to a second sale; Tucker v. Alexandroff, 183 U. S. 439, 22 Sup. Ct. 195, 46 L. Ed. 264. So sharply is the line drawn between a vessel upon the stocks and one in the water, that the former can never be made liable in admiralty, either in rem against herself or in personam against her owners upon contracts or for torts, while if, in taking the water in the process of launching, she escapes from the control of those about her, shoots across the stream and injures another vessel, she is liable to a suit in rem for damages; 2 W. Rob. 421; L. R. 2 Prob. Div. 231, 235; L. R. 8 Prob. Div. 119; Baker v. Power, 14 Fed. 483.

As to what passes by a bill of sale under the general term ship, or ship and her appurtenances, or ship, apparel, and furniture, see 1 Pars. Marit. Law 71, n. 3; APPAREL. The capacity of a ship is ascertained by its tonnage, or the space which may be occupied by its cargo.

A majority of the owners cannot change the ownership by forming themselves into a limited company; [1895] P. 284; admiralty will authorize a majority in value of the owners of a ship to employ the ship, taking a bond for the protection of the minority; 3 Kent 151; a dissenting part-owner, receiving security cannot claim compensation or a share of the profits; 4 Sim. 439; and is not liable for a collision; Scull v. Raymond, 18 Fed. 547.

"American vessels are of two classes: those registered and those enrolled and licensed." Registry declares the nationality of a vessel in foreign trade; enrolment is to evidence the national character of a vessel engaged in the coasting trade or home traffic; Anderson v. Pacific Coast S. S. Co., 225 U. S. 187, 32 Sup. Ct. 626, 56 L. Ed. 1047.

The British registry act divides a ship into sixty-four parts or shares, which may be held in severalty. Ownership of a fraction of a share cannot be registered, but any number not exceeding five (except in case of transfer by operation of law) may be registered as joint owners of a share.

Carriers by water are to a certain extent common carriers, in all the strictness of the common-law rule; 3 Kent *217; Garrison v. Ins. Co., 19 How. (U. S.) 312, 15 L. Ed. 656; like common carriers, apart from express contract, they are absolutely responsible for the goods intrusted to them, and insure them against all contingencies excepting only the act of God and the queen's enemies; per Lopes, L. J., in 16 Q. B. D. 633; see, also, L. R. 9 Ex. 342; 1 C. P. D. 19; this rule is said to have been established in the seventeenth century; 1 C. P. D. 430. The master of a general ship is liable where his goods were stolen by robbers; 1 Mod. 85; and an action will lie against the owners as well as the master; Carth. 58. It has been held that the owner of a private ship is subject to the same rule; L. R. 9 Ex. 638.

Lord Cockburn has denied that a carrier by sea is subject to the same liability as a common carrier by land; 1 C. P. D. 426; and Brett, J., was of opinion that he is not a common carrier, but that his liability to carry at his absolute risk arises from recognized custom; L. R. 9 Ex. 338; 7 id. 267. See article in 5 L. Q. Rev. 15. It is said that they are not common carriers, because not bound to receive all goods, offered. See 1 Pars. Ship. 248.

Stringent regulations in regard to the number of passengers to be taken on board of sailing-vessels, and the provisions to be made for their safety and comfort, are also prescribed by R. S. § 4465.

Numerous acts of congress have been passed from time to time in reference to the registering, enrolling, licensing, employment, and privileges of the vessels of commerce owned in the United States. See R. S. §§ 4399, 4500.

Construction of the Harter Act. The act of congress of Feb. 13, 1893, known as the Harter Act (see that title), was not intended as general legislation concerning the rights or liabilities of ship-owners, but only to deal with the carrying vessel and her own cargo. And all principles and rules of decisions previously applicable, as to the apportionment of damages in case of mutual fault, should still be followed as closely as possible and no more changes admitted than the evident intent of the act necessitates; The Viola, 80 Fed. 296; The Chattahoochee, 74 Fed. 899, 21 C. C. A. 162, 33 U. S. App. 510; The Jason, 225 U. S. 32, 32 Sup. Ct. 560, 56 L. Ed. 969. In determining the effect of the statute in restricting the operation of general and well-settled principles, the course of decision has been to treat those principles as still existing, and limit the relief from their operation afforded by the statute to precisely that called for by the language of the statute, and no more. It is said that the intent of the act is that damages to the cargo arising from negligence in navigation shall be borne by the cargo owner and not by the ship, and that the act was not designed to increase or diminish the liability of the other vessel in cases of mutual fault and a division of damages; The Niagara, 77 Fed. 329. The provision of the act making invalid contracts relieving a carrier from liability for negligence apply to a special as well as a common carrier; B. S. Shipping Co. v. Crossman, 206 Fed. 183.

The requirement in the act of due diligence to exempt the owner from liability to cargo owners means not only the personal diligence of the owner but also of his agents employed to fit the vessel for sea; The Colima, 82 Fed. 665. Such diligence is not exercised where no inspection is made of the cement covering the bottom of an iron steamship; The Alvena, 79 Fed. 973, 25 C. C. A. 261, 51 U. S. App. 100; s. c. 79 Fed. 973, 25 C. C. A. 261. Covenants avoiding exercise of due diligence are void; The Toronto, 174 Fed. 632, 98 C. C. A. 386. That a vessel was one man short of her full complement of seamen, and was being unlawfully navigated at full speed in a fog at the time of a collision, because she was a slow boat, do not establish faults in navigation; Boston Marine Ins. Co. v. Lumber Co., 197 Fed. 703, 117 C. C. A. 97.

The word "management" in the act relates to management on the voyage and not to the master's acts in stowing the ship; The Colima, 82 Fed. 665. Exemption from liability for faults or errors in management applies only after the voyage has commenced; Steamship Wellesley Co. v. C. A. Hooper & Co., 185 Fed. 733, 108 C. C. A. 71. A schooner in first class condition at the beginning of the voyage is not liable for damage to cargo from sea-water caused by dangerous storms; The F. & T. Lupton, 182 Fed. 144. Proof that a vessel sprung a leak soon after leaving port raises a presumption that she was unseaworthy; Carolina Portland Cement Co. v. Anderson, 186 Fed. 145, 108 C. C. A. 257. Permitting whale oil to remain in the bilge, with the object of saving it, does not pertain to the management of the vessel; The Persiana, 185 Fed. 396, 107 C. C. A. 416. Insufficiency of the mechanical fog-horn on a sailing vessel because of failure to provide any means for repairing it is a lack of proper equipment under the act; The Niagara, 77 Fed. 329. Diligent care of the ship for the purposes of the act does not require re-docking more than once a year; The Sandfield, 79 Fed. 371.

Due diligence in repair and equipment must be exercised in fact and is not satisfied by the mere appointment of competent persons to repair; The Mary L. Peters, 68 Fed. 919; The Flamborough, 69 Fed. 470; The Alvena, 74 Fed. 253. The provisions of section 3 of the Harter Act apply to foreign vessels in suits brought in the United States; The Silvia, 171 U. S. 462, 19 Sup. Ct. 7, 43 L. Ed. 241; or foreign vessels transporting merchandise from a foreign port to a port of the United States; Knott v. Botany Mills, 179 U. S. 69, 21 Sup. Ct. 30, 45 L. Ed. 90; they receive the benefits; The Chattahoochee, 173 U. S. 540, 19 Sup. Ct. 491, 43 L. Ed. 801; and with them they must take the burdens; The Germanic, 196 U. S. 589, 25 Sup. Ct. 317, 49 L. Ed. 610; and see The Chattahoochee, 74 Fed. 899, 21 C. C. A. 162, where the subject is discussed inconclusively. The act has no retroactive effect, so as to apply to damages occasioned before its passage; Humboldt Lumber Mfr's Ass'n v. Christopher, 73 Fed. 239, 19 C. C. A. 481, 46 L. R. A. 264.

The object of the act "is to modify the relations previously existing between the vessel and her cargo"; and it was an outgrowth of attempts made in recent years to limit as far as possible the liability of vessels and their owners by stipulations against loss arising from unseaworthiness, bad stowage, and negligence in navigation; The Delaware, 161 U. S. 459, 16 Sup. Ct. 516, 40 L. Ed. 771. The provision exempting owners from loss from faults or errors in navigation or management in no way relieves him from the duty of furnishing a seaworthy vessel; The Carib Prince, 170 U. S. 655, 18 Sup. Ct. 753, 42 L. Ed. 1181; at the commencement of the voyage; International Nav. Co. v. Mfg. Co., 181 U. S. 218, 21 Sup. Ct. 591, 45 L. Ed. 830; and the burden of proof as to seaworthiness at the time of sailing is on the owner; and a break-down in any necessary apparatus within three hours of sailing raises a presumption of unseaworthiness at the time of sailing; The Southwark, 191 U. S. 1, 24 Sup. Ct. 1, 48 L. Ed. 65; The Wildcroft, 201 U. S. 378, 26 Sup. Ct. 467, 50 L. Ed. 794, where it was said that the relief to the shipowner of section 3 is purely statutory, and in the absence of proof there is no presumption that the vessel was seaworthy at the beginning of the voyage.

See HARTER ACT; APPURTENANCES; VESSEL.

As to limited liability of vessels in case of accidents, see VESSEL.

A vessel is deemed a part of the territory of the country to which she belongs; U. S. v. Rodgers, 150 U. S. 249, 14 Sup. Ct. 109, 37 L. Ed. 1071; St. Clair v. U. S., 154 U. S. 152, 14 Sup. Ct. 1002, 38 L. Ed. 936; and although the deck of a private American vessel is considered for many purposes constructively as territory of the U. S., yet persons on board of such vessels, whether officers, sailors, or passengers, cannot invoke the protection of the provisions of the constitution as to the indictment and trial by jury, until brought within the actual territorial boundaries of the United States; In re Ross, 140 U. S. 453, 11 Sup. Ct. 897, 35 L. Ed. 581.

The word "ex-ship" is not restricted to any particular ship; and by the usage of merchants, simply denotes that the property in the goods shall pass to the buyer upon their leaving the ship's tackle, and that he shall be liable for all subsequent charges of lading. They do not constitute a condition of the contract but are inserted for the benefit of the seller; Harrison v. Fortlage, 161 U. S. 57, 16 Sup. Ct. 488, 40 L. Ed. 616; L. R. 1 C. P. 684. See PRIZE.

SHIP-BROKER. One who transacts business relating to vessels and their employment between the owners of vessels and merchants who send cargoes.

SHIP-MONEY. An imposition formerly levied on port towns and other places for fitting out ships; revived by Charles I. and abolished in the same reign. 17 Car. I. c. 14; Whart. Dict.

SHIP SUBSIDY. See SUBSIDY.

SHIP'S BILL. The copy of the bill of lading retained by the master. In case of a variance between this and the bill delivered to the shipper, the latter must control; The Thames, 14 Wall. (U. S.) 98, 20 L. Ed. 804.

SHIP'S HUSBAND. An agent appointed by the owner of a ship, and invested with authority to make the requisite repairs and attend to the management, equipment, and other concerns of the ship. He is the general agent of the owners in relation to the ship; he may be appointed in writing or orally. Abb. Sh. 90. He is appointed to act on shore; Maclachlan, Merch. Shipp. 188. He is usually, but not necessarily, a part-owner; 1 Pars. Mar. Law 97. In that case he is a managing owner, an interchangeable term; Maclachlan, Merch. Shipp. 193. He must see to the proper outfit of the vessel in the repairs adequate to the voyage and in the tackle and furniture necessary for a seaworthy ship; must have a proper master, mate, and crew for the ship, so that in this respect it shall be seaworthy; must see to the due furnishing of provisions and stores according to the necessities of the voyage; must see to the regularity of the clearances from the custom-house and the regularity of the registry; must settle the contracts and provide for the payment of the furnishings which are requisite to the performance of those duties; must enter into proper charter-parties, or engage the vessel for general freight under the usual conditions, and settle for freight and adjust averages with the merchant; and must preserve the proper certificates, surveys and documents, in case of future disputes with insurers and freighters, and keep regular books of the ship; 4 B. & Ad. 375; 1 Y. & C. 326; Turner v. Burrows, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 144; Gould v. Stanton, 16 Conn. 12. These are his general powers; but they may be limited or enlarged by the owners; and it may be observed that without special authority he cannot borrow money generally for the use of the ship; though, as above observed, he may settle the accounts for furnishings, or grant bills for them, which form debts against the concern whether or not he has funds in his hands with which he might have paid them; 1 Bell, Com. § 499. Although he may, in general, levy the freight which is by the bill of lading payable on the delivery of the goods, it would seem that he would not have power to take bills for the freight and give up the possession of the lien over the cargo, unless it has been so settled by the charter-party.

He cannot insure or bind the owners for premiums; Hewett v. Buck, 17 Me. 147, 35 Am. Dec. 243; 2 Maule & S. 485; Foster v. Ins. Co., 11 Pick. (Mass.) 85; 5 Burr. 2627.

As the power of the master to enter into contracts of affreightments is superseded in the port of the owners, so it is by the presence of the ship's husband or the knowledge of the contracting parties that a ship's husband has been appointed; 2 Bell, Com. 199. The ship's husband, as such, has no lien on the vessel or proceeds; The Larch, 2 Curt. C. C. 427, Fed. Cas. No. 8,085; The Esteban de Antunano, 31 Fed. 923. See EXERCITOR MARIS.

SHIP'S PAPERS. The papers or documents required for the manifestation of the ownership and national character of a vessel and her cargo, and to show her compliance with the revenue and navigation laws of the country to which she belongs.

The want of these papers or any of them renders the character of a vessel suspicious; 2 Boulay-Paty, Droit Com. 14; and the use of false or simulated papers frequently subjects the vessel to confiscation; 15 East 46, 70, 364; or avoid an insurance, unless the insurer has stipulated that she may carry such papers; id.

The absence of any one of a ship's proper papers is not conclusive against the good faith of the ship; 1 Kent *157. Spoliation of ship's papers is an aggravated ground of suspicion and is said to be almost conclusive of guilt; 1 Dodds, 480; but it is not of itself a ground of condemnation; The Pizarro, 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 227, 4 L. Ed. 226.

A ship's papers are of two sorts: first, those required by the law of the particular country to which the ship belongs: as, the certificate of registry or of enrolment, the license, the crew-list, the shipping articles, clearance, etc.; and, second, such as are required by the law of nations to be on board of neutral ships as evidence of their title to that character: as, the sea brief or letter, or passport; the proofs of property in the ship, as bills of sale, etc.; the charter-party; the bills of lading; the invoices; the crew-list or muster-roll; the log-book, and the bill of health. McCulloch, Com. Dict.

The following constitute a ship's papers according to 1 Kent *157; a certificate of registry, sea-letter, muster-roll, log-book, charter-party, invoice, and bill of lading. As to what are ship's papers under the rules of various foreign nations, see 2 Halleck, Int. L., Baker's ed. 98.

The register, or other document in lieu thereof, together with the clearance and other papers granted by the officers of the customs to any foreign vessel, at her departure from the port from which she may have arrived, are required to be produced to the collector of any United States port previous to her entry. The master is required, within forty-eight hours after entry, to deposit the papers with the consul or vice-consul of the nation to which the vessel belongs, and to deliver to the collector of the port the certificate of such consul or vice-consul that he has done so; R. S. § 4209.

An application by a vice-consul for a permit for a vessel to depart, a bill of lading signed by the captain, a license to sail, a certificate of the custom-house official that the vessel had paid its tax for hospital dues, and a bill of health signed by the maritime sub-delegate; the bill of lading being identified by the mate and the other papers being official documents under seal executed by the Chilean authorities, are entitled to confidence and should be admitted in evidence as documents of a public nature; Grace v. Browne, 86 Fed. 156, 29 C. C. A. 621. It is not necessary that they should be confirmed and sanctioned by the ordinary tests of truth; id., citing 1 Greenl. Ev. § 423.

See SEA LETTER.

SHIPPER. One who ships or puts goods on board of a vessel, to be carried to another place during her voyage. In general the shipper is bound to pay for the hire of the vessel or the freight of the goods; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1030.

SHIPPING. Ships in general; ships or vessels of any kind intended for navigation.

Relating to ships; as, shipping interests, shipping affairs, shipping business, shipping concerns. Putting on board a ship or vessel, or receiving on board a ship or vessel. Webster, Dict.; Worcester, Dict. See SHIP; SHIP'S PAPERS.

SHIPPING ARTICLES. An agreement, in writing or print, between the master and seamen or mariners on board his vessel (except such as shall be apprenticed or servant to himself or owners), declaring the voyage or voyages, term or terms of time, for which such seamen or mariners shall be shipped. It is also required that at the foot of every such contract there shall be a memorandum of the day and the hour on which each seaman or mariner who shall so ship and subscribe shall render himself on board to begin the voyage agreed upon. They must state the number and description of the crew, specifying their respective employments; the time at which each seaman is to be on board to begin work; the capacity in which each seaman is to serve; the amount of wages which each seaman is to receive; a scale of the provisions which are to be furnished to each seaman; any regulations as to conduct on board, and as to fines, short allowance of provisions or other lawful punishments for misconduct; any stipulations in reference to advance and allotment of wages or other matters not contrary to law; U. S. R. S. § 4511, as amended in 1911.

The shipping articles ought not to contain any clause which derogates from the general rights and privileges of seamen; and, if they do, such clause will be declared void; Brown v. Lull, 2 Sumn. 443, Fed. Cas. No. 2,018; Harden v. Gordon, 2 Mas. 541, Fed. Cas. No. 6,047.

A seaman who signs shipping articles is bound to perform the voyage; and he has no right to elect to pay damages for non-performance of the contract; Ex parte Pool, 2 Va. Cas. 276.

See, generally, Douglass v. Eyre, Gilp. 147, Fed. Cas. No. 4,032; Magee v. The Moss, Gilp. 219, Fed. Cas. No. 8,944; Wickham v. Blight, Gilp. 452, Fed. Cas. No. 17,611; Jameson v. The Regulus, 1 Pet. Adm. 212, Fed. Cas. No. 7,198; U. S. v. Hamilton, 1 Mas. 443, Fed. Cas. No. 15,291; U. S. v. Haines, 5 Mas. 272, Fed. Cas. No. 15,275; Bartlett v. Wyman, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 260; SEAMEN.

SHIPPING COMMISSIONER. An officer formerly appointed by the several circuit courts of the United States for each port of entry, which is also a port of ocean navigation, which may require the same. His duties are: To facilitate and superintend the engagement and discharge of seamen; to secure the presence on board of the men engaged at the proper times; to facilitate the making of apprenticeship to the sea service; and such other like duties as may be required by law; R. S. §§ 4501-4508.

In 1884 the secretary of the treasury was given the right to appoint them and to regulate their mode of conducting business in the shipping offices. In 1903 the office of shipping commissioner was transferred to the Department of Commerce and Labor.

The master of a vessel making a coastwise voyage between Atlantic ports of the United States may act as shipping commissioner for the purpose of signing his own crew and the contract so signed is valid; The William H. Clifford, 165 Fed. 59.

SHIPMENT. The delivery of the goods within the time required on some vessel destined to the particular port which the seller has reason to suppose will sail within a reasonable time. It does not mean a clearance of the vessel as well as putting the goods on board where there is nothing to indicate that the seller was expected to exercise any control over the clearance of the vessel or of her subsequent management; Ledon v. Havemeyer, 121 N. Y. 179, 24 N. E. 297, 8 L. R. A. 245. See L. R. 2 App. Cas. 455; Stubbs v. Lund, 7 Mass. 453, 5 Am. Dec. 63.

SHIPS OF WAR. The ports of every nation are considered as open to the ships of war of other powers with whom it is at peace. They are exempt from all forms of process in private suit and cannot be seized or interfered with by judicial proceedings to punish violation of the public laws; 7 Op. A. G. 122. Such violations are to be remedied by the offended state appealing directly to the other sovereign. But such ships must not appear as a disturbing agency in the port of a friendly state. They must conform to the rules of quarantine and anchorage, and a ship of war which refuses to comply with such local regulations may be refused admittance, or her stay limited. If any of her crew while on land infringe the laws of the country, they are subject to the local authorities, but if an offender escapes to his vessel, he cannot be pursued there; Snow, Lect. Int. Law 33. They are probably not subject to salvage claims; 1 Halleck, Int. L., Baker's ed. 217.

In international law a state has jurisdiction over its property and citizens on the high seas when carried under its own flag. This jurisdiction is sometimes based on the theory that the ships of a country are a prolongation of its territory and sometimes on the theory that the jurisdiction arises from the mere fact of property; Snow, Lect. Int. L. 147.

Woolsey says of public ships: "They are not only public property, built or bought by the government, but they are, as it were, floating barracks, a part of the public organism and represent the national dignity, and on these accounts even in foreign ports are exempt from the local jurisdiction. . . . However, it is on account of the crew rather than on account of the ship itself that they have any territorial quality. Take the crew away, let the abandoned hulk be met at sea; it now becomes property, nothing more." Wheaton says: "A public vessel belonging to an independent sovereign is exempt from every species of visitation and search, even within the territorial jurisdiction of another state." The principle is universally admitted.

Public ships of a friendly nation, coming into ports of the United States, and demeaning themselves in a friendly manner are exempt from the jurisdiction of the country; The Exchange v. McFaddon, 7 Cr. (U. S.) 116, 3 L. Ed. 287. See NEUTRALITY.

SHIRE. A Saxon word which signified a division; it was made up of an indefinite number of hundreds—later called a county (Comitatus). 1 Steph. Com. 76.

The ancient English states, though degraded to the rank of shires, preserved their autonomy to the utmost practicable extent. They retained the state assembly, which was the supreme court of law, the king himself sitting in it as in the national assembly. In the absence of the king, the ealdorman presided in it. The shire government was not royal, but ducal. The king, in appointing the ealdorman, appointed, not a servant of his will, but a prince and lord of the shire. The Anglo-Saxon shire constitution, in spite of the establishment of the empire, was an expression of still undeveloped royalty. See Essays Ang. Sax. Law 21.

A county.

SHIRE-GEMOT (spelled, also, Scire-gemote, Scir-gemot, Scyre-gemote, Shire-mote; from the Saxon scir or scyre, county, shire, and gemote, a court, an assembly).

The Saxon county court. It was held twice a year before the bishop and aldermen of the shire, and was the principal court. Spelman, Gloss, Gemotum; Crabb, Hist. Eng. Law 28.

SHIRE-MAN, or SCYRE-MAN. Before the conquest the judge of the county, by whom trials for land, etc., were determined. Toml.; Moz. & W.

SHIRE RIEVE, or SHIRE REVE. A sheriff (q. v.).

SHOCK. See MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

SHOP. A place kept and used for the sale of goods. Com. v. Riggs, 14 Gray (Mass.) 378, 77 Am. Dec. 333. A building as distinguished from a place of sale which is open like a stall. Richards v. Ins. Co., 60 Mich. 426, 27 N. W. 586. In order to constitute a shop there must be some structure of a more or less permanent character; 6 B. & S. 303.

As used in a statute it is a house or building in which small quantities of goods, wares, or drugs and the like are sold, or in which mechanics labor, and sometimes keep their manufactures for sale. State v. Morgan, 98 N. C. 643, 3 S. E. 927.

SHOP-BOOKS. The books of a retail dealer, mechanic, or other person, in which entries or charges are made of work done, or goods sold and delivered to customers, commonly called "account-books," or "books of account." The party's own shop-books are in certain cases admissible in evidence to prove the delivery of goods therein charged, where a foundation is laid for their introduction. The following are the general rules governing the production of this kind of evidence. First, that the party offering the books kept no clerk; second, that the books offered by the party are his books of account, and that the entries therein are in his handwriting; third, it must appear, by some of those who have dealt with the party and settled by the books offered, that they found them correct; fourth, it must be shown that some of the articles charged have been delivered. Where entries are made by a clerk who is dead, such entries are admissible in evidence on proof of the handwriting; Steph. Ev. art. 38; Boyer v. Sweet, 4 Ill. (3 Scam.) 120; Linnell v. Sutherland, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 568; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 117; 1 Smith, Lead. Cas. 252. Where memoranda made during the day by one, are at night transcribed to a book by another, who did not know the truth of the facts recorded by the former, the book is not competent testimony and cannot be used to refresh his memory; Chicago Lumbering Co. v. Hewitt, 64 Fed. 314, 12 C. C. A. 129, 22 U. S. App. 646. See ORIGINAL ENTRY; MEMORANDUM; ACCOUNT BOOK.

SHOP LIFTING. See LARCENY; KLEPTOMANIA.

SHOP RIGHT. See PATENT.

SHORE. Land on the side of the sea, a lake, or a river. Strictly speaking, when the water does not ebb and flow in a river, there is no shore. See Storer v. Freeman, 6 Mass. 435, 4 Am. Dec. 155; Galveston v. Menard, 23 Tex. 349; Bell v. Gough, 23 N. J. L. 683; RIVER; SEA; LITUS MARIS; FOBESHORE.

On a navigable river it is the ground lying between ordinary high and low water mark; Dalton v. Hazelet, 182 Fed. 562, 105 C. C. A. 99. Shore and shore line, when used in rules for the division of accretions upon rivers, mean the margin of the river or the water's edge; Peoria v. Bank, 224 Ill. 43, 79 N. E. 296.

SHORT CAUSE. A suit in the chancery division of the high court of justice, where there is only a simple point for discussion, which will probably occupy not more than ten minutes in the hearing. A suit may often be greatly accelerated by being placed on the list of short causes, which are heard one day in each week (generally Saturday) during the sittings of the court; Dan. Ch. Pr. (5th Ed.) 836; Hunt. Eq. pt. I, ch. 4, § 4. A similar provision is familiar to the practice of the courts of several of the states, but its operation is not restricted to chancery cases, and the time allowed for the hearing varies in the different courts.

SHORT ENTRY. A term used among bankers to denote the fact which takes place when a note has been sent to a bank for collection, and an entry of it is made in the customer's bank-book, stating the amount in an inner column, and carrying it out into the accounts between the parties when it has been paid.

SHORT-FORD. An ancient custom of the city of Exeter, similar to that of gavelet in London, which was in effect a foreclosure of the right of the tenant by the lord of the fee, in cases of non-payment of rent. Cowell.

SHORT HAUL. See INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

SHORT NOTICE. In English Practice. Four days' notice of trial. Wharton, Law Dict. Notice of trial, 1 Cr. & M. 499. Where short notice has been given, two days is sufficient notice of continuance; Wharton, Lex.

SHORTAGE. No allowance for shortage can be made where the contents of missing bags of sugar had been put into new bags by seamen and actually delivered; Kerruish v. Refining Co., 49 Fed. 280, 1 C. C. A. 243, 1 U. S. App. 14.

SHOW. To make apparent or clear by evidence, to prove. Coyle v. Com., 104 Pa. 133.

SHUT DOWN. Within the meaning of an insurance policy, a saw-mill which has stopped running for the winter, is shut down, though men are employed about the premises and the machinery has not been dismantled. McKenzie v. Ins. Co., 112 Cal. 548, 44 Pac. 922.

SHYSTER. A trickish knave; one who carries on any business, especially a legal business, in a dishonest way. Gribble v. Press Co., 34 Minn. 343, 25 N. W. 710; see Bailey v. Pub. Co., 40 Mich. 251.

SI ACTIO. The conclusion of a plea to an action when the defendant demands judgment, if the plaintiff ought to have his action, etc. Obsolete.

SI ITA EST. If it be so. Emphatic words in the old writ of mandamus to a judge, commanding him, if the act alleged be truly stated (si ita est), to affix his seal to a bill of exceptions. Ex parte Crane, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 192, 8 L. Ed. 92.

SI PRIUS. If before. Formal words in ancient writs for summoning juries. Fleta, l. 2, c. 65, § 12.

SI TE FECERIT SECURUM (Lat. if he make you secure). Words which occur in the form of writs, which originally required, or still require, that the plaintiff should give security to the sheriff that he will prosecute his claim, before the sheriff can be required to execute such writ.

SICKNESS. By sickness is understood any affection of the body which deprives it temporarily of the power to fulfil its usual functions. It has been held to include insanity. L. R. 8 Q. B. 295.

Sickness is either such as affects the body generally, or only some parts of it. Of the former class a fever is an example; of the latter, blindness. When a process has been issued against an individual for his arrest, the sheriff or other officer is authorized, after he has arrested him, if he be so dangerously sick that to remove him would endanger his life or his health, to let him remain where he found him, and to return the facts at large, or simply languidus.

SIDE-BAR RULES. In English Practice. Rules which were formerly moved for by attorneys on the side-bar of the court, but now may be had of the clerk of the rules, upon a præcipe. These rules are, that the sheriff return his writ, that he bring in the body, for special imparlance, to be present at the taxing of costs, and the like. As to side-bar applications, see Mitchell, Rules 20.

SIDESMEN (testes, synodales). In Ecclesiastical Law. A kind of impanelled jury, consisting of two, three, or more persons, in every parish, who were upon oath to present all heretics and irregular persons. In process of time they became standing officers in many places, especially cities. They were called synodsmen,—by corruption sidesmen; also questmen. But their office has become absorbed in that of church-warden. 1 Burn, Eccl. Law 399.

SIDEWALK. That part of a public street or highway designed for the use of pedestrians.

As used in this country it does not mean a walk or way constructed of any particular kind of material, or in any special manner, but ordinarily is used to designate that part of the street of a municipality which has been set apart and used for pedestrians, as distinguished from that portion set apart and used for animals and vehicles. Graham v. Albert Lea, 48 Minn. 201, 50 N. W. 1108.

Generally the sidewalk is included with the gutters and roadway in the general term street; Bloomington v. Bay, 42 Ill. 503; In re Burmeister, 76 N. Y. 174; Warner v. Knox, 50 Wis. 429, 7 N. W. 372. It was so held in the construction of a statute providing for compensation for damages caused by changing the grade of streets; Kokomo v. Mahan, 100 Ind. 242; and in one authorizing the improvement of streets; Wiles v. Hoss, 114 Ind. 371, 16 N. E. 800; but in many cases of municipal ordinances and contracts, the word street is held not to include sidewalks; Dyer v. Chase, 52 Cal. 440; Dickinson v. Worcester, 138 Mass. 555.

It is the duty of a municipal corporation to keep the sidewalks, as well as the roadbed of the street, in repair; Brown v. Chillicothe, 122 Ia. 640, 98 N. W. 502; Pomfrey v. Saratoga Springs, 104 N. Y. 459, 11 N. E. 43; Wall v. Pittsburg, 205 Pa. 48, 54 Atl. 497; Seward v. Wilmington, 2 Marv. (Del.) 189, 42 Atl. 451; it is held that proof that a sidewalk was carefully constructed originally does not absolve the city from its duty of exercising continuous oversight to keep it free from defects or obstructions; City of Muncie v. Hey, 164 Ind. 570, 74 N. E. 250; that sidewalks are constructed the same way in other cities is not a defence; George v. Haverhill, 110 Mass. 506. It is not necessary to show that the city constructed the walk in question or ordered its construction; Argus v. Sturgis, 86 Mich. 344, 48 N. W. 1085; Hillyer v. Winsted, 77 Conn. 304, 59 Atl. 40; Klein v. Dallas, 71 Tex. 280, 8 S. W. 90; nor to prove title to the property in the city; Still v. Houston, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 447, 66 S. W. 76; nor to prove any formal dedication of the street; Maus v. Springfield, 101 Mo. 613, 14 S. W. 630, 20 St. Rep. 634; nor that it had been accepted by the authorities of the corporation or to allege the name of the street; Town of Rosedale v. Ferguson, 3 Ind. App. 596, 30 N. E. 156.

If an individual voluntarily puts down a sidewalk in front of his premises, the city may by acquiescence in the act for a sufficient length of time, and by other acts, accept it, together with an obligation to keep it in repair and free from obstructions; Hutchings v. Sullivan, 90 Me. 131, 37 Atl. 883; Graham v. Albert Lea, 48 Minn. 201, 50 N. W. 1108; such acquiescence sufficiently appears where, after the construction of the walk, the city assumes jurisdiction over it and orders repairs to be made, or where the walk is in a public street and in constant use and in the line of other sidewalks, constructed by the direction of the city or over which it has control; Plattsburgh v. Mitchell, 20 Neb. 228, 29 N. W. 593.

A city which permits a citizen to construct a platform over the gutter before his place of business is bound to exercise the same degree of care toward keeping it in a safe condition for pedestrians as if it had itself constructed it, though not an insurer of its safe condition; Bell v. Henderson, 74 S. W. 206, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 2434. See Elam v. Mt. Sterling, 132 Ky. 657, 117 S. W. 250, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 513. A municipal corporation which permits a walk to be used for public travel is liable for an injury wrongfully caused by an obstruction thereon, no matter how the walk came into existence; Saulsbury v. Ithaca, 94 N. Y. 27, 46 Am. Rep. 122; Ponca v. Crawford, 23 Neb. 662, 37 N. W. 609, 8 Am. St. Rep. 144. One who knows of a defect in the sidewalk is bound to use particular care to avoid injury; Koch v. Edgewater, 14 Hun (N. Y.) 544; but knowledge does not defeat recovery, if due care is used; Gage v. Hornellsville, 2 N. Y. St. Rep. 351.

The duty imposed on municipal corporations of keeping highways safe and convenient includes obstructions from ice and snow; Green v. Danby, 12 Vt. 338; Loker v. Brookline, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 343; Providence v. Clapp, 17 How. (U. S.) 161, 15 L. Ed. 72, where it was held that it was for the jury to say whether treading down and not removing the snow was a safe and convenient method of removing the obstruction.

Ice formed by melting snow and ice falling from a building simply as the result of natural laws, have been held not a defect for which the municipality is liable; Hausmann v. Madison, 85 Wis. 187, 55 N. W. 167, 21 L. R. A. 263, 39 Am. St. Rep. 834. There must be a breach of duty on the part of the city, such as an unusual or dangerous obstruction to travel from snow and ice, and such time must have elapsed after the creation of the obstruction as to afford a presumption of knowledge; Harrington v. Buffalo, 121 N. Y. 147, 24 N. E. 186. The duty of removing such obstructions is a qualified one, becoming imperative only under the circumstances mentioned; Hunt v. New York, 109 N. Y. 134, 16 N. E. 320. Where, however, there is by statute an absolute liability for injuries resulting from a defective sidewalk, no question of want of notice or the exercise of care is a defence; Chapman v. Milton, 31 W. Va. 384, 7 S. E. 22. The remedy for an injury resulting from a defective sidewalk is exclusively against the city, and its liability cannot be avoided by the existence of any ordinance on the subject; Taylor v. Yonkers, 105 N. Y. 202, 11 N. E. 642, 59 Am. Rep. 492; Kirby v. Market Ass'n, 14 Gray (Mass.) 249, 74 Am. Dec. 682. But if a property owner negligently maintains a pipe from the roof of a building so as to discharge water upon the sidewalk, by which ice is accumulated thereon, this will render the property owner liable for injury to pedestrians caused thereby; Tremblay v. Harmony Mills, 171 N. Y. 598, 64 N. E. 501.

Depressions in a sidewalk, into which water flows from adjoining property and freezes into uneven surfaces, may constitute a defect, for injury by which the municipality may be liable; Upham v. Salem, 162 Mass. 483, 39 N. E. 178; or the cutting of a ditch through ice and snow across a sidewalk for the purpose of conveying water into a gutter; Hall v. Manchester, 40 N. H. 410. A ridge of ice caused by water flowing from a pipe leading from a house near the edge of the walk is such defect; Dean v. New Castle, 201 Pa. 51, 50 Atl. 310; Brown v. White, 202 Pa. 297, 51 Atl. 962, 58 L. R. A. 321.

Unguarded holes, pits, or excavations are obstructions; Baltimore v. Holmes, 39 Md. 243; Muncy v. Bevier, 124 Mo. App. 10, 101 S. W. 157; Purcell v. Chicago, 231 Ill. 164, 83 N. E. 187. Not everything which endangers the safety of highway travel renders a highway defective and out of repair; Hewison v. New Haven, 34 Conn. 136, 91 Am. Dec. 718.

The right of action arises solely from negligence; Michigan City v. Boeckling, 122 Ind. 39, 23 N. E. 518; the fact that an accident occurs is not sufficient, there must be a neglect of duty; Winne v. Albany, 61 Hun (N. Y.) 620, 15 N. Y. Supp. 423. In order to hold the city liable for negligence in permitting an obstruction, it must have notice, but this may be constructive through the elapse of sufficient time for the presumption of notice to arise; 27 Can. 545; Blakeley v. Troy, 18 Hun (N. Y.) 167.

Where an awning over the sidewalk was permitted to remain in an unsafe condition by the accumulation of snow and ice, the city was held liable for injuries sustained by the fall of the awning; Drake v. Lowell, 13 Metc. (Mass.) 292; but where an accident was occasioned by ice formed by water dripping from the awning, it was held that the city was not liable and the action should have been against the owner; Hanson v. Warren, 22 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 133.

Obstructions above ground may interfere as much with the safe use of a sidewalk as those on the surface; Grove v. Ft. Wayne, 45 Ind. 429, 15 Am. Rep. 262; Bohen v. Waseca, 32 Minn. 176, 19 N. W. 730, 50 Am. Rep. 564; Bieling v. Brooklyn, 120 N. Y. 98, 24 N. E. 389 (awnings); Leary v. Yonkers, 95 App. Div. 126, 88 N. Y. Supp. 829 (signs); West v. Lynn, 110 Mass. 514 (transparencies); Bliven v. Sioux City, 85 Ia. 346, 52 N. W. 246 (a bill board).

A city has no inherent power to go upon private property abutting on a highway to remove melting snow and stop the discharge of water from a pipe in order to prevent the accumulation of ice on a sidewalk, since the pipe and the accumulated snow do not constitute a nuisance per se; Udkin v. New Haven, 80 Conn. 291, 68 Atl. 253, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 868.

A citizen owes the city the duty to use his senses, and not to run into obstructions with which he is familiar and which he might avoid by the exercise of ordinary care; Jackson v. Kansas City, 106 Mo. App. 52, 79 S. W. 1174; Lerner v. Philadelphia, 221 Pa. 294, 70 Atl. 755, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 614; Cook v. Atlanta, 94 Ga. 613, 19 S. E. 987; Shelley v. Austin, 74 Tex. 608, 12 S. W. 753; but if one injured by defective condition of the street had no knowledge of the defect, he cannot be charged with contributory negligence; Guthrie v. Swan, 5 Okl. 779, 51 Pac. 562; Mishawaka v. Kirby, 32 Ind. App. 233, 69 N. E. 481; Newman v. New York, 57 Misc. Rep. 636, 108 N. Y. Supp. 676; Cox v. Des Moines, 111 Ia. 646, 82 N. W. 993; Quinlan v. Philadelphia, 205 Pa. 309, 54 Atl. 1026.

One has a right to presume, and to act upon that presumption, unless he has knowledge or reason to believe to the contrary, that a street is in a reasonably safe condition for travel if he uses due care; Bruch v. Philadelphia, 181 Pa. 588, 37 Atl. 818; Lamb v.

Worcester, 177 Mass. 82, 58 N. E. 474; Holloway v. Kansas City, 184 Mo. 19, 82 S. W. 89; Corcoran v. New York, 188 N. Y. 131, 80 N. E. 660; City Council of Montgomery v. Reese, 146 Ala. 410, 40 South. 760; Chicago v. Babcock, 143 Ill. 358, 32 N. E. 271; he may assume that it is not obstructed, or that obstructions will be sufficiently guarded to insure safety, and that it is reasonably safe throughout its entire width; Spring Valley v. Gavin, 182 Ill. 232, 54 N. E. 1035; Holloway v. Kansas City, 184 Mo. 19, 82 S. W. 89; Brusso v. Buffalo, 90 N. Y. 679; he is not bound to anticipate danger; Turner v. Newburgh, 109 N. Y. 301, 16 N. E. 344, 4 Am. St. Rep. 453; nor is he under duty to look for defects; Drake v. Kansas City, 190 Mo. 370, 88 S. W. 689, 109 Am. St. Rep. 759; Lamb v. Worcester, 177 Mass. 82, 58 N. E. 474; but if one knows a street or sidewalk to be dangerous, he has no right to presume it to be safe; Perrette v. Kansas City, 162 Mo. 238, 62 S. W. 448.

A person whose sight is defective is required to exercise more care and keener watchfulness than is required from a person of good sight; Wedderburn v. Detroit, 144 Mich. 684, 108 N. W. 102; Keith v. R. Co., 196 Mass. 478, 82 N. E. 680, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 648; so of one who is blind; Hill v. Glenwood, 124 Iowa, 479, 100 N. W. 522; near-sighted; Spring v. Williamstown, 186 Mass. 479, 71 N. E. 949; contra, Rock v. Const. Co., 120 La. 831, 45 South. 741, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 653, where it was held that a person with defective eye-sight has a right to assume within reasonable limits that the sidewalks are safe, and that he will be warned and protected from danger due to an unsafe condition.

In actions for damages from defective sidewalks, it was a question for the jury whether, under the circumstances, the corporation is liable; Burr v. Plymouth, 48 Conn. 460; Beck v. Hood, 185 Pa. 32, 39 Atl. 842. A question for their decision is whether ordinary care was used and whether the sidewalk was reasonably safe; Hall v. Lowell, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 260; or whether there was negligence in not removing the obstruction; Goodfellow v. New York, 100 N. Y. 15, 2 N. E. 462; Foxworthy v. Hastings, 25 Neb. 133, 41 N. W. 132; or whether there was a sufficient lapse of time to be considered constructive notice; Woolsey v. Ellenville, 61 Hun 136, 15 N. Y. Supp. 647.

Even if the city were negligent, a person injured by a defective sidewalk cannot recover unless he show himself in the exercise of due care; Sandwich v. Dolan, 133 Ill. 177, 24 N. E. 526, 23 Am. St. Rep. 598; and if the accident occurred by reason of the plaintiff's being intoxicated, he cannot recover; McCracken v. Markesan, 76 Wis. 499, 45 N. W. 323.

Where the sidewalk is manifestly dangerous it is the duty of a pedestrian to walk on the roadway; Forker v. Sandy Lake, 130 Pa. 123, 18 Atl. 609; and he cannot recover for an injury which his own observation, prudently exercised, ought to have enabled him to avoid; Moore v. Huntington, 31 W. Va. 842, 8 S. E. 512.

A municipal corporation may require its citizens to clean the snow from their sidewalks; Taylor v. Yonkers, 105 N. Y. 202, 11 N. E. 642, 59 Am. Rep. 492. A law requiring the abutting owners to keep sidewalks in repair is a duty cast directly upon the property owner and is in the nature of a police regulation; it is not a tax or municipal assessment; Wilkinsburg Bor. v. Home for Aged Women, 131 Pa. 109, 18 Atl. 937, 6 L. R. A. 531.

Where the abutting owners permitted the sidewalk to be obstructed for an unreasonable time in loading and unloading a truck with skids so that a pedestrian was injured in passing over it, the owner was held liable; Linehen v. Western Electric Co., 29 App. Div. 462, 51 N. Y. Supp. 1080. The temporary obstruction of a street or sidewalk for the purpose of loading or unloading vehicles may be justified on the ground of necessity; Mathews v. Kelsey, 58 Me. 56, 4 Am. Rep. 248; Gates & Son Co. v. Richmond, 103 Va. 702, 49 S. E. 965; Tolman & Co. v. Chicago, 240 Ill. 268, 88 N. E. 488, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 97, 16 Ann. Cas. 142; so as to transferring baggage and passengers at a railroad station, but not for soliciting business there; Pennsylvania Co. v. Donovan, 116 Fed. 907.

During building operations, materials may be placed in the street; Callanan v. Gilman, 107 N. Y. 360, 14 N. E. 264, 1 Am. St. Rep. 831; Tolman & Co. v. Chicago, 240 Ill. 268, 88 N. E. 488, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 97, 16 Ann. Cas. 142.

Where the proprietor of a theatre invites an unusual crowd to occupy his sidewalk, he is bound to greater precaution and owes a duty to pedestrians that they are not injured through any lack of care; Stewart v. Jermon, 5 Pa. Super. Ct. 609. See STREET; HIGHWAY.

A lot owner in a city may use space under a sidewalk in front of his lot for hatchways and coal holes; Stege v. Milwaukee, 110 Wis. 484, 86 N. W. 161; an electric light company, having the right to use the streets for its conduits, can use the sidewalks; Allegheny County L. Co. v. Booth, 216 Pa. 564, 66 Atl. 72, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 404; a city may plant shrubs on a part of the sidewalk; Dotey v. District of Columbia, 25 App. D. C. 232.

A city has the same control over sidewalks as over the cartway; McDevitt v. Gas Co., 160 Pa. 375, 28 Atl. 948.

SIGHT. Presentment. Bills of exchange are frequently drawn payable at sight or a certain number of days or months after sight.

Bills payable at sight are said to be entitled to days of grace by the law merchant; Big. Bills & N. 92; Dan. Neg. Instr. § 617; Cribbs v. Adams, 13 Gray (Mass.) 597; contra, Trask v. Martin, 1 E. D. Sm. (N. Y.) 505. Statutes have provided otherwise in all but a few states. See DAYS OF GRACE.

The holder of a bill payable at sight is required to use due diligence to put it into circulation, and, if payable after sight, have it presented in reasonable time; Robinson v. Ames, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 146, 11 Am. Dec. 259, 28 E. L. & E. 131; Field v. Nickerson, 13 Mass. 137; Fernandez v. Lewis, 1 McCord (S. C.) 322.

After sight in a bill means after acceptance; in a note, after exhibition to the maker; Dan. Neg. Instr. § 619. It is usual to leave a bill for acceptance one whole day; but the acceptance is dated as on the day it was left; Sewell, Bank.

A bill drawn payable a certain number of days after sight, acceptance waived, must be presented to fix the time at which the bill is to become due, and the term of the bill begins to run from the date of presentment. See 4 Montreal L. Rep. 249.

Sight drafts and sight bills are bills payable at sight. See BILL OF EXCHANGE.

SIGILLUM (Lat.). A seal.

SIGN. To affix a signature to; to ratify by hand or seal; to subscribe in one's own handwriting. Webst.; Knox's Estate, 131 Pa. 230, 18 Atl. 1021, 6 L. R. A. 353, 17 Am. St. Rep. 798.

SIGN MANUAL. In English Law. The signature of the king to grants or letters patent, inscribed at the top. 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 347*. The sign manual is not good unless countersigned, etc.; 9 Mod. 54.

Any one's name written by himself. Webster, Dict.; Wharton, Law Dict.

SIGNA (Lat.). In Civil Law. Those species of indicia which come more immediately under the cognizance of the senses: such as, stains of blood on the person of one accused of murder, indications of terror at being charged with the offence, and the like.

SIGNAL. A means of communication between vessels at sea or between a vessel and the shore. The international code of signals for the use of all nations assigns arbitrary meanings to different arrangements of flags or displays of lights. Where a steamer did not hear the signal but should have heard it, she is as culpable as if she had heard and disregarded it; The City of New York, 49 Fed. 956, 1 C. C. A. 483, 1 U. S. App. 72. Where a collision results through the failure of one of two colliding steamers to conform to her own signals, she is responsible for the collision; The Nutmeg State, 67 Fed. 556, 14 C. C. A. 525, 35 U. S. App. 161. See COLLISION; VESSEL; NAVIGATION, RULES OF; RAILROAD.

SIGNATORY. A term used in diplomacy to indicate a nation which is a party to a treaty.

SIGNATURE. In Ecclesiastical Law. The name of a sort of rescript, without seal, containing the supplication, the signature of the pope or his delegate, and the grant of a pardon. Dict. Dr. Can.

In Practice. By signature is understood the act of putting down a man's name at the end of an instrument, to attest its validity. The name thus written is also called a signature.

A person's name as set down by himself. Mills v. Howland, 2 N. D. 30, 49 N. W. 413.

It is not necessary that a party should write his name himself, to constitute a signature; his mark is sufficient, though he was able to write; 7 L. R. Pr. 590; 3 Nev. & P. 228; Jackson v. Van Dusen, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 144, 4 Am. Dec. 330; In re Guilfoyle, 96 Cal. 598, 31 Pac. 553, 22 L. R. A. 370; see MARK; and it is valid without attestation (unless required by statute); Bates v. Harte, 124 Ala. 427, 26 South. 898, 82 Am. St. Rep. 186 (contra, Sivills v. Taylor, 12 Okl. 47, 69 Pac. 867); or when the mark is in lead pencil; Drefahl v. Bank, 132 Ia. 563, 107 N. W. 179. Under the English statute of frauds, the signing may be a mark or by initials only, or by a fictitious or assumed name, or by a name different from that by which the testator is designated in the body of the will; In re Knox's Estate, 131 Pa. 220, 18 Atl. 1021, 6 L. R. A. 353, 17 Am. St. Rep. 798, citing Jarman on Wills, 78, where it was said that the precise case of a signature by the Christian name only had not then arisen in England or in the United States, but the court held it valid, and affirmed the admission to probate as a will of an instrument written with a lead pencil upon three pages of the ordinary sheets of letter paper and signed "Harriet."

"Where the initials only of the party are signed, it is quite clear that, with the aid of parol evidence, which is admitted to apply to them, the signature is to be held valid;" Browne, Stat. of Frauds, § 362; and the signature to a note may be by initials only; 14 L. T. 433; 1 Ames, B. & N. 145. The initials "A. B." are not the signature of the judge, or a sufficient authentication of a bill of exceptions, or sufficient evidence of its allowance by the judge; Origet v. U. S., 125 U. S. 240, 8 Sup. Ct. 846, 31 L. Ed. 743. A signature in lead pencil is valid; Drefahl v. Bank, 132 Iowa, 563, 107 N. W. 179; although other signatures to the same instrument were in ink; Porter v. Valentine, 18 Misc. Rep. 213, 41 N. Y. Supp. 507; so is a printed signature or one lithographed on an instrument by the party as signed by him; Grieb v. Cole, 60 Mich. 397, 27 N. W. 579, 1 Am. St. Rep. 533; Hewel v. Hogin, 3 Cal. App. 248, 84 Pac. 1002; or it may be on a telegraph message given to an operator; L. R. 5 C. P. 295. The printed name of the vendor on the heading of a bill of parcels sent by him to the vendee is a sufficient signature to bind the vendor under the statute of frauds. A signature made by a party, another person guiding his hand with his consent, is sufficient; Stevens v. Vancleve, 4 Wash. C. C. 262, 269, Fed. Cas. No. 13,412.

It is not necessary in the execution of a note, that the person executing it, if unable to write, touch the pen while the person authorized signs his name; Jesse v. Parker's Adm'r, 6 Gratt. (Va.) 57, 52 Am. Dec. 102; Lord v. Lord, 58 N. H. 7, 42 Am. Rep. 565.

Where one who cannot write directs another to sign for him in his presence, it will be valid with or without a mark; Just v. Wise, 42 Mich. 573, 4 N. W. 298; and the signature of the grantor affixed to a deed by another in the presence and at the request of the grantor, is as binding as if he had personally affixed his signature; Lewis v. Watson, 98 Ala. 479, 13 South. 570, 22 L. R. A. 297, 39 Am. St. Rep. 82, and note; though he were able to write; Espenscheid v. Espenscheid, 158 N. Y. 732, 53 N. E. 1125; and the owner of a trust estate who is very feeble may sign a deed substituting trustees, through the agency of another person who signs in his presence at his direction; Watkins v. McDonald (Miss.) 41 South. 376.

The signature "Ezekiel Norman, for Rachel Doherty, at her request," was held to be valid in a Pennsylvania will; Vernon v. Kirk, 30 Pa. 218; and the surname signed to a church subscription with the word "family" added was binding upon the signer; Hodges v. Nalty, 113 Wis. 567, 89 N. W. 535.

If a person is designated by his proper name in the body of a deed, the fact that he signs by a wrong name will not invalidate it; Middleton v. Findla, 25 Cal. 76. Where a witness to a will named John D. Lynn signed the name of Jno. R. Jacobs, the name of the decedent, it was held that he had signed his name as witness under the statute; In re Jacob's Will, 73 Misc. Rep. 162, 132 N. Y. Supp. 481; it was said in that case that where a testator signs his will or a witness attests it under a fictitious name, it is sufficient. Where a witness to the will of Mr. Sperling signed only these words "Servant to Mr. Sperling" omitting his name, it was held good; Goods of Sperling, 3 Swa. & Tr. 272. Where "Richard Edmunds, Solicitor," witnessed a will, and his clerk signed by mistake "John Clerk, His Clerk," it was held good; Goods of Oliver, 2 Spinks 57; but where C. G. Warren witnessed the will of Ozius Walker and signed "C. G. Walker," it was held not a proper attestation, three judges dissenting; In re Walker, 110 Cal. 387, 42 Pac. 815, 30 L. R. A. 460, 52 Am. St. Rep. 104. The "full name," required for a signature to a limited partnership statement, under a statute, is complied with when the signature is in the form habitually used in business, though only a surname and initial; Laffin & Rand Co. v. Steytler, 146 Pa. 434, 23 Atl. 215, 14 L. R. A. 690. A contract purporting in its body to be an obligation of a corporation and signed by one as manager, having authority to do so, is the contract of the corporation. It is not essential that the name of the corporation should appear in the signature; Kessel v. Austin Min. Co., 144 Fed. 859.

Apart from any expressed or implied requirement of law, a signature by a stamp, applied by the party or by another at his direction, binds him; In re Deep River Nat'l Bank, 73 Conn. 341, 47 Atl. 675; Hamilton v. State, 103 Ind. 96, 2 N. E. 299, 53 Am. Rep. 491.

The possession of a rubber stamp of his signature by a depositor in a bank, kept without negligence, but without notice to the bank, does not relieve the latter for having paid out money on a forged check, made from the stamp. Here an employé used the stamp to obtain a tracing of the depositor's signature; Robb v. Penna. Co., 186 Pa. 456, 40 Atl. 969, 65 Am. St. Rep. 868.

A person who is sui juris, will not, in the absence of a fraud, be permitted to avoid his written obligation by showing that he did not read it or hear it read; Taylor v. Fox, 16 Mo. App. 527. One who signs a contract is conclusively presumed to know its contents and has no right to rely on representations of another person as to its legal effect; Vaillancourt v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co. of Canada, 82 Vt. 416, 74 Atl. 99; and one having average intelligence to read a contract, who signs it not under any emergency, nor under any trick or artifice, cannot afterwards avoid it on the ground of fraud; Truitt-Silvey Hat Co. v. Callaway & Truitt, 130 Ga. 637, 61 S. E. 481; there must be a statement of fact knowingly untrue; Gillespie v. Fulton Oil & Gas Co., 236 Ill. 188, 86 N. E. 219. And where a promissory note was signed under the impression that it was one of some unimportant papers, the signature was held valid in the hands of an innocent third party; McCoy v. Gouvion's Ex'r, 102 Ky. 386, 43 S. W. 699.

One who cannot read a contract which he is about to execute is bound to procure it to be read and explained to him before he signs it, and is chargeable with knowledge of its contents whether he does so or not; Chicago, St. P., M. & O. Ry. Co. v. Belliwith, 83 Fed. 437, 28 C. C. A. 358. But where the other party misread the paper in such manner as to create the impression that it contained the same matter which had been orally agreed to, and thereby procured the signature, the failure to read it before signing did not prevent the avoidance of the contract; Western Mfg. Co. v. Cotton & Long,

"If a man knows that the deed is one purporting to deal with his property and he executes it, it will not be sufficient for him, in order to support a plea of non est factum, to show that a misrepresentation was made to him as to the contents of the deed"; [1907] 1 Ch. 537, quoted with approval in [1908] 1 Ch. 1; but see [1911] 1 K. B. 489, where the Court of Appeals seems to take a different view. The view expressed in [1908] 1 Ch. 1, was that the old cases on misrepresentation as to the contents of a deed were really based upon the illiteracy of the person, to whom the deed was read, and that an illiterate man was treated as a blind man, and an educated person is estopped to avail himself of the plea of non est factum against a person who innocently acts upon the faith of the deed being valid.

The signature is usually made at the bottom of the instrument; but in wills it has been held that when a testator commenced his will with these words, "I, A B, make this my will," it was a sufficient signing; 3 Lev. 1. And see Sudg. Vend. 71; 2 Stark. Ev. 605, 613. But this decision is said to be absurd; 1 Brown, Civ. Law 278, n. 16; Schoul. Wills 315. See Merlin, Répert. Signature, for a history of the origin of the signature; and, also, 4 Cruise, Dig. 32, c. 2, § 73.

SIGNET. A seal commonly used for the sign manual of the sovereign. Whart. Lex.

In Scotland, a seal by which royal warrants connected with the administration of justice were formerly authenticated. See WRITERS TO THE SIGNET.

In England, a seal for the authentication of royal grants, affixed to documents before passing the privy seal.

Prior to 1848, all letters-patent and other documents, before passing the privy seal, were required first to have the signet affixed, and passed from the signet office to the office of the privy seal where the privy seal was attached. By Act 11 & 12 Vict. c. 82, warrants under the royal sign manual, countersigned by one of the principal secretaries of state, have been made, per se, sufficient authority for the privy seal to be affixed and the signet office has been abolished. Int. Cyc.

SIGNIFICATION (Lat. signum, a sign, facere, to make). In French Law. The notice given of a decree, sentence, or other judicial act.

SIGNIFICAVIT (Lat.). In Ecclesiastical Law. When this word is used alone, it means the bishop's certificate to the court of chancery in order to obtain the writ of excommunication; but where the words writ of significavit are used, the meaning is the same as writ de excommunicato capiendo. 2 Burn, Eccl. Law 248; Shelf. Marr. & D. 502. Obsolete.

SIGNING JUDGMENT. In English Practice. The plaintiff or defendant, when the cause has reached such a stage that he is entitled to a judgment, obtains the signature or allowance of the proper officer; and this is called signing judgment, and is instead of the delivery of judgment in open court. Steph. Pl., And. ed. 196. It is the leave of the master of the office to enter up judgment, and may be had in vacation. 3 B. & C. 317; Tidd, Pr. 616.

In American Practice, it is an actual signing of the judgment on the record, by the judge or other officer duly authorized. Graham, Pr. 341.

SILENCE. The state of a person who does not speak, or of one who refrains from speaking.

Mere silence cannot be considered as a consent to a contract, except in cases where the silent person is bound in good faith to explain himself; in which case silence gives consent; Moore v. Smith, 14 S. & R. (Pa.) 393; L. R. 6 Q. B. 597; French v. Vining, 102 Mass. 135, 3 Am. Rep. 440. But no assent will be inferred from a man's silence unless he knows his rights and knows what he is doing, nor unless his silence is voluntary.

When any person is accused of a crime or charged with any fact, and he does not deny it, in general, the presumption is very strong that the charge is correct; 5 C. & P. 332; 7 id. 832; Joy, Conf. 77. The rule does not extend to the silence of the prisoner when, on his examination before a magistrate, he is charged by another prisoner with having joined with him in the commission of an offence; Steph. Ev. art. 7. Silence is not evidence of an admission unless there are circumstances which render it more reasonably probable that a man would answer the charge made against him than that he would not; 14 C. L. R. 114 (High Ct. Australia); [1891] 12 Q. B. 534.

When an oath is administered to a witness, instead of expressly promising to keep it, he gives his assent by his silence and kissing the book.

The person to be affected by the silence must be one not disqualified to act, as, non compos, an infant, or the like; for even the express promise of such a person would not bind him to the performance of any contract.

SILENTIARIUS. One of the privy council; an usher who saw that good rule and silence were kept in the court.

SILK. Under a statute referring to silk in a manufactured or unmanufactured state, any fabric which contains silk will not necessarily be included, but silk watch-guards and silk dresses; 28 L. J. C. P. 265; silk hose: id.; and elastic webbing composed of one-third silk; 33 L. J. Ex. 187, will be so considered.

SILK GOWN. Used especially of the gowns worn by queen's counsel; hence, "tr take silk" means to attain the rank of queen's counsel. Moz. & W. See BARRISTER.

SILVA CÆDUA (Lat.). By these words, in England, is understood every sort of wood, except gross wood of the age of twenty years. Bac. Abr. Tythes (C).

SILVER. The legislation on the subject of silver coinage is stated up to that date in a note to R. S. 1 Supp. 774, which with the addition of legislation subsequent to that date is as follows: Laws on silver coinage are as follows: By R. S. §§ 3513, 3516, the silver coins of the United States are limited to a trade dollar, a half dollar, a quarter dollar, and a dime. By § 3526 silver bullion is to be purchased with the bullion fund. By § 3586 the silver coins of the United States are legal tender in amounts not exceeding $5. By act of 1875, Jan. 14, ch. 15, fractional silver is to be issued in redemption of fractional currency. By act of 1876, April 17, ch. 63, this is repeated with some amendments. By Res. No. 17, of 1876, July 22, the silver coin in the treasury is to be issued in exchange for legal tender notes. The issue of fractional silver to fifty million dollars is authorized. By act of 1878, Feb. 28, ch. 20, the coinage of the standard silver dollar and the issuance of silver certificates of $10 or over is authorized. By act of 1879, June 9, ch. 12, fractional silver and lawful money of the United States may be reciprocally exchanged at the treasury or any sub-treasury in sums of $20, and fractional silver is made legal tender up to $10. By act of 1882, August 7, ch. 433, par. 5, free transportation of silver coins is authorized. By act of 1887, March 3, ch. 362, the issuance of silver certificates of one, two, and five dollars is authorized in lieu of higher denominations.

March 4, 1907, provision was made that whenever the outstanding silver certificates of certain small denominations are insufficient to meet the public demand therefor, an equal amount of United States notes of higher denominations may be retired and canceled and such certificates of smaller denominations issued. U. S. R. S. § 3526.

By act of July 14, 1890, the purchasing clause of the act of 1878 was repealed and the secretary of the treasury was authorized to purchase not to exceed 4,500,000 ounces of silver per month and to issue in payment therefor treasury notes. By act of 1890, Sept. 26, ch. 944, changes in the design of coins are authorized. The trade dollar was declared not a legal tender by Res. No. 17, of 1876, July 22, and by act of 1887, March 3, ch. 396, § 2 (24 Stat. L. 643), its coinage was terminated and its redemption and re-coinage into standard dollars was directed. By act of 1893, Nov. 1, the purchasing clause of the act of July 14, 1890, was repealed.

SIMILAR. Denotes partial resemblance, and also sameness in all essential particulars;

Com. v. Fountain, 127 Mass. 454. Similar offence may mean an offence identical in kind. Id.

SIMILAR DESCRIPTION. Such words as used in a tariff act import that the goods are similar in product and adapted to similar uses; not necessarily that they have been produced by similar methods of manufacture; Greenleaf v. Goodrich, 1 Hask. 586, Fed. Cas. No. 5,778.

SIMILITER (Lat. Ikewise). In Pleading. The plaintiff's reply, that, as the defendant has put himself upon the country, he, the plaintiff, does the like. It occurs only when the plea has the conclusion to the country, and its effect is to join the plaintiff in the issue thus tendered by the defendant; Co. Litt. 126 a. The word similiter was the effective word when the proceedings were in Latin; 1 Chitty, Pl. 519; Archb. Civ. Pl. 250. See Steph. Pl. 255; 2 Saund. 319 b; Shaw v. Redmond, 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 32.

SIMONY. In Ecclesiastical Law. The selling and buying of holy orders or an ecclesiastical benefice. Bacon, Abr. Simony. By simony is also understood an unlawful agreement to receive a temporal reward for something holy or spiritual. Code 1. 3. 31; Ayliffe, Parerg. 496.

Giving or receiving any material advantage in return for spiritual promotion, whether such advantage be actually received or only stipulated for. Jenks, Mod. Land L. 220.

A presentation proved to be influenced by pecuniary motives is void and there is a forfeiture of the turn to the crown. Cases of constructive simony are conveyance of a next presentation during vacancy; the purchase of a next presentation by a clerk (clergyman), if it be followed by his own presentation; and the acceptance of a benefice subject to an engagement for resignation. But a cleric may buy a life interest in an admission and present himself or buy an admission and present himself, and after induction sell it; id.

General resignation bonds (to resign on request) are void; see Cunningham, Simony; as also are specific bonds (to resign in favor of a specified person); 3 Bing. 501.

SIMPLE AVERAGE. Particular average. See AVERAGE.

SIMPLE CONTRACT. A contract the evidence of which is merely oral or in writing, not under seal nor of record. 1 Chitty, Contr., 12th ed. 6. See Stackpole v. Arnold, 11 Mass. 30, 6 Am. Dec. 150; 4 B. & Ald. 588; 2 Bla. Com. 472. See CONTRACT; PAROL.

SIMPLE LARCENY. The felonious taking and carrying away the personal goods of another, unattended by acts of violence: it is distinguished from compound larceny, which is stealing from the person or with violence. LARCENY.

SIMPLE OBLIGATION. An unconditional obligation: one which is to be performed without depending upon any event provided by the parties to it.

SIMPLE TOOL DOCTRINE. It has been held that the rule requiring the master to furnish reasonably safe appliances does not apply where the injury was caused by a "simple tool"; Evansville & R. R. Co. v. Mad-dux, 134 Ind. 571, 33 N. E. 345, 34 N. E. 511; in another case, that he is not bound to fore-see that injuries may be caused by such when they become defective; House v. R. Co., 152 N. C. 397, 67 S. E. 981. It is held in other cases that he is not liable for injury caused by such tools; Dunn v. R. Co., 151 N. C. 313, 66 S. E. 134; McMillan v. Minetto Shade Cloth Co., 134 App. Div. 28, 117 N. Y. Supp. 1081. It is held that the master is not bound to inspect such tools continually, if they are simple appliances of which he keeps a supply on hand; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Forstall, 159 Fed. 893, 87 C. C. A. 73; nor to instruct the servant in their use; Flaig v. Andrews Steel Co., 141 Ky. 391, 132 S. W. 1015. A steel chisel for cutting steel rails is not a simple tool; New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Vizvari, 210 Fed. 118.

The cases are collected in 3 Labatt, Master & Serv. § 924a. See NEGLIGENCE.

SIMPLE TRUST. A simple trust corresponds with the ancient use, and is where property is simply vested in one person for the use of another, and the nature of the trust, not being qualified by the settlor, is left to the construction of law. It differs from a special trust. 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1896.

SIMPLE WARRANTICE. SEE WARRANTICE.

SIMPLEX (Lat.). Simple or single; as, charta simplex is a deed-poll or single deed. Jacob, Law Dict.

SIMPLEX JUSTICIARIUS. A style formerly used for any puisne judge who was not chief in any court.

SIMPLEX OBLIGATIO. A single unconditional bond.

SIMPLICITER (Lat.). Simply; without ceremony; in a summary manner.

SIMUL CUM (Lat. together with). Words used in indictments and declarations of trespass against several persons, when some of them are known and others are unknown.

In cases of riots, it is usual to charge that A B, together with others unknown, did the act complained of; 2 Chitty, Cr. Law 488; 2 Salk. 593.

When a party sued with another pleads separately, the plea is generally entitled in the name of the person pleading, adding, "sued with —," naming the other party. When this occurred, it was, in the old phraseology, called pleading with a simul cum.

SIMULATIO LATENS. A species of feigned disease in which disease is actually present, but where the symptoms are falsely aggravated. Beck, Med. Jur. 3.

SIMULATION (Lat. simul, together). In French Law. The concert or agreement of two or more persons to give to one thing the appearance of another, for the purpose of fraud. Merlin. Répert.

SINCE. The proper signification is after, and in its apparent sense includes the whole period between the event and the present time; Jones v. Bank, 79 Me. 195, 9 Atl. 22; since the day named, does not necessarily include that day; Monroe v. Acworth, 41 N. H. 201.

SINE DIE (Lat.). Without day. A judgment for a defendant in many cases is quod eat sine die, that he may go without day. While the cause is pending and undetermined, it may be continued from term to term by dies datus. See CONTINUANCE; Co. Litt. 362 b. When the court or other body rise at the end of a session or term, they adjourn sine die.

SINE HOC. A phrase formerly used in pleading as equivalent to absque hoc (q. v.).

SINE PROLE. Without issue. Used in genealogical tables, and often abbreviated into "s. p."

SINECURE. In Ecclesiastical Law. A term used to signify that an ecclesiastical officer is without a charge or cure.

In common parlance, it means the receipt of a salary for an office when there are no duties to be performed.

SINGLE BILL. One without any condition, which does not depend upon any future event to give it validity.

SINGLE BOND. A deed whereby the obligor obliges himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators to pay a certain sum of money to the obligee at the day named.

SINGLE ESCHEAT. The reversion of a person's movables to the crown because of his being declared a rebel.

SINGLE WOMAN. The words include a widow; 12 L. J. W. C. 74; and a married woman living apart from her husband; 12 Q. B. D. 681.

SINGULAR. In grammar, the singular is used to express only one; not plural. Johnson.

In law, the singular frequently includes the plural. A bequest to "my nearest relation," for example, will be considered as a bequest to all the relations in the same degree who are nearest to the testator; 1 Ves. Sen. 357; 1 Bro. C. C. 293. A bequest made to "my heir," by a person who had three heirs, will be construed in the plural; 4 Russ. Cr. Cas. 384.

Under the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 21, s. 4, words in acts of parliament importing the singular shall include the plural, and vice versa, unless the contrary is expressly provided; Whart. Lex.

SINKING FUND. A fund arising from particular taxes, imposts, or duties, which is appropriated towards the payment of the interest due on a public loan and for the gradual payment of the principal. This definition was quoted and approved in Union Pac. R. Co. v. Buffalo Co., 9 Neb. 453, 4 N. W. 53. A fund created for extinguishing or paying a funded debt. Ketchum v. Buffalo, 14 N. Y. 379, cited in Chicago & I. R. Co. v. Pyne, 30 Fed. 89. See a definition in Elser v. Ft. Worth (Tex.) 27 S. W. 740; see Bank for Savings v. Grace, 102 N. Y. 313, 7 N. E. 162.

Formerly corporation mortgages usually contained a provision for a sinking fund. They are now less common.

A sinking fund tax is one levied to retire a loan, and the proceeds cannot go to pay floating debt; Union Pac. R. Co. v. York County, 10 Neb. 612, 7 N. W. 270.

The constitution of Pennsylvania provides that every city shall create a sinking fund which shall be inviolably pledged for the payment of the public debt. Under this provision commissioners of the sinking fund may apply the money in the sinking fund to the purchase of the funded debt of the city, and the debt to that extent is thereby paid, and it is immaterial in determining the actual debt that the commissioners of the sinking fund have no authority immediately upon purchase to cancel or destroy the obligation of the city which they have bought. Securities other than those of the city held by the sinking fund are merely an asset of the city and do not operate to the reduction of the funded debt. If payments are not made into the sinking fund as required by law the commissioner must see to it that they are made, even to the institution of legal proceedings against the city to compel payment; Brooke v. Philadelphia, 162 Pa. 123, 29 Atl. 387, 24 L. R. A. 781. See Bruce v. Pittsburg, 166 Pa. 152, 30 Atl. 831.

Some modern writers consider them as a very expensive method for the borrower; in Massachusetts, the act of 1913 prohibits them for municipal loans.

See Leake, Use and Misuse of the Sinking Fund [1912]; Browne, The Sinking Fund; Sargant; Turner, Sinking Funds; Alfred D. Chandler, Amortization, in Amer. Econ. Rev. III, No. 4; FUNDING SYSTEM.

A company formed under the Companies Act to work a wasting property (a mine or patent, etc.) need not set aside a sinking fund to meet the depreciation thereof; 41 Ch. Div. 1.

SISTER. A woman who has the same father and mother with another, or has one of them only. In the first case, she is called sister, simply; in the second, half-sister. Approved in Wood v. Mitchell, 61 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 48.

SISTER, DECEASED WIFE'S. Marriage with a deceased wife's sister was formerly within the prohibited degrees and void in England, under the act of 1835. By the act of 1907, the prohibition was removed; but clergymen are relieved from the duty of celebrating such marriages.

SITIO. A measure used in Mexican land grants, equivalent to 4338.464 acres. A sitio de ganado menor or sheep ranch is equivalent to 1928.133 acres. Ainsa v. U. S., 161 U. S. 219, 16 Sup. Ct. 544, 40 L. Ed. 673.

SITTINGS IN BANK, or BANC. The sittings which the respective superior courts of common law hold during every term for the purpose of hearing and determining the various matters of law argued before them.

The sittings of the Court of Appeals and High Court of Justice are: Michaelmas sittings, October 12 to December 21; Hilary, January 11 to Wednesday before Easter; Easter sittings, Tuesday after Easter week to Friday before Whit Sunday.

They are so called in contradistinction to the sittings at nisi prius, which are held for the purpose of trying issues of fact.

In America, the practice is essentially the same, all the judges, or a majority of them usually, sitting in banc, and but one holding the court for jury trials; and the term has the same application here as in England. See LONDON AND MIDDLESEX SITTINGS.

SITTINGS IN CAMERA. See CHAMBERS.

SITUS (Lat.). Situation; location. Smith v. Bank, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 524, 8 L. Ed. 212.

Generally, property, in order to be the subject of taxation, must be within the jurisdiction of the power assuming to tax; Buck v. Beach, 206 U. S. 400, 27 Sup. Ct. 712, 51 L. Ed. 1106, 11 Ann. Cas. 732; In regard to tangible property the old rule was mobilia sequuntur personam (said by Dicey, Conf. L., to be often misleading), by which personal property was supposed to follow the person of its owner, and to be subject to the law of the owner's domicile. For the purpose of taxation, however, it has long been held that personal property may be separated from its owner, and he may be taxed on its account at the place where the property is, although it is not the place of his own domicile, and even if he is not a citizen or resident of the state which imposes the tax; Buck v. Beach, 206 U. S. 401, 27 Sup. Ct. 712, 51 L. Ed. 1106, 11 Ann. Cas. 732.

The question of the locality of choses in action has, it is said, come up most frequently in the following classes of cases: 1. Those relating to the administration of estates of deceased persons; 2. Cases of gifts by will or personal property in a particular locality;

3. Cases of taxation; 4. Cases of foreign attachment; 5. Cases under state insolvent laws; 11 Harv. L. Rev. 96.

Notes, bonds and mortgages may acquire a situs at the place where they are held; New Orleans v. Stempel, 175 U. S. 309, 20 Sup. Ct. 110, 44 L. Ed. 174; Bristol v. Washington County, 177 U. S. 133, 20 Sup. Ct. 585, 44 L. Ed. 701; Blackstone v. Miller, 188 U. S. 189, 23 Sup. Ct. 277, 47 L. Ed. 439; State Board of Assessors v. Comptoir National d'Escompte, 191 U. S. 388, 24 Sup. Ct. 109, 48 L. Ed. 232; Carstairs v. Cochran, 193 U. S. 10, 24 Sup. Ct. 318, 48 L. Ed. 596; Scottish Union & Nat. Ins. Co. v. Bowland, 196 U. S. 611, 25 Sup. Ct. 345, 49 L. Ed. 619.

Bank bills and municipal bonds, notes and mortgages, are in such a concrete tangible form as to be subject to taxation where found, irrespective of the domicile of the owner; they are subject to levy and sale on execution, and to seizure and delivery in replevin; New Orleans v. Stempel, 175 U. S. 309, 20 Sup. Ct. 110, 44 L. Ed. 174.

Shares of stock in national banks, though in a certain sense intangible and incorporeal personal property, may be in law separated from the persons of their owners for purposes of taxation and given a situs of their own; Tappan v. Bank, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 490, 22 L. Ed. 189; Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Pennsylvania, 141 U. S. 18, 11 Sup. Ct. 876, 35 L. Ed. 613.

Credits on open account (premiums due an insurance company) have no actual situs; they are property and are taxable by the power having jurisdiction; Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. v. Board, 221 U. S. 346, 31 Sup. Ct. 550, 55 L. Ed. 762.

An insurance policy, issued and payable in New York, on the life of a person domiciled in Virginia, was held to have passed to his administrator in Virginia, although it was deposited with a person in Mississippi, who as administrator there, sought to collect it; Mayo v. Assurance Soc., 71 Miss. 590, 15 South. 791. See note to Dicey, Conf. Laws 331.

A life insurance policy is assets, for the purpose of founding an administration, in a state into which it is brought after the death of the insured; New England Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Woodworth, 111 U. S. 138, 4 Sup. Ct. 364, 28 L. Ed. 379.

A claim against the United States is not a local asset in the District of Columbia; King v. U. S., 27 Ct. Cl. 529. A bond does not come within the rule as to simple contract debts, but is assets for the purpose of administration in the place in which it is found; Beers v. Shannon, 73 N. Y. 292.

A mortgage, for taxing purposes, may be treated as being within the state where the land lies, or within the state of the residence of the holder; Savings & Loan Soc. v. Multnomah County, 169 U. S. 421, 18 Sup. Ct. 392, 42 L. Ed. 803.

As between the states of the United States, a ship at sea is presumed to be situate in the state in which it is registered; Crapo v. Kelly, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 610, 21 L. Ed. 430.

A British ship belonging to a deceased person, and registered at any port of the United Kingdom, is to be held, for some purposes at any rate, to be situate at that port. Goods on the high seas, which are capable of being dealt with in England by means of bills of lading in that country, are held situate in England, and goods which at the death of the deceased owner are in transitu to that country, and arrive there after his death, are apparently to be held situate in England at his death. Money in a bank in Canada belonging to one who dies in England is considered as virtually in transitu. Bonds or other securities forming part of the property of a deceased person, if they are in fact in England and are marketable securities there, saleable and transferable there by delivery only, without its being necessary to do any act out of England to make the transfer valid, are situate in England, though the debts or money are owing from foreigners. Such bonds differ essentially from foreign loans, which cannot be fully transferred without doing some act in a foreign country. A debt due on a deed situate in England from a debtor resident abroad, and a debt due on a deed situate abroad from a debtor resident in England, are situate in England. A judgment debt is assets where the judgment is recorded; 4 M. & W. 171. A share in a partnership business is situate where the business is carried on, but it has been said to be only a claim, and therefore situate wherever it can be enforced. See Massachusetts Mut. Acc. Ass'n v. Dudley, 15 App. Cas. (D. C.) 482. Most of the cases arise upon the liability of a decedent's property to the payment of probate duties, but sometimes on the question of jurisdiction; Dicey, Conf. Laws, Moore's ed. 318.

A license to use a patent in New South Wales could not be said to be locally situate anywhere. However, for the purposes of probate duty, property is capable of being localized, yet, for any other purposes, incorporeal rights could not be said to have any local situation; [1896] 2 Q. B. 178. See 22 Law Mag. & Rev. 116.

"The general rule of law is well settled that for the purpose of founding administration, all simple contract debts are assets at the domicile of the debtor; and that the locality of such a debt for this purpose is not affected by a bill of exchange or promissory note having been given for it, because * * * the bill or note is merely evidence of it, and therefore the debt is assets where the debtor lives, without regard to the place where the instrument is found or payable." Wyman v. Halstead, 109 U. S. 654, 3 Sup. Ct. 417, 27 L. Ed. 1068, citing Pinney v. McGregor.

ry, 102 Mass. 186; Owen v. Miller, 10 Ohio St. 136, 75 Am. Dec. 502; 4 M. & W. 171.

The law, treating equitable interests in land like legal interests, holds such interests are governed by the law of the situs; the question whether a trust in land exists in favor of a certain claimant will in every court be determined as in the court of the situs; Keer v. White, 52 Ga. 362; though the law of the forum would not create a trust under the circumstances; In re Fitzgerald, [1904] 1 Ch. 573; and even though by the law of the forum the creation of equitable interests is forbidden; 2 Beale, Cas. on Conf. of Laws 204, translating Siebberas v. De Gerolinio, Journal du Palais 1895, IV. 28 (court of cassation, Palermo, 1899). On the other hand, if, by the law of the situs the transaction did not create a valid trust, a trust will not be held to exist, either in the court of the situs; Perin v. McMicken's Heirs, 15 La. Ann. 154; Penfield v. Tower, 1 N. D. 216, 46 N. W. 413; 7 Ont. App. 614; or even in another state where the law would have created a valid trust as a result of the transaction; [1895] 1 Ch. 83; Acker v. Priest, 92 Ia. 610, 61 N. W. 235; 26 Can. 412. In Hawley v. James, 7 Paige (N. Y.) 213, 32 Am. Dec. 623, the trust was clearly invalid by the law of the forum but the court, holding that the validity of the trust must be determined by the law of the situs investigated that law and found the trust invalid by that law also.

The same doctrine applies to a determination of the rights in real estate created by a foreign contract of marriage or marriage settlement. Such rights must be created in accordance with the law of the situs; Besse v. Pellochoux, 73 Ill. 285, 24 Am. Rep. 242; Heine v. Ins. Co., 45 La. Ann. 770, 13 South. 1; Richardson v. De Giverville, 107 Mo. 422, 17 S. W. 974, 28 Am. St. Rep. 426. This is said by the writer quoted (20 H. L. R. 382) to be also the doctrine of the continental courts. But in England in a case where a marriage had been contracted in France under the community system and the husband and wife emigrated to England where the husband acquired land and died, the wife was held entitled to a community interest in the land; [1902] 2 Ch. 410.

The question whether a certain transaction constitutes a charge upon the separate estate of a married woman must be determined by the law of the situs; Read v. Brewer (Miss.) 16 South. 350; Wick v. Dawson, 42 W. Va. 43, 24 S. E. 587; as where a married woman made an agreement in Louisiana, invalid by the law of Louisiana, the invalid agreement would nevertheless charge her separate estate in Mississippi land, if such was the law of Mississippi; Frierson v. Williams, 57 Miss. 451.

But courts of equity of another country may, in a sense exercise power over foreign land, and deal with it as if equitable rights in it existed. Such courts may in certain cases decree a conveyance of foreign land in specific performance of a contract to convey; Toller v. Carteret, 2 Vern. 494; or require mutual deeds to rectify the boundaries of foreign lands; Penn v. Lord Baltimore, 1 Ves. 444; or decree a reconveyance for fraud; Arglass v. Muschamp, 1 Vern. 75; Massie v. Watts, 6 Cra. (U. S.) 148, 3 L. Ed. 181. Such action is usually taken on the ground that the contract or the fraud creates a constructive trust, which equity is enforcing, and where the law of the situs creates such a constructive trust, there is no obstacle to prevent a court of equity in another state, having jurisdiction of the parties, from enforcing the trust; 20 H. L. R. 382. In Scott v. Nesbitt, 14 Ves. 438, Lord Eldon, upon principles of natural justice, charged upon a West Indian estate the balance of an account in favor of a managing co-owner, though the law of the situs allowed no charge; 20 H. L. R. 386.

If a contract creates an equitable interest in the land in the nature of a constructive trust, by the law of the situs, this interest in the land will be everywhere recognized, as where title deeds to land in New York were deposited by the owner as security, and this transaction by the law of New York created an equitable mortgage, the existence of the equitable interest was recognized in a suit in New Jersey, although such a deposit of deeds did not by the law of New Jersey create an equitable interest in the land; Griffin v. Griffin, 18 N. J. Eq. 104; and where a contract concerning land in Massachusetts was made in North Carolina, the Massachusetts court recognized and enforced the interest in land thereby created by Massachusetts law though the contract, being one between husband and wife, was one which could not have been made in Massachusetts, nor could suit be brought in that state on the contract; Polson v. Stewart, 167 Mass. 211, 45 N. E. 737, 36 L. R. A. 771, 57 Am. St. Rep. 452.

Where Scotch immovables had been settled upon trust without power of alienation, and the trustees had sold the Scotch property and invested the proceeds in English Securities, the trusts in the proceeds were held still to depend upon Scotch law; In re Fitzgerald, [1904] 1 Ch. 573.

SIX ACTS. The acts passed in 1819 for the pacification of England.

SIX ARTICLES, LAW OF THE. A celebrated act entitled "An act for abolishing diversity of opinion," 31 Hen. VIII. c. 14; enforcing conformity under the severest penalties on six of the strongest points in the Roman Catholic religion: Transubstantiation, communion in one kind, the celibacy of the clergy, monastic vows, the sacrifice of the mass, and auricular confession. 4 Steph. Com. 183. Repealed by 1 Eliz. c. 1.

SIX CLERKS IN CHANCERY. Officers who received and filed all proceedings, signed office copies, attended court to read the pleadings, etc. Abolished by 5 Vict. c. 5. 3 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 443*; Spence, Eq. Jur.

SIX MONTHS' RULE. See MORTGAGE; RECEIVER.

SIXTEEN HOUR LAW. Section 2 of the Hours of Service Act (March, 1907) provides that it shall be unlawful for any common carrier to require or permit any employé to be or remain on duty for a longer period than sixteen consecutive hours and that when any such employé shall have been continuously on duty for sixteen consecutive hours he shall be relieved and not required again to go on duty until he has had at least ten consecutive hours off duty. The expression "on duty" as here used means to be actually engaged in work or to be charged with present responsibility for such, should the occasion for it arise; U. S. v. R. Co., 197 Fed. 629. That brief periods were given the employés for meals, of no more than an hour each, does not break the continuity of the service, nor does the laying off of a train crew while waiting for a helper engine for an indefinite time, which proved to be about three hours; U. S. v. R. Co., 197 Fed. 624.

SKELETON BILL. In Commercial Law. A blank paper, properly stamped, in those countries where stamps are required, with the name of the person signed at the bottom.

In such case the person signing the paper will be held as the drawer or acceptor, as it may be, of any bill which shall afterwards be written above his name, to the sum of which the stamp is applicable; 1 Bell, Com. 390.

SKIAGRAPH. A radiograph, which see.

SKILL. The art of doing a thing as it ought to be done.

Every person who purports to have skill in a business, and undertakes for hire to perform it, is bound to do it with ordinary skill, and is responsible civilly in damages for the want of it; 11 M. & W. 483; and sometimes he is responsible criminally. See PHYSICIAN; 2 Russ. Cr. 288.

The degree of skill and diligence required rises in proportion to the value of the article and the delicacy of the operation: more skill is required, for example, to repair a very delicate mathematical instrument, than upon a common instrument; Jones, Bailm. 91; 2 Kent 458, 463; Ayliffe, Pand. 466; 1 Rolle Abr. 10; Story, Bailm. § 431; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 144.

SLANDER. In Torts. Words falsely spoken, which are injurious to the reputation of another.

False, defamatory words spoken of another. See Odger, Libel & S. *7.

There is a distinction, probably the result of some historical accident, between slander and libel; in libel any defamatory matter is prima facie libellous while the same matter when spoken would require proof of special damage, excepting in the classes of cases mentioned infra, which are actionable per se.

Verbal slander. Actionable words are of two descriptions: first, those actionable in themselves, without proof of special damages; and, secondly, those actionable only in respect of some actual consequential damages.

Words of the first description must impute:

First, the guilt of some offence for which the party, if guilty, might be indicted and punished by the criminal courts; as, to call a person a "traitor," "thief," "highwayman," or to say that he is guilty of "perjury," "forgery," "murder," and the like. And although the imputation of guilt be general, without stating the particulars of the pretended crime, it is actionable; Cro. Jac. 114, 142; 5 B. & P. 335; Gaines v. Belding, 56 Ark. 100, 19 S. W. 236; Savoie v. Scanlan, 43 La. Ann. 967, 9 South. 916, 26 Am. St. Rep. 200; Harman v. Cundiff, 82 Va. 239; it is enough if the offence charged be a misdemeanor involving moral turpitude; Bigel. Torts 44. If the charge is that the plaintiff has already suffered the punishment, the words, if false, are actionable; ibid.; see Post Pub. Co. v. Moloney, 50 Ohio St. 71, 33 N. E. 921. Words imputing unchastity to an unmarried woman, though the acts charged are not criminal, were held actionable without alleging or proving special damage; Battles v. Tyson, 77 Neb. 563, 110 N. W. 299, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 577, 15 Ann. Cas. 1241; Cooper v. Seaverns, 81 Kan. 267, 105 Pac. 509, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 517, 135 Am. St. Rep. 359, where the court refused to follow the common law rule. See Battles v. Tyson, 77 Neb. 563, 110 N. W. 299, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 577, 15 Ann. Cas. 1241.

Second, that the party has a disease or distemper which renders him unfit for society; Bac. Abr. Slander (B, 2). An action can, therefore, be sustained for calling a man a leper; Cro. Jac. 144. Imputations of having at the present time a venereal disease are actionable in themselves; 8 C. B. N. S. 9; Golderman v. Stearns, 7 Gray (Mass.) 181; Williams v. Holdredge, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 396; Watson v. McCarthy, 2 Ga. 57, 46 Am. Dec. 380. But charging another with having had a contagious disease is not actionable, as he will not on that account be excluded from society; 2 Term 473; 2 Stra. 1189.

Third, unfitness in an officer, who holds an office to which profit or emolument is attached, either in respect of morals or inability to discharge the duties of the office; in such a case an action lies; 4 Co. 16 a; 5 id. 125; 2 Ld. Raym. 1369; Bull.-N. P. 4. The holder of an office, not being an office of profit, cannot, in the absence of special damage, maintain an action of slander for words imputing to him misconduct and consequent unfitness for the office, unless the imputation relates to his conduct in the office, or unless, if true, it would lead to his removal therefrom; [1892] 1 Q. B. 797; or where the office is not one of profit, and whether there is a power of removal from the office for such misconduct or not; [1895] 1 Q. B. 571.

Fourth, the want of integrity or capacity, whether mental or pecuniary, in the conduct of a profession, trade, or business, in which the party is engaged, is actionable; as, to accuse an attorney or artist of inability, inattention, or want of integrity; 3 Wils. 187; 2 W. Bla. 750; or a clergyman of being a drunkard; M'Millan v. Birch, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 178, 2 Am. Dec. 426, is actionable. Words spoken of a butcher, charging him with slaughtering diseased cattle for sale for human food are actionable per se; Blumhardt v. Rohr, 70 Md. 328, 17 Atl. 266.

In the absence of special damage, words alleging that a solicitor had lost "thousands instead of hundreds" are not actionable; [1901] 2 K. B. 441; and to make actionable a verbal charge that a merchant is not worth a dollar, it must be shown that it was spoken of him in relation to his business; Dallavo v. Snider, 143 Mich. 542, 107 N. W. 271, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 973, 114 Am. St. Rep. 684, 8 Ann. Cas. 212.

Fifth. Bigelow (Torts 48) gives as a fifth class words tending to defeat an expected title: as to call an heir apparent to estates a bastard. See Cro. Car. 469.

Of the second class are words which are actionable only in respect of special damages sustained by the party slandered. Though the law will not permit in these cases the inference of damage, yet when the damage has actually been sustained the party aggrieved may support an action for the publication of an untruth; 1 Lev. 53; unless the assertion be made for the assertion of a supposed claim; Com. Dig. Action upon the Case for Defamation (D 30); Bac. Abr. Slander (B); but it lies if maliciously spoken. In this case special damage is the gist of the action, and must be particularly specified in the declaration. For it is an established rule that no evidence shall be received of any loss or injury which the plaintiff had sustained by the speaking of the words unless it be specially stated in the declaration. And this rule applies equally where the special damage is the gist of the action and where the words are in themselves actionable; Heard, Libel & S. § 51.

The charge must be false; 5 Co. 125. The falsity of the accusation is to be implied till the contrary is shown; 2 East 436; 1 Saund. 242. The instance of a master making an unfavorable representation of his servant, upon an application for his character, seems to be an exception, in that case there being a presumption, from the occasion of speaking, that the words were true; 3 B. & P. 587.

The slander must, of course, be published,—that is, must be communicated to a third person,—and in a language which he understands; otherwise the plaintiff's reputation is not impaired; 1 Rolle, Abr. 74; Cro. Eliz. 857; 1 Saund. 242, n. 3; Bac. Abr. Slander (D, 3). There is no publication if the words were not understood by the persons present, nor repeated by them; Sullivan v. Sullivan, 48 Ill. App. 435. The slander must be published respecting the plaintiff. A statement by defendant accusing plaintiff of theft made in the presence of a policeman is not a publication where plaintiff solicited the statement and sent for the officer for the express purpose of having defendant repeat it in his presence; Shinglemeyer v. Wright, 124 Mich. 230, 82 N. W. 887, 50 L. R. A. 129.

It is not enough to say that by some person or other the words used might be understood in a defamatory sense; [1897] A. C. 68. Because some persons may choose, not by reason of the language itself, but by reason of some fact to which it refers, to draw an unfavorable inference, it does not follow that such matter is libellous; 5 C. P. D. 541. Witnesses to publication are allowed to give their understanding of the words spoken, as an exception to the general rule that witnesses must state facts and not their inferences; Booker & Prince v. Bass, 127 Ga. 134, 56 S. E. 283.

It will afford no justification that the defamatory matter has been previously published by a third person, that the defendant at the time of his publication disclosed the name of that third person and believed all the statements to be true; Heard, Libel & S. § 148. And a repetition of oral slander already in circulation, without expressing any disbelief of it or any purpose of inquiring as to its truth, though without any design to extend its circulation or credit, or to cause the person to whom it is addressed to believe or suspect it to be true, is actionable; Kenney v. McLaughlin, 5 Gray (Mass.) 3, 66 Am. Dec. 345. It is no defence in an action of slander that the words were used to and not of plaintiff, when others were present and heard the words spoken; Pavlovski v. Thornton, 89 Ga. 829, 15 S. E. 822.

To render the words actionable, they must be uttered without legal occasion. On some occasions it is justifiable to utter slander of another; in others it is excusable, provided it be uttered without express malice; Bac. Abr. Slander (D, 4); Rolle, Abr. 87; 1 Viner, Abr. 540. It is justifiable for an attorney to use scandalous expressions in support of his client's cause and pertinent thereto; 1 Maule & S. 280; 1 B. & Ald. 232. See Kean v. McLaughlin, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 469; Mower v. Watson, 11 Vt. 536, 34 Am. Dec. 704. The bona fide statements of one church member, on the trial of another before a church tribunal, that such other had committed adultery with plaintiff, not a member of the church, are privileged communications; Echison v. Pergerson, 88 Ga. 620, 15 S. E. 680. Members of congress and other legislative assemblies cannot be called to account for anything said in debate.

The statement of an employer of his reasons for discharging a girl, made to her father at his request, is privileged; but if the employer voluntarily makes the statement, it would not be privileged; Rosenbaum v. Roche, 46 Tex. Civ. App. 237, 101 S. W. 1164.

To justify the speaking of slanderous words on the ground of privilege, it must appear not only that the defendant believed he was speaking the truth, but that there were reasonable grounds for such belief; Toothaker v. Conant, 91 Me. 438, 40 Atl. 331.

See PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS.

Malice is essential to the support of an action for slanderous words. Odgers, Lib. & Sl. 271. But malice is, in general, to be presumed until the contrary be proved; 4 B. & C. 247; 1 Saund. 242, n. 2; 5 B. & P. 385; see Smith v. Printing & Pub. Ass'n, 55 Fed. 240, 5 C. C. A. 91; except in those cases where the occasion prima facie excuses the publication; 4 B. & C. 247. See M'Almont v. McClelland, 14 S. & R. (Pa.) 359; Colby v. McGee, 48 Ill. App. 294. Repetition of the slander after suit begun may be shown to prove malice and aggravate damages; Halsey v. Stillman, 48 Ill. App. 413. Defendant is not required, in an action for slander in charging plaintiff with theft, to prove the truth of the charge beyond a reasonable doubt, but a preponderance of evidence is sufficient; Lewis v. Shull, 67 Hun (N. Y.) 543, 22 N. Y. Supp. 484. An admission by defendant at plaintiff's request and in the presence of a third party that on a previous occasion he had used the alleged slanderous words, is no ground of action when it does not appear that the language was originally used in the presence of a third party; O'Donnell v. Nee, 86 Fed. 96.

The word "malicious" in defining the intent with which a slander is spoken, is not to be considered in the sense of spite or hatred against a person, but as meaning that the party is actuated by improper and indirect motives other than interest of the public; Blumhardt v. Rohr, 70 Md. 328, 17 Atl. 266; Wynne v. Parsons, 57 Conn. 73, 17 Atl. 362. See MALICE.

A corporation may be liable for slander committed by its employé; Sawyer v. Railroad, 142 N. C. 1, 54 S. E. 793, 115 Am. St. Rep. 716, 9 Ann. Cas. 440; while acting within the scope of his employment and in the actual performance of duties touching the matter in question; Rivers v. R. Co., 90 Miss. 196, 43 South. 471, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 931; Hypes v. R. Co., 82 S. C. 315, 64 S. E. 395, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 873, 17 Ann. Cas. 620; but it must be in the course of the employment; Kane v. Ins. Co., 200 Mass. 265. A corporation cannot maintain an action for slander on one of its stockholders who is an officer, nor can it recover for consequential injuries, without averring and proving that the slander was spoken of the individual in direct relation to the trade or business of the corporation; Brayton v. Cleveland Special Police Co., 63 Ohio St. 83, 57 N. E. 1085, 52 L. R. A. 525.

SLANDER OF TITLE. A statement tending to cut down the extent of one's title.

"An action on the case for special damage sustained by reason of the speaking or publication of the slander of the plaintiff's title." 3 Bing. n. c. 371.

Malice, that is, absence of good faith, is an essential condition of liability; 19 Ch. Div. 386; or actual malice, as well as special damage; Poll. Torts 294.

The action formerly applied only to real property; but now extends to chattels and to property rights, such as those under patents. See LIBEL.

An assertion of title made by way of self-defence or as a warning to others, is not actionable, though the claim be mistaken, if made in good faith; Poll. Torts 295; L. R. 4 Q. B. 730. To say to a prospective purchaser of land, "I know one that hath two leases of his land who will not part with them at any reasonable rate," is a slander of plaintiff's title; Cro. Eliz. 427.

An action for slander of title is not properly an action for words spoken, but an action on the case for special damage sustained by reason of the speaking or publication of the slander of the plaintiff's title. The property may be either real or personal, and the plaintiff's interest therein may be anything that has a market value. It makes no difference whether the defendant's words be spoken, written, or printed, save as affecting the damages, which should be larger when the publication is more permanent or extensive, as by advertisement. The action is ranged under that division of actions in the digests and other writers on the text law, and is so held by the courts of the present day. The slander may be of such a nature as to fall within the scope of ordinary slander. It is essential, to give a cause of action, that the statement should be false. It is essential, also, that it should be malicious,—not malicious in the worst sense, but with intent to injure the plaintiff. If the statement be true, if there really be the infirmity in the title that is suggested, no action will lie however malicious the defendant's intention might be; Heard, Libel & S. §§ 10, 59; Poll. Torts 389. See Burkett v. Griffith, 90 Cal. 532, 27 Pac. 527, 13 L. R. A. 707, 25 Am. St. Rep. 151.

Where a person claims a right in himself which he intends to enforce against a purchaser, he is entitled, and in common fairness bound, to give the intended purchaser warning of his intention; and no action will lie for giving such preliminary warning, unless it can be shown either that the threat was made mala fide, only with intent to injure the vendor, and without any purpose to follow it up by an action against the purchaser, or that the circumstances were such as to make the bringing an action altogether wrongful; L. R. 4 Q. B. 730; Odger, Libel & S. 138. The denial of a complaining party's title made bona fide in assertion of the title (real or honestly believed to exist) of the party making such denial, will not sustain an action for slander of title; Harriss v. Sneed, 101 N. C. 273, 7 S. E. 801.

It is sufficient to allege and prove the ownership of land and the false claim of title by defendant which prevented the sale of the land; Dodge v. Colby, 108 N. Y. 445, 15 N. E. 703; Collins v. Whitehead, 34 Fed. 121, where it was held that on the evidence of merely filing a deed for record which prevented the sale of the land, substantial damages might be recovered; but in another case it was held that not only must the declaration allege that the words complained of were falsely and maliciously uttered, but there must also be an expressed allegation of special damage resulting therefrom as the natural and direct consequence of the words complained of; 20 U. C. C. P. 471.

SLANDERER. A calumniator who maliciously and without reason imputes a crime or fault to another of which he is innocent. See SLANDER.

SLAVE. One over whose life, liberty, and property another has unlimited control.

Every limitation placed by law upon the absolute control modifies and to that extent changes the condition of the slave. In every slaveholding state of the United States the life and limbs of a slave were protected from violence inflicted by the master or third persons.

Among the Romans the slave was classed among things (res). He was homo sed non persona. Heineccius, Elem. Jur. l. 1, § 75. He was considered pro nullo et mortuo, quia nec statu familiae nec civitatis nec libertatis gaudet. Id. § 77. See, also, State v. Edmund, 15 N. C. 340; Neal v. Farmer, 9 Ga. 582. In the United States, as a person, he was capable of committing crimes, of receiving his freedom, of being the subject of homicide, and of modifying by his volition very materially the rules applicable to other species of property. His existence as a person being recognized by the law, that existence was protected by the law; State v. Tackett, 8 N. C. 217; State v. Jones, Walk. 83.

Among the German peoples slavery was of a different kind from that in Rome. Slaves had their own religion and dwelling place, and they were bound to perform only certain and fixed duties for their owners. They were rather prædial serfs than slaves. Such slavery might arise from capture in war, or conviction for crimes; men sold themselves into slavery; a father could sell his children; often persons were kidnapped and sold into slavery. The slave was in some respects regarded as a chattel; he might be alienated by his master, ill-treated and perhaps slain. He could not sue a free man. But his condition was in the course of time and in various ways ameliorated by the church; 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 31.

Somerset's case, Somerset v. Stewart, Lofft 1 (1772), was the first express adjudication that a slave while in England was free (Lord Mansfield's famous judgment). In Smith v. Gould, Ld. Raym. 1274, which was an action of trover for a negro, it was held that "the law takes no notice of negroes being different from other men," and that "there is no such thing as a slave by the law of England." In 1674-75, Sir Leoline Jenkins charged in an admiralty case in Old Bailey that there was "no such thing as a slave in England." Republished in 10 Law Mag. & Rev. (4th Ser.) 424. See Taswell-Langmead's Eng. Const. Hist. 316; The Case of James Sommersett, a Negro, 20 How. St. Tr. 1.

As to the serfs in early English history, see Maitl. Domesday & Beyond; Holdsw. Hist. E. L.; SERR.

In the slaveholding states the relations of husband and wife and parent and child were recognized by statutes in relation to public sales, and by the courts in all cases where such relations were material to elucidate the motives of their acts.

A slave had no political rights. His civil rights, though necessarily more restricted than the free men's, were based upon the law of the land. He had none but such as were by that law and the law of nature given to him. The civil-law rule, "partus sequitur ventrem," was adopted in all the slaveholding states, the status of the mother at the time of birth deciding the status of the issue; Barrington v. Logan's Adm'rs, 2 Dana (Ky.) 432; Rawlings v. Boston, 3 H. & McH. (Md.) 139; Overseers of Poor of Marblatown v. Overseers of Poor of Kingston, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 1; Williamson v. Daniel, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 568, 6 L. Ed. 731; Adams v. Roberts, 2 How. (U. S.) 496, 11 L. Ed. 349.

The slave could not acquire property: his acquisitions belonged to his master; Jackson v. Lervey, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 397; Jenkins v. Brown, 6 Humphr. (Tenn.) 299; Hall v. U. S., 92 U. S. 27, 23 L. Ed. 597. The peculium of the Roman slave was ex gratia, and not of right; Inst. 2. 9. 3. In like manner, negro slaves in the United States were, as a matter of fact, sometimes permitted by their masters ex gratia, to obtain and retain property. The slave could not be a witness, except for and against slaves or free negroes. This was, perhaps, the rule of the common law. None but a freeman was othesworth. In the United States the rule of exclusion which we have mentioned was enforced in all cases where the evidence was offered for or against white persons; Winn v. Jones, 6 Leigh (Va.) 74. In most of the states this exclusion was by express statutes, while in others it existed by custom and the decision of the courts; Berry v. State, 10 Ga. 519. In the slaveholding states, and in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Iowa, by statute, the rule was extended to include free persons of color or emancipated slaves; Jordan v. Smith, 14 Ohio, 199; Rusk v. Sowerwine, 3 Harr. & J. (Md.) 97. The slave could be a suitor in court only for his freedom. For all other wrongs he appeared through his master, for whose benefit the recovery was had; Bland v. Dowling, 9 Gill & J. (Md.) 19; Berard v. Berard, 9 La. 156. The suit for freedom was favored; Lee v. Lee, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 44, 8 L. Ed. 860; Rankin v. Lydia, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 467. Lapse of time worked no forfeiture by reason of his dependent condition; Gatliff's Adm'r v. Rose, 8 B. Monr. (Ky.) 631; Hudgins v. Wrights, 1 Hen. & M. (Va.) 141. The master was bound to maintain, support, and defend his slave, however helpless or impotent. If he failed to do so, public officers were provided to supply his deficiency at his expense.

Cruel treatment was a penal offense of a high grade. Emancipation of the slave was the consequence of conviction in Louisiana; and the sale of the slave to another master was a part of the penalty in Alabama and Texas.

It will be presumed that a person who was a slave before 1865 in this country is a negro; McMillan v. School Committee, 107 N. C. 609, 12 S. E. 330, 10 L. R. A. 823.

The enfranchisement of a slave was called manumission. See BONDAGE; MANUMISSION;

SERVUS; FREEDOM. Slavery was abolished in the United States by the thirteenth amendment to the constitution.

In U. S. v. Ah Son, 132 Fed. 878, in the case of a Chinese woman who had been sold into slavery in China and brought into this country, it was held that, as her deportation would be a remanding into slavery, such action would violate in spirit at least the 13th amendment to the federal constitution.

SLAVE-TRADE. The traffic in slaves, or the buying and selling of slaves for profit. It is either foreign or domestic.

The history of the slave-trade is as old as the authentic records of the race. Joseph was sold to Ishmaelitic slave-traders, and Egypt has been a mart for the traffic from that day to this. The negro early became a subject of it. In every slave-market he has been found, and never as a master except in Africa. The Roman mart, however, exhibited a variety of all the conquered races of the world. At Bristol, in England, for many years about the eleventh century, a brisk trade was carried on in purchasing Englishmen and exporting them to Ireland for sale. And William of Malmesbury states that it seems to be a natural custom with the people of Northumberland to sell their nearest relations.

The African slave-trade on the eastern coast has been carried on with India and Arabia from a period difficult to be established, and was continued with British India while British ships-of-war hovered on the western coast to capture the pirates engaged in the same trade. On the western coast the trade dates from 1442. The Spaniards for a time monopolized it. The Portuguese soon rivalled them in its prosecution. Sir John Hawkins, in 1562, was the first Englishman who engaged in it; and queen Elizabeth was the first Englishwoman known to share in the profits.

Immense numbers of African negroes were transported to the New World, although thousands were landed in England and France and owned and used as servants. The large profits of the trade stimulated the avarice of bad men to forget all the claims of humanity; and the horrors of the middle passage, though much exaggerated, were undoubtedly very great.

The American Colonies raised the first voice in Christendom for the suppression of the slave-trade, but the interests of British merchants were too powerful with the king, who stifled their complaints. The constitution of the United States, in 1789, was the first governmental act towards its abolition. By it, congress was forbidden to prohibit the trade until the year 1808. This limitation was made at the suggestion of South Carolina and Georgia, aided by some of the New England states. Yet both of those states, by state action, prohibited the trade many years before the time limited,—Georgia as early as 1793. In 1807, an act of congress was passed which prohibited the trade after 1803, and by subsequent acts it was declared piracy. The federal legislation on the subject will be found in acts of congress passed respectively March 22, 1794, May 10, 1800, March 2, 1807, April 20, 1818, March 3, 1819, and May 15, 1820. In the year 1807, the British parliament also passed an act for the abolition of the slave-trade,—the consummation of a parliamentary struggle continued for nineteen years, and fourteen years after a similar act had been adopted by Georgia. Great efforts have been made by Great Britain, by treaties and otherwise, to suppress this trade, one being entered into at Brussels in 1896. As to the present condition of the slave trade throughout the world, see Rep. Int. L. Assn. (1895) 155. See Buxton's Slave-Trade, etc.; Carey's Slave-Trade; Cobb's Historical Sketch of Slavery.

SLAY. When not used in relation to battle the word is synonymous with kill. State v. Thomas, 32 La. Ann. 351.

SLEDGE. A hurdle used to draw traitors to execution. 1 Hale, P. C. 82.

SLEEPING-CAR. The servants and employés in charge of sleeping or drawing-room cars are considered in the same light as if they were employed by the railroad company, notwithstanding the existence of a separate agreement between the railroad and the sleeping-car company, whereby the latter furnishes its own servants and conductors, and has exclusive control of the cars used on the former company's road; Kinsley v. R. Co., 125 Mass. 54, 28 Am. Rep. 200.

Sleeping car companies are not liable as inn-keepers; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Smith, 73 Ill. 360, 24 Am. Rep. 258; Welch v. Pullman Palace Car Co., 16 Abb. Pr. (N. S. N. The liability rests solely on the breach of the implied obligation to furnish such accommodations as the company holds itself out as offering to the public; Calhoun v. Palace Car Co., 149 Fed. 546. A. 498; the company is liable for theft of a passenger's property due to disobedience of its regulations by its servants; Pullman Car Co. v. Gardner, 3 Penny. (Pa.) 78.

The company is liable—in any case—only for a reasonable amount of money and personal belongings appropriate to the circumstances of the plaintiff; Barrott v. Palace Car Co., 51 Fed. 796; *Lewis v. Rep. 846; it is not ordinarily liable for property stolen by another passenger; Woodruff Sleeping & Parlor Coach Co. v. Diehl, 84 Ind. 474, 43 Am. Rep. 102; but it is so liable when the porter takes charge of it to remove it from the car; Voss v. Wagner Palace Car Co., 16 Ind. App. 271, 43 N. E. 20, 44 N. E. 1010.

Negligence on the part of the sleeping car company's servants is not to be presumed from the mere fact of the loss, but must be shown; Root v. New York Central Sleeping-Car Co., 28 Mo. App. 199; Falls River & Mach. Co. v. Pullman Palace Car Co., 6 Ohio Dec. 85; Carpenter v. R. Co., 124 N. Y. 53, 26 N. E. 277, 11 L. R. A. 759, 21 Am. St. Rep. 644; *Tracy v. Contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff may defeat his recovery; Lewis v. New York Sleeping Car Co., 143 Mass. 267, 9 N. E. 615, 8 Am. Rep. 135; Barrott v. Pullman's Palace Car Co., 51 Fed. 796; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Handy, 63 Miss. 609, 56 Am. Rep. 846; but in the case of theft by a servant of the company or his neglect of duty not requested by the defendant, this defence is not effectual; Morrow v. Pullman Palace Car Co., 98 Mo. App. 351, 73 S. W. 281; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Matthews, 74 Tex. 654, 12 S. W. 744, 15 Am. St. Rep. 873. The presumption of negligence arising from proof of loss is rebutted by the porter's uncontradicted evidence that he watched the car till after the loss; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Freudenstein, 3 Colo. App. 540, 34 Pac. 578.

The railroad company is liable to a passenger who is injured through the negligence of a servant of a sleeping-car company; Railroad Co. v. Walrath, 38 Ohio St. 461, 43 Am. Rep. 433; Pennsylvania Co. v. Roy, 102 U. S. 451, 26 L. Ed. 141; though riding in a different car from the one in which he has purchased a seat; id., 102 U. S. 451, 26 L. Ed. 141; even though he knew that the sleeping-car was operated by a separate corporation; see id., 102 U. S. 451, 26 L. Ed. 141; Wood, Ry. 1700; though the question of his knowledge was deemed important in Railroad Co. v. Walrath, 38 Ohio St. 461, 43 Am. Rep. 433.

For an unjustifiable and wanton assault by a porter on a passenger on a railroad train who had not purchased a sleeping-car ticket, it was held that the railway company was liable, but that the sleeping-car company was not; Williams v. Palace Car Co., 40 La. Ann. 87, 3 South. 631, 8 Am. St. Rep. 512, id., 40 La. Ann. 417, 4 South. 85, 8 Am. St. Rep. 538. Whether the latter is to be held liable for the violent act of a porter depends upon whether the act was done while he was acting within the scope of his employment; Heenrich v. Palace Car Co., 20 Fed. 100; if it was so the company is liable; id.; Campbell v. Palace Car Co., 42 Fed. 484, where it was said that the sleeping-car company represents that its cars may be occupied with reasonable safety and comfort and its contract implies ordinary care to secure them. The porter was held to be the servant of the railroad company in Dwinelle v. R. Co., 120 N. Y. 117, 24 N. E. 319, 8 L. R. A. 224, 17 Am. St. Rep. 611; Pennsylvania Co. v. Roy, 102 U. S. 451, 26 L. Ed. 141. Where a passenger is ejected from a sleeping-car by train hands, their act is the act of the railroad company, not of the sleeping-car company; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Lee, 49 Ill. App. 75.

It cannot be said on demurrer that a company is not liable for injury to a passenger caused by the excessively low temperature of a car; Hughes v. Palace Car Co., 74 Fed. 499.

A railroad company cannot, by any arrangement with a sleeping-car company, evade the duty of providing proper means for the safe carriage of passengers; Pennsylvania Co. v. Roy, 102 U. S. 457, 26 L. Ed. 141; Kinsley v. R. Co., 125 Mass. 54, 28 Am. Rep. 200.

A passenger travelling on a free pass, by which he waived action for injuries, purchased a seat in a sleeping-car, and while riding in it was injured; it was held that he was still bound by his waiver; Ulrich v. R. Co., 108 N. Y. 80, 15 N. E. 60, 2 Am. St. Rep. 369.

A rule of a railroad company requiring a passenger to have a first-class ticket for his transportation before he can be assigned to a berth in a sleeping-car, is a reasonable one; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Lee, 49 Ill. App. 75.

A sleeping-car company is bound to afford equal facilities to all travellers who apply for them in compliance with reasonable regulations; Nevin v. Palace Car Co., 106 Ill. 222, 46 Am. Rep. 688; Searles v. Boudoir Car Co., 45 Fed. 330; but it has a right to sell a section to one passenger and is not liable to a passenger to whom it has refused to sell one of the berths in such section, though it was not occupied; Searles v. Boudoir Car Co., 45 Fed. 330. And it is not bound to furnish a berth to one who by the rules of the railroad company is not entitled thereto; Lawrence v. Palace Car Co., 144 Mass. 6, 10 N. E. 723, 59 Am. Rep. 58; Lemon v. Palace Car Co., 52 Fed. 262.

A purchaser of a section may share its use with any proper person whom he invites into it; Searles v. Boudoir Car Co., 45 Fed. 330; and he may, on leaving the train, transfer the use of his section to another first-class passenger for the rest of the trip; 34 Am. L. Reg. 709 (Super. Ct. of Baltimore); s. c. 28 Chic. L. N. 68 (apparently not elsewhere reported); and see comments on this case in 9 Harv. L. Rev. 354, where it is suggested that the decision can only be supported on the ground of a difference between sleeping-car and ordinary railroad ticket, the existence of which is at least doubtful.

There seem to be no other cases to the same point.

It is the duty of a sleeping-car company to furnish a berth on the payment of the usual fare to a passenger holding a first-class ticket and to whom no personal objection attaches, provided the company has a vacant one at its disposal, and the passenger makes application at the proper time and in the proper manner; Nevin v. Pullman Palace Car Co., 106 Ill. 222, 46 Am. Rep. 688; Braun v. Webb, 32 Misc. Rep. 243, 65 N. Y. Supp. 668; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Cain, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 503, 40 S. W. 220; Mann Boudoir Car Co. v. Dupre, 54 Fed. 646, 4 C. C. A. 540, 21 L. R. A. 289; Patterson v. Steamship Co., 140 N. C. 412, 53 S. E. 224, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1012, 111 Am. St. Rep. 848; It must furnish the berth it has agreed to furnish; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Taylor, 65 Ind. 153, 32 Am. Rep. 57; Aplington v. Pullman Co., 110 App. Div. 250, 97 N. Y. Supp. 329; Pullman Palace-Car Co. v. Booth (Tex.) 28 S. W. 719; and the passenger is entitled to accept only that paid for and specified in his ticket; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Bales, 80 Tex. 211, 15 S. W. 785. One suffering from a contagious disease may be expelled; Pullman Car Co. v. Krauss, 145 Ala. 395, 40 South. 398, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 103, 8 Ann. Cas. 218. A company may sell a whole section to one passenger who occupies but one berth therein, and refuse to sell the unoccupied berth to another; Searles v. Car Co., 45 Fed. 330.

An act requiring the company to leave the upper berth open or closed (when not sold) according to the direction given by the holder of the lower berth, was held unconstitutional; State v. Redmon, 134 Wis. 89, 114 N. W. 137, 126 Am. St. Rep. 1003, 15 Ann. Cas. 408, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 229, where it is said in the note that diligent search had failed to disclose any case upon the legislative power to prescribe conditions in which sleeping or passenger cars should be maintained or used where such attempted regulation tends merely to the comfort and not to the preservation of the health or safety of the occupant.

An act requiring upper berths to be kept closed till occupied, when the lower berth is engaged or occupied, is not an interference with interstate commerce carried on in cars doing both inter- and intra-state commerce; State v. R. Co., 152 Wis. 341, 140 N. W. 70. And see notes on police power, deprecating unwise extensions of it; 17 Yale L. J. 393; 21 H. L. R. 372.

One who has paid for a berth from one point to another is entitled to a continuous passage in it, or in one equally good, and cannot be transferred to another berth or another car at the arbitrary discretion of the company; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Taylor, 65 Ind. 153, 32 Am. Rep. 57.

In the contract for the use of the berth

there is directly involved an obligation to awaken and notify the passenger in time for him to prepare safely and comfortably to leave the train at his destination; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Smith, 79 Tex. 468, 14 S. W. 993, 13 L. R. A. 215, 23 Am. St. Rep. 356; Airey v. Car Co., 50 La. Ann. 648, 23 South. 512; McKeon v. R. Co., 94 Wis. 477, 69 N. W. 175, 35 L. R. A. 252, 59 Am. St. Rep. 910; even though the journey was entirely by day and the passenger had no berth; Pullman Co. v. Kelly, 86 Miss. 87, 38 South. 317; and a person not so awakened and notified may recover punitive damages; Pullman Co. v. Lutz, 154 Ala. 517, 45 South. 675, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 907, 129 Am. St. Rep. 67. But when the sleeping-car conductor, in the presence of the train conductor permits a passenger to ride in a Pullman car until her own car is connected, promising to put her on it, and neglects to do so, she is not a passenger on that car, and for the consequence of her missing her car the railroad company is liable and the sleeping-car company is not; Cin., N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Raine, 130 Ky. 454, 113 S. W. 495, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 753, 132 Am. St. Rep. 400. A railroad company is liable for the wrongful act of the sleeping-car employees; Airey v. Palace Car Co., 50 La. Ann. 648, 23 South. 512; Campbell v. Air Line R. Co., 83 S. C. 448, 65 S. E. 628, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1056, 137 Am. St. Rep. 824; such employees are the agents of the railroad company; Railroad v. Ray, 101 Tenn. 1, 46 S. W. 554; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Church, 155 Ala. 329, 46 South. 457, 130 Am. St. Rep. 29; Calhoun v. Pullman Co., 159 Fed. 387, 86 C. C. A. 387, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 575; Divinelle v. R. Co., 120 N. Y. 117, 24 N. E. 319, 8 L. R. A. 224, 17 Am. St. Rep. 611; Gannon v. R. Co., 141 Ia. 37, 117 N. W. 966; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Lipscomb, 90 Va. 137, 17 S. E. 809, 20 L. R. A. 817. Brewer, J., charged a jury that where a passenger was wrongfully expelled the railroad company was not liable for the action of agents of the sleeping-car company and the latter was not liable for the action of the former; Paddock v. R. Co., 37 Fed. 841, 4 L. R. A. 231. The company was held liable for negligence in not removing a person, known to its servants to be insane, who killed another passenger; Meyer v. R. Co., 54 Fed. 116, 4 C. C. A. 221.

SLEEPING RENT. A fixed rent, as opposed to one varying with the profits. 2 Harr. & W. 43.

SLIP. In negotiations for a policy of insurance the "slip" is a memorandum between the parties containing the terms of the proposed insurance, and initialled by the underwriters.

SLIPPA. A stirrup. There is a tenure of land in Cambridgeshire by holding the sovereign's stirrup.

SLOUGH. An arm of a river flowing between islands and the main land. Dunlieth & D. B. Co. v. Dubuque, 55 Ia. 565, 8 N. W. 443.

SMALL DEBTS COURTS. The several county courts established by 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, for the purpose of bringing justice home to every man's door.

SMART-MONEY. Vindictive or exemplary damages given beyond the actual damage, by way of punishment and example, in cases of gross misconduct of defendant. Woert v. Jenkins, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 352. That it cannot be given by jury, see 2 Greenl. Ev. § 253, n. See EXEMPLARY DAMAGES.

SMELTING. Smelting, though by derivation synonymous with melting, has come to mean a melting of ores in the presence of some re-agent which operates to separate the metallic element by combining with a non-metallic element. Lowrey v. Smelting & Aluminum Co., 68 Fed. 354.

SMOKE. A city ordinance prohibiting the emission of dark smoke from chimneys during certain hours, and providing a penalty for its violation, is within the city's police power, and the question of its reasonableness was not open in the court of appeals after it had been sustained by the county court and the appellate division; Rochester v. Mill. Co., 199 N. Y. 207, 92 N. E. 641, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 554. See NUISANCE.

SMOKE-SILVER. A modus of sixpence in lieu of tithe-wood. Twisdale, Hist. Vindicat. 77.

SMUGGLING. The fraudulent taking into a country, or out of it, merchandise which is lawfully prohibited. (Quoted and approved by Brewer, J., in Dunbar v. U. S., 156 U. S. 185, 15 Sup. Ct. 325, 39 L. Ed. 390.)

"Smuggling consists in the bringing on shore, or carrying from the shore, goods and merchandise, for which the duty has not been paid, or of goods of which the importation or exportation is prohibited." 6 Bac. Abr. 258; so, in almost precisely the same words in 1 Hawk. Pl. Cr. 661; 1 Russ. Cr. 172.

In the Act of June 22, 1874, it was provided: "That for the purpose of this act, smuggling shall be construed to mean the act, with intent to defraud, of bringing into the United States, or with like intent, attempting to bring into the United States, dutiable articles without passing the same, or the packages containing the same, through the custom-house, or submitting them to the officers of the revenue, for examination." 18 U. S. Statutes at Large, ch. 391, p. 186.

"Smuggling" and to clandestinely introduce into the country mean the same thing. Mere acts of concealment of merchandise on entering the waters of the United States do not of themselves constitute smuggling; Keck v. U. S., 172 U. S. 434, 19 Sup. Ct. 254, 43 L. Ed. 505. Where one having dutiable goods secreted on his person knowingly passed the customs office at the dock and ignored three distinct calls of the customs officer before his further progress was arrested and the goods disclosed, when he stated for the first time that he expected to enter the goods at the main custom house some distance away, instead of at the dock, he was held to have committed the offense of smuggling; Rogers v. U. S., 180 Fed. 54, 103 C. C. A. 408, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 264.

In proceedings to forfeit imported goods, the burden of proof to show that the importation was lawful rests on the claimant; U. S. v. One Bag of Crushed Wheat, 166 Fed. 562.

SO. The terms "hence" and "therefore" are sometimes the equivalent of "so," and the latter word is thus understood whenever what follows is an illustration of or conclusion from what has gone before. Clem v. State, 33 Ind. 431.

SO HELP YOU GOD. See OATH.

SOC. See SOCAGE.

SOCAGE. A species of tenure, whereby the tenant held his lands of the lord by any certain service in lieu of all other services, so that the service was not a knight's service. Its principal feature was its certainty; as, to hold by fealty and a certain rent, or by fealty-homage and a certain rent, or by homage and fealty without rent, or by fealty and certain corporal service, as ploughing the lord's land for a specified number of days. 2 Bla. Com. 80.

The term socage was afterwards extended to all services which were not of a military character, provided they were fixed: as, by the annual payment of a rose, a pair of gilt spurs, a certain number of capons, or of so many bushels of corn. Of some tenements the service was to be hangman, or executioner of persons condemned in the lord's court; for in olden times such officers were not volunteers, nor to be hired for lucre, and could only be bound thereto by tenure. There were three different species of these socage tenures—one in frank tenure, another in ancient tenure, and the third in base tenure: the second and third kinds are now called, respectively, tenure in ancient demesne, and copyhold tenure. The first is called free and common socage, to distinguish it from the other two; but, as the term socage has long ceased to be applied to the two latter, socage and free and common socage now mean the same thing. Bracton; Co. Litt. 17, 86.

Free socage was the tenure by which all freehold lands were held, if they were not held by frankalmoin, knight service or serjeanty. Little can be said about the services which were due. Military service or scutage was not due; there was no wardship or marriage. Generally a money rent was due, and occasionally agricultural services. Primarily the tenant by free socage was a dependent tenant, paying rent, or labor services, or both. Tenure by free socage came to embrace, not only the class of well-to-do farmers, but also all the class who hold at a rent. It was the least encumbered of all the tenures with obsolete and oppressive incidents.

By the statute of 12 Car. II, c. 24, the ancient tenures by knight's service were abolished, and all lands, with the exception of copyholds and of ecclesiastical lands, which continued to be held in free alms (frankalmoin), were turned into free and common socage and the great bulk of real property in England is now held under this ancient tenure. Many grants of land in the United States, made, previous to the revolution, by the British Crown, created the same tenure among us, until they were formally abolished by the legislatures of the different states. In 1787, the state of New York converted all feudal tenures within its boundaries into a tenure by free and common socage; but in 1830 it abolished this latter tenure, with all its incidents, and declared that from thenceforth all lands in the state should be held upon a uniform allodial tenure, and vested an absolute property in the owners according to their respective estates. Similar provisions have been adopted by other states; and the ownership of land throughout the United States is now essentially free and unrestricted. See TENURE.

SOCER (Lat.). The father of one's wife; a father-in-law.

SOCIAL CONTRACT, or COMPACT. In political philosophy, a term applied to the theory of the origin of society associated chiefly with the names of Hobbes, Locke and Rousseau, though it can be traced back to the Greek Sophists. Rousseau (Contrat Social) held that in the pre-social state man was unwarlike and timid. Laws resulted from the combination of men who agreed, for mutual protection, to surrender individual freedom of action. Government must therefore rest on the consent of the governed. Encycl. Br.

SOCIAL ENJOYMENT. These words are too comprehensive to state as the object for which a corporation is to be formed, as some social enjoyments are unlawful. Nether Providence Ass'n's Charter, 2 Pa. Dist. R. 702.

SOCIALISM. Any theory or system of social organization which would abolish, entirely or in great part, the individual effort and competition on which modern society rests, and substitute for it co-operative action, would introduce a more perfect and equal distribution of the products of labor, and would make land and capital, as the instruments and means of production, the joint possession of the members of the community.

SOCIDA. In Civil Law. The name of a contract by which one man delivers to another, either for a small recompense or for a part of the profits, certain animals on condition that if any of them perish they shall be replaced by the bailee or he shall pay their value.

A contract of hiring, with the condition that the bailee takes upon him the risk of the loss of the thing hired. Wolff § 638.

SOCIETAS. In Civil Law. A contract in good faith made to share in common the profit and loss of a certain business or thing, or of all the possessions of the parties. Calvinus, Lex.; Inst. 3. 26; Dig. 17. 21. See PARTNERSHIP.

SOCIETAS LEONINA (Lat.). In Roman Law. That kind of society or partnership by which the entire profits should belong to some of the partners in exclusion of the rest.

It was so called in allusion to the fable of the lion and other animals, who having entered into partnership for the purpose of hunting, the lion appropriated all the prey to himself; Dig. 17. 2. 29. 2; Poth. Traité de Société, n. 12. See Lowry v. Brooks, 2 McCord (S. C.) 421; Bailey v. Clark, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 372.

SOCIÉTÉ. In French Law. Partnership. Société en nom collectif. A partnership in which all the members are jointly and severally liable. Société en participation. A joint adventure. Société par actions. A joint stock company. Société d'acquêts. A written contract between husband and wife to regard as community property only those things which are acquired during the marriage. Société en commandite. In Louisiana, a partnership formed by a contract by which one person or partnership agrees to furnish another person or partnership a certain amount, either in property or money, to be employed by the person or partnership to whom it is furnished, in his or their own name or firm, on condition of receiving a share in the profits, in the proportion determined by the contract, and of being liable to losses and expenses to the amount furnished and no more. La. Civ. Code, art. 2810; Code de Comm. 26, 33; 4 Pardessus, Dr. Com. n. 1027; Dalloz, Dict. Société Commerciale, n. 166. See Goiran, Code; COMMENDAM; PARTNERSHIP.

SOCIÉTÉ ANONYME. In French law originally a partnership conducted in the name of one of the members; the others were strictly secret partners. To creditors of the firm they came into no relation and under no liability. They made their contribution to the capital, and were held to indemnify the active partner for what he might have to pay in excess of the capital. In the Code Napoléon it came to signify a private business corporation, but never organized in perpetuity. It was formed with the consent of the government. In 1867 the requirement of this consent was replaced under a general incorporation law; Baldwin, Mod. Pol. Inst. 182.

SOCIETY. A society is a number of persons united together by mutual consent, in order to deliberate, determine, and act jointly for some common purpose.

Societies are either incorporated and known to the law, or unincorporated, of which the law does not generally take notice.

By civil society is usually understood a state, a nation, or a body politic. Rutherford, Inst. c. 1, 2.

SODOMITE. One who has been guilty of sodomy. Formerly such offender was punished with great severity, and was deprived of the power of making a will.

SODOMY. A carnal copulation by human beings with each other against nature, or with a beast. See 2 Bish. Cr. Law § 1191; Whart. Cr. Law 579.

It may be committed between two persons both of whom consent, even between husband and wife; 8 C. & P. 604; and both may be indicted; 1 Den. Cr. Cas. 464; 2 C. & K. 869; when committed on the wife, against her consent, it is a matrimonial offence under the English act of 1857; 22 T. L. R. 26. Penetration of the mouth is not sodomy; Russ. & R. 331; Prindle v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 551, 21 S. W. 360, 37 Am. St. Rep. 833. As to emission, see 12 Co. 36; Com. v. Thomas, 1 Va. Cas. 307. See 1 Russ. Cr. 698; 1 Mood. Cr. Cas. 34; 8 C. & P. 417; People v. Hodgkin, 94 Mich. 27, 53 N. W. 794, 34 Am. St. Rep. 321.

A minor 12 years of age cannot consent to an act of sodomy committed on his person; and if he submits to it without resistance the act is still done by force; Mascolo v. Montesanto, 61 Conn. 50, 23 Atl. 966, 29 Am. St. Rep. 195.

A domestic fowl is an "animal" within 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, punishing unnatural offences; 24 Q. B. Div. 357. But see 1 Russ. Cr. 698.

SOIL. The superficies of the earth on which buildings are erected or may be erected. The soil is the principal, and the building, when erected, is the accessory.

SOIT DROIT FAIT AL PARTIE. In English Law. Let right be done to the party. A phrase written on a petition of right, and subscribed by the king. See PETITION OF RIGHT.

SOIT FAIT COMME IL EST DESIRÉ. Let it be as it is desired. The form of giving the royal assent to private acts of parliament.

SOKE, SOC, SOK. Jurisdiction; a power or privilege to administer justice and execute the laws; also a shire, circuit, or territory. Cowell.

In the Domesday Book and the Leges Henrici, the distinction between "sake and sok" is obliterated. Sok means jurisdiction and "sake and sok" is but a pleonastic phrase, which means no more than sok. Before the Norman times the idea of jurisdiction was expressed by a technical word, the meaning of which was rigorously observed. This is sacu and the word has strangely vanished from our legal vocabulary, but is still preserved even in its technical sense by the German sache; Maitl. Domesd. 259. The same writer says that of the two words soko is by far the commoner, and that sake is rarely found except in connection with soko, and when so found it seems to be merely an equivalent for the latter word. Sake originally signified a matter, a thing; hence, a matter or cause in the lawyers' sense of these terms. A "matter" in dispute between litigants, a "cause" before a court. While soko, socna, soka, is the Anglo-Saxon socn, and has for its primary meaning a seeking. The phrase "holding with sake and soko" seems to be equivalent after the Conquest with "he held freely;" Maitl. Domesd. 80; which see for a learned discussion as to the distinction between the two words.

See FOLD SOKE.

SOKEMANS, SOCMEN. Freeholders whose holdings might be no larger than those of the villeins, but who would generally, instead of the heavy services, pay fixed and not heavy rent; 1 Soc. Eng. 360. Those who held their land in socage; 2 Bla. Com. 100.

SOLAR DAY. That period of time which begins at sunrise and ends at sunset; the same as "artificial day." Co. Litt. 135 a.

SOLAR MONTH. A calendar month. Co. Litt. 135 b; 1 W. Bla. 450; 1 Maule & S. 111; 1 Bingh. 307.

SOLARES. In Spanish Law. Lots of ground. This term is frequently found in grants from the Spanish government of lands in America. 2 White, Recop. 474.

SOLATIUM. Compensation.

SOLD NOTE. The name of an instrument in writing, given by a broker to a buyer of merchandise, in which it is stated that the goods therein mentioned have been sold to him. 1 Bell, Com. 435; Story, Ag. § 28. Some confusion may be found in the books as to the name of these notes: they are sometimes called bought notes.

SOLDIER. A military man; a private in the army.

Soldiers re-enlisted "for clerical service and messenger duty," under act of congress of July 29, 1886, are still in the service, and under U. S. Rev. St. § 1285, are entitled to the additional pay for certificates of merit. Bell v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cl. 462. See LONGEVITY PAY; FOREIGN TROOPS.

SOLE. Alone, single; used in contradistinction to joint or married. A sole tenant, therefore, is one who holds lands in his own right, without being joined with any other. A feme sole is a single woman; a sole corporation is one composed of only one natural person. See CORPORATION.

SOLEMN FORM. An action to prove a will in solemn form, or per testes, is heard in England before the probate division of the High Court. Proceedings are usually brought by the executor, but may be by a legatee or devisee. 3 Steph. Com. 62.

SOLEMNITY. The formality established by law to render a contract, agreement, or other act valid.

As the solemnization of a marriage is the consummation of a valid marriage; 33 L. J. Ch. 139; 49 id. 193; and an oath to be taken solemnly does not merely mean religiously, but with all due solemnities; 14 Q. B. D. 667. See MARRIAGE.

SOLICITATION. Solicitation to commit a crime is usually held to be punishable as a misdemeanor, though the offence solicited may not be committed; Com. v. Flagg, 135 Mass. 545; State v. Murphy, 27 N. J. L. 112; but it has been held otherwise, as, where a letter was written requesting one to commit murder, which never reached the person to whom it was addressed; 19 W. R. 109. See McDade v. People, 29 Mich. 50; Grady v. State, 11 Ga. 253. If the offence requires the concurrent action of two or more persons, it is doubtful whether a solicitation of one person by another to commit the offence is in itself criminal; 1 McClain, Cr. Law § 220.

The offence of this character most frequently mentioned in criminal law books is what is termed solicitation of chastity. The asking a person to commit adultery or fornication of itself is not an indictable offence; Salk. 382; 2 Chitty, Pr. 478; Smith v. Com., 54 Pa. 209, 93 Am. Dec. 686; contra, State v. Avery, 7 Conn. 267, 18 Am. Dec. 105; Bish. N. Cr. L. § 768. The distinction is sharply drawn by the Pennsylvania case and the Connecticut case. In the latter, solicitation to commit adultery, which was a statutory felony, was held indictable, in the former where the offence was a misdemeanor, it was not. See also Whart. Cr. L., 9th ed. § 179, and a criticism thereon in Com. v. Randolph, 146 Pa. 83, 23 Atl. 388, 28 Am. St. Rep. 782. If both are punishable for adultery, solicitation to adultery may be a common law offence; otherwise if there is a mere invitation; Whart. Cr. L. § 2085. In England, the bare solicitation of chastity was punishable in the ecclesiastical courts; 2 Chitty, Pr. 478. See 2 Ld. Raym. 809; Bish. Cr. Law § 767.

The civil law punished arbitrarily the person who solicited the chastity of another; Dig. 47. 11. 1.

The solicitation of a bribe is not an attempt to receive a bribe; State v. Bowles, 70 Kan. 821, 79 Pac. 726, 69 L. R. A. 176. See note in 25 L. R. A. 434.

The term solicitation is also used in connection with other offences, as, solicitation to larceny, sodomy, bribery, threatening notice. 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 767. Under the stat. of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, § 4, whoever shall solicit any one to murder any other person, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. Under this act the editor of a German paper in London was indicted and found guilty, for having published an article commending the assassination of the emperor of Russia; 7 Q. B. Div. 244; 1 Bish. Cr. L.

768a. Solicitation and an offer of money to commit murder, meet the test of a common-law crime (see MISDEMEANOR), constituting an act done, a step in the direction of that crime; Com. v. Randolph, 146 Pa. 83, 23 Atl. 388, 28 Am. St. Rep. 782. On an indictment for solicitation to commit arson, evidence that the prisoner solicited other parties to burn the same building is admissible; Com. v. Hutchinson, 19 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 360.

SOLICITOR. A person whose business is to be employed in the care and management of suits depending in courts of chancery.

Formerly, in England, they corresponded to attorneys in common law practice. By the Judicature Act, 1873, all solicitors, attorneys and proctors are to be called solicitors of the supreme court. They are stringently regulated by various acts. They are required to pass an entrance examination before the Law Society, which hears applications to strike them off the roll. A solicitor must be a British subject, who has served as a clerk to a practicing solicitor under binding articles from three to five years, passed various examinations and entered on the roll of solicitors by the Law Society. But a barrister of not less than five years standing may have himself disbarred and become a solicitor without examination except the final examination.

After his name is on the roll, he must annually take out a certificate duly stamped. The certificate of a country solicitor does not enable him to practice in town; hence nearly every country solicitor employs a London solicitor as his town agent.

In the High Court of Justice, in the Court of Appeal and in the House of Lords, and before the Judicial Committee of Privy Council, a barrister must be employed, as well as a solicitor; but a solicitor can plead before justices or any magistrate, sheriff's court, a coroner, revising barrister, ecclesiastical courts, in every county court, etc., courts of petty sessions, and at chambers in the High Court, but not in the mayor's court of London, and in the court of quarter sessions only for those counties for which no bar regularly attends. No person who is not a solicitor can act as one or sue out any proceeding or defend any action.

A solicitor has very extensive authority, especially in litigious matters, but in other matters is more restricted. His charges are fixed by law. He must first deliver a bill of costs and ordinarily wait a full calendar month before he can bring suit for it. A solicitor may not receive anything beyond his regular charges; [1895] 2 Q. B. 679. Any gift would be presumed to be the result of undue influence, but the presumption may be rebutted. By recent acts solicitors are permitted to act as proctors in all ecclesiastical courts, and proctors are not now a separate profession; Odger, C. L. 1431. He may become an English barrister after five years consecutive practice. To do so he must enter at one of the Inns of Court and at the end of twelve months pass the bar examination.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL. The solicitor-general of the United States is appointed by the president to assist the attorney-general in the performance of his duties, and in case of a vacancy in the office of attorney-general, or of his absence or disability, has the power to exercise all the duties of that office. Except when the attorney-general in particular cases otherwise directs, he and the solicitor-general argue cases in the supreme court in which the United States is interested. R. S. §§ 347, 359. Where the solicitor-general signed a commission as Acting Attorney-General and not as Solicitor-General, it was held immaterial; U. S. v. Twining, 132 Fed. 129.

In English Law. A law officer of the crown, appointed by patent during the royal pleasure, who assists the attorney-general in managing the law business of the crown. Selden 1. 6. 7. He is first in right of precedence; 3 Sharsw. Bl. Com. 28, n. (a), n. 9; Encyc. Brit. The first was Sir Francis North, afterwards Lord Keeper under Charles II.

SOLICITOR OF THE SUPREME COURT. The solicitors before the supreme courts, in Scotland, are a body of solicitors entitled to practice in the court of session, etc. Their charter of incorporation bears date August 10, 1797.

SOLICITOR OF THE TREASURY. The title of one of the officers of the United States, created by the act of May 29, 1830; he is appointed by the president, by and with the advice and consent of the senate, and is under the supervision of the department of justice. R. S. § 349.

SOLIDO, IN. See IN SOLIDUM.

SOLITARY CONFINEMENT. In a general sense, the separate confinement of a prisoner, with only occasional access of any other person, and that only at the discretion of the jailer; in a stricter sense, the complete isolation of a prisoner from all human society, and his confinement in a cell so arranged that he has no direct intercourse with or sight of any human being, and no employment or instruction. See Medley, Petitioner, 134 U. S. 160, 10 Sup. Ct. 384, 33 L. Ed. 835, where an ex post facto statute which added to the punishment of death (in effect when the crime was committed), the further punishment of solitary confinement until execution, was held void. The opinion by Miller, J., gives much historical information on the subject.

See PENITENTIARY; PUNISHMENT.

SOLUTIO (Lat. release). In Civil Law. Payment. By this term is understood every species of discharge or liberation, which is called satisfaction, and with which the creditor is satisfied. Dig. 46. 3. 54; Code 8. 43. 17; Inst. 3. 30. This term has rather a reference to the substance of the obligation than to the numeration or counting of the money. Mag. 50. 16. 176.

SOLUTIO INDEBITI (Lat.). In Civil Law. The case where one has paid a debt, or done an act or remitted a claim because he thought that he was bound in law to do so, when he was not. In such cases of mistake there is an implied obligation (quasi ex contractu) to pay back the money, etc.; Poll. Contr. 439; Mackeldey, Civ. Law § 458.

SOLVENCY. The state of a person who is able to pay all his debts: as also such attitude of his property as that it may be reached and subjected by process of law, without his consent, to the payment of such debts. Mitchell v. Bradstreet Co., 116 Mo. 226, 22 S. W. 358, 724, 20 L. R. A. 138, 38 Am. St. Rep. 592; Thompson v. Thompson, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 127. The opposite of insolvency (q. v.).

SOLVENDUM IN FUTURO (Lat.). To be paid in the future. Used of an indebtedness which is said to be debitum in presenti (due now) and solvendum in futuro (payable in the future). An interest in an estate may be rested in presenti, though it be solvendum in futuro, enjoyable in the future.

SOLVENT. One who has sufficient to pay his debts and all obligations. Dig. 50. 16. 114.

A person is solvent who owns property enough and so situated that all his debts can be collected from it by legal proceedings; People v. Halsey, 53 Barb. (N. Y.) 547. But other cases hold that to be solvent one must be able to pay all his debts in the ordinary course of trade. See 2 N. B. R. 149; State v. Cadwell, 79 Ia. 432, 44 N. W. 700. See INSOLVENCY.

SOLVERE (Lat. to unbind; to untie). To release; to pay; solvere dicimus eum qui fecit quod facere promisit. 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 807.

SOLVIT AD DIEM (Lat. he paid at the day). The name of a plea to an action on a bond, or other obligation to pay money, by which the defendant pleads that he paid the money on the day it was due. See 1 Stra. 652; Rep. temp. Hardw. 133; Comyns, Dig. Pleader (2 W. 29).

This plea ought to conclude with an averment, and not to the country; 1 Sid. 215; Jackson v. Louw, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 253.

SOLVIT POST DIEM (Lat. he paid after the day). The name of a special plea in bar to an action of debt on a bond, by which the defendant asserts that he paid the money after the day it became due. 1 Chitty, Pl. 480, 555.

SOMNAMBULISM (Lat. somnium, sleep; ambulo, to walk). Sleep-walking.

The mental condition in this affection is not very unlike that of dreaming. Many of their phenomena are the same; and the former differs from the latter chiefly in the larger number of the functions involved in the abnormal process. In addition to the mental activity common to both, the somnambulist enjoys the use of his senses in some degree, and the power of locomotion. He is thereby enabled to perform manual operations as well, frequently, as in his waking state. Usually, however, the action of the senses is more or less imperfect, many of the impressions being incorrectly or not at all perceived. The person walks against a wall, or stumbles over an object in his path; he mistakes some projections for a horse, strides across it, and imagines himself to be riding; he hears the faintest sound connected with what he is doing, while the voices of persons near him, and even the blast of a trumpet, are entirely unnoticed. For the most part, the operations of the somnambulist consist in getting up while asleep, groping about in the dark, endeavoring to make his way out of the house through doors or windows, making some inarticulate sounds, perhaps, and all the while unconscious of persons or things around him. The power of the perceptive faculties, as well as that of the senses, is sometimes increased in a wonderful degree.

The somnambulist always awakes suddenly, and has but a faint conception, if any, of what he has been thinking and doing. If conscious of anything, it is of an unpleasant dream imperfectly remembered. This fact, not being generally known, will often enable us to detect simulated somnambulism. If the person on waking continues the same train of thought and pursues the same plans and purposes which he did while asleep, there can be no doubt that he is feigning the affection. When a real somnambulist, for some criminal purpose, undertakes to simulate a paroxysm, he is not at all likely to imitate one of his own previous paroxysms, for the simple reason that he knows less than others how he appeared while in them. If, therefore, somnambulism is alleged in any given case, with no other proof than the occurrence of former paroxysms unquestionably genuine, it must be viewed with suspicion if the character of the alleged paroxysm differs materially from that of the genuine ones. In one way or another, a case of simulation would generally be detected by means of a close and intelligent scrutiny, so difficult is it to imitate that mixture of consciousness and unconsciousness, of dull and sharp perceptions, which somnambulism presents. The history of the individual may throw some light on the matter. If he has had an opportunity of witnessing the movements of a somnambulist in the course of his life, this fact alone would rouse suspicion, which would be greatly increased if the alleged paroxysm presented many traits like those of the paroxysms previously witnessed.

The legal consequences of somnambulism should be precisely those of insanity, which it so nearly resembles. The party should be exempt from punishment for his criminal acts, and be held amenable in damages for torts and trespasses. Somnambulism, though possibly not technical insanity, will sometimes have the same effect as excusing crime; Fain v. Com., 78 Ky. 183, 39 Am. Rep. 213; 1 Bish. N. Cr. L. § 395; "simply because the person committing it would not know what he was doing;" Stephen, J., in 23 Q. B. D. 168. The only possible exceptions to this principle are to be found in those cases where the somnambulist, by meditating long on a criminal act while awake, is thereby led to commit it in his next paroxysm. Hoffbauer contends that, such being generally the fact, too much indulgence ought not to be shown to the criminal acts of the somnambulist. Die Psychologie, etc., c. 4, art. 2. But surely this is a rather refined and hazardous speculation, and seems like punishing men solely for bad intentions,—because the acts, though ostensibly the ground of punishment, are actually those of a person deprived of his reason. The truth is, however, that criminal acts have been committed in a state of somnambulism by persons of irreproachable character. Tayl. Med. Jur. 744. See Gray, Med. Jur. 265; Whart. & S. Med. Jur. § 492; Rush on the Mind 302; 18 Am. Journ. of Ins. 236. Tirrell's Case, Mass.

SON. An immediate male descendant. In its technical meaning in devises, this is a word of purchase; but the testator may make it a word of descent. Sometimes it is extended to more remote descendants. 2 Des. 123, n.

SON ASSAULT DEMESNE (L. Fr. his own first assault). In Pleading. A form of a plea to justify an assault and battery, by which the defendant asserts that the plaintiff committed an assault upon him and the defendant merely defended himself.

When the plea is supported by evidence, it is a sufficient justification, unless the retaliation by the defendant were excessive and bore no proportion to the necessity or to the provocation received; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 406; Scribner v. Beach, 4 Denio (N. Y.) 448, 47 Am. Dec. 265.

SON-IN-LAW. The husband of one's daughter.

SOON. Within a reasonable time. Sanford v. Shepard, 14 Kan. 232.

SORCERY. It was punished in England like witchcraft, which see.

SORS (Lat.). In Civil Law. A lot; chance; fortune. Calvinus, Lex.; Ainsworth, Dict. Sort. Kind. The little scroll on which the thing to be drawn by lot was written. Carpentier, Gloss. A principal or capital sum: e. g. the capital of a partnership. Calvinus, Lex.

In Old English Law. A principal lent on interest, as distinguished from the interest itself. Pryn. Collect. p. 161; Cowell.

SORTITIO. A casting of lots. Sortitio judicum, a drawing of judges, on criminal trials, similar to the modern practice of drawing a jury. 3 Bla. Com. 366.

SOUL SCOT. A mortuary, or customary gift due ministers, in many parishes of England, on the death of parishioners. It was originally voluntary and intended as amends for ecclesiastical dues neglected to be paid in the lifetime. 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. *425. It was called in King Canute's laws symbolum animæ; it was the second best chattel; the heriot or best goods went to the lord. It was brought to the church with the corpse, and was called a corpse-present.

SOUND MIND. That state of a man's mind which is adequate to reason and comes to a judgment upon ordinary subjects like other rational men. 2 Hamilton, Syst. Leg. Med. 28.

The law presumes that every person who has acquired his full age is of sound mind, and, consequently, competent to make contracts and perform all his civil duties; and he who asserts to the contrary must prove the affirmation of his position by explicit evidence, and not by conjectural proof; 2 Hagg. Eccl. 434; 3 Add. Eccl. 86; Boyd v. Eby, 8 Watts (Pa.) 66; Ray, Med. Jur. § 92; 3 Curt. Eccl. 671.

SOUND MIND AND MEMORY. This phrase does not mean a mind without a flaw, or a memory without a fault. In re Blair, 16 N. Y. Supp. 874. See WILL.

SOUNDING IN DAMAGES. When an action is brought, not for the recovery of lands, goods, or sums of money (as is the case in real or mixed actions or the personal action of debt or detinue), but for damages only, as in covenant, trespass, etc., the action is said to be sounding in damages. Steph. Pl. 126.

SOUNDNESS. General health; freedom from any permanent disease. 1 Carr. & M. 291. To create unsoundness, it is requisite that the animal should not be useful for the purpose for which he is bought, and that inability to be so useful should arise from disease or accident. 2 Mood. & R. 113, 137; 9 M. & W. 670.

In the sale of animals they are sometimes warranted by the seller to be sound; and it becomes important to ascertain what is soundness. Horses affected by roaring; a temporary lameness, which rendered the horse less fit for service; 4 Camp. 271; but see 2 Esp. Cas. 573; a cough, unless proved to be of a temporary nature; 2 Chitty, Bail. 245, 416; and a nerved horse; Ry. & M. 290; have been held to be unsound. But crib-biting is not a breach of a general warranty of soundness; Holt, Cas. 630; but see Washburn v. Cuddihy, 8 Gray (Mass.) 430; Walker v. Hoisington, 43 Vt. 608. The true test is whether the defect complained of renders the horse less than reasonably fit for present use; 9 M. & W. 668. See Oliph.; Hanover on Horses; Benj. Sales § 619.

An action on the case is the proper remedy for a verbal warrant of soundness; 1 H. Bla. 17; 9 B. & C. 259; Bac. Abr. Action on the Case (E).

See SALE; WARRANTY.

SOURCES OF THE LAW. The authority from which the laws derive their force. A term used to include all the reliable testimonials of what constitutes the law.

The power of making all laws is in the people or their representatives, and none can have any force whatever which are derived from any other source. But it is not required that the legislator shall expressly pass upon all laws, and give the sanction of his seal, before they can have life or existence. The laws are, therefore, such as have received an express sanction, and such as derive their force and effect from implication.

The express laws are—first, the constitution of the United States; secondly, the treaties made with foreign powers; thirdly, the acts of congress; fourthly, the constitutions of the respective states; fifthly, the laws made by the several state legislatures; sixthly, the laws made by inferior legislative bodies, such as the councils of municipal corporations, and the general rules made by the courts.

The constitutions of the respective states, if not opposed to the provisions of the constitution of the United States, are of binding force in the states respectively; and no act of the state legislature has any force which is made in contravention of the state constitution.

The laws of the several states constitutionally made by the state legislatures have full and complete authority in the respective states.

Laws are frequently made by inferior legislative bodies which are authorized by the legislature: such are the municipal councils of cities or boroughs. Their laws are generally known by the name of ordinances, and when lawfully ordained they are binding on the people. The courts, perhaps by a necessary usurpation, have been in the practice of making general rules and orders, which sometimes affect suitors and parties as much as the most regular laws enacted by congress. These apply to all future cases. There are also rules made in particular cases as they arise: but these are rather decrees or judgments than laws.

The facit laws, which derive their authority from the consent of the people without any legislative enactment, may be subdivided into,—

The common law, which is derived from two sources, the common law of England, and the practice and decisions of our own courts. In some states it has been enacted that the common law of England shall be the law, except where the same is inconsistent with our constitutions and laws. See LAW.

Customs which have been generally adopted by the people have the force of law.

The principles of Roman law. See CIVIL LAW.

The Canon law, which was adopted by the ecclesiastical courts, figures in our laws respecting marriage, divorces, wills and testaments, executors and administrators, and many other subjects.

The jurisprudence, or decisions of the various courts, have contributed their full share of what makes the law. These decisions are made by following precedents, by borrowing from the sources already mentioned, and sometimes by the less excusable disposition of the judges to legislate on the bench.

The monument where the common law is to be found are the records, reports of cases adjudicated by the courts, and the treatises of learned men. The books of reports are the best proof of what is the common law; but, owing to the difficulty of finding out any systematic arrangement, recourse is had to treatises upon the various branches of the law. The records, owing to their being kept in one particular place and therefore not generally accessible, are seldom used.

"Laws derive their authority from possession and use; 'tis dangerous to trace them back to their beginning; they grow great and ennoble themselves, like our rivers, by running; follow them upward to their source, 'tis but a little spring, scarce discernible, that swells thus and thus fortifies itself by growing old. Do but consult the ancient considerations that gave the first motion to this famous torrent, so full of dignity, awe, and reverence; you will find them so light and weak that it is no wonder if these people, who weigh and reduce everything to reason, and who admit nothing by authority or upon trust, have their judgments very remote and differing from those of the public." Montaigne, Essays, II, ch. xii.

SOUS SEING PRIVÉ. In Louisiana. An act or contract evidenced by writing under the private signature of the parties to it. The term is used in opposition to the authentic act, which is an agreement entered into in the presence of a notary or other public officer.

SOUTH CAROLINA. One of the original thirteen United States.

This state was originally part of the British province of Carolina, then comprehending both North Carolina and South Carolina. That province was granted by Charles II., by charter issued to eight lord proprietors, in 1663, and amended in 1665 so as to extend it between twenty-nine and thirty-six degrees thirty minutes, north latitude, drawn from the Atlantic to the Pacific ocean. The first permanent settlement in South Carolina was effected in 1670 by emigrants from England who landed at Beaufort, then Port Royal, in the same year and removed to the point on the river Ashley nearly opposite the present site of Charleston; but, abandoning this position, they again removed, in 1680, to Oyster Point, at the confluence of the Ashley and Cooper, where they founded Charleston.

In 1719, the colonial legislature disowned the proprietary government and threw the colony into the hands of the king, who, accordingly, assumed the control of it, but not until 1729 was the charter surrendered. In that year the shares of seven out of the eight lords proprietors were ceded. The eighth share, which belonged to the family of Lord Granville, formerly Cartaret, was retained, and laid off in North Carolina,—which was about the same time finally divided from South Carolina.

In 1732, that part of South Carolina lying west of the river Savannah was granted by the crown to the Georgia Company, under Oglethorpe. Thus South Carolina was reduced in extent, and, in consequence of subsequent arrangements, made with Georgia in 1787 in the treaty of Beaufort, and with North Carolina in the early part of the present century, the present boundaries were established.

On March 26, 1776, the first constitution was adopted,—the earliest it is believed, of the American constitutions. This constitution was replaced in 1778 by another, and that in 1790 by yet another. Some amendments were made in 1808, 1810, 1816, 1823, and 1834. In 1865 a new constitution was adopted. This in its time was succeeded by that of 1868, which was amended in 1873 and 1876. The present constitution of the state was adopted Dec. 4, 1895.

SOUTH DAKOTA. One of the states of the United States.

It was admitted to the Union under the act of Feb. 22, 1889, which included also North Dakota, Montana, and Washington, which together constituted the territories of Dakota, Montana, and Washington. The constitution was amended, in 1913, by providing for a new primary law, for equal suffrage, for the organization of irrigation districts, and for the initiative and referendum. See NORTH DAKOTA.

SOVEREIGN. A person, body, or state in which independent and supreme authority is vested.

A chief ruler with supreme power; a king or other ruler with limited power.

The term is used to express, not merely the chief ruler or executive, but the state itself as an entity in which is vested the attributes of sovereignty. Thus it is usual to speak of the United States or one of the states as the sovereign.

The sovereign, whether the term be used with respect to a state or to the chief ruler of one, is accorded an immunity from suit in courts of justice. This doctrine obtains both in England and in this country.

An action is not maintainable against a foreign sovereign; 44 L. T. Rep. N. S. 199; [1894] 1 Q. B. 149; 2 H. L. Cas. 1. Courts of England will take judicial notice of the status of a foreign sovereign and will not take jurisdiction over him, unless he voluntarily submits to it; [1894] 1 Q. B. 149. This doctrine is applied in this country; Hatch v. Baez, 7 Hun (N. Y.) 596; Sharp's Rifle Mfg. Co. v. Rowan, 34 Conn. 329, 91 Am. Dec. 728. A state cannot sue the United States without its consent; Kansas v. U. S., 204 U. S. 331, 27 Sup. Ct. 388, 51 L. Ed. 510.

"A sovereign is exempt from suit, not because of any formal conception or obsolete theory, but on the logical and practical ground that there can be no legal right against the authority which makes the law on which the right depends;" and a territory of the United States, while not sovereign in the full sense of the word, is such so far as exemption from suit is concerned, because it may originate and change at will the law of contract and property, from which persons within the jurisdiction derive their rights; Kawananakoa v. Polyblank, 205 U. S. 349, 27 Sup. Ct. 526, 51 L. Ed. 834.

A sovereign is not subject to the jurisdiction of another country, though traveling there under an assumed name; [1894] 1 Q. B. 149; he may consent to the jurisdiction, or he may himself bring suit; L. R. 2 Ch. 582; and if he sues, he submits to whatever is incident to that proceeding; 3 Y. & C. 594.

It is a general rule that the sovereign cannot be sued in his own court without his consent, and this was so from the days of Bracton, nor could a feudal lord; 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 311; and hence no direct judgment can be rendered against him therein for costs, except in the manner and on the condition he has prescribed; State v. Lazarus, 40 La. Ann. 856, 5 South. 289; The Antelope, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 549, 6 L. Ed. 723; U. S. v. Ringgold, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 163, 8 L. Ed. 899. And in 2 St. Tr. 320, when counsel for the king of Spain asked for costs, Lyndhurst, C., said: "We will not disparage the dignity of the king of Spain by giving him costs." While a sovereign is thus exempt from being made defendant in a suit, he may himself submit to the jurisdiction of a domestic or foreign court by bringing suit. While a foreign sovereign may sue to enforce a juristic right, it is otherwise where it seeks aid in maintaining its authority; Moore, Act of State 148.

A foreign sovereign can bring a civil suit in the courts of the United States; King of Spain v. Oliver, 2 Wash. C. C. 431, Fed. Cas. No. 7,814; The Sapphire, 11 Wall. (U. S.) 164, 20 L. Ed. 127, where many cases are cited; and such a suit does not abate by a change in the person of the sovereign, as the change may be suggested on the record; id. And a suit on behalf of a sovereign may be instituted by his proper official representative in charge of the business. There is no such rule as that the monarch or other titular head of a foreign state is the only person who can sue in respect to the public property or interest of that state; [1902] A. C. 524, where it was held that the Spanish minister of marine for the time being could sue a Scottish ship building company for damages for non-delivery of a warship, under a contract which was executed by his predecessor in office, on behalf of the Spanish government. When a sovereign waives his immunity so far as to become a suitor, he subjects himself to some extent to judicial control. The principle is said to be that the sovereign who brings suit would seem to submit to the jurisdiction of the court as though he were an individual, so far as that no well-recognized prerogative of sovereignty is infringed without his express consent; 1 Cl. & Fin. 333.

"When a foreign sovereign comes into court for the purpose of obtaining a remedy, then, by way of defence to that proceeding (by counter-claim, if necessary), to the extent of defeating that claim, the person sued may file a cross claim . . . for the purpose of enabling complete justice to be done between them;" 29 W. R. 125, per James, L. J. In England where a foreign sovereign brought suit to restrain defendants from using funds in their hands for certain purposes, and the latter set up a claim for damages, it was held that, while, by suing in England, he submitted to the jurisdiction for the purpose of allowing discovery in aid of the defendant, he did not thereby submit to what was in its real nature a cross action; [1898] 1 Ch. 190.

The rule that a tort can be ratified so as to make an act done by a servant in the course of the principal's business and purporting to be done in his name his tort, and exonerate the servant, is applied to a greater or less extent when the master is the sovereign; O'Reilly de Camara v. Brooke, 209 U. S. 45, 28 Sup. Ct. 439, 52 L. Ed. 676.

A prerogative which is undoubtedly to be recognized is the immunity from an affirmative judgment against him; People v. Dennison, 84 N. Y. 272; U. S. v. Hooe, 3 Cra. (U. S.) 73, 2 L. Ed. 370.

Where the United States had libelled a vessel for injuries caused by a collision with a government vessel, a cross libel could not be entertained; Bowker v. U. S., 105 Fed. 398; but this case is criticised in 15 Harv. L. Rev. 59, where it is suggested that the same principle should be applied as in the case of individuals, where fault is shown in both parties, and that a proper exercise of the discretion of the court would have been to stay the original proceedings until the United States should consent to the filing of the cross libel, or, if both were at fault, the judgment should be entered only upon condition of payment of a proper contribution to the defendants, which was the proceeding followed in 3 Wm. Rob. 38.

The doctrine of inviolability extends to securing immunity from lien on government property which would disturb the government's possession: Briggs v. Light-Boat, 11 Allen (Mass.) 157; 89 L. T. 374. Where enforcement of a lien has been permitted, it has apparently not been remembered that there is a difference between its existence and its enforcement: The Revenue Cutter No. 1, Brown, Adm. 76, Fed. Cas. No. 11,713. The United States courts had no jurisdiction over a public armed vessel in the service of a sovereign at peace with us; U. S. v. Goodwin, 7 Cra. (U. S.) 110, 3 L. Ed. 284. Similar cases were decided in England with respect to a warship of the United States; L. R. 4 P. D. 39; and one owned by the Roumanian government and employed for public purposes in connection with national railways in that country; L. R. 16 P. D. 270. On the same principle a court cannot, by proceedings in rem, dispose of a fund belonging to a foreign government in the hands of agents residing within its jurisdiction; Leavitt v. Dabney, 37 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 264; nor compel the defendants, who held the proceeds of merchandise shipped by a foreign government, to apply the same, pursuant to a contract of hypothecation, to a loan contracted by that government; L. R. 8 Eq. 198. But the general principle of immunity would not prevent the joinder of a foreign state with other defendants for the purpose of giving it an opportunity to appear and thus enable the court to decide more intelligently with respect to the demands against the other defendants; Manning v. Nicaragua, 14 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 517; and where a foreign government had made a contract in England and lodged money in the hands of an agent there for the payment of what would become due under the contract, the court would not refuse relief to the contractor because the contract was with a foreign government, nor because it did not appear in the cause; L. R. 7 Ch. 550.

This immunity has not always been observed as to property of the United States. It has been subjected to a carrier's lien for freight; Union Pac. R. Co. v. U. S., 2 Wyo. 170; and a lien for salvage; The Davis, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 15, 19 L. Ed. 875 (though it could not be enforced by a suit against the United States); and such a lien was allowed on the cargo of a vessel carrying United States mails, but there was no allowance for the mails, as they could not be sold for salvage; The Merchant, 4 Adm. Rec. 544, Fed. Cas. No. 9,435; nor made to contribute for general average; U. S. v. Wilder, 3 Sumn. 308, Fed. Cas. No. 16,694; and this has been said to have always been the law in England; 1 Pars. Mar. L. 324; contra, an innkeeper was held indictable for obstructing the passage of the mails by detaining the coach horses under a claim of an innkeeper's lien; U. S. v. Barney, 3 Hughes 545, Fed. Cas. No. 14,525. If, however, to recover the property which has been taken from its possession, the government resorts to the process of the courts to regain it, it would seem to be a waiver of the exemption; The Siren, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 152, 19 L. Ed. 129.

Interesting questions respecting the inviolability of a sovereign with respect to suits have arisen in the British colonies in the case of state-owned railroads. In Victoria the railroads were vested in a board of land and works, an incorporated governmental department, and, in an action for negligence, it was contended that the board was a mere trustee for the crown and no more liable to suit than the crown itself, but it was held that as incorporated trustees to whom was intrusted certain property, with which they were transacting the business of carriers, it was no part of the government service. They were held subject to all the ordinary liabilities of companies engaged in similar business; 4 Vict. L. Rep. 440; 7 Vict. L. Rep. 461 (L). Where, however, the railroad is vested in the crown itself, the nature of the undertaking is immaterial; 8 Can. 1; 7 Can. 216. In an American case, where the suit was against an incorporated railway in Canada, owned and operated by the British crown, for damages for personal injuries received within his dominions, it was held that the court had no jurisdiction; Mason v. Ry. Co., 197 Mass. 349, 83 N. E. 876, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 276, and note, 125 Am. St. Rep. 371, 14 Ann. Cas. 574.

Where suit was brought against the postmaster-general in connection with the management of the telegraph business, it was contended that his management of it was a branch of the public service and an essential part of government, as had been held in 2 Cowp. 765; but in a later case it was considered that the undertaking of the telegraph companies transferred to him was connected with no new purpose or object of a substantive kind, but merely new instruments for the accomplishment of the purpose which belonged to the business in the past; [1906] 1 K. B. 178. Where the public works commissioners had been incorporated, it was held by Phillimore, J., that that body was liable to be sued on its contracts; [1901] 2 K. B. 781; but the commissioners were held by the Exchequer Chamber to be exempt from the payment of rates; L. R. 3 Q. B. 677; and, by the Court of Appeals, as not entitled to the crown's immunity from the payment of costs; 31 Ch. Div. 621. So a board of guardians, who were managers of insane asylums under the local government board, were held not responsible for the negligence of officers in the treatment of patients; [1878] 2 L. R. Ir. 42; and a similar decision as to the non-liability of local authorities, charged with the duty of appointing officers to administer functions of a general public nature, was made in [1905] 2 K. B. 338. This decision was put by Wills, J., on a broad ground in the line of the American doctrine of non-liability of a municipal corporation for illegal action of its police, as laid down in Buttrick v. Lowell, 1 Allen (Mass.) 172, 79 Am. Dec. 721, and, generally, for whatever may result from the exercise by such corporation of merely governmental functions, in Hill v. Boston, 122 Mass. 344, 23 Am. Rep. 332. In the High Court of Australia it was held that an action would not lie against the Tasmanian government, qua employer, for the illegal action of a constable in the execution of his duty as a peace officer, notwithstanding that the state was suable in tort and the policeman was a servant and exclusively controlled by the central government; [1906] 3 Commonwealth L. R. 969. See an article on "Liability for Acts of Public Servants," by W. H. Moore, in 23 L. Q. R. 12. As to the doctrine followed in this country as to the non-liability for the action of public servants in the performance of public or governmental duties, see MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS. And see, generally, SOVEREIGNTY; STATE; UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

In English Law. A gold coin of Great Britain, of the value of a pound sterling.

SOVEREIGN POWER. In the House of Commons, in considering the Petition of Right, when the Lords had proposed to "leave entire" the King's sovereign power, Pym refused to speak to the question, saying that he knew not what it was. He knew how to add sovereignty to the King's person, but not to his power. Coke said: "I know that prerogative is part of the law; but 'sovereign power' is no parliamentary word; should we now add it we would weaken the foundations of law and then the building must needs fall." See Taswell-Langmead, Eng. Const. Hist. 428.

SOVEREIGN STATE. One which governs itself independently of any foreign power. See SOVEREIGNTY; STATE.

SOVEREIGNTY. The union and exercise of all human power possessed in a state: it is a combination of all power; it is the power to do everything in a state without accountability,—to make laws, to execute and to apply them, to impose and collect taxes and levy contributions, to make war or peace, to form treaties of alliance or of commerce with foreign nations, and the like. Story, Const. § 207.

The artificial soul of that artificial body, the state. Spencer.

As long as it is accurately employed . . . it is a merely legal conception and means simply the power of law-making unrestricted by any legal limit. But it is sometimes employed in a political rather than a legal sense. Dicey, Engl. Constitution.

Abstractly, sovereignty resides in the body of the nation and belongs to the people. But these powers are generally exercised by delegation.

When analyzed, sovereignty is naturally divided into three great powers: namely, the legislative, the executive, and the judiciary; the first is the power to make new laws and to collect and repeal the old; the second is the power to execute the laws, both at home and abroad; and the last is the power to apply the laws to particular facts, to judge the disputes which arise among the citizens, and to punish crimes. See EXECUTIVE POWER; LEGISLATIVE POWER; JUDICIAL POWER.

Strictly speaking, in our republican forms of government the absolute sovereignty of the nation is in the people of the nation; and the residuary sovereignty of each state, not granted to any of its public functionaries, is in the people of the state; Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 471, 1 L. Ed. 440.

In international law a state is considered sovereign when it is organized for political purposes and permanently occupies a fixed territory. It must have an organized government capable of enforcing law and be free from all external control. A wandering tribe of savages, or nomads, or people united merely for commercial purposes or under control of another state cannot be considered as a sovereign state. Until a state becomes sovereign in the sense above described, it is not subject to international law. The states of the American Union are each, in a certain sense, sovereign in their domestic concerns, but not in international law, and Norway is an instance of a community not sovereign in international law because bound in a union with Sweden. The fact of sovereignty is usually established by general recognition of other states, and, until such recognition is universal, no community can be considered as sovereign; Snow, Int. Law 19. See INTERNATIONAL LAW.

Every sovereign state is bound to respect the independence of every other sovereign state, and the courts of one country will not sit in judgment on the acts of the government of another, done within its own territory. Underhill v. Hernandez, 168 U. S. 250, 18 Sup. Ct. 83, 42 L. Ed. 456.

"The transactions of independent states between each other are governed by other laws than those which municipal courts administer; such courts have neither the means of deciding what is right, nor the power of enforcing any decision which they may make." 13 Moore, P. C. 75. And the same is the case with their dealings with the subjects of other states; Pollock, Torts 105.

Public agents, military or civil, or foreign governments, whether such governments be de jure or de facto, cannot be held responsible in any courts of the United States for things done in their own states in the exercise of the sovereignty thereof, in pursuance of the directions of their governments; Underhill v. Hernandez, 65 Fed. 577, 13 C. C. A. 51, 38 L. R. A. 405. The government of one country will not sit in judgment on the acts of the government of another country, done within its own territory; Underhill v. Hernandez, 168 U. S. 250, 18 Sup. Ct. 83, 42 L. Ed. 456.

Sovereignty means that the decree of the sovereign makes law; and foreign courts cannot condemn the influences persuading the sovereign to make the decree; American Banana Co. v. United Fruit Co., 213 U. S. 347, 29 Sup. Ct. 511, 53 L. Ed. 826, 16 Ann. Cas. 1047.

The idea of sovereignty was not associated in the Teutonic mind with dominion over a particular portion of the earth's surface; it was distinctly personal or tribal; and so was their conception of law. Taylor, Science of Jurispr. 133.

See SOVEREIGN; STATE.

SOWNE. A corruption of the French souvenu, remembered. Estreats that are sowne are such as the sheriff may gather. Cowell. See ESTREATS.

SPADONES (Lat.). In Civil Law. Those who, on account of their temperament or some accident they have suffered, are unable to procreate. Inst. 1. 11. 9; Dig. 1. 7. 2. 1. And see IMPOTENCE.

SPAIN. A constitutional monarchy, based on the constitution of June 30, 1876. The descent of the crown is provided for, but if the line runs out, the Cortez shall elect a king. He has a body of responsible ministers. Royal decrees must also be signed by a minister. The legislative power is vested in a senate and chamber of deputies. The former consists of: 1. The princes, nobles with an income of over 60,000 pesetas and who are also grandees, captains-general of the army, admirals of the navy, the patriarch of the Indies, archbishops, cardinals and other high officers. 2. Life members appointed by the sovereign. 3. Members elected, three each by 49 provinces and the rest by academies, universities, dioceses and state corporations. The number of the first and second classes shall not exceed 180 and of the third class the same number. The deputies are elected by universal male suffrage, since June 29, 1890.

The laws are founded on the Roman law, the Gothic common law and the Code of 1501 (Leyes de Toro), now formulated in several codes. See CODE.

The supreme court sits at Madrid and rules on points of law. There are 15 audiencias territoriales, or courts of appeal, and 495 partidas judiciales, or courts of first instance. See ENCYCL. BR.

SPARSIM (Lat.). Here and there; in a scattered manner; sparsely; dispersedly. For example, the plaintiff may recover the place wasted, not only where the injury has been total, but where trees growing sparsim in a close are cut. Bac. Abr. Waste (M).

SPEAKER. The title of the presiding officer of the house of representatives of the United States. The position is one of great importance, as the speaker appoints the standing committees of the house. The presiding officer of either branch of the state legislature generally is called the speaker.

See HINDS, Rules of the House of Representatives.

Both houses of parliament are presided over by a speaker. That of the House of Lords is commonly the Lord Chancellor, or Lord Keeper of the Great Seal, though the latter office is practically merged in that of Lord Chancellor. This is by prescription. Or the appointment may be by royal commission. In the commons, he is elected by the house, with the approval of the crown. He holds over from one parliament to another, without regard to the political complexion of the majority of the house. He never votes, except when the votes are equal, nor debates, but when the house is in committee, the speaker leaves the chair, and may then address the committee. In the lords, if he be a peer, he has a vote with the rest of the house. See May, P. L. ch. 7. The first speaker of the house was in 1377.

See QUORUM; PROLOCUTOR; MACCONOCHIE, Congressional Committees; FOLLETT, The Speaker; 2 Steph. Com. 483.

SPEAKING DEMURRER. In Pleading. One which alleges new matter in addition to that contained in the bill as a cause for demurrer. 4 Bro. C. C. 254; 2 Ves. 83; Brooks v. Gibbons, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 374; Ramage v. Towles, 85 Ala. 589, 5 South. 342.

SPEAKING WITH PROSECUTOR. A kind of imparlance, allowed in English practice, where the court permits a defendant convicted of a misdemeanor to speak with the prosecutor before judgment is pronounced; if the prosecutor declares himself satisfied, the court may inflict a trivial punishment. It applies chiefly to offences affecting the individual, as battery, etc. 4 Steph. Com. 209.

SPECIAL. That which relates to a particular species or kind; opposed to general: as, special verdict and general verdict; special imparlance and general imparlance; special jury, or one selected for a particular case, and general jury; special issue and general issue, etc.

The meaning of special, as used in a constitutional provision authorizing the legislature to confer jurisdiction in special cases, has been the subject of much discussion in the court of appeals of the state of New York. See Kundolf v. Thalheimer, 12 N. Y. 593; Arnold v. Rees, 18 N. Y. 57.

SPECIAL ACCEPTANCE. The qualified acceptance of a bill of exchange, as payable at a particular place, and there only. Byles, Bills 260. See ACCEPTANCE.

SPECIAL ACT. See STATUTE.

SPECIAL AGENT. One authorized to do one or two special things. Ross, Cont. 44. One appointed only for a particular purpose, and vested with limited powers. Chit. Cont. 285; Gibson v. Hardware Co., 94 Ala. 346, 10 South. 304.

It is a general rule that he who is invested with a special authority must act within the bounds of his authority, and he cannot bind his principal beyond what he is authorized to do; Munn v. Commission Co., 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 44, 8 Am. Dec. 219. Story, Ag. 17. See PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

SPECIAL ASSESSMENTS. They differ from general taxation, in that they are made upon the assumption that a portion of the community is to be specially and peculiarly benefited in the enhancement of the value of property peculiarly situated as regards a contemplated expenditure of public funds. Ittner v. Robinson, 35 Neb. 133, 52 N. W. 846.

SPECIAL ASSUMPSIT. An action of assumpsit brought on a special contract, which the plaintiff declares upon setting out its particular language or its legal effect.

It is distinguished from a general assumpsit, where the plaintiff, instead of setting out the particular language or effect of the original contract, declares as for a debt arising out of the execution of the contract, where that constitutes the debt. 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3426.

SPECIAL BAIL. See BAIL; BILL OF MIDDLESEX.

SPECIAL BAILIFF. A bound bailiff (q. v.).

SPECIAL BASTARD. One whose parents afterwards intermarry. 3 Bla. Com. 335.

SPECIAL CASE. See CASE STATED.

SPECIAL COMMISSION. An extraordinary commission of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery, issued by the crown to the judges when it is necessary that offences should be immediately tried and punished. Whart. Law Lex.

SPECIAL CONSTABLE. One who has been appointed a constable for a particular occasion, as in the case of an actual tumult or a riot, or for the purpose of serving a particular process.

SPECIAL COUNT. As opposed to the common counts, in pleading, a special count is a statement of the actual facts of the particular case.

SPECIAL CUSTOM. A particular or local custom. Bodfish v. Fox, 23 Me. 95, 39 Am. Dec. 611. See CUSTOM.

SPECIAL DAMAGES. See MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

SPECIAL DEMURRER. See DEMURRER.

SPECIAL DEPOSIT. A deposit made of a particular thing with the depositary: it is distinguished from an irregular deposit.

A deposit made with the understanding that the identical money deposited shall be returned to the depositor. Mutual Accident Ass'n v. Jacobs, 43 Ill. App. 340.

When a thing has been specially deposited with a depositary, the title to it remains with the depositor, and if it should be lost the loss will fall upon him. When, on the contrary, the deposit is irregular, as where money is deposited in a bank, the title to which is transferred to the bank, if it be lost, the loss will be borne by the bank. This will result from the same principle: the loss will fall in both instances, on the owner of the thing, according to the rule res perit domino. See Edw. Bailm. 48; BAILMENT.

SPECIAL ERRORS. Special pleas in error are those which assign for error matters in confession and avoidance, as a release of errors, the act of limitations, and the like, to which the plaintiff in error may reply or demur. See PLEA.

SPECIAL EXAMINER. An examiner appointed by a court of equity in a particular case. See EXAMINERS IN CHANCERY.

Any fit person may be a special examiner. The taking of testimony by a special examiner is conducted in the same manner as before a standing examiner in chancery. The examination should take place in the presence of the parties and their attorneys; the testimony is, under the English chancery practice, taken in the narrative form, and the examiner may take down the questions and answers if he thinks fit; he cannot pass upon the materiality or relevancy of any question. When there is an objection, it should be noted, and the examiner will state his opinion thereon to the attorney and refer to it in the depositions.

The depositions should not be prepared beforehand; Hickok v. Bank, 35 Vt. 476. Formerly it was considered that the whole of the deposition should be written down by the examiner, with his own hand; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr. *906; but such is not now the usual practice. An examiner is a ministerial officer and has no power to lay down rules as to the most convenient time of taking examinations; L. R. 16 Eq. 102. He may exclude the public from the hearings; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr. *906. Subpœnas may issue to bring witnesses before him. If an examiner in England dies, his successor may sign the deposition; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr. *910. If the witness refuse to sign his deposition, the examiner signs it. See EXAMINERS IN CHANCERY; DEPOSITIONS.

SPECIAL EXECUTION. A copy of a judgment with a direction to the sheriff indorsed thereon to execute it. Crombie v. Little, 47 Minn. 581, 50 N. W. 823.

SPECIAL FINDING. Where a jury find specially a particular fact, presumably material to the general question before them, but which does not involve the whole of that question. Moz. & W. The special findings referred to in the Revised Statutes, § 700, is not a report of the evidence, but it must be like the special verdict of a jury, a finding of the ultimate facts which the evidence establishes; Mercantile Trust Co. v. Wood, 60 Fed. 346, S. C. C. A. 658, 19 U. S. App. 567.

Special findings have the same weight and must be given the same effect as like findings by the court if a jury had been waived; Metropolitan Nat. Bank v. Jansen, 108 Fed. 572, 47 C. C. A. 497.

SPECIAL IMPARLANCE. In Pleading. An imparlance which contains the clause, "saving to himself all advantages and exceptions, as well to the writ as to the declaration aforesaid." 2 Chitty, Pl. 407. See IMPARLANCE.

SPECIAL INDORSEMENT. An indorsement in full, which, besides the signature of the indorser, expresses in whose favor the indorsement is made; thus "Pay C D, or order, A B." See Byles, Bills, 15th ed. 172; Tiedm. Com. Paper 266.

In English practice, under the Judicature Act of 1875, a special indorsement on a writ of summons is one which may be made in all cases where a definite sum of money is claimed. When the writ is thus indorsed and the defendant does not appear within the time appointed, the plaintiff may then sign final judgment for any sum not exceeding that indorsed on the writ. See 3 Steph. Com., 530. See INDORSEMENT.

SPECIAL INJUNCTION. An injunction obtained only on motion, usually with notice to the other party. It is applied for sometimes on affidavit before answer, and frequently upon merits disclosed in the defendant's answer. See INJUNCTION.

SPECIAL ISSUE. In Pleading. A plea to the action which denies some particular material allegation, which is in effect a denial of the entire right of action. It differs from the general issue which traverses or denies the whole declaration or indictment. Gould, Pl. c. 2, § 38. See GENERAL ISSUE; ISSUE.

SPECIAL JURY. One selected in a particular way by the parties. See JURY.

SPECIAL LAWS. See STATUTE; GENERAL LAWS.

SPECIAL LEGISLATION. See GENERAL LAWS; STATUTE.

SPECIAL LICENSE. One granted by the Archbishop of Canterbury to authorize a marriage at any time or place. 2 Steph. Com. 247.

SPECIAL MATTER. Under a plea of the general issue, a defendant may, instead of pleading specially, give the plaintiff notice, that on the trial he will give some special matter, of such and such a nature, in evidence.

Such notice is not required in an action on a sealed instrument where consideration need not be averred in the declaration, except when a failure of consideration is set up as an equitable defence.

Notice of special matter is required by R. S. § 4920 in actions at law on letters patent, in some cases. It must be given thirty days "before trial," which is said to be before the opening of the term. See 3 Rob. Pat. § 1019. But the latter statement is certainly not the usual practice.

See PLEA; PLEADING.

SPECIAL NON EST FACTUM. The name of a plea by which the defendant says that the deed which he has executed is not his own or binding upon him, because of some circumstance which shows that it was not intended to be his deed, or because it was not binding upon him for some lawful reason.

SPECIAL OCCUPANT. When an estate is granted to a man and his heirs during the life of cestui que vie, and the grantee die without alienation, and while the life for which he held continues, the heir will succeed, and is called a special occupant. 2 Bla. Com. 259. In the United States the statute provisions of the different states vary considerably upon this subject. In New York and New Jersey, special occupancy is abolished. Virginia, and probably Maryland, follow the English statutes. In Massachusetts and other states, where the real and personal estates of intestates are distributed in the same way and manner, the question does not seem to be material; 4 Kent 27.

SPECIAL PAPER. A list kept in the courts of common law, and afterwards in the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court, in which list special cases, etc., to be argued are set down. Whart. Law Lex.

SPECIAL PARTNERSHIP. See PARTNERSHIP.

SPECIAL PLEA IN BAR. See PLEA.

SPECIAL PLEADER. In English Practice. A lawyer whose professional occupation is to give verbal or written opinions upon statements submitted to him, either in writing or verbally, and to draw pleadings, civil or criminal, and such practical proceedings as may be out of the general course. 2 Chitty, Pr. 42.

Special pleaders were not necessarily at the bar; but those that were not required to take out annual certificates under 33 & 34 Vict. c. 97, §§ 60, 63; Moz. & W.

SPECIAL PLEADING. The allegation of special or new matter to avoid the effect of the previous allegations of the opposite party, as distinguished from a direct denial of matter previously alleged on the opposite side. Gould, Pl. c. 1, § 18; Gelston v. Hoyt, 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 246, 4 L. Ed. 381; Com. Dig. Pleader (E 15); Steph. Pl., And. ed. 240, n. See PLEADING, SPECIAL.

SPECIAL PROPERTY. That property in a thing which gives a qualified or limited right. See PROPERTY.

SPECIAL REQUEST. A request actually made, at a particular time and place; this term is used in contradiction to a general request, which need not state the time when nor place where made. 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2843.

SPECIAL RULE. See RULE OF COURT.

SPECIAL SESSIONS. See SESSIONS OF THE PEACE.

SPECIAL TAIL. See ESTATE TAIL.

SPECIAL TERM OR TERMS. See TERM.

SPECIAL TRAVERSE. See TRAVERSE.

SPECIAL TRUST. A special trust is one where a trustee is interposed for the execution of some purpose particularly pointed out, and is not, as in case of a simple trust, a mere passive depository of the estate, but is required to exert himself actively in the execution of the settler's intention: as, where a conveyance is made to trustees upon trust to reconvey, or to sell for the payment of debts. Lew. Tr. 3, 16. See TRUST.

SPECIAL VERDICT. A special verdict is one by which the facts of the case are put on the record, and the law is submitted to the judges. An agreed statement of facts may be the equivalent of a special verdict; U. S. Trust Co. v. N. M., 183 U. S. 535, 22 Sup. Ct. 172, 46 L. Ed. 315.

Acts providing for special verdicts are not violative of the right of trial by jury; Adams' Adm'r v. R. Co., 82 Ky. 603; Walker v. R. Co., 165 U. S. 593, 17 Sup. Ct. 421, 41 L. Ed. 837; Pittsburg, C., C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Smith, 207 Ill. 486, 69 N. E. 873.

See VERDICT; Bac. Abr. Verdict (D).

SPECIALTY. A writing sealed and delivered, containing some agreement or promise. Taylor v. Glaser, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 503; 1 P. Wms. 130. A writing sealed and delivered, which is given as a security for the payment of a debt, in which such debt is particularly specified. Bac. Abr. Obligation (A).

Although in the body of the writing it is not said that the parties have set their hands and seals, yet if the instrument be really sealed it is a specialty, and if it be not sealed it is not a specialty, although the parties in the body of the writing make mention of a seal; Taylor v. Glaser, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 504; 2 Co. 5 a.

A specialty was the contract itself. If it was lost the right of action on it was lost. In the 17th century, chancery, upon the obligee's affidavit of the loss or destruction of the instrument, compelled the obligor to perform his duty; a century later the common law judges decided that if profert of a specialty was impossible by reason of its loss, the plaintiff might recover upon secondary evidence of its contents. 3 T. R. 151. See Ames, Lect. Leg. Hist. 104.

See BOND; DEBT; OBLIGATION; SEAL.

SPECIE. Metallic money issued by public authority. See also IN SPECIE.

This term is used in contradistinction to paper money, which in some countries is issued by the government, and is a mere engagement which represents specie. In cases of salvage, specie on board is treated like any other cargo; 1 Pet. Adm. 416; 44 L. T. Rep. n. s. 254; The St. Paul, 86 Fed. 340, 30 C. C. A. 70. See 15 Am. L. Rev. 416; SALVAGE.

SPECIFIC GRAVITY. The ratio of the weight of a body to the weight of an equal volume of some other body, taken as the standard or unit. This standard is usually distilled water for liquids and solids, and air for gases. Louisville Public Warehouse Co. v. Collector of Customs, 49 Fed. 561, 1 C. C. A. 371, 6 U. S. App. 53.

SPECIFIC LEGACY. See LEGACY.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE. The actual performance of a contract by the party bound to fulfil it. As the exact fulfilment of an agreement is not always practicable, the phrase may mean, in a given case, not literal, but substantial performance; Waterm. Spec. Perf. § 1.

Many contracts are entered into by parties to fulfil certain things, and then the contracting parties neglect or refuse to fulfil their engagements. In such cases the party aggrieved has generally a remedy at law, and may recover damages for the breach of the contract; but in many cases the recovery of damages is an inadequate remedy, and the party seeks to recover a specific performance of the agreement.

It is a general rule that courts of equity will entertain jurisdiction for a specific performance of agreements, whenever courts of law can give but an inadequate remedy; and it is immaterial whether the subject relate to real or personal estate; 2 Story, Eq. § 717; Pom. Contr. 28; 1 S. & S. 607; 1 P. Wms. 570; Porter v. Water Co., 84 Me. 195, 24 Atl. 814. But the rule is confined to cases where courts of law cannot give an adequate remedy; Finley v. Aiken, 1 Grant Cas. (Pa.) 83; Justices of Inferior Court of Dougherty Co. v. Croft, 18 Ga. 473; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 718; if there is an adequate legal remedy, the court will refuse specific performance, unless under all the circumstances it would be inequitable and unjust to do so; Simon v. Wildt, 84 Ky. 157; Knott v. Mfg. Co., 30 W. Va. 790, 5 S. E. 266.

Specific performance is not of absolute right, but one which rests entirely in judicial discretion; exercised according to the settled principles of equity and with reference to the facts of the particular case, and not arbitrarily or capriciously; Wesley v. Eells, 177 U. S. 370, 20 Sup. Ct. 661, 44 L. Ed. 810; Hennessy v. Woolworth, 128 U. S. 438, 9 Sup. Ct. 109, 32 L. Ed. 500; Barrett v. Forney, 82 Va. 269; Ramsay v. Gheen, 99 N. C. 215, 6 S. E. 75; King v. Gsantner, 23 Neb. 795, 37 N. W. 654; it rests in judicial discretion, based upon settled principles of equity, and with reference to the particular facts. If based on part performance, the acts done must be such that damages would not be adequate relief; Haffner v. Dobrinski, 215 U. S. 446, 30 Sup. Ct. 172, 54 L. Ed. 277.

A vendor of real estate may either sue at law for the purchase-money or resort to equity for specific performance; Raymond v. Land & Water Co., 53 Fed. 883, 4 C. C. A. 89, 10 U. S. App. 601. An action at law for breach of contract to convey real estate is not an adequate remedy, and the existence of the right to it does not forbid the maintenance of a suit for specific performance; Wilbite v. Skelton, 149 Fed. 67, 78 C. C. A. 635; nor is it an adequate remedy for a failure to execute a trust; Rogers v. Mining Co., 154 Fed. 606, 83 C. C. A. 380. Equity will take jurisdiction for specific performance to avoid multiplicity of suits; Grand Trunk W. Ry. Co. v. R. Co., 141 Fed. 785, 73 C. C. A. 43; where damages are not susceptible of proof; American Fisheries' Co. v. Lennen, 118 Fed. 869; to enforce a compromise agreement between heirs where there is already a right of action in the probate court; Blount v. Wheeler, 199 Mass. 330, 85 N. E. 477, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1036; or a contract for the purchase of waterworks by a city, where the remedy at law is clearly inadequate; Castle Creek Water Co. v. Aspen, 146 Fed. 8, 76 C. C. A. 516, 8 Ann. Cas. 660; the objection of an adequate remedy at law may be raised at any stage of the proceedings either by the parties or the court; Marthinson v. King, 150 Fed. 48, 82 C. C. A. 360; Kane v. Luckman, 131 Fed. 609.

As the doctrine of a specific performance in equity arises from the occasional inadequacy of the remedy at law upon a violated contract, it follows that the contract must be such a one as is binding at law; Evans v. Kittrell, 33 Ala. 449; Kleinhaus v. Jones, 68 Fed. 742, 15 C. C. A. 644, 37 U. S. App. 185; and where the existence of a contract is in doubt, equity will not, as a rule, decree specific performance, especially when it appears that the property in question was rapidly rising in value; De Sollar v. Hanscome, 158 U. S. 216, 15 Sup. Ct. 816, 39 L. Ed. 956 (but a mere denial of the contract will not prevent its specific performance; Sprague v. Jessup, 48 Or. 211, 83 Pac. 145, 84 Pac. 802, 4 L. R. A. [N. S.] 410); and it must be executory, certain in its terms, and fair in all its parts.

The adequacy of consideration is to be measured by the breadth of plaintiff's undertaking; Warner v. Marshall, 166 Ind. 88, 75 N. E. 582. Mere inadequacy of consideration will not be sufficient for withholding specific performance; Marks v. Gates, 154 Fed. 481, 83 C. C. A. 321, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 317, 12 Ann. Cas. 120; Townsend v. Blanchard, 117 Ia. 36, 90 N. W. 519; Lawson v. Mullinix, 104 Md. 156, 64 Atl. 938; but where the consideration is grossly inadequate, equity will not enforce the contract; id.; 2 Ves. Sr. 125; Kilpatrick v. Wiley, 197 Mo. 123, 95 S. W. 213; Rogers Locomotive & Mach. Works v. Helm, 154 U. S. 610, 14 Sup. Ct. 1177, 22 L. Ed. 562; Barrett v. Geisinger, 148 Ill. 98, 35 N. E. 354; Briles v. Goodrich, 116 Ia. 517, 90 N. W. 354; Pennybacker v. Maupin, 96 Va. 461, 31 S. E. 607; Marks v. Gates, 154 Fed. 481, 83 C. C. A. 321, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 317, 12 Ann. Cas. 120; where there is a promise of support for life contained in a letter proposing marriage, and the marriage is subsequently entered into by the parties, equity will specifically enforce the terms; Offutt v. Offutt, 106 Md. 236, 67 Atl. 138, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 232, 124 Am. St. Rep. 491.

It must also be founded upon a valuable consideration, and its performance in specie must be practicable and necessary; and, if it be one of the contracts which is embraced in the statute of frauds, it must be evidenced in writing; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 751; Adams, Eq. 77.

The first requisite is that the contract must be founded upon a valuable consideration; Shields v. Trammell, 19 Ark. 51; either in the way of benefit bestowed or of disadvantage sustained by the party in whose favor it is sought to be enforced; Society for Establishing Useful Manufactures v. Butler, 12 N. J. Eq. 498; and this consideration must be proved even though the contract be under seal; Thompson v. Allen, 12 Ind. 539; Short v. Price, 17 Tex. 397; a promise against a promise is not such a consideration as will support a decree of specific performance, nor does the presence of seals import such a consideration; Winter v. Goebner, 2 Colo. App. 259, 30 Pac. 51. The consideration must be strictly a valuable one, and not one merely arising from a moral duty or affection, as towards a wife and children; although it need not necessarily be an adequate one; Adams, Eq. 78. See Moore v. Pierson, 6 Ia. 279, 71 Am. Dec. 409; Jones v. Tyler, 6 Mich. 364.

The contract must be clearly and unequivocally proved and its subject matter, consideration and all other essentials must be specific and unambiguous; Pressed Steel Car Co. v. Hansen, 137 Fed. 403, 71 C. C. A. 207, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1172; Logue v. Langan, 151 Fed. 455, 81 C. C. A. 271; and so where the description is sufficiently definite to enable the court to determine with certainty what property was intended to be conveyed; Warner v. Marshall, 166 Ind. 88, 75 N. E. 582; or to enable the vendee to find and examine it; Koch v. Streuter, 218 Ill. 546, 75 N. E. 1049, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 210; the court must be satisfied with the truth of the allegations of the complaint; Sprague v. Jessup, 48 Or. 211, 83 Pac. 145, 84 Pac. 802, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 410.

The second requisite is that the mutual enforcement of the contract must be practicable; for if this cannot be judicially secured on both sides, it ought not to be compelled against either party. Among the cases which the court deems impracticable is that of a covenant by a husband to convey his wife's land, because this cannot be effectuated without danger of infringing upon that freedom of will which the policy of the law allows the wife in the alienation of her real estate; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 731; Meason v. Kaine, 63 Pa. 335. See Morgan v. Bell, 3 Wash. 554, 28 Pac. 925, 16 L. R. A. 614. To justify a decree the proof must be clear both as to the existence of the agreement and the terms. Equity will not enforce a contract in favor of an employer as against an employé which is against conscience; Dalzell v. Mfg. Co., 149 U. S. 315, 13 Sup. Ct. 886, 37 L. Ed. 749. And the contract must be mutual at the time it is entered into; Dodson v. Hays, 29 W. Va. 577, 2 S. E. 415; and specific performance of a contract will not be enforced, unless the remedy as well as the obligation is mutual, and alike attainable by both parties to the agreement; Iron Age Publishing Co. v. Tel. Co., 83 Ala. 498, 3 South. 449, 3 Am. St. Rep. 758; Gold v. Ins. Co., 73 Cal. 216, 14 Pac. 786. If one of the parties cannot be specifically ordered to perform his part of the agreement there is not the requisite mutuality of remedy for equity to take jurisdiction; General Electric Co. v. Mfg. Co., 144 Fed. 458; Fowler Utilities Co. v. Gray, 168 Ind. 1, 79 N. E. 897, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 726, 120 Am. St. Rep. 344; Soloman v. Sewerage Co., 142 N. C. 439, 55 S. E. 300, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 391; contracts for personal services when lacking in mutuality of remedy cannot be specifically enforced; Brooklyn Baseball Club v. McGuire, 116 Fed. 782; Taussig v. Corbin, 142 Fed. 660, 73 C. C. A. 656; but where there has been full performance by one party equity will enforce the contract against the other party; Mississippi Glass Co. v. Franzen, 143 Fed. 501, 74 C. C. A. 135, 6 Ann. Cas. 707; mutuality of remedy does not require that each party should have precisely the same remedy; Phila. Ball Club, Ltd., v. Lajoie, 202 Pa. 210, 51 Atl. 973, 58 L. R. A. 227, 90 Am. St. Rep. 627.

The third requisite is that the enforcement in specie must be necessary; that is, it must be really important to the plaintiff, and not oppressive to the defendant; Society for Establishing Useful Manufactures v. Butler, 12 N. J. Eq. 498. However strong, clear, and emphatic a contract may be, and however plain the right at law, specific performance will not be decreed if it would cause a result harsh, inequitable, or contrary to good conscience; Mansfield v. Sherman, 81 Me. 365, 17 Atl. 300; see Pope Mfg. Co. v. Gormully, 144 U. S. 224, 12 Sup. Ct. 632, 36 L. Ed. 414; and the court is not bound to shut its eyes to the evident character of the transaction; it will never lend its aid to carry out an unconscionable bargain, but will leave a party to his remedy at law; Randolph v. Quidnick Co., 135 U. S. 457, 10 Sup. Ct. 655, 34 L. Ed. 200; nor where it would work hardship to the defendant; Marks v. Gates, 154 Fed. 481, 83 C. C. A. 321, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 317, 12 Ann. Cas. 120.

Specific performance was refused of a contract for an unexpired term of years by which one party agreed to perform continuous mechanical services (in the generation of electricity), demanding the highest degree of skill, and the other to maintain costly machinery and the daily use of cars moved by electricity on the line of its railway; Electric Lighting Co. of Mobile v. R. Co., 109 Ala. 190, 19 South. 721, 55 Am. St. Rep. 927. Mere inadequacy of consideration is not necessarily a bar to a specific performance of a contract; but if it be so great as to induce the suspicion of fraud or imposition, equity will refuse its aid to the party seeking to enforce, and leave him to his remedy at law; Lloyd v. Wheatly, 55 N. C. 267. This is upon the ground that the specific enforcement of the contract would be oppressive to the defendant. The court will equally withhold its aid where such enforcement is not really important to the plaintiff, as it will not be in any case where the damages which he may recover at law will answer his purpose as well as the possession of the thing which was contracted to be conveyed to him; Adams, Eq. 83. As a general rule, a contract to convey real estate will be specifically enforced; unless the title thereto is not marketable; Wesley v. Eells, 177 U. S. 370, 20 Sup. Ct. 661, 44 L. Ed. 810; Cornell v. Andrews, 35 N. J. Eq. 7; Townshend v. Goodfellow, 40 Minn. 312, 41 N. W. 1056, 3 L. R. A. 739, 12 Am. St. Rep. 736; Beer v. Leonard, 40 La. Ann. 845, 5 South. 257; while one for the transfer of personal chattels will ordinarily be denied any relief in equity; Waterm. Spec. Perf. § 16; Scott v. Billgerry, 40 Miss. 119. An instrument defective as a deed will not be enforced as a contract to convey, if no valuable consideration passed between the parties; Tunison v. Bradford, 49 N. J. Eq. 210, 22 Atl. 1073.

Even in the case of personal property, if the plaintiff has not an adequate remedy at law, equity will take jurisdiction; and more willingly in America than in England; Story, Eq. Jur. § 724; Risp. Eq. 368. When goods were sold and there were no other similar goods in the market, a disposal of them by the seller has been enjoined; 33 L. J. Q. B. 335. Equity will decree the specific delivery of goods of a peculiar value; as heirlooms; 10 Ves. 139; an ancient silver altar; 3 P. Wms. 390; the celebrated Pusey horn; 1 Vern. 273; the decorations of a lodge of Freemasons; 6 Ves. 773; a faithful family slave; Williams v. Howard, 7 N. C. 74.

Specific performance of a contract for the purchase of stock for the purpose of getting control of a corporation was refused in Appeal of Foll, 91 Pa. 436, 36 Am. Rep. 671, and in Rigg v. Ry. Co., 191 Pa. 298, 43 Atl. 212; also where the vendor had transferred the shares to another person; Summerlin v. Mining & Milling Co., 41 Fed. 249; Chaffee v. R. Co., 146 Mass. 224, 16 N. E. 34; but it was decreed where the persons to whom such stock was transferred were made parties and it was alleged that they had knowledge of the prior contract; Northern Cent. R. Co. v. Walworth, 193 Pa. 207, 44 Atl. 253, 74 Am. St. Rep. 683.

Specific performance may be decreed where the value of the stock is not easily ascertainable or it can not be obtained readily elsewhere, or where there is some particular and reasonable cause for the vendee's requiring the stock to be delivered; Gottschalk v. Stein, 69 Md. 51, 13 Atl. 625; Treasurer v. Mining Co., 23 Cal. 390; Byers v. R. Co., 13 Colo. 556, 22 Pac. 951; Manton v. Ray, 18 R. I. 672, 29 Atl. 998, 49 Am. St. Rep. 811; as where it has risen in value, if it were purchased with the party's own money; Emigrant Industrial Sav. Bk. v. Roche, 93 N. Y. 377; or where there was an agreement on a valuable consideration by certain stockholders to assign a specified per cent. of their stock to another, on the ground that the action was to enforce a trust; Williamson v. Krohn, 66 Fed. 655, 13 C. C. A. 668; and to the same effect when the action was to enforce a trust; Draper v. Stone, 71 Me. 175; Kimball v. Morton, 5 N. J. Eq. 26, 53 Am. Rep. 621. If there is any good reason why damages for conversion will not be an adequate remedy, specific performance will be granted; Williamson v. Krohn, 66 Fed. 655, 13 C. C. A. 668; or where the stock has a unique or special value; Bumgardner v. Leavitt, 35 W. Va. 194, 13 S. E. 67, 12 L. R. A. 776; Cushman v. Jewelry Co., 76 N. Y. 365, 32 Am. Rep. 315; or has never been placed on the market and the holder has died after making an agreement that the company may elect to take his shares at a value to be determined by appraisement; New England T. Co. v. Abbott, 162 Mass. 148, 38 N. E. 432, 27 L. R. A. 271; or where the agreement for transfer of shares forms part of a contract for the sale of land; Leach v. Fobes, 11 Gray (Mass.) 506, 71 Am. Dec. 732.

Specific performance of a contract to subscribe for stock in a corporation to be incorporated was refused; Strasburg R. Co. v. Echternacht, 21 Pa. 220, 60 Am. Dec. 49; but was decreed in Austin v. Gillaspie, 54 N. C. 261, on the ground that the remedy at law was inadequate, and it was refused because there was an adequate remedy at law in Hissum v. Parrish, 41 W. Va. 686, 24 S. E. 600, 56 Am. St. Rep. 892; and Jones v. Newhall, 115 Mass. 244, 15 Am. Rep. 97. It was decreed where the stock was necessary to the corporation in order that the purpose of its charter might be fulfilled; Norristown Traction Co. v. Slingluff, 7 Montg. Co. Law Rep'r (Pa.) 83; and where the stock was in payment for work done which gave it its only value, and it had no general market value; Altoona Electrical, Engineering & Supply Co. v. R. Co., 126 Fed. 559.

Equity will not enforce a contract to sell cows, where there is no evidence of distinctive or peculiar value; Kane v. Luckman, 131 Fed. 609; it will enforce a contract of insurance which is in the nature of an agreement to grant an annuity; Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York v. Blair, 130 Fed. 971.

A covenant for a renewal of a lease, which is indefinite as to the length of the term and rental to be paid, cannot be enforced specifically; Bamman v. Binzen, 65 Hun (N. Y.) 39, 19 N. Y. Supp. 627; nor a contract which is perpetual; Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Marshall, 136 U. S. 393, 10 Sup. Ct. 846, 34 L. Ed. 385. Equity will not entertain a suit to enjoin violation of a continuous contract; Berliner Gramophone Co. v. Seaman, 110 Fed. 30, 49 C. C. A. 99; nor will it enforce a contract which requires continuous supervision by the court; United Cigarette Mach. Co. v. Winston Cigarette Mach. Co., 194 Fed. 947, 114 C. C. A. 583; York Haven Water & Power Co. v. York Haven Paper Co., 201 Fed. 270, 119 C. C. A. 508; even though its jurisdiction would obviate a multiplicity of suits; Lone Star Salt Co. v. R. Co., 99 Tex. 434, 90 S. W. 863, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 828; contra, Taylor v. R. Co., 54 Fla. 635, 45 South. 574, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 307, 127 Am. St. Rep. 155, 14 Ann. Cas. 472, where contracts relating to the operation of railroads were specifically enforced; but if a contractual relation has existed between the parties for nearly 50 years, equity will take jurisdiction to prevent a threatened termination of it; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Pa. Co., 129 Fed. 849, 64 C. C. A. 285, 68 L. R. A. 968.

A right to use a right of way under a traffic agreement between two railroad companies will be enforced in equity; Joy v. St. Louis, 138 U. S. 1, 11 Sup. Ct. 243, 34 L. Ed. 843; and a contract between railroad companies for the joint use of a bridge and seven miles of track; Union Pac. R. Co. v. R. Co., 51 Fed. 309, 2 C. C. A. 174; or a contract by which one had acquired the right to use a part of the other party's railroad line for 999 years; Grand Trunk W. R. Co. v. R. Co., 141

Fed. 785, 73 C. C. A. 43. Option contracts for the purchase or sale of land may be enforced; Watts v. Kellar, 56 Fed. 1, 5 C. C. A. 394; and the rule of non-enforcement for want of mutuality has no application to such an option contract; id. A written option given for a valuable consideration will be specifically enforced; Marthinson v. King, 150 Fed. 48, 82 C. C. A. 360; absence of consideration may be shown, notwithstanding the instrument is sealed; Rude v. Levy, 43 Colo. 482, 96 Pac. 560, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 91, 127 Am. St. Rep. 123. Where the option has not been converted into a binding contract by acceptance according to its provisions, specific performance thereof cannot be enforced; Pollock v. Brookover, 60 W. Va. 75, 53 S. E. 795, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 403.

Where time is of the essence of a contract, specific performance will not be decreed after the lapse of the time specified; but it is otherwise when time is not of the essence of the contract; Myers v. League, 62 Fed. 654, 10 C. C. A. 571.

Specific performance of a contract to give security for a debt may be decreed in some cases; as where a mortgage was released under an agreement to execute another mortgage to the releasor; Irvine v. Armstrong, 31 Minn. 216, 17 N. W. 343; and where the purchaser had agreed to execute a mortgage for the purchase money to the vendor and refused to do so; Boston v. Nichols, 47 Ill. 353. It will be decreed of contracts to execute chattel mortgages; Tiernan v. Granger, 65 Ill. 351; Bernheimer v. Verdon, 63 N. J. Eq. 312, 49 Atl. 732.

Equity will not enjoin the running of trains over the main line of a railroad in order to enforce a specific agreement where the rights of the public requiring uninterrupted service would be interfered with; Taylor v. R. Co., 54 Fla. 635, 45 South. 574, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 307, 127 Am. St. Rep. 155, 14 Ann. Cas. 472.

A court of equity will not refuse to enforce a contract specifically which was fair when made, by reason of the increase in value of the subject-matter; Meehan v. Nelson, 137 Fed. 731, 70 C. C. A. 165. Where the vendee bought property for $300, and paid one dollar down and then did nothing for nine years, and it appeared that the property had reached a value of $15,000, specific performance was refused; McCabe v. Matthews, 155 U. S. 550, 15 Sup. Ct. 190, 39 L. Ed. 256.

Equity will enforce a contract for the exclusive rights under letters patent, and will enjoin the breach of a negative covenant; Hapgood v. Rosenstock, 23 Fed. 86; Adams v. Messinger, 147 Mass. 185, 17 N. E. 491, 9 Am. St. Rep. 679; Satterthwait v. Marshall, 4 Del. Ch. 337; Corbin v. Tracy, 34 Conn. 325; including a contract to assign all future inventions relating to a certain art; Appeal of Reese, 122 Pa. 392, 15 Atl. 807; although the agreement be oral; Searle v. Hill, 73 Ia.

367, 35 N. W. 490, 5 Am. St. Rep. 688; but not if the contract be unconscionable; Pope Mfg. Co. v. Gormully, 34 Fed. 877.

A parol agreement to assign the right to a patent for an invention may be specifically enforced; Pressed Steel Car Co. v. Hansen, 128 Fed. 444; and so where the inventor was an employé of the complainant, although the employment was terminable at any time by either party on notice; Mississippi Glass Co. v. Franzen, 143 Fed. 501, 74 C. C. A. 135, 6 Ann. Cas. 707; but where the plaintiff has an application pending for a patent covering the same invention as that of the defendant and interference proceedings have been taken, equity will not compel the specific performance of the contract to assign; Hildreth v. Thibodeau, 117 Fed. 146.

When the statute of frauds requires that a contract shall be evidenced in writing, that will be a fourth requisite to the specific execution of it. In such case the contract must be in writing and certain in its terms; but it will not matter in what form the instrument may be, for it will be enforced even if it appear only in the consideration of a bond secured by a penalty; Old Colony R. Corp. v. Evans, 6 Gray (Mass.) 25, 66 Am. Dec. 394; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 751. The specific performance of a parol contract to convey land cannot be enforced if defendant urges the statute of frauds; Pitt v. Moore, 99 N. C. 85, 5 S. E. 389, 6 Am. St. Rep. 489.

Equity will not decree specific performance of an agreement to convey property which has no existence, or to which the defendant has no title; Kennedy v. Hazelton, 128 U. S. 667, 9 Sup. Ct. 202, 32 L. Ed. 576. Where the record title is defective, and parol evidence would be required to sustain it (the title not being good by the statute of limitations), specific performance will not be decreed; McPherson v. Schade, 149 N. Y. 16, 43 N. E. 527. Georgia courts refuse to follow this rule in its strictness; Cowdery v. Greenlee, 126 Ga. 786, 55 S. E. 918, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 137, where a deed was not duly attested and was therefore not recordable.

If it appear that the want of title was known to the plaintiff when he began suit, the bill will not be retained for the assessment of damages, but the plaintiff will be left to his remedy at law; Kennedy v. Hazelton, supra. A description of land in the contract sufficient to enable the vendee to find and examine it is sufficient to justify specific performance; Koch v. Streuter, 218 Ill. 546, 75 N. E. 1049, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 210. A contract to convey property which one party may at any time acquire in the future, such party not having any property at the time of the contract, will not be enforced where the consideration is grossly inadequate to the value of the property subsequently acquired; Marks v. Gates, 154 Fed. 481, 83 C. C. A. 321, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 317, 12 Ann. Cas. 120.

Specific performance will be granted where the defendant, having contracted to buy certain land of the plaintiff, refused to perform on the ground that a widow more than seventy years of age might have children who would be entitled to an interest in the property, on the presumption that a woman of such advanced age is incapable of child-bearing: Whitney v. Groo, 40 App. D. C. 496.

In applying the equity of specific performance to real estate, there are some modifications of legal rules, which at first sight appear inconsistent with them and repugnant to the maxim that equity follows the law. The modifications here referred to are those of enforcing parol contracts relating to land, on the ground that they have been already performed in part; of allowing time to make out a title beyond the day which the contract specifies; and of allowing a conveyance with compensation for defects; Adams, Eq. 85; Bisph. Eq. 364.

The principle upon which it is held that part-performance of a contract will in equity take a case out of the operation of the statute of frauds, is that it would be a fraud upon the opposite party if the agreement were not carried into complete execution; Pom. Contr. 103; Hitchens v. Nougues, 11 Cal. 28; McCray v. McCray, 30 Barb. (N. Y.) 633; Watkins v. Watkins, 24 Ga. 402; Dickerson v. Chrisman, 28 Mo. 134; Godfrey v. Dwinell, 40 Me. 94. The act which is alleged to be part-performance must be done in pursuance of the contract and with the assent of the defendant. What will be a sufficient part-performance must depend on circumstances. The taking possession of the land and making improvements thereon will suffice; Hodges v. Howard, 5 R. I. 149; School Dist. No. 3 v. Macloon, 4 Wis. 79; Barrett v. Forney, 82 Va. 269; Sprague v. Jessup, 48 Or. 211; though the payment of a part or even the whole of the purchase-money will not; 4 Kent 451; Odell v. Montross, 68 N. Y. 499. See, however, Townsend v. Houston, 1 Harr. (Del.) 532, 27 Am. Dec. 732; Spear v. Orendorf, 26 Md. 37.

Equity will enforce a parol gift of land where there is possession and valuable improvements have been made thereon by the donee and the terms of the contract are clear and unequivocal; Logue v. Langan, 151 Fed. 455, 81 C. C. A. 271; and so where a railroad corporation contracts to maintain a spur track and depot at a place upon the lands given by the complainant for that purpose, if the complainant, relying upon the promise, incurs great expense in improving his property; Taylor v. R. Co., 54 Fla. 635, 45 South. 574, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 307, 127 Am. St. Rep. 155, 14 Ann. Cas. 472; but a parol agreement to devise real estate in consideration of support will not be enforced in the absence of possession and improvements, although the promisee furnished the support to the other party, who cared for the parents of both of them; Grindling v. Rehyl, 149 Mich. 641, 113 N. W. 290, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 466. The mere finding that possession was taken, money expended, taxes paid and services rendered to the promisor by the promisee without a finding of the amount expended, or that the improvements were permanent, or the consideration of the services, will not justify specific performance of a contract to convey real estate; Price v. Lloyd, 31 Utah, 86, 86 Pac. 767, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 870.

If the purchaser have entered and made improvements upon the land, and the vendor protect himself from a specific performance by taking advantage of the statute, the plaintiff shall be entitled to a decree for the value of his improvements; Boze v. Davis' Adm'r, 14 Tex. 331. The doctrine of part-performance is not recognized in some states; Lockett v. Williamson, 37 Mo. 388; Jacobs v. R. Co., 8 Cush. (Mass.) 223; Box v. Stanford, 13 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 93, 51 Am. Dec. 142.

Specific performance of a parol contract for the sale of lands will not be decreed, unless the terms of the contract clearly appear, and there is sufficient part performance to show that injustice would be done, if the contract was held inoperative; Williams v. Morris, 95 U. S. 444, 24 L. Ed. 360.

The doctrine of allowing time to make out a title beyond the day which the contract specifies, and which is embodied in the maxim that time is not of the essence of a contract in equity, has no doubt been generally adopted in the United States; Falls v. Carpenter, 21 N. C. 237, 28 Am. Dec. 592; Scarlett v. Hunter, 56 N. C. 84; Cooper v. Brown, 2 McLean 495, Fed. Cas. No. 3,191; Snyder v. Spaulding, 57 Ill. 480. But to entitle the purchaser to a specific performance he must show good faith and a reasonable diligence; Washburn v. Washburn, 39 N. C. 306. If during the vendor's delay there has been a material change of circumstances affecting the rights and interests of the parties, equity will not relieve; Tierman v. Roland, 15 Pa. 429. A bill to enforce a contract of a railroad company to locate a station on the land of complainant, more than sixteen years after the time of the agreement, during which time the company had built and maintained a station near the agreed place, will be dismissed; Thurmond v. R. Co., 140 Fed. 697, 72 C. C. A. 191.

The third equity, to wit, that of allowing a conveyance with compensation for defects, applies where a contract has been made for the sale of an estate, which cannot be literally performed in toto, either by reason of an unexpected failure in the title to part of the estate; Bell v. Thompson, 34 Ala. 633; Collins v. Smith, 1 Head (Tenn.) 251; Wright v. Young, 6 Wis. 127, 70 Am. Dec. 453; of inaccuracy in the terms of the description, or of diminution in value by a liability to a charge upon it. In any such case, equity will enforce specific performance, allowing a just compensation for defects, whenever it can do so consistently with the principle of doing exact justice between the parties; Adams, Eq. 89. This doctrine has also been adopted in the United States. See 2 Story, Eq. Jur. 794; Leigh v. Crump, 36 N. C. Eq. 299; Swain v. Burnette, 76 Cal. 299, 18 Pac. 394. Although a vendor has agreed to sell more than he has, the vendee is entitled to take what he can give and to demand compensation for the remainder; Melin v. Woolley, 103 Minn. 498, 115 N. W. 654, 946, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 595.

A contract for the sale of land entered into under the belief by both parties that the vendor has title, when in fact he has none, will not be specifically enforced in equity; Hatch v. Kizer, 140 Ill. 583, 30 N. E. 605, 33 Am. St. Rep. 258. The fact that vendor's title is disputed by a third person gives him no right to refuse to convey such title as he has; and will not prevent a decree for specific performance; Bragg v. Olson, 128 Ill. 540, 21 N. E. 519. Where the seller is mistaken in believing that he will get an option on another piece of land from the buyer, equity will not specifically enforce the original contract, although the buyer was innocent of actual misrepresentation; Rudisill v. Whitener, 146 N. C. 403, 59 S. E. 995, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 81.

When a vendor files a bill he must show a tender of the title and an offer to perform; McHugh v. Wells, 39 Mich. 175; that is a tender of a deed; Sowle v. Holdridge, 63 Ind. 213; Rude v. Levy, 43 Colo. 482, 96 Pac. 560, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 91, 127 Am. St. Rep. 123; Tiedem. Eq. Jur. 499; but it has been held that an offer of a deed in the bill is enough; Thomson v. Smith, 63 N. Y. 301; Winton v. Sherman, 20 Ia. 295; Brace v. Doble, 3 S. D. 110, 52 N. W. 586.

Where a vendee announces that he will not comply with his contract, the vendor need not tender a deed before suing for specific performance; Lyman v. Gedney, 114 Ill. 388, 29 N. E. 282, 55 Am. Rep. 871. See PERFORMANCE. And a vendee must show a tender of the purchase-money; Irvin v. Bleakley, 67 Pa. 24; McComas v. Easley, 21 Gratt. (Va.) 29; Short v. Kieffer, 142 Ill. 258, 31 N. E. 427. And such tender must not be delayed till circumstances have changed; Tarr v. Scott, 4 Brewst. (Pa.) 49. The vendee need not tender the purchase-money where the vendor refuses to consider the question of sale under the contract and denies any obligation thereunder; Bradford v. Foster, 87 Tenn. 4, 9 S. W. 195.

A decree for specific performance will not be made against a vendor whose wife refuses to join in the conveyance; Appeal of Burk, 75 Pa. 141, 15 Am. Rep. 587. A contract of sale of land not signed by wife can only be enforced subject to her dower rights; her verbal agreement to convey made after her husband's death cannot be enforced; Schwoerdfeger v. Kelly, 223 Pa. 631, 72 Atl. 1056.

In a suit for specific performance, the plaintiff must show that he has performed, or was ready to perform, his part of the contract, and that he has not been guilty of laches or unreasonable delay, and where the proof leaves the case doubtful, the plaintiff is not entitled to a decree; Penn v. McCullough, 76 Md. 229, 24 Atl. 424; or where the plaintiff's performance is entirely optional and no offer of it is made; Federal Oil Co. v. Western Oil Co., 121 Fed. 674, 57 C. C. A. 428. A contract of employment will be enforced against an employee if the employer has fully executed his part of the agreement; Mississippi Glass Co. v. Franzen, 143 Fed. 501, 74 C. C. A. 135, 6 Ann. Cas. 707.

Specific performance will not be decreed after an unreasonable delay; Nickerson v. Nickerson, 127 U. S. 668, 8 Sup. Ct. 1355, 32 L. Ed. 314; or where a party has been backward in claiming the relief, and has held off until circumstances have changed, so as to give him an opportunity to enforce or abandon the contract, as events might prove most advantageous; Ford v. Euker, 86 Va. 75, 9 S. E. 500; Bacon v. Hennessey, 35 Fed. 174; Requa v. Snow, 76 Cal. 590, 18 Pac. 862.

Specific performance of a contract to leave property by will will not be decreed, where the contract is made by a mere donee of a testamentary power of appointment; [1892] 3 Ch. 510. Specific performance of a contract to devise property in consideration of care and support will not be denied, where the complainant has fully performed her part, although the services rendered may not have been worth the value of the property; Warner v. Marshall, 166 Ind. 88, 75 N. E. 582; contra, Grindling v. Rehyll, 149 Mich. 641, 113 N. W. 290, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 466, 12 Ann. Cas. 344.

When a definite contract to leave property by will has been clearly and certainly established and there has been performance on the part of the promisee, equity will grant relief, if the case be free from objection on account of inadequacy of consideration, and there are no circumstances or conditions which render the claim inequitable; Roehl v. Haumesser, 114 Ind. 311, 15 N. E. 345; Berg v. Moreau, 199 Mo. 416, 97 S. W. 901, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 157; Anderson v. Anderson, 75 Kan. 117, 88 Pac. 743, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 229; Winne v. Winne, 166 N. Y. 263, 59 N. E. 832, 82 Am. St. Rep. 647. The court will construe such an agreement, unless void under the statute of frauds or for other reasons, to bind the property of the testator or intestate so far as to fasten a trust on it in favor of the promisee and to enforce such trust against the heirs of the deceased or others holding under them charged with notice of the trust. It is in the nature of a covenant to stand seised to the use of the promisee, as if the promisor had agreed to retain a life estate in the property, with remainder to the promisee in the event that the promisor owns it at the time of his death, but with full power on the part of the promisor to make any bona fide disposition of it during his life to another otherwise than by will; Bolman v. Overall, 80 Ala. 451, 2 South. 624, 60 Am. Rep. 107.

Specific performance was decreed of a compromise agreement not to contest a will if the complainant were allowed to share in the estate; Blount v. Wheeler, 199 Mass. 330, 85 N. E. 477, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1036; under the English rule that "if an intending litigant bona fide forgoes a right to litigate . . . he does give up something of value"; L. R. 32 Ch. Div. 266. The reality of the claim which is given up must be measured, not by the state of the law as it is ultimately discovered to be, but by the state of the knowledge of the person who at the time has to judge and make the concession; id.

Specific performance should never be granted unless the terms of the agreement sought to be enforced are clearly proved, or where it is left in doubt whether the party against whom the relief is asked in fact made such an agreement; Hennessy v. Woolworth, 128 U. S. 438, 9 Sup. Ct. 109, 32 L. Ed. 500; and performance will not be decreed unless the proof is clear and satisfactory, both as to the existence of the agreement and as to its terms; Dalzell v. Mfg. Co., 149 U. S. 315, 13 Sup. Ct. 886, 37 L. Ed. 749.

A feme covert cannot maintain a bill for specific performance; Tarr v. Scott, 4 Brewst. (Pa.) 49.

A provision for liquidated damages does not defeat a right to specific performance; Koch v. Streuter, 218 Ill. 546, 75 N. E. 1049, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 210; and equity will not grant pecuniary compensation in lieu of specific performance unless the case is one for equitable interposition; Marks v. Gates, 154 Fed. 481, 83 C. C. A. 321, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 317, 12 Ann. Cas. 120.

Where equity has personal jurisdiction over the parties, it will decree specific performance of a contract relating to land situated in another jurisdiction; Wilhite v. Skelton, 149 Fed. 67, 78 C. C. A. 635; White Star Min. Co. v. Hulberg, 220 Ill. 578, 77 N. E. 327; Byrne v. Jones, 159 Fed. 321, 90 C. C. A. 101.

Equity has no jurisdiction, in the absence of a statute, of a bill for specific performance of a contract to convey land within its jurisdiction upon service by publication, or service out of the jurisdiction upon a non-resident who does not appear; Spurr v. Scoville, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 578; Silver Camp Mining Co. v. Dickert, 31 Mont. 488, 78 Pac. 967, 67 L. R. A. 940, 3 Ann. Cas. 1000; Worthington v. Lee, 61 Md. 530; but a decree for a conveyance may be made effective, under a statute, by appointing a trustee to make the conveyance and to that end the proceedings are in rem; Hollander v. Central Metal & Supply Co., 109 Md. 131, 71 Atl. 442, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1135; a state may by statute confer jurisdiction in such cases where service is only by publication on a non-resident; Clem v. Given's Ex'r, 106 Va. 145, 55 S. E. 567; and the case of Arndt v. Griggs, 134 U. S. 316, seems to sustain this on principle. See Felch v. Hooper, 119 Mass. 52; and Merrill v. Beckwith, 163 Mass. 503, 40 N. E. 855; as to a statute in that state authorizing equity to appoint a trustee to convey land where the holder of the legal title is a non-resident. See generally Fall v. Eastin, 215 U. S. 1, 30 Sup. Ct. 3, 54 L. Ed. 65, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 924, 17 Ann. Cas. 853; Hollander v. Central Metal & Supply Co., 109 Md. 131, 71 Atl. 442, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1135; Proctor v. Proctor, 215 Ill. 275, 74 N. E. 145, 69 L. R. A. 673, 106 Am. St. Rep. 168, 2 Ann. Cas. 819; the subject is fully discussed in these L. R. A. notes.

As to specific performance by injunction, see 6 Columbia Law Rev. 82. See 33 Am. L. Rev. 357, as to specific performance of a contract to accept title based on adverse possession. As to the enforcement of decrees for specific performance, see DECREE.

See, generally, Fry; Waterman, on Specific Performance.

Specific Performance of Negative Covenants Relating to Personal Service. It is a maxim of equity that it will not specifically enforce contracts of personal service, either at the suit of the servant; 3 De G. M. & G. 914 [1893] 1 Ch. 116; L. R. 1 Eq. 411; Miller v. Warner, 42 App. Div. 208, 59 N. Y. Supp. 956; Reid Ice Cream Co. v. Stephens, 62 Ill. App. 334; or of the master; 6 T. L. R. 488; Welty v. Jacobs, 171 Ill. 630, 49 N. E. 723, 40 L. R. A. 98. In the exercise of its jurisdiction over trusts, however, equity has sometimes enjoined the trustees of charity schools from dismissing the master; 14 Vcs. Jr. 245; 13 Beav. 117; 7 Hare 532; 75 L. T. N. S. 265. The general rule stated does not result from a lack of power. When important public interests are in question, such agreements will be enforced; Southern Cal. R. Co. v. Rutherford, 62 Fed. 796, where it is held that employes of railroads, remaining in their employ, will be compelled by injunction to operate trains, though they have refused to do so because Pullman cars are hauled. Ordinarily, however, such relief is refused, either because of the practical inconvenience of enforcing it, or, as is sometimes said, because such action would result in imposing a state of slavery upon the servant, though this is hardly true unless the employment were for life or a very long time. Though equity will not enforce this sort of contract affirmatively, a chancellor will under certain conditions command obedience to an auxiliary negative covenant, forbidding the servant to work elsewhere. To invoke such equitable jurisdiction the contract must be one for the breach of which the remedy at law is inadequate, though a provision for liquidated damages will not oust the jurisdiction of equity; Ames, Cas. in Eq., 125, n. The services must be of such unique character that a substitute cannot readily be obtained. The services should be "unique"; Philadelphia Ball Club v. Lajoie, 202 Pa. 210, 51 Atl. 973, 58 L. R. A. 227, 90 Am. St. Rep. 627; "special, unique and extraordinary"; Bronk v. Riley, 50 Hun (N. Y.) 489, 3 N. Y. Supp. 446; Strobridge Lithographing Co. v. Crane, 58 Hun (N. Y.) 611, 12 N. Y. Supp. 898; Wm. Rogers Mfg. Co. v. Rogers, 58 Conn. 356, 20 Atl. 467, 7 L. R. A. 779, 18 Am. St. Rep. 278; Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1343; Jaccard Jewelry Co. v. O'Brien, 70 Mo. App. 432; Burney v. Ryle, 91 Ga. 701, 17 S. E. 986; an employé in a factory of cutlery is held not to be sufficiently irreplaceable; nor an insurance agent; Burney v. Ryle, 91 Ga. 701, 17 S. E. 986; nor an advertising solicitor; Johnston Co. v. Hunt, 66 Hun (N. Y.) 504, 21 N. Y. Supp. 314; nor a corset demonstrator; Gossard Co. v. Crosby, 132 Ia. 155, 109 N. W. 483, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1115. See Cort v. Lassard, 18 Or. 221, 22 Pac. 1054, 6 L. R. A. 653, 17 Am. St. Rep. 726; Dockstader v. Reed, 121 App. Div. 846, 106 N. Y. Supp. 795.

Equity has enjoined an acrobatic performer of great skill; Keith v. Kellermann, 169 Fed. 196; Russian dancers; Comstock v. Lopokowa, 190 Fed. 599; a seller of patterns; Butterick Pub. Co. v. Rose, 141 Wis. 533, 124 N. W. 647; contra, Paxson v. Butterick Pub. Co., 136 Ga. 774, 71 S. E. 1105; but not a music teacher; Columbia College of Music & S. of D. Art v. Tunberg, 64 Wash. 19, 116 Pac. 280; and jurisdiction is not conferred by acknowledgment in the contract that the services are unique; Hammerstein v. Mann, 137 App. Div. 580, 122 N. Y. Supp. 276. It seems otherwise in England. In L. R. 16 Eq. 189, where an actor was restrained from appearing elsewhere during the time of his engagement, Malins, V. C., saying that he must treat this defendant "as if he were the greatest actor in the world." The English courts have never considered the quality of the services; 1 De G., M. & G. 604; L. R. 16 Eq. 189; 9 T. L. R. 265, where a ballet teacher restrained two of her pupils; [1891] 2 Ch. 416.

Where the subject matter gives jurisdiction, a negative covenant will usually not be implied from an affirmative one; [1891] 2 Ch. 428; though there may be circumstances under which equity, following the substance rather than the form, will imply a negative agreement from the context. In Finley v. Wagner, 1 De G., M. & G. 604, the leading case, Lord St. Leonards said: "I may at once declare that, if I had only to deal with the affirmative covenant, . . . I should not have granted any injunction." Nevertheless, in L. R. 16 Eq. 189, a broad negative covenant was implied, Malins, V. C., relying on other remarks of Lord St. Leonards. The decisions practically laid down the rule that a negative covenant could be implied where the employé covenanted to give up his whole time or to work exclusively for him or to render definite services on definite promises; see 3 Jur. N. S. 432; 33 Beav. 22; L. R. 16 Eq. 440; but these principles were limited somewhat in [1891] 2 Ch. 428, C. A. The present rule is that a definite negative agreement must be implied from the substance of the contract; L. R. 22 Ch. Div. 835; 75 L. T. N. S. 528.

In this country, the question is not settled. In some older cases a negative stipulation was not implied; Burton v. Marshall, 4 Gill (Md.) 487, 45 Am. Dec. 171; Butler v. Galletti, 21 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 463; Mapleson v. Del Puente, 13 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 144; recent decisions have followed the rule now abolished in England; Cort v. Lassard, 18 Or. 221, 22 Pac. 1054, 6 L. R. A. 653, 17 Am. St. Rep. 726; Hoyt v. Fuller, 19 N. Y. Supp. 962; Lawrence v. Dixey, 119 App. Div. 295, 104 N. Y. Supp. 516.

That equity will lend its aid to enforce such negative stipulations, under the conditions stated supra, is settled in both countries; 9 T. L. R. 162; L. R. 43 Ch. Div. 165; [1891] 2 Ch. 416; 1 De G. M. & G. 604; 18 Ves. Jr. 437; [1894] 1 Q. B. 125; (contra, 6 Sim. 333, now overruled). An injunction was denied in a few early cases; Hamblin v. Dinneford, 2 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 529; Sanquirico v. Benedetti, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 315; Burton v. Marshall, 4 Gill (Md.) 487, 45 Am. Dec. 171; but modern decisions here give relief whenever the remedy at law would be inadequate; Philadelphia Ball Club v. Lajoie, 202 Pa. 210, 51 Atl. 973, 58 L. R. A. 227, 90 Am. St. Rep. 627; Jaccard Jewelry Co. v. O'Brien, 70 Mo. App. 432; Cort v. Lassard, 18 Or. 221, 22 Pac. 1054, 6 L. R. A. 653, 17 Am. St. Rep. 726; Taylor Iron & Steel Co. v. Nichols, 73 N. J. Eq. 684, 69 Atl. 186, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 933, 133 Am. St. Rep. 753; Keith v. Kellermann, 169 Fed. 196; Hammond v. Georgian Co., 133 Ga. 1, 65 S. E. 124; McCall Co. v. Wright, 133 App. Div. 62, 117 N. Y. Supp. 775; Butterick Pub. Co. v. Rose, 141 Wis. 533, 124 N. W. 647; Comstock v. Lopokowa, 190 Fed. 599; *Welty v. An argument, not often pressed in the courts, that would seem to forbid a specific enforcement of even the negative stipulation, is based upon the principle of equity that contracts will not be specifically enforced unless they are mutual; equity must be able to grant the defendant its peculiar relief as well as the plaintiff. If A has covenanted to convey land in return for B's personal services, A will not be ordered to convey, although the time for his performance has come, if B has not performed the services; Wakcham v. Barker, 82 Cal. 46, 22 Pac. 1131; Ames, Cas. in Equity 87; so if an opera singer is enjoined from singing for any one else, the manager should be compelled by the decree to allow the opera singer to sing for him, and when the complainant "fails to do any of the acts which he has engaged to do, and which were the consideration for the negative covenant, the injunction would be dissolved"; Wood, V. C., in 3 K. & J. 404. This, however, equity cannot do, because it cannot compel the manager to perform his part as he has agreed, and the result is that equity enforces its command upon a party to a contract whom in his turn, it cannot aid.

The defendant contracted to purchase from the plaintiff all the electrical energy that he might require in his hotel for five years; he was enjoined from purchasing electricity from any one else during the period; [1901] 2 Ch. 799.

See H. W. Gossard Co. v. Crosby, 132 Ia. 155, 109 N. W. 483, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1115, where the cases are collected.

SPECIFICATIO. In Civil Law. The process by which, from material either of one kind or different kinds, either belonging to the person using them or to another, a new form or thing is created; as, if from gold or silver a cup be made, or from grapes wine. Calvinus, Lex. Whether the property in the new article was in the owner of the materials or in him who effected the change was a matter of contest between the two great sects of Roman lawyers. Stair, Inst. p. 204, § 41; Mackeldey, Civ. Law § 241.

SPECIFICATION. A particular and detailed account of a thing. When used in the patent law without the word claim, it means the description and claims. Wilson v. Coon, 6 Fed. 611. See PATENT.

In Military Law. The clear and particular description of the charges preferred against a person accused of a military offence. Tytler, Courts-Mar. 109.

SPEECH. A formal discourse in public. The liberty of speech is guaranteed to members of the legislature, in debate, and to counsel in court.

The reduction of a speech to writing and its publication is a libel if the matter contained in it is libelous; and the repetition of it upon occasions not warranted by law, when the matter is slanderous, will be slander; and the character of the speaker will be no protection to him from an action; 1 Maule & S. 273; 1 Esp. 226. See DEBATE; LIBERTY OF SPEECH; SLANDER; LIBEL.

SPEED. The test of safe speed is whether it is such as allows the vessel to comply with the duty imposed on her and to avoid collision with other vessels in the situations in which she may reasonably expect to find them; The Luckenbach, 50 Fed. 129, 1 C. C. A. 489, 8 U. S. App. 9.

In a fog a vessel is bound to observe unusual caution and to maintain only such rate of speed as will enable her to come to a standstill by reversing her engines at full speed, before she shall collide with a vessel which she may see; The Laurence, 54 Fed. 542, 4 C. C. A. 501, 8 U. S. App. 312.

A vessel running fifteen knots an hour, when she strikes a fog bank, has not complied with the statutory requirements to go at moderate speed; The Saale, 63 Fed. 478, 11 C. C. A. 302, 26 U. S. App. 164.

Charter authority to enact and enforce such local, police, sanitary and other regulations as do not conflict with general laws, empowers a municipality to require railroads running through its limits to adopt such precautions as to speed of trains as may be needed for the safety of the public; Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Com., 126 Ky. 712, 104 S. W. 771, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 561. This extends to interstate trains in the absence of congressional action; Erb v. Morasch, 177 U. S. 584, 20 Sup. Ct. 819, 44 L. Ed. 897.

An ordinance limiting the speed of trains on an interstate railway which carries United States mail, to 10 miles an hour within a city, is not void as imposing an unreasonable restriction upon interstate commerce and the speedy transportation of the mail; Peterston v. State, 79 Neb. 132, 112 N. W. 306, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 292, 126 Am. St. Rep. 651.

Running a railroad train 50 miles an hour over an ordinary country road crossing, for which the statutory signals have been given, is not negligence per se; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Barnes, 166 Ind. 7, 76 N. E. 629, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 778; mere speed is not enough to charge the company with negligence; Lehigh Val. R. Co. v. Dupont, 128 Fed. 840, 64 C. C. A. 478.

Operating a street car at a speed in excess of that prescribed by ordinance is of itself no evidence of negligence in an action for injuries caused by collision between a car and a pedestrian; Ford's Adm'r v. Ry., 124 Ky. 488, 99 S. W. 355, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1093, 124 Am. St. Rep. 412. Consideration must be given to the character of the train, the devices which were employed to guard against accident, the condition of the roadbed, the sharpness of the curves and any other circumstances which would show whether the speed tended to increase such natural dangers; Pennsylvania Co. v. Newmeyer, 129 Ind. 401, 28 N. E. 860. But it is held that a railroad company is guilty of a nuisance in running its trains across a much used street in a town, wilfully, habitually and for an unreasonable length of time, at such an unreasonable and unsafe rate of speed as to endanger the lives and safety of persons using the crossing without customary and usual warning signals; Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Com., 126 Ky. 712, 104 S. W. 771, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 561. If in view of all the attending circumstances the servants in charge of the train knew, or by the exercise of a very high degree of care and foresight ought to have known, that the rate of speed at which the train was running tended to increase the dangers which are naturally incident to railway travel, the railroad company would be guilty of negligence; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Leiner, 202 Ill. 624, 67 N. E. 398, 95 Am. St. Rep. 266; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Jones, 108 Ind. 551, 9 N. E. 476; Mitchell v. R. Co., 87 Cal. 62, 25 Pac. 245, 11 L. R. A. 130; Lynn v. Southern Pac. Co., 103 Cal. 7, 36 Pac. 1018, 24 L. R. A. 710; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Stewart, 68 Ark. 606, 61 S. W. 169, 42 Am. St. Rep. 311; 2 Hutchinson, Carriers, § 926.

Statements in regard to speed are mere expressions of opinion; Borneman v. R. Co., 19 S. D. 459, 104 N. W. 208; such evidence should be received with great caution; Hoppe v. R. Co., 61 Wis. 357, 21 N. W. 227; especially after a lapse of time, or when not based upon anything which especially attracted the witness' notice; The W. E. Gladwish, 17 Blatchf. 77, Fed. Cas. No. 17,355. The testimony of those who are not experts in such matters may, however, be received; Detroit & M. R. Co. v. Van Steinburg, 17 Mich. 99; Northrup v. R. Co., 37 Hun (N. Y.) 295.

SPEEDY TRIAL. The right to a speedy trial in all criminal prosecutions is given under the United States constitution.

The speedy trial to which a person charged with crime is entitled under the constitution is a trial at such a time, after the finding of the indictment, regard being had to the terms of court, as shall afford the prosecution a reasonable opportunity, by the fair and honest exercise of reasonable diligence, to prepare for trial, and if the trial is delayed or postponed beyond such period, when there is a term of court at which the trial might be had, by reason of the neglect or laches of the prosecution in preparing for trial, such delay is a denial to the defendant of his right to a speedy trial, and in such case a party confined, upon application by habeas corpus, is entitled to a discharge from custody; U. S. v. Fox, 3 Mont. 512.

SPELLING. The art of putting the proper letters in words in their proper order.

It is a rule that bad spelling will not vitiate a contract when it appears with certainty what is meant: for example, where a man agreed to pay threty pounds he was held bound to pay thirty pounds; and seutene was holden to be seventeen; Cro. Jac. 607; 10 Co. 133 a; 2 Rolle, Abr. 147. Even in an indictment undertood has been holden as understood; 1 Chitty, Cr. Law.

A misspelling of a name in a declaration will not be sufficient to defeat the plaintiff, on the ground of variance between the writing produced and the declaration, if such name be idem sonans: as, Kay for Key; 16 East 110; 2 Stark. 29; Segrave for Seagrave; 2 Stra. 889. See IDEM SONANS; ELECTION.

SPENDTHRIFT. A person who, by excessive drinking, gaming, idleness, or debauchery of any kind, shall so spend, waste, or lessen his estate as to expose himself or his family to want or suffering, or expose the town to charge or expense for the support of himself or family. Vt. Rev. Stat. c. 65, § 9.

A person having the entire right to dispose of property may settle it or give it by will in trust for another, with the provision that the income shall not be alienated by the beneficiary by anticipation, or be taken by his creditors in advance of its payment to him, although there is no cesser or limitation over of the estate in such an event; Broadway Nat. Bk. v. Adams, 133 Mass. 170, 43 Am. Rep. 504; Baker v. Brown, 146 Mass. 369, 15 N. E. 783; Hyde v. Woods, 94 U. S. 523, 24 L. Ed. 264; Pope's Ex'rs v. Elliott, 8 B. Mon. (Ky.) 56; Fisher v. Taylor, 2 Rawle (Pa.) 33; Merriman v. Munson, 134 Pa. 114, 19 Atl. 479, 21 Atl. 171; White's Ex'rs v. White, 30 Vt. 338; Garland v. Garland, 87 Va. 758, 13 S. E. 478, 13 L. R. A. 212, 24 Am. St. Rep. 682; Spindle v. Shreve, 4 Fed. 136; Roberts v. Stevens, 84 Me. 325, 24 Atl. 873, 17 L. R. A. 266; Jourjolmon v. Massengill, 86 Tenn. 81, 5 S. W. 719; Wood v. McClelland (Tex.) 53 S. W. 381; Merchants' Nat. Bk. v. Crist, 140 Iowa 308, 118 N. W. 394, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 526, 132 Am. St. Rep. 267; Jackson Square Loan & Savings Ass'n v. Bartlett, 95 Md. 661, 53 Atl. 426, 93 Am. St. Rep. 416; Seymour v. McAvoy, 121 Cal. 438, 53 Pac. 946, 41 L. R. A. 544; Bennett v. Bennett, 66 Ill. App. 28; Kessner v. Phillips, 189 Mo. 515, 88 S. W. 66, 107 Am. St. Rep. 368, 3 Ann. Cas. 1005. Contra, Hutchinson v. Maxwell, 100 Va. 169, 40 S. E. 655, 57 L. R. A. 384, 93 Am. St. Rep. 944; Nelson v. Nelson, 2 Ky. Law Rep. 64.

The doctrine rests upon the principle of cujus est dare, ejus est disponere; it has regard solely to the rights of the donor; consideration for the beneficiary does not in the remotest way enter into it; Morgan's Estate, 223 Pa. 228, 72 Atl. 498, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 236, 132 Am. St. Rep. 732.

Where property is devised in trust for a testator's son and his family, the profits to be applied to the extent the trustee sees fit, judgment creditors of the son cannot reach the property or its income; Brooks v. Reynolds, 59 Fed. 923, 8 C. C. A. 370.

An absolute discretion vested in trustees to make payments out of trust property confers no interest on the beneficiary that can be asserted by him or his assignee in bankruptcy; Nichols v. Eaton, 91 U. S. 716, 23 L.

Ed. 254, where the court sustained the doctrine of trusts of this class in a forcible argument.

The income of a spendthrift trust is not subject to the claim of the spendthrift's creditors, even though there is no express provision therefor; Seymour v. McAvoy, 121 Cal. 438, 53 Pac. 946, 41 L. R. A. 544; where the beneficiary's mother was his creditor, her executor could not apply the income to extinguish the debt; In re Temple, 36 Misc. Rep. 620, 74 N. Y. Supp. 479; the income of a spendthrift trust cannot be attached for the maintenance of the beneficiary's wife and child whom he has deserted; Board of Charities v. Lockard, 198 Pa. 572, 48 Atl. 496, 82 Am. St. Rep. 817; but equity will enforce a physician's claim for services rendered to a spendthrift who habitually indulged in alcoholic excesses; Sherman v. Skuse, 45 App. Div. 335, 60 N. Y. Supp. 1030; id., 166 N. Y. 345, 59 N. E. 990.

The instrument need not call the cestui que trust a spendthrift, nor is it necessary that it shall contain all the specifications and qualifications incident to such a trust. If it appear that the donor or testator intended a spendthrift trust, that is enough. The court will not inquire whether he is a spendthrift; Wagner v. Wagner, 244 Ill. 101, 91 N. E. 66, 18 Ann. Cas. 490; it is not necessary to provide expressly that the income shall not be subject to execution in order to create a spendthrift trust; First Nat. Bank of Nashville v. Trust Co. (Tenn.) 62 S. W. 392; nor need there be a devise over after the beneficiary's death; Minnich's Estate, 206 Pa. 405, 55 Atl. 1067.

Where the testator permits trustees to pay income in their discretion, and provides for accumulation, it is a valid spendthrift trust; Mason v. Trust Co., 78 Conn. 81, 61 Atl. 57, 3 Ann. Cas. 586; Sterling v. Ives, 78 Conn. 498, 62 Atl. 948; and so where the executors are to hold the trust and pay only such part of it as they shall deem necessary for the beneficiary's support and on his death to pay the remainder to his heirs; Russell v. Hilton, 80 App. Div. 178, 80 N. Y. Supp. 563, affirmed in 175 N. Y. 525, 67 N. E. 1089.

A party can not by conveying his property in trust, reserving to himself the income thereof during his life, with remainder over, place his beneficial interest beyond the reach of creditors; Schenck v. Barnes, 156 N. Y. 316, 50 N. E. 967, 41 L. R. A. 395; Wenzel v. Powder, 100 Md. 36, 59 Atl. 194, 108 Am. St. Rep. 380; Pacific Nat. Bank v. Windram, 133 Mass. 175.

One cannot create a spendthrift trust of his own property for his own benefit; Appeal of Mackason, 42 Pa. 330, 82 Am. Dec. 517. Nor can there be a valid spendthrift trust where the trustee is also the cestui que trust, with the absolute ownership of the subject of the trust; Appeal of Mackason, 42 Pa. 330, 82 Am. Dec. 517; Wanner v. Snyder, 177 Pa. 208, 35 Atl. 604; Pacific Nat. Bank v. Windram, 133 Mass. 175.

A trust to place one's property beyond the reach of creditors, while retaining full enjoyment of the income, through the instrumentality of a trustee, cannot be created by a married woman or a woman in contemplation of marriage; Brown v. McGill, 87 Md. 161, 39 Atl. 613, 39 L. R. A. 806, 67 Am. St. Rep. 334. A married woman may, however, make a valid spendthrift trust in favor of her husband; Wanner v. Snyder, 177 Pa. 208, 35 Atl. 604.

Upon a petition in equity by a wife living separate from her husband, who was the beneficiary under a spendthrift trust, a decree was made, by the consent of the husband and in pursuance of an agreement between them, directing the trustee to pay to the wife the portions of the income according to the terms of the agreement. Afterwards a bill of review was filed by the husband seeking to annul the decree; the appellate court reversed the decree of the lower court annulling the original decree and reinstated the latter, but upon the ground that the bill of review was not filed for more than two years; Holloway v. Deposit & Trust Co., 122 Md. 620, 90 Atl. 95.

In [1895] A. C. 186, it was regarded as settled law that one taking a vested legacy is entitled to receive it as soon as he can make a valid discharge although there was a declaration to accumulate. This appears to be the opposite from a spendthrift trust. In Shelton v. King, 229 U. S. 90, 33 Sup. Ct. 686, 57 L. Ed. 1086, the court refused to follow this rule, preferring the contrary rule adopted in Clafin v. Clafin, 149 Mass. 19, 20 N. E. 454, 3 L. R. A. 370, 14 Am. St. Rep. 393, which sustained a gift to a son at 21 and a like sum at 25 and the residue at 30 years of age. The trust was sustained.

If the cestui que trust is given an absolute right to the fund or its avails (as a right to occupy land and take its income) or if land is conveyed to him on condition that it shall not be subject to his debts, it is not a spendthrift trust; Kessner v. Phillips, 189 Mo. 515, 88 S. W. 66, 107 Am. St. Rep. 363, 3 Ann. Cas. 1005.

The rule has prevailed in the English courts that when the income of a trust estate is given to any person (other than a married woman) for life, the equitable estate for life is alienable by, and liable in equity to the debts of, the cestui que trust, and that this quality is so inseparable from the estate that no provision, however express, which does not operate as a cesser or limitation over of the estate itself, can protect it from his debts or control: 18 Ves. 429; 6 Sim. 524; 1 Russ. & Myl. 395; 9 Hare 475.

Spendthrift trusts, there called alimer tary funds, are upheld in Scotland; Gray, Restr. on Alienation 158. The English rule has been adopted in several courts of this country; Patterson & Co. v. Lawrence, 83 Ga. 703, 10 S. E. 355, 7 L. R. A. 143; Pace v. Pace, 73 N. C. 119; Heath v. Bishop, 4 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 46, 55 Am. Dec. 654; Dick v. Pitchford, 21 N. C. 480.

In Arkansas; Lindsay v. Harrison, 8 Ark. 302; Indiana; Martin v. Davis, 82 Ind. 38; and New Hampshire; Banfield v. Wiggin, 58 N. H. 155; the question has been raised, but not decided. Apart from statute, the rule in New Jersey is the same as the English rule; See Wells v. Ely, 11 N. J. Eq. 172; Bolles v. Trust Co., 27 N. J. Eq. 308; Halstead v. Westervelt, 41 N. J. Eq. 100, 3 Atl. 270. In Wisconsin, the question is in doubt. See Bridge v. Ward, 35 Wis. 687; Lamberton v. Pereles, 87 Wis. 449, 58 N. W. 776, 23 L. R. A. 824. In Connecticut, the status of such trusts is undecided; Leavitt v. Beirne, 21 Conn. 1; Easterly v. Keney, 36 Conn. 18.

By statute, in Kentucky, one cannot vest property or funds in trustees for the use of another without subjecting it to the debts of the cestui que trust; Bland's Adm'r v. Bland, 90 Ky. 400, 14 S. W. 423, 9 L. R. A. 599, 29 Am. St. Rep. 390; Anderson v. Briscoe, 12 Bush (Ky.) 344. In New York a statute excludes from proceedings in equity to reach beneficial interests, all cases of trusts for maintenance and support where the trust has proceeded from some person other than the debtor, but makes available to the creditor any surplus beyond what may be necessary for the maintenance and support of the beneficiary; Williams v. Thorn, 70 N. Y. 270.

The subject has been regulated by statute in New York; as interpreted by the courts, the beneficiary of the trust is entitled to receive sufficient income to support him in the manner in which he had been brought up, and the residue may be subjected to his debts, the burden being upon the creditors to prove that the trust fund is larger than afterwards proved to be necessary. See an article in 9 Bench & Bar (N. S.) 59, citing Demuth v. Kemp, 79 Misc. Rep. 516, 140 N. Y. Supp. 152; id., 159 App. Div. 422, 144 N. Y. Supp. 690. Prof. Gray (Restr. on Alienation) speaks of this "remedy" by statute as being, "if not worse, more disgusting than the disease."

A spendthrift trust may be created for a term of years with the remainder to the cestui que trust in fee; Ward's Estate, 13 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 282.

See Gray, Restr. on Alienation, where the cases are fully considered and a protest made against the validity of such trusts.

SPENT BONDS. See BONDS.

SPENT STATUTES. See OBSOLETE; REPEAL.

SPERATE (Lat. spero, to hope). That of which there is hope.

In the accounts of an executor and the inventory of the personal assets, he should distinguish between those which are sperate and those which are desperate: he will be prima facie responsible for the former and discharged for the latter; 1 Chitty, Pr. 520; 2 Will. Exec. 644; Toller, Exec. 248. See DESPERATE.

SPES RECUPERANDI (Lat. the hope of recovery). A term applied to cases of capture of an enemy's property as a booty or prize, while it remains in a situation in which it is liable to be recaptured. As between the belligerent parties, the title to the property taken as a prize passes the moment there is no longer any hope of recovery; 2 Burr. 683. See INFRA PRÆSIDIA; POSTLIMINY; BOOTY; PRIZE.

SPHERE OF INFLUENCE. A portion of unappropriated territory over which a state possessing territory contiguous to it claims to exercise such exclusive control, though not amounting to ownership, as to bar the entry of any other power for purposes of colonization. Between 1880 and 1900 a number of treaties were entered into between the European powers defining their respective spheres of influence in Africa.

Also, a portion of the territory of a weak state over which a stronger state assumes to exercise a certain measure of control for the sake of economic or other advantages. An example of an international agreement providing for such spheres of influence is to be found in the treaty between Great Britain and Russia in 1907 by which Persia was partitioned into three zones, one neutral and the other two British and Russian spheres of influence respectively. A. J. I. L. (1912) 155.

SPIGURNEL. The sealer of the royal writs.

SPINNING HOUSE. A house of correction to which the authorities of Oxford and Cambridge may send persons (mostly women of frivolous character) not members of the University who are found consorting with the students, to the detriment of their morals. 4 Steph. Com. 264.

SPINSTER. An addition given, in legal writings, to a woman who never was married. Lovelace, Wills 269. So called because she was supposed to be occupied in spinning.

SPIRITUAL CORPORATIONS. See ECCLESIASTICAL CORPORATIONS.

SPIRITUAL COURTS. Ecclesiastical courts (q. v.).

SPIRITUAL LORDS. The two archbishops and twenty-four of the bishops of the Church of England, who sit as peers in the British House of Lords. They are not entitled, as temporal peers are, to be tried by the House of Lords. See HOUSE OF LORDS.

SPIRITUALISM. In law the significance of Spiritualism is chiefly involved with the conveyance of land and the disposition of property by will by Spiritualists. It is generally held that belief in Spiritualism is not necessarily such evidence of insanity as to make one incompetent to make a conveyance of real estate; Lewis v. Arbuckle, 85 Ia. 335, 52 N. W. 237, 16 L. R. A. 677; and in itself is not insanity; In re Spencer, 96 Cal. 448, 31 Pac. 453; Owen v. Crumbaugh, 228 Ill. 380, 81 N. E. 1044, 119 Am. St. Rep. 442, 10 Ann. Cas. 606; O'Dell v. Goff, 149 Mich. 152, 112 N. W. 736, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 989, 119 Am. St. Rep. 662; In re Keeler's Will, 12 N. Y. St. Rep. 157; testamentary capacity is not destroyed by a mere belief in Spiritualism; Steinkuehler v. Wempner, 169 Ind. 154, 81 N. E. 482, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 673; In re Smith's Will, 52 Wis. 548, 8 N. W. 616, 9 N. W. 665, 38 Am. Rep. 756; Otto v. Doty, 61 Ia. 23, 15 N. W. 578; or in witchcraft; Kelly v. Miller, 39 Miss. 19; Addington v. Wilson, 5 Ind. 137, 61 Am. Dec. 81; In re Forman's Will, 54 Barb. (N. Y.) 297; Van Guysling v. Van Kuren, 35 N. Y. 70; and belief in transmigration of human souls, strong enough to induce a bequest to a society for the prevention of cruelty to animals, will not render a will invalid; Bonard's Will, 16 Abb. Prac. (N. S. N. Y.) 128.

The test seems to be whether the testator merely believed in Spiritualism and made his will accordingly, or whether he was so dominated by the will of others or by alleged statements coming from deceased persons, that the testamentary writing was in fact not his, but the will of some one else; Robinson v. Adams, 62 Me. 369, 16 Am. Rep. 473. The will may be valid although he believed in the statements of mediums; Chafin Will Case, 32 Wis. 560; Middleditch v. Williams, 45 N. J. Eq. 726, 17 Atl. 826, 4 L. R. A. 738; Brown v. Ward, 53 Md. 876, 36 Am. Rep. 422; but where the medium used his power to procure a conveyance, it was set aside; L. R. 6 Eq. 655; and so in the case of a will; Thompson v. Hawks, 14 Fed. 902; Greenwood & Smith v. Cline, 7 Or. 17; so where the testator follows blindly the supposed directions of spirits; O'Dell v. Goff, 149 Mich. 152, 112 N. W. 736, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 989, 119 Am. St. Rep. 662.

It is for the jury to decide whether or not there was undue influence; Steinkuehler v. Wempner, 169 Ind. 154, 81 N. E. 482, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 673. Witnesses cannot testify that testator was a monomaniac merely because he believed in Spiritualism; O'Dell v. Goff, 149 Mich. 152, 112 N. W. 736, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 989, 119 Am. St. Rep. 662.

Proof that a defendant professed to be a medium, and charged a fee for a séance held with the assistance of others, is sufficient to convict of a conspiracy with intent to defraud; People v. Gilman, 121 Mich. 187, 80 N. W. 4, 46 L. R. A. 218, 80 Am. St. Rep. 490. See Lewis v. Arbuckle, 85 Iowa, 335, 52 N. W. 237, 16 L. R. A. 677; Appeal of Kimberly, SPIRITUOUS LIQUORS. See LIQUOR LAWS.

SPLITTING A CAUSE OF ACTION. The bringing an action for only a part of the cause of action.

The whole tendency of the cases is to require a plaintiff to try his whole cause of action at one time. He cannot even split up his claim; 1 Salk. 11; Trask v. R. Co., 2 Allen (Mass.) 331; and, a fortiori, he cannot divide the grounds of recovery; N. P. R. Co. v. Slaght, 205 U. S. 134, 27 Sup. Ct. 446, 51 L. Ed. 742.

Different suits can be brought on different claims of a patent for infringement against the same defendant, where the two sets of claims covered different inventions, though relating to the same machine; Bates Mach. Co. v. Wm. A. Force & Co., 139 Fed. 746.

A mortgage on several tracts must be foreclosed on all the tracts in one suit; De Weese v. Smith, 97 Fed. 314.

See CAUSE OF ACTION; RES JUDICATA.

SPOILIATION. In English Ecclesiastical Law. The name of a writ sued out in the spiritual court to recover for the fruits of the church or for the church itself. Fitzh. N. B. 85.

A waste of church property by an ecclesiastical person. 3 Bla. Com. 90.

An injury done by one incumbent to another, in taking the fruits of his benefice under a pretended title, and without right. 3 Steph. Com. 345.

In Torts. Destruction of a thing by the act of a stranger: as, the erasure or alteration of a writing by the act of a stranger is called spoliation. This has not the effect to destroy its character or legal effect. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 566. See IN ODIUM SPOLIATORIS.

In Admiralty Law. By spoliation is also understood the total destruction of a thing: as, the spoliation of papers by the captured party is generally regarded as a proof of guilt; but in America it is open to explanation, except in certain cases where there is a vehement presumption of bad faith; The Pizarro, 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 227, 241, 4 L. Ed. 226; 1 Dods. Admr. 480, 486; Bened. Adm. 310. See ALTERATION; FRENCH SPOILIATION CLAIMS.

SPONSALIA STIPULATIO SPONSALITIA (Lat.). A promise lawfully made between persons capable of marrying each other, that at some future time they will marry. See ESPousALS; Ersk. Inst. 1. 6. 3.

SPONSIO JUDICIALIS (Lat.). A judicial wager. This corresponded in the Roman law to our feigned issue.

SPONSIONS. In International Law. Agreements or engagements made by certain public officers, as generals or admirals, in time of war, either without authority or by exceeding the limits of authority under which they purport to be made.

Before these conventions can have any binding authority on the state, they must be confirmed by express or tacit ratification. The former is given in positive terms and in the usual forms; the latter is justly implied from the fact of acting under the agreement as if bound by it, and from any other circumstance from which an assent may be fairly presumed; Wheat. Int. Law, 3d Eng. ed. § 255; Grotius, de Jur. Bel. ac Pac. l. 2, c. 15, § 16; id. l. 3, c. 22, § 1; Vattel, Law of Nat. b. 2, c. 14, § 209; Wolff, Inst. § 156.

SPONSOR. In Civil Law. He who intervenes for another voluntarily and without being requested. The engagement which he enters into is only accessory to the principal. See Dig. 17. 1. 18; Nov. 4. 1; Code de Comm. art. 158, 159; Code Nap. 1236; Wolff, Inst. § 1556.

SPRING. A fountain. A natural source of water, of a definite and well-marked extent. 6 Ch. Div. 264 (C. A.). A natural chasm in which water has collected, and from which it either is lost by percolation, or rises in a defined channel. 41 L. T. Rep. (N. S.) 457. The water issuing by natural forces out of the earth at a particular place. It is not a mere place or hole in the ground, nor is it all the water that can be gathered or caused to flow at a particular place. A well is not necessarily a spring, nor is water which by the expenditure of labor can be gathered into a reservoir. Furner v. Seabury, 135 N. Y. 50, 31 N. E. 1004.

The owner of land on which there is a natural spring has a right to use it for domestic and culinary purposes and for watering his cattle, and he may make an aqueduct to another part of his land and use all the water required to keep the aqueduct in order or to keep the water pure; Wadsworth v. Tillotson, 15 Conn. 366, 39 Am. Dec. 391. He may also use it for irrigation, provided the volume be not materially decreased; Ang. Waterc. 34. See Twiss v. Baldwin, 9 Conn. 291; Hoy v. Sterrett, 2 Watts (Pa.) 327, 27 Am. Dec. 313; Merritt v. Parker, 1 N. J. L. 460; Blanchard v. Baker, 8 Greenl. (Me.) 253, 23 Am. Rep. 504. But it is held that a statutory provision that a person on whose land a spring rises shall have a prior right to its flow does not apply to a spring which is the fountain head of living water courses; Miller v. Wheeler, 54 Wash. 429, 103 Pac. 641, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1065.

The owner of a spring cannot lawfully turn the current or give it a new direction. He is bound to let it enter the inferior estate on the same level it has been accustomed ed to, and at the same place, for every man is entitled to a stream of water flowing through his land without diminution or alteration; 6 East 206; Ingraham v. Hutchinson, 2 Conn. 584. See M'Calmont v. Whitaker, 3 Rawle (Pa.) 84, 23 Am. Dec. 102; Arnold v. Foot, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 330; Norton v. Volentine, 14 Vt. 239, 39 Am. Dec. 220.

Where one conveyed a spring or well to be enjoyed without interruption, and afterwards conveyed contiguous property to a railway company whose works drained the water from the land before it reached the spring, on an action for breach of agreement, held, that the grantor had only conveyed the flow of the water after it had reached the spring, and therefore there was no breach; 41 L. T. (N. S.) 455 (C. A.). See 15 L. J. (N. S.) Ex. 315. Where the value of land was enhanced by a spring, it was held ratable for taxation at such improved value; 1 M. & S. 503.

The owner of the superior inheritance, or of the land on which there is a spring, has no right to deprive the owner of the estate below him; Anthony v. Lapham, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 175; Johnson v. Lewis, 13 Conn. 303, 33 Am. Dec. 405; Evans v. Merriweather, 3 Scam. (Ill.) 492, 38 Am. Dec. 106; nor can he detain the water unreasonably; Merritt v. Brinkerhoff, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 306, 8 Am. Dec. 404; 2 B. & C. 910. See IRRIGATION; SUBTERRANEAN WATER; SURFACE WATER; WATER-COURSE.

SPRING-BRANCH. A branch of a stream flowing from a spring. Wootton v. Redds' Ex'r, 12 Gratt. (Va.) 196.

SPRING GUN. Setting a spring gun with intent to destroy human life or inflict bodily harm is a criminal offence in England (1861), but the act does not apply to a dwellinghouse between sunset and sunrise. 4 Steph. Com. 79. See HOMICIDE; NEGLIGENCE.

SPRINGING USE. A use limited to arise on a future event where no preceding use is limited, and which does not take effect in derogation of any other interest than that which results to the grantor or remains in him in the meantime. Gilbert, Uses, Sugden ed. 153, n.; 2 Crabb, R. P. 498.

A future use, either vested or contingent, limited to arise without any preceding limitation. Cornish, Uses 91.

It differs from a remainder in not requiring any other particular estate to sustain it than the use resulting to the one who creates it, intermediate between its creation and the subsequent taking effect of the springing use; Dy. 274; Pollexf. 65; McIntyre v. Williamson 1 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 34; 4 Drur. & W. 27; Proprietors of Shapleigh v. Pillsbury, 1 Greenl. (Me.) 271. It differs from an executory devise in that a devise is created by will, a use by deed; Fearne, Cont. Rem. 385, Butler's note; Wilson, Uses. It differs from a shifting use, though often confounded therewith. See, generally, 2 Washb. R. P. *281.

SPY. The chief rules of international law with regard to spies are embodied in Arts. 29-31 of the Convention Concerning the Laws and Customs of War on Land.

"A person can only be considered a spy when, acting clandestinely or on false pretences, he obtains, or endeavors to obtain, information in the zone of operations of a belligerent, with the intention of communicating it to the hostile party.

"Thus, soldiers not wearing a disguise, who have penetrated into the zone of operations of the hostile army, for the purpose of obtaining information, are not considered spies. Similarly, the following are not considered spies: Soldiers and civilians, carrying out their mission openly, entrusted with the delivery of dispatches intended either for their own army or for the enemy's army. To this class belong likewise persons sent in balloons for the purpose of carrying dispatches and, generally, of maintaining communications between the different parts of an army or a territory.

"A spy taken in the act shall not be punished without previous trial.

"A spy who, after rejoining the army to which he belongs, is subsequently captured by the enemy, is treated as a prisoner of war, and incurs no responsibility for his previous acts of espionage."

It is still an unsettled question whether balloonists sent out to gain information are to be regarded as spies; and with the advent of airships which will probably be largely used for reconnaissance purposes, the question of the status of those using them for such purposes will, before long, demand a settlement. Spaight, War Rights on Land, 202-215.

SQUATTER. One who settles on the lands of others without any legal authority; this term is applied particularly to persons who settle on the public land. Allard v. Lobau, 3 Mart. N. S. (La.) 293. One who takes possession of a tract of public land with a view to becoming an entryman under the homestead law, except as to the limited statutory time allowed him preceding actual entry at the land office, is a mere squatter having no rights in the land as against the government or others; U. S. v. Bagnell Timber Co., 178 Fed. 795, 102 C. C. A. 243.

See PRE-EMPTION RIGHT.

STAB. To make a wound with a pointed instrument. A stab differs from a cut or a wound. Russ. & R. 356; Russ. Cr. 597; Bac. Abr. Maihem (B).

STABILIA. A writ called by that name, founded on a custom of Normandy, that where a man in power claimed lands in the possession of an inferior, he petitioned the prince that it might be put into his hands till the right was decided, whereupon he had this writ. Whart. Law Lex.

STAGNUM (Lat.). A pool. "It is said to consist of land and water; and therefore by the name of stagnum the water and the land may be passed. Co. Litt. 5.

STAINS OF BLOOD. Blood is the vital fluid of the body, consisting of certain cellular elements suspended in serum or plasma. It carries nutriment to, and waste products from, the tissues, is freshened or aerated by its passage through the lungs, and possesses the peculiar quality of spontaneous clotting.

Blood stains are the red-brown color left by the contact of blood with any absorbent material, or the evaporated residue of blood left on non-absorbent surfaces and consisting of the cellular elements of the blood and the dried albuminous matters.

The blood cells can at times be recovered more or less intact, if the stained material is soaked or washed in a solution of ordinary salt in the strength of .85 grammes to 100 cubic centimetres of water (normal salt solution, the normal salt concentration of the human blood, in which blood cells retain their color and form indefinitely). Blood cells removed in this manner from a blood stain can be recognized under the microscope, and certain animal bloods can be distinguished by their form and measurements. The principle of hæmolysis can be employed to determine whether the blood cells are those of a human being or of certain animals. This is a remarkably specific test, depending upon the fact that the blood of one species of animal, introduced into the tissues or circulation of an animal of another species, will cause the blood cells of the latter animal to disintegrate or hæmolyze. In certain cases the blood cells of one species (say A) are not affected by the blood serum of another (say B); following the principles of immunity, as seen in a vaccination, it is found that if the blood cells of A are repeatedly injected into the body of B, there develops in the B animal's blood a body (the immune body) which will now quickly disintegrate the blood cells of the animal A. The specific reaction has been developed. For the identification of human blood, rabbits are prepared by repeatedly injecting them with small amounts of human blood cells. In the rabbit blood-serum, there develops the specific immune body which, when brought in contact with any human blood cells, will dissolve or hæmolyze them. The blood cells of these animals remain undissolved.

If the blood stains will not yield formed blood elements, they are put into solution, water or in the above described salt solution, and several tests can be made: The spectroscopic; the test for crystals; the test for the presence of hæmoglobin by certain oxidizing chemicals. The first two, when positive, can be relied upon as showing that the dissolved stains contain blood coloring matter; but they will not distinguish human from animal blood.

The third test is unreliable, and though used in many laboratories, is found not infrequently to show the reactions with many other quite foreign substances. See McWeeney (Proc. Royal Acad. Med., Ireland, 1910); Muir's Studies on Immunity (Oxford, 1909).

STAKE RACE. See SWEEPSTAKES.

STAKEHOLDER. A third person chosen by two or more persons to keep in deposit property the right or possession of which is contested between them, and to be delivered to the one who shall establish his right to it. Thus, each of them is considered as depositing the whole thing. This distinguishes this contract from that which takes place when two or more tenants in common deposit a thing with a bailee. Domat, Lois Civ. liv. 1, t. 7, s. 4.

A person having in his hands money or other property claimed by several others is considered in equity as a stakeholder. 1 Vern. 144. A mere depositary for both parties of the money advanced by them respectively with a naked authority to deliver it over upon the proposed contingency. He is not regarded as a party to the illegal contract. Fisher v. Hildreth, 117 Mass. 562.

The duties of a stakeholder are to deliver the thing holden by him to the person entitled to it on demand. It is frequently questionable who is entitled to it. In case of an unlawful wager, although he may be justified in delivering the thing to the winner, by the express or implied consent of the loser; McCullum v. Gourlay, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 147; yet if before the event has happened he has been required by either party to give up the thing deposited with him by such party, he is bound so to deliver it; 3 Taunt. 377; 4 id. 492; or if, after the event has happened, the losing party give notice to the stakeholder not to pay the winner, a payment made to him afterwards will be made in his own wrong, and the party who deposited the money or thing may recover it from the stakeholder; McAllister v. Hoffman, 16 S. & R. (Pa.) 147, 16 Am. Dec. 556; 7 Term 536; 2 Marsh. 542. See Brush v. Keeler, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 250; Corley v. Berry, 1 Bail. (S. C.) 593; WAGER; HORSE RACE.

A deposit of stakes by one of the parties in a match may be recovered back on demand from the stakeholder, as upon a void contract on notice given at any time before payment to the winner; 1 Q. B. D. 189; 5 App. Ca. 342, overruling 5 C. B. 818; [1900] 2 Q. B. 497.

STALE DEMAND. A claim which has been for a long time undemanded: as, for example, where there has been a delay of twelve years unexplained. Willard v. Dorr, 3 Mas. 161, Fed. Cas. No. 17,680. See LACHES.

STALLAGE (Sax. stal). The liberty or right of pitching or erecting stalls in fairs or markets, or the money paid for the same. Blount; Whart. Dict.; 6 Q. B. 31. It must be founded upon a reasonable consideration between the public and the grantee, and the tolls must be reasonable; 1 Steph. Com. 450.

STALLARIUS (Lat.). In Saxon Law. The præfectus stabuli, now master of the horse (Sax. stalstabulum). Blount. Sometimes one who has a stall in a fair or market. Fl. lib. 4, c. 28, p. 13.

STAMP. An impression made by order of the government, on paper, which must be used in reducing certain contracts to writing, for the purpose of raising a revenue. See Stark. Ev.; 1 Phill. Ev. 444.

A paper bearing an impression or device authorized by law and adopted for attachment to some subject of duty or excise.

The term in American law is used often in distinction from stamped paper, which latter meaning, as well as that of the device or impression itself, is included in the broader signification of the word.

Stamps or stamped paper are prepared under the direction of officers of the government, and sold at a price equal to the duty or excise to be collected. The stamps are affixed and cancelled; and where stamped paper is used, one use obviously prevents a second use. The Internal Revenue acts of 1862 and subsequent years required stamps to be affixed to a great variety of subjects, under severe penalties in the way of fines, and also under penalty of invalidating written instruments and rendering them incapable of being produced in evidence. The statutes under which these stamps were required had been repealed from time to time, and that method of raising revenue was discontinued except in the case of tobacco and possibly some other articles. The necessity of raising additional revenue to meet the expenditures required for the Spanish-American war of 1898 led to the passage of what was known as the War Revenue Act of June 13, 1898, under which stamps were required on checks, drafts, notes, mortgages, and other instruments.

The stamp tax on a memorandum or contract of sale of a certificate of stock imposed by this act is not unconstitutional as a direct tax on property; Thomas v. U. S., 192 U. S. 363, 24 Sup. Ct. 305, 48 L. Ed. 481.

By Act March 2, 1901, the schedule of the act was amended by omitting all such instruments; it took effect at the end of the fiscal year, June 30, 1901. The entire schedule A was repealed April 12, 1902, saving the effect of the act as to stamping instruments while it was in force; Sackett v. McCaffrey, 131 Fed. 219, 65 C. C. A. 205.

An action lies by the United States to recover the amount of a stamp tax upon a deed of lands under this act; and the penalties provided in the act for non-compliance therewith are not exclusive of collection by suit. An action lies wherever there is a sum due, either certain or readily reduced to certainty; provisions for penalties do not necessarily exclude personal liability; they were provided to induce payment of the tax and not as a substitute for payment; U. S. v. Chamberlin, 219 U. S. 250, 31 Sup. Ct. 155, 55 L. Ed. 204.

Instruments not duly stamped are not void or inadmissible in evidence, in the absence of a fraudulent intent; McGovern v. Hoesback, 53 Pa. 176; Rheinstrom v. Cone, 26 Wis. 163, 7 Am. Rep. 51; Moore v. Moore, 47 N. Y. 467, 7 Am. Rep. 466; in the absence of affirmative proof, a fraudulent intent will not be presumed; cases supra. Where objection is made to the admission of a writing for lack of a revenue stamp, the burden is on the objector to show that the stamp was omitted with intent to evade the law; Ohio River Junction R. Co. v. Pennsylvania Co., 222 Pa. 573, 72 Atl. 271. Where a United States act required a revenue stamp to be attached to a written instrument, and none was attached, the instrument is admissible in evidence after the repeal of the act without a reservation of the right to demand the tax when omitted during the operation of the act or to enforce the penalties or forfeiture for such omission; id.

If a foreign instrument is, by the laws of the country where it is made, void for want of a stamp, it cannot be enforced in England. But if those laws merely require that it must be stamped before it can be received in evidence there, it is admissible in England without a stamp; 5 Exch. 279. The absence of an English revenue stamp from a power of attorney does not render the instrument inadmissible in evidence in an American court; Linton v. Ins. Co., 104 Fed. 584, 44 C. C. A. 54.

Under the previous revenue acts imposing stamp taxes the question arose as to the exact legal effect of the requirement that an instrument should be stamped, and whether if an unstamped instrument was wholly invalid the law made it necessary to have certain contracts in writing which would otherwise be valid by parol, as for instance, the contract of insurance. The suggestion that the passage of these laws requiring a stamp might make it necessary that such contracts should be in writing was made in Western Massachusetts Ins. Co. v. Duffey, 2 Kan. 347; but this doctrine is said not to be well founded; 1 May, Ins., 3d ed. § 25; and in New York it was held that the validity of a parol contract for insurance was not affected by the stamp act, that, if in writing, it would require to be stamped, but it might be oral; Fish v. Cottenet, 44 N. Y. 538, 4 Am. Rep. 715. The power of congress to declare unstamped instruments wholly void was seriously doubted; Latham v. Smith, 45 Ill. 29; and the doubt went so far as to deny the constitutional right of the federal government to determine rules of evidence by which the state courts should be governed; May, Ins. § 85; Green v. Holway, 101 Mass. 243, 3 Am. Rep. 339. Some of the cases hold that congress cannot prohibit the making of contracts permitted by state laws, and that to declare them void is not a proper penalty for the enforcement of tax laws; Cooley, Const. Lim., 6th ed. 592; Moore v. Quirk, 105 Mass. 49, 7 Am. Rep. 499; Warren v. Paul, 22 Ind. 276; Smith v. Short, 40 Ala. 383; Jones v. Keep's Estate, 19 Wis. 369; Knox v. Rossi, 25 Nev. 96, 57 Pac. 179, 83 Am. St. Rep. 566, (48 L. R. A. 305 and note), as to the effect of omission to stamp instruments.

STAND. To abide by a thing; to submit to a decision; to comply with an agreement.

STANDARD. In War. An ensign or flag used in war.

In Measures. A weight or measure of certain dimensions, to which all other weights and measures must correspond: as, a standard bushel. Also, the quality of certain metals, to which all others of the same kind ought to be made to conform: as, standard gold, standard silver.

A National Bureau of Standards was established March 3, 1901, to have custody of the standards, the comparison of those used in scientific, etc., matters; their construction, with multiples and subdivisions; the testing and calibration of standard measuring apparatus; the solution of problems in connection with standards; the determination of physical constants and the properties of materials. It exercises its functions for the benefit of the United States, any state or municipality, or any scientific or educational institution, firm, corporation or individual engaged in manufacturing or research requiring standard measuring instruments.

See MEASURES; WEIGHTS.

STANDARD POLICY. See POLICY.

STANDING ASIDE JURORS. In order to mitigate the effect of the statute 33 Edw. I. which forbade the challenging of jurors by the crown excepting for cause shown, a rule of practice gradually arose of permitting the prosecution to direct jurors to stand aside until the whole panel was exhausted, without showing cause. The validity of this practice has been repeatedly upheld in England: 26 How. St. Tr. 1231.

In the United States this statute became a part of the fundamental law after the revolution; Baldw. 78, 82; Jewell v. Com., 22 Pa. 94; and notwithstanding statutes of various states granting to the prosecution a number of peremptory challenges, the custom of standing aside has been preserved. This practice has been opposed where the statutes allowing peremptory challenges are in force, but where the number allowed is very small,

It has heretofore been allowed to continue. See Thomp. & Mer. Juries 147.

The practice applies in misdemeanors as well as felonies, although there is a peremptory right of challenge; 39 Leg. Int. 384.

See CHALLENGE; JURY.

STANDING BY. This term, as so often used in discussing cases of estoppel, does not mean actual presence or actual participation in the transaction, but it means silence where there is knowledge and a duty to make a disclosure. Anderson v. Hubble, 93 Ind. 573, 47 Am. Rep. 394.

STANDING MUTE. See MUTE; PEINE FORTE ET DURE.

STANDING ORDERS. General regulations of the procedure of the two houses of a parliamentary body, respecting the manner in which its business shall be conducted.

STANNARY COURTS. Courts held in the stannaries in England.

The stannaries were mining districts of Devon and Cornwall. Their exact extent was never definitely ascertained. The stannary courts resembled those of the palatine jurisdictions. The earliest charters conferring jurisdiction were in the reign of Richard I and John. Jurisdiction seemed to be only over the miners. A charter of 1305 gave them jurisdiction in all cases except those which touched land, life or limb. In 1640 the jurisdiction was settled; it was confined to a territory where a tin-works was situated; tin-workers could sue each other, and could sue foreigners if the case arose in the jurisdiction or concerned tin-work. The chief official was the Lord Warden, who appointed a vice-warden and stewards. The courts were held by the stewards; they had a leet jurisdiction and a general common law jurisdiction, except as to land, life and limb. There was a jury of six. An appeal lay to the steward, and thence to the court of the vice-warden, the Lord Warden and the Prince of Wales' Council, successively.

The stannaries each had a parliament consisting of twenty-four persons who made and enforced laws.

The Devonshire stannary courts seemed to have disappeared, but were reconstituted in 1856. Those of Cornwall had a continuous history. In 1836 the court of the vice-warden was given a concurrent equity and common law jurisdiction extending to other metals than tin. Appeals were to the Lord Warden, assisted by three or more members of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. In 1856, his jurisdiction was extended to the Devonshire stannaries. In 1873 the court of the Lord Warden was merged in the Court of Appeal. In 1896, the jurisdiction of the court of the vice-warden was transferred to such of the county courts as the Lord Chancellor might direct. 1 Holds. Hist. E. L. 57.

STAPLE. In International Law. The right of staple, as exercised by a people upon foreign merchants, is defined to be that they may not allow them to set their merchandises and wares to sale but in a certain place.

This practice is not in use in the United States. 1 Chitty, Com. Law 103; Co. 4th Inst. 238; Bac. Abr. Execution (B 1). See STATUTE STAPLE.

STAPLE INN. An inn of chancery. See INNS OF COURT.

STAR-CHAMBER. See COURT OF STAR-CHAMBER.

STAR PAGE. The line and word at which the pages of the first edition of a law book began are frequently marked by a star in later editions, and always should be.

STARE DECISIS (Lat.). To abide by, or adhere to, decided cases. Stare decisis et non quicta movere. It is a general maxim that when a point of law has been settled by decision, it forms a precedent which is not afterwards to be departed from. The rule as stated is "to abide by former precedents, stare decisis, where the same points come again in litigation, as well to keep the scale of justice even and steady, and not liable to waver with every new judge's opinion, as also because, the law in that case being solemnly declared and determined, what before was uncertain, and perhaps indifferent, is now become a permanent rule, which it is not in the breast of any subsequent judge to alter or swerve from according to his private sentiments; he being sworn to determine, not according to his own private judgment, but according to the known laws and customs of the land,—not delegated to pronounce a new law, but to maintain and expound the old one—jus dicere et non jus dare." Broom, Leg. Max., 7th ed. 147. As it was said by Anderson, B., "My duty is plain. It is to expound and not to make the law; to decide on it as I find it, not as I may wish it to be;" 7 Exch. 543.

"What I desire to point out is that I wish the law was not so, but being the law I must follow it." Romer, J., in L. R. 1, C. P. 605 (1899). "I agree that it is the law, though I think it is a hard law; but we have nothing to do with the question of hardship." Lord Esher, M. R., in L. R. 24 Q. B. D. 618 (1890).

Settled principles of law cannot be disregarded in order to remove the hardship of special cases; Buchanan v. Litchfield, 102 U. S. 278, 26 L. Ed. 138; the doctrine should not be departed from except in extreme cases; Brennan v. New York, 47 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 178; or except in a case of grave necessity; State v. Ross, 43 Wash. 290, 86 Pac. 575. It is very serious for a judge, who does not agree with particular decisions, to deal in distinctions from those decisions; Jessel, M. R., in L. R. 6 C. P. 559.

The doctrine of stare decisis is not always to be relied upon; for the courts find it necessary to overrule cases which have been decided contrary to principle. It should not be pressed too far; 8 Gr. Bag 257. Many hundreds of such overruled cases may be found in the American and English reports.

The rule is founded on public policy and does not require a court to follow a clearly erroneous authority; Mason v. Cotton Co., 148 N. C. 492, 62 S. E. 625, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1221, 128 Am. St. Rep. 635; it should be applied to a judgment of four out of five judges (a majority of the whole number, seven), where the case was fully argued and was considered at great length, where there has been no change in the trend of judicial opinion and the decision has been favorably received by the profession; L. D. Willcutt & Sons Co. v. Driscoll, 200 Mass. 110, 85 N. E. 897, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1236.

"The rule of stare decisis means, in general, that when a point has been once settled by judicial decision, it forms a precedent for the guidance of courts in similar cases." It should "in the main be strictly adhered to. An adherence to it is necessary to preserve the certainty, the stability and symmetry of our jurisprudence. Nevertheless there are occasions when a departure from it is rendered necessary in order to vindicate plain and obvious principles of law, and to remedy a continued injustice." These are the two grounds of justification in departing from a decision which has become a precedent. Lamar, J., in The Madrid, 40 Fed. 677, where it was held that decisions of the circuit courts of appeal, not being uniform as to the relative priority of statutory and maritime liens, have not become a rule of property within the doctrine; id.

The doctrine is a salutary one and is to be adhered to on proper occasions, in respect of decisions directly upon points in issue; but the supreme court should not extend any decision upon a constitutional question if it is convinced that error in principle might supervene; Pollock v. Loan & Trust Co., 157 U. S. 429, 15 Sup. Ct. 673, 39 L. Ed. 759; and there are cases in which a court of last resort has felt constrained by a sense of duty to disregard all precedents, even their own. This is particularly so in constitutional questions involving the validity of statutes affecting public interests, but where no right of property or contract inter partes is involved. In such a case, said Bleckley, C. J., the maxim for a supreme court "supreme in the majesty of duty as well as in the majesty of power," is not stare decisis, but fiat justitia ruat coelum; Ellison v. R. Co., 87 Ga. 691, 13 S. E. 809; and it was said by Howard, J., in quoting this language: "Let this decision be right whether other decisions were right or not;" Denney v. State, 144 Ind. 539, 42 N. E. 929, 31 L. R. A. 726 (involving the validity of statutes of apportionment of legislative representatives). It has been said that the doctrine applies with less force in constitutional cases than in ordinary cases of property rights; Robinson v. Schenck, 102 Ind. 307, 1 N. E. 698; but in Halter v. Nebraska, 205 U. S. 34, 27 Sup. Ct. 419; 51 L. Ed. 696, 10 Ann. Cas. 525, it was held that a long established and steadily adhered to principle of constitutional construction precludes a judicial tribunal from holding a legal enactment, federal or state, unconstitutional and void unless it is manifestly so; Halter v. Nebraska, 205 U. S. 34, 27 Sup. Ct. 419, 51 L. Ed. 696, 10 Ann. Cas. 525.

This rule urges the court against reversing a long series of decisions where state legislation has been enacted in reliance thereon and a reversal would involve the promulgation of a new rule of constitutional inhibition on state legislation; New York Life Ins. Co. v. Deer Lodge Co., 231 U. S. 495, 34 Sup. Ct. 167, 58 L. Ed. —. And a court when asked to do so should consider how far its action would affect transactions entered into and acted upon, under the law as it exists; Sydnor v. Gascoigne, 11 Tex. 455. Where there have been a series of decisions by the supreme judicial tribunal of a state, the rule of stare decisis may usually be regarded as impregnable, except by legislative act; Harrow v. Myers, 29 Ind. 470. Especially is this the case where the law has become settled as a rule of property, and titles have become vested on the strength of it; Reed v. Ownby, 44 Mo. 206; Brown v. Finley, 157 Ala. 424, 47 South. 577, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 679, 131 Am. St. Rep. 68, 16 Ann. Cas. 778; and even an isolated decision will not be reversed when it has remained undisputed for a long time, and rights to land have been acquired under it; Hihn v. Courtis, 31 Cal. 402. The court will not overrule cases upon which conveyancers may have relied, even though the court does not consider the case a sensible decision; [1891] 1 Ch. 258.

In Saffell v. Orr, 109 Va. 768, 64 S. E. 1057, there had been two previous decisions overruled by a third, and the title in question had been taken since the two decisions and prior to the third; and the court held that the first two cases established no rule of property and followed the third case. This case is severely criticised in 15 Va. L. Reg. 967.

It has been said that the doctrine of stare decisis has greater or less force according to the nature of the question decided, those questions where the decisions do not constitute a business rule, e. g. as where personal liberty is involved, will be met only by the general considerations which favor certainty and stability in the law; but where a decision relates to the validity of certain modes of transacting business, and a change of decision must necessarily invalidate everything done in the mode prescribed by the former case, as in the manner of executing deeds or wills, the maxim becomes imperative, and no court is at liberty to change it; Kneeland v. Milwaukee, 15 Wis. 691. An erroneous decision subsequently overruled, though the law of the particular case, and binding on the parties, does not conclude other parties having rights depending on the same question; Bradshaw v. Mill Co., 52 Minn. 59, 53 N. W. 1066. The United States courts will follow the decisions of those of the several states in interpreting state laws; but when the decisions of the state courts are unsettled and conflicting the rule does not apply; Gelpcke v. Dubuque, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 205, 17 L. Ed. 520; Supervisors v. Schenck, 5 Wall. (U. S.) 772, 18 L. Ed. 556. When titles to real estate depend on any compact between states, the rule of decision will not be drawn from either of the states; Marlatt's Lessee v. Silk, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 1, 9 L. Ed. 609.

In matters relating to the construction of treaties, constitutional provisions, or laws of the United States, the authority of the federal courts is paramount, while e converso in the construction of state constitutions and state laws, the decisions of the state courts are final within their jurisdiction; Doe v. Hamilton, 23 Miss. 498, 57 Am. Dec. 149; Wells, Res. Adj. & Stare Decisis 583.

On a question not of statutory construction, but of the application of a rule of the common law, the circuit court of appeals is bound by a decision of the United States supreme court, but not by those of the highest courts of the various states; Methven v. Power Co., 66 Fed. 113, 13 C. C. A. 362, 35 U. S. App. 67.

See Cooley, Const., 2d ed. 137. Greenl. Overruled Cases; 1 Kent 477; Livingston, Syst. of Pen. Law 104.

In [1899] 2 Q. B. 439, there were found two cases in the House of Lords all but contradictory (10 App. Cas. 438 and 14 id. 381). The court "did under these circumstances the best they could." They undertook to distinguish the two cases. "Whether their judgment, should it come before the House of Lords, will be upheld, is a matter on which it were rash to pronounce an opinion." 15 L. Q. Rev. 340.

See Jenkins, Century vi., for a list of curious aphorisms on this subject; also an essay on the doctrine, its reasons and extent, by Daniel H. Chamberlain, N. Y. Lonstorf*, 118 Wis. 159, 95 N. W. 961, and the dissenting opinion, for a full discussion.

STARE IN JUDICIO (Lat.). To appear before a tribunal, either as plaintiff or defendant.

START. This term is not limited to setting out upon a journey or a race; it means, as well, the commencement of an enterprise or an undertaking. Graw v. Manning, 54 Ia. 721, 7 N. W. 150.

STATE (Lat. stare, to place, establish). A body politic, or society of men, united together for the purpose of promoting their mutual safety and advantage, by the joint efforts of their combined strength. Cooley, Const. Lim. 1. A self-sufficient body of persons united together in one community for the defence of their rights and to do right and justice to foreigners. In this sense, the state means the whole people united into one body politic; and the state, and the people of the state, are equivalent expressions. Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 425, 1 L. Ed. 440; 2 Wilson, Lect. 120; 1 Story, Const., § 208. So, frequently, are state and nation; Texas v. White, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 720, 19 L. Ed. 227. See Morse, Citizenship; Wheat. Int. L. 17; but it is said that "a state is distinguished from a nation or a people, since the former may be composed of different races of men all subject to the same supreme authority. . . . The same nation or people may be subject to, or compose, several distinct and separate states. . . . The terms nation and people are frequently used by writers on international law as synonymous terms for state." 1 Halleck, Int. L. 66.

Another writer commenting on the definition of Cicero which is substantially that first above given, says: "This definition is not complete without some additions and restrictions. A state must be an organization of people for political ends; it must permanently occupy a fixed territory; it must possess an organized government capable of making and enforcing law within the community; and, finally, to be a sovereign state it must not be subject to any external control. Thus a company of men united for commercial purposes cannot be a state in the sense held in international law; neither can a tribe of wandering people, nor a community, be so considered if their government is permanently incapable of enforcing its own laws or its obligations toward other states. So long as a state possesses the requisite attributes mentioned in the preceding paragraphs, international law does not concern itself with the form of its government; it may be an absolute monarchy, a limited monarchy, or a republic; it may be a centralized state or a federal union; or it may change from one to another of these forms at will, without in the least affecting its position in the view of international law; Snow, Int. L. 19.

In the search for a verbal expression of that entity which has been variously phrased as the state, the nation, the commonwealth, or the public, the first mentioned term was slow in coming into general use. Queen Elizabeth used the word respublica in Latin or commonwealth in English. A statute referred to Guy Fawkes and others as having attempted "the overthrow of the whole state and commonwealth"; 3 Jac. I, c. 3; the Exchequer Chamber, in 1623, spoke of inconveniences introduced "in the republic" by remote limitations; Palm. 335. The words "republic" and "commonwealth," implying absence of a king, were abandoned only after 1600 when the word "state" came into use. It is little used in Blackstone, though he does speak of the "danger of the state"; 1 Com. 135. The people did not answer, since there is in opposition the king, and together they constitute the state or commonwealth. See "The Crown as Corporation," by F. W. Maitland, 17 L. Q. R. 131, 136, which begins with this quotation: "The greatest of artificial persons, politically speaking, is the state. But it depends on the legal institutions and forms of every commonwealth whether and how far the state or its titular head is officially treated as an artificial person." Pollock, First Bk. of Jur. 113.

The head of the state occupies the relation, not merely of ruler, but also of parens patriæ to the people of the country, and has a power to intervene for their protection, in many instances; this has been recognized by courts of other countries: The emperor of Austria, as representing the collective interests of his Hungarian subjects, was allowed to maintain a bill in equity to restrain the introduction of spurious notes meant to be circulated in Hungary as money, to the detriment of the value of property and commercial dealings in that country; Emperor of Austria v. Kossuth, 3 De. G., F. & J. 217. So an injunction will issue at the suit of a consul (under a treaty authorizing his intervention to protect his countrymen) to restrain the use of the name and portrait of a foreign ruler in a fraudulent advertising scheme intended to lead emigrants from the foreign state to believe it to be under the patronage and approval of such ruler; but not to redress any personal offense to the ruler; Von Thodorovich v. Beneficial Ass'n, 154 Fed. 911.

A state neither loses any of its rights nor is discharged from any of its duties, by a change in the form of its civil government. The body politic is still the same, though it may have a different organ of communication. So if a state should be divided in respect to territory, its rights and obligations are not impaired; and if they have not been apportioned by special agreement, those rights are to be enjoyed, and those obligations fulfilled, by all the parts in common; Snow, Cas. Int. L. 21. The same writer also thus states the distinctions between a state and a nation: "Though the terms are frequently used interchangeably, strictly speaking, a nation is composed of people of the same race, whereas a state may be composed of several nations. The Jews are considered to be a nation, while Austria-Hungary, as a state, is composed of three distinct races: Germanic, Slavic, and Magyar. This distinction has in recent years become of importance from the fact of the movements towards the unity of races, each under one state. Thus we have the Pan-Slavic movement, the Irredentist party in Italy, and various other minor cases." Snow, Int. L. 20. This distinction, however, cannot be said to be at present recognized to the extent here suggested.

The actual organization of governmental powers: thus, the actual government of the state is designated by the name of the state; hence the expression, the state has passed such a law or prohibited such an act.

The section of territory occupied by a state: as, the state of Pennsylvania.

A union of two or more states under a common sovereign is called a personal union where there is no incorporation, but the component parts are united with equality of rights, as in the case, by way of illustration, when Great Britain and Ireland and Hanover were under one prince but without any interdependence. On the other hand, a real union of different states is where there is a merging of the separate sovereignties in a new and general one, at least as to all international relations; as, in the case of the union of Hungary, Bohemia, and other states prior to 1849. An incorporate union is where there is one sovereign government, though there may be a separate subordinate administration; Halleck, Int. L. §§ 11, 12, 13.

One of the commonwealths which form the United States of America.

The various uses of the word "state" are well expressed in Texas v. White, 7 Wall. 700, 19 L. Ed. 227. It sometimes designates a people or community of individuals united more or less closely in political relations, inhabiting temporarily or permanently the same country. Often it denotes only the country, or territorial region, inhabited by such a community. Not infrequently it is applied to the government under which the people live. At other times it represents the combined idea of people, territory, and government. In the same case a state in the sense of the United States constitution is defined as a political community of free citizens, occupying a territory of defined boundaries, and organized under a government sanctioned and limited by a written constitution, and established by the consent of the governed.

The several states composing the United States are sovereign and independent in all things not surrendered to the national government by the constitution, and are considered, on general principles, by each other as foreign states: yet their mutual relations are rather those of domestic independence than of foreign alienation; Miller, Const. 103; Mills v. Duryee, 7 Cra. (U. S.) 481, 3 L. Ed. 411; Gelston v. Hoyt, 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 324, 4 L. Ed. 381.

The sovereignty of a state embraces the power to execute its laws and the right to exercise supreme dominion and authority except as limited by the fundamental law, "and all sovereign powers not limited by the federal constitution are vested in the states," except as limited by the state constitutions; People v. Tool, 35 Colo. 225, 229, 231, 86 Pac. 224, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 822, 117 Am. St. Rep. 198; Southern Gum Co. v. Laylin, 66 Ohio St. 578, 64 N. E. 564.

A state has jurisdiction over all persons and property within her boundaries, and may subject both to her jurisdictional power, but cannot do so with respect to persons or property not within her jurisdiction; Sturgis v. Fay, 16 Ind. 429, 79 Am. Dec. 440; but by compact between two states, some extra-territorial jurisdiction may be given to each within the boundaries of the other, and in such compact the word "jurisdiction" will not be construed to mean sovereignty; Central R. R. Co. v. Jersey City, 72 N. J. L. 311, 61 Atl. 1118.

Concurrent jurisdiction of two states over rivers is familiar to our legislation; e. g. Kentucky and Ohio, over the Ohio river; Wedding v. Meyler, 192 U. S. 573, 24 Sup. Ct. 322, 48 L. Ed. 570; Oregon and Washington, over the Columbia river; Nielsen v. Oregon, 212 U. S. 315, 29 Sup. Ct. 383, 53 L. Ed. 528. Where an act malum in se is prohibited by both states, the state first acquiring jurisdiction may punish, but not so where the act is forbidden by only one state. If an act is malum prohibitum in one state and is committed in the other, it cannot be punished in the former; id.

Legislation by two states authorizing the union of two corporations, one of each state, does not, in the absence of legislation by Congress to the contrary, come within the constitutional prohibition of compacts between states; Mackay v. R. Co., 82 Conn. 73, 72 Atl. 583, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 768.

The indestructibility of the states of the Union is well illustrated by the recognition of the existence of de facto governments, so far as required to preserve their political entity, of the states which composed the Confederate States. The rule laid down by the supreme court as to the validity of their legislation during the civil war was that acts necessary to domestic peace and good order and the administration of the ordinary functions of government must be regarded as valid and that acts in furtherance or support of rebellion against the United States, or intended to defeat the just rights of citizens, were void; Texas v. White, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 700, 19 L. Ed. 227; Williams v. Bruffy, 96 U. S. 176, 24 L. Ed. 716.

A state has an inherent right to fix the character of property acquired by its citizens, and the terms under which it shall be held, independently of the federal government; Curry v. Wilson, 57 Wash. 509, 107 Pac. 367.

There is nothing in the federal constitution to prevent a state from changing the common law, as in authorizing damages where they were not allowed at common law; Ivy v. Telegraph Co., 165 Fed. 371.

Federal laws may be affected by state statutes, not by disputing their authority, but by sometimes changing their application; Maguire v. U. S., 43 Ct. Cl. 400.

The title of the state to the seacoast and the shores of tide rivers is different from the fee simple which an individual holds in lands. It is not a proprietary, but a sovereign right. It is an incident to and is a part of its sovereignty, that cannot be surrendered, alienated or delegated, except for some public purpose or some reasonable use for the public benefit; Coxe v. State, 144 N. Y. 396, 39 N. E. 400; Cooley, Const. Lim. 651, 524.

In New Jersey it was held in an early case that the state as sovereign, having both the legal and equitable estates, might make such disposition of tide lands as they saw fit, but that it could not make a direct and absolute grant, divesting all the citizens of their common rights; Arnold v. Mundy, 6 N. J. L. 1, 10 Am. Dec. 356. This decision was criticised in Gough v. Bell, 22 N. J. L. 459; and in Wooley v. Campbell, 37 N. J. L. 163, where it was said the trust doctrine in regard to the state's title to tide lands in New Jersey may be said to extend no further than that the legislature cannot destroy navigation, to the material injury of the public.

In New York, though the state was said to hold the title as trustee of a public trust, the legislature, as representing the people, was held to be empowered to grant the soil or confer an exclusive privilege in tide waters, or to authorize a use inconsistent with the public rights, subject to the paramount control of congress; People v. New York & S. I. Ferry Co., 68 N. Y. 71; Saunders v. R. Co., 144 N. Y. 75, 38 N. E. 992, 26 L. R. A. 378, 43 Am. St. Rep. 729; Langdon v. New York, 93 N. Y. 129. Such privileges should not impair the rights of the whole people of the state in the use of the waters or the lands thereunder for the purposes implied by law; State v. Black River Phosphate Co., 32 Fla. 82, 13 South. 640, 21 L. R. A. 189; State v. Gerbing, 56 Fla. 603, 47 South. 353, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 337, where a statute providing for limited privileges to individuals to plant oysters in the public waters of a state was held not to authorize the conveyance of title to the land.

A state may lose its sovereignty and jurisdiction over its territory by prescription and acquiescence, where the facts are clearly established; Moore v. McGuire, 142 Fed. 787, where it was said that whether this was so had never been authoritatively determined, but several cases between states were cited at length as tending to show that in the opinion of the supreme court such was the law. The decision of the circuit court was reversed on the facts, and this question was therefore not considered by the supreme court; Moore v. McGuire, 205 U. S. 214, 27 Sup. Ct. 483, 51 L. Ed. 776. That long acquiescence by states in a given situation with respect to the boundary line between them may by length of time become conclusive was held in Franzini v. Layland, 120 Wis. 72, 97 N. W. 499.

The question much discussed both in federal and state courts as to the obligation of the latter to enforce acts of congress, and how far that body may invest the state courts with judicial power, was considered very fully in an opinion in Zikos v. Oregon R. & N. Co., 179 Fed. 893, where cases on the subject are collected and the conclusion reached that, where substantive rights were created in virtue of the power of congress under a particular subject (as interstate commerce); they may be availed of in any court of competent jurisdiction. The enforcement by the state courts or rights so created does not depend on comity only, but there is a stronger reason growing out of the more intimate relation of the states to the general government. The court said (p. 901): "The constitution of the United States being the supreme law of the land, state and federal courts are alike subject to its provisions, and the refusal of the former to enforce rights conferred by congress would put them in the same category as would a refusal to entertain causes flowing from any other recognized source of authority. It would be an anomaly in our system if state tribunals, after having so long entertained the grievances of litigants, where rights are traceable to congressional legislation, should refuse to further do so because of the fact that there has been provided, by a power clearly competent, different rules of liability for those engaged in interstate commerce from those which may be fixed by statute or recognized by decisions in the several states. . . . It is not to be supposed that state courts will or can refuse to abide by the result when the supreme court, the final arbiter, has decided that they have jurisdiction. If that should occur, the constitution would cease to be the supreme law of the land, and its express provision that 'the judges in every state shall be bound thereby, anything in the constitution or laws of any state to the contrary notwithstanding,' would become null and its application inoperative."

'The Second Employers' Liability Cases, 223 U. S. 1, 57, 32 Sup. Ct. 169, 56 L. Ed. 327, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 44, were cases in which the state court had declined to entertain a suit for the enforcement of rights accruing under the act of congress, holding that such rights could not be enforced, as of right, in the state courts, although their jurisdiction was adequate to the occasion, and the suggestion was made as one of the grounds for declining jurisdiction that the act of congress was not in harmony with the policy of the state. That suggestion was said by the supreme court to be "inadmissible," because it presupposes what in legal contemplation does not exist. The opinion proceeded: "When congress, in the exercise of the power confided to it by the constitution, adopted that act, it spoke for all the people and all the states, and thereby established a policy for all. That policy is as much the policy of Connecticut as if the act had emanated from its own legislature, and should be respected accordingly in the courts of the state. As was said by this court in Claffin v. Houseman, 93 U. S. 130, 136, 137, 23 L. Ed. 833: 'The laws of the United States are laws in the several states, and just as much binding on the citizens and courts thereof as the state laws are. The United States is not a foreign sovereignty as regards the several states, but is a concurrent, and within its jurisdiction paramount, sovereignty. . . . If an act of congress gives a penalty [meaning civil and remedial] to a party aggrieved, without specifying a remedy for its enforcement, there is no reason why it should not be enforced, if not provided otherwise by some act of congress, by a proper action in a state court. The fact that a state court derives its existence and functions from the state laws is no reason why it should not afford relief, because it is subject also to the laws of the United States, and is just as much bound to recognize these as operative within the state as it is to recognize the state laws. The two together form one system of jurisprudence, which constitutes the law of the land for the state; and the courts of the two jurisdictions are not foreign to each other, nor to be treated by each other as such, but as courts of the same country, having jurisdiction partly different and partly concurrent. . . . It is true, the sovereignties are distinct, and neither can interfere with the proper jurisdiction of the other, as was so clearly shown by Chief Justice Taney, in the case of Ableman v. Booth, 21 How. (U. S.) 506, 16 L. Ed. 169; and hence the state courts have no power to revise the action of the federal courts, nor the federal the state, except where the federal constitution or laws are involved. But this is no reason why the state courts should not be open for the prosecution of rights growing out of the laws of the United States, to which their jurisdiction is competent, and not denied.'"

This decision, in which the opinion was delivered by Van Devanter, J., disposed of two cases, in one of which (Walsh v. R. Co., 173 Fed. 494) the federal Employers' Liability Act of April 22, 1908, was held constitutional by the circuit court in Massachusetts, and in the other of which (Hoxie v. R. Co., 82 Conn. 352, 73 Atl. 754, 17 Ann. Cas. 324) the state court held that it was not bound to enforce that act; in the opinion in the latter case will be found the argument in support of that view. The first case was affirmed and the second reversed, and the opinion of the supreme court may be considered as a sufficient statement of the law on the subject as declared by the tribunal of last resort.

Upon the admission of a new state it enters into an indissoluble relation as complete and perpetual as the union between the original states; Texas v. White, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 700, 19 L. Ed. 227. It was competent for the framers of the state constitution to provide against an interregnum in the government in the change from the territory to a state; State v. Meadows, 1 Kan. 90.

Since congress has no power to admit a state into the Union except on an equal footing with the original states, the admission fixes its status, anything in the enabling act to the contrary notwithstanding, and confers on the state the exclusive power to enact its own laws regulating intra-state commerce and the introduction and sale of intoxicating liquors; U. S. v. U. S. Express Co., 180 Fed. 1006.

When a state is admitted to the Union, it stands upon the footing of the original states and possesses all the powers which inherently belonged to a state, and its powers are not limited by savings or exceptions in the enabling act; Smith v. State, 28 Okl. 235, 113 Pac. 932; Coyle v. Smith, 28 Okl. 121, 113 Pac. 944, affirmed id., 221 U. S. 559, 31 Sup. Ct. 688, 55 L. Ed. 553; where a condition in the enabling act that the capital of the state should be located at a certain place, and not changed therefrom previous to 1913, ceased to be a valid limitation on the power of the state after its admission; and this applies even where the enabling act also required that the constitutional convention should accept its terms and adopt an ordinance in accordance therewith; McCabe v. Ry. Co., 186 Fed. 966, 109 C. C. A. 110. Congress may not, save in the exercise of a power conferred by the constitution, reserve to itself, in the admission of a new state, police power exercised by the other states; U. S. v. Sandoval, 198 Fed. 539.

An offence committed in a territory before its admission may be prosecuted in the courts of the state after its admission; Ex parte Bailey, 20 Okl. 497, 94 Pac. 553; Ex parte Warford, 3 Okl. Cr. 381, 106 Pac. 559; but the trial must proceed under the laws in force in the territory at the time of admission; Birdwell v. U. S., 4 Okl. Cr. 472, 113 Pac. 205; but where the action was commenced after statehood, the procedure in force in the state applies, though the cause arose prior to statehood; Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Bank, 32 Okl. 290, 122 Pac. 499.

Constitutional Guarantee of a Republican Form of Government. The fourth section of the fourth article of the constitution directs that "the United States shall guarantee to every state in the Union a republican form of government." Mill. Const. U. S. 640. The form of government is to be guaranteed, which supposes a form already established; and this is the republican form of government the United States have undertaken to protect. See Story, Const. § 1807.

In the sense of the constitutional guarantee of a republican form of government, the term "state" is used to express the idea of a people or political community, as distinguished from the government; Texas v. White, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 700, 19 L. Ed. 227.

A republican government, once established, may be endangered so as to call for the action of congress: 1. By the hostile action of some foreign power, and taking possession of the territory of some state, and setting up a government therein not established by the people. 2. By the revolutionary action of the people themselves in forcibly rising against the constituted authorities and setting the government aside, or attempting to do so, for some other. In either of the above cases, it will be the duty of the federal government to protect the people of the state by the employment of military force. Cooley, Const., 2d ed. 202; see Texas v. White, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 700, 19 L. Ed. 227; Luther v. Borden, 7 How. (U. S.) 1, 3, 12 L. Ed. 581. Even in strict accordance with the forms prescribed for amending a state constitution, it would be possible for the people of the state to effect such changes as would deprive it of its republican character. It has been suggested that it would then be the duty of congress to intervene. In any case there could probably be no appeal from the decision of congress. Cooley, Const. 196. And such is now definitely settled as the law by the supreme court, which has decided that the guarantee to every state of a republican form of government is a political question belonging to congress; Pacific States Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Oregon, 223 U. S. 118, 32 Sup. Ct. 224, 56 L. Ed. 377; Kiernan v. Portland, Oregon, 223 U. S. 151. It means government by the citizens en masse, acting directly, though not personally, according to rules established by the majority; Kiernan v. Portland, 57 Or. 454, 111 Pac. 379, 112 Pac. 402, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 339.

A provision for the initiative and referendum in a state constitution does not violate this guarantee of the federal constitution; Oregon v. Pacific States Tel. & Tel. Co., 53 Or. 162, 99 Pac. 427; nor does a recall provision in a city charter vesting the powers of government in the people and constituting all inhabitants of the city a body politic; Bonner v. Belsterling, 104 Tex. 432, 138 S. W. 571; nor a state law authorizing cities to adopt the commission form of government including the initiative, referendum and recall, the constitutional guarantee applying only to the government of the state, and not of its local subdivisions; People v. Edmands, 252 Ill. 108, 96 N. E. 914.

Suits by or against a State. A suit by the state is usually entitled in the name of the state, or commonwealth, or people, as prescribed by law or custom in the particular state. The courts of the state and of the United States are open to the state both in its sovereign capacity and by virtue of its corporate rights; State v. Ohio Oil Co., 150 Ind. 21, 49 N. E. 809, 47 L. R. A. 627. When a state becomes a suitor in the courts of a foreign state, it is treated as a foreign private corporation; Western Lunatic Asylum v. Miller, 29 W. Va. 326, 1 S. E. 740, 6 Am. St. Rep. 644; and where a foreign state had recovered a judgment for a penalty in its own courts, it could sue in this country in a state court in its own name; Healy v. Root, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 389. Any inherent power of the governor at common law to sue in the name of the state is superseded by a state constitution defining executive powers and including such authority; Henry v. State, 87 Miss. 1, 39 South. 856. In the absence of a contrary provision by its law, a state may prosecute suits in any court in which other parties institute suits of like character; Commonwealth v. Ford, 29 Grat. (Va.) 683. In Louisiana v. Texas, 176 U. S. 1, 19, 20 Sup. Ct. 251, 44 L. Ed. 347, a state was spoken of as parens patriæ of all her citizens in respect of bringing suit against Texas for interdicting interstate commerce by unreasonable quarantine restrictions. As quasi-sovereign, the state has a standing in the supreme court to protect its public waters, atmosphere and forests, irrespective of private owners; Hudson County Water Co. v. McCarter, 209 U. S. 349, 28 Sup. Ct. 529, 52 L. Ed. 828, 14 Ann. Cas. 560; Kansas v. Colorado, 206 U. S. 46, 27 Sup. Ct. 655, 51 L. Ed. 956; Georgia v. Copper Co., 206 U. S. 230, 27 Sup. Ct. 618, 51 L. Ed. 1038, 11 Ann. Cas. 488.

That a state, and not the United States, takes by escheat, see ESCHEAT.

When a state brings a suit against citizens, she thereby voluntarily accepts all the conditions which affect ordinary suitors, except that no affirmative judgment, as for the payment of costs, can be rendered against her; and if the cause is removed to a federal court it will proceed in the same manner as a suit between individuals; Abeel v. Culberson, 56 Fed. 329. So where the state has brought a suit in equity and the cause has been removed to a federal court, the defendant may there file a cross bill against the state; Port Royal & A. R. Co. v. South Carolina, 60 Fed. 552; but if the cross bill seeks any affirmative relief against the state, it cannot be filed, under a constitutional provision that the state shall not be made a defendant in any court of law or equity; Holmes v. State, 100 Ala. 80, 14 South. 864; nor can a cross demand be maintained against a state; State v. Gaines, 46 La. Ann. 431, 15 South. 174.

A state, being a sovereign, is subject to the same law of immunity from suit as that which applies to sovereigns generally, and as to this, see SOVEREIGN. As such it can be sued only by its own consent; Com. v. Welles, 82 Va. 721, 1 S. E. 102; Hans v. Louisiana, 134 U. S. 1, 10 Sup. Ct. 504, 33 L. Ed. 842. But under the constitution of the United States, the supreme court has original jurisdiction of suits by one state against another, and this jurisdiction has been frequently exercised, particularly in cases involving boundary disputes between the states.

Under the 11th amendment of the United States constitution, it was provided that "the judicial power of the United States shall not be construed to extend to any suit in law or equity, commenced or prosecuted against one of the United States, by citizens of another state, or by citizens or subjects of any foreign state." The proposal and adoption of this amendment followed almost immediately the decision in Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 419, 1 L. Ed. 440, that a state was liable to be sued in the supreme court by a citizen of another state. In that case, as appears by a note (2 Dall. 480, 1 L. Ed. 466), judgment in default of appearance was rendered for the plaintiff and a writ of enquiry awarded, but it was not sued out and executed, as that cause and all others against states "were swept at once from the records of the court, by the amendment to the federal constitution agreeably to the unanimous determination of the judges, in Hollingsworth v. Virginia," 3 Dall. (U. S.) 378, 1 L. Ed. 644.

In cases arising under and since the adoption of the 11th amendment, the question which has been mainly presented for decision has been whether, where the state itself was not a party to the record, but the action was against some officer of the state, it was in fact a suit against the state and therefore within the provision of the amendment. In Osborn v. Bank of U. S., 9 Wheat. 738, 6 L. Ed. 204, it was held that the 11th amendment applied only to suits in which the state is a party on the record, but subsequently this strict construction was not followed, and it was held that when the state is the real party in interest, though the defendants are its officers or agents, the suit is in substance against the state and within the amendment; Cunningham v. R. Co., 109 U. S. 446, 3 Sup. Ct. 292, 609, 27 L. Ed. 992; In re Ayers, 123 U. S. 443, 8 Sup. Ct. 164, 31 L. Ed. 216; Pennoy v. McConaughy, 140 U. S. 1, 11 Sup. Ct. 699, 35 L. Ed. 363; though the mere fact that the state may have an interest in the result does not necessarily make it a defendant in the relief sought and will not bring the case within the amendment; U. S. v. Peters, 5 Cra. (U. S.) 115, 3 L. Ed. 53. Whether a suit is in fact against the state, although it is not a party to the record, is of the merits and not to the jurisdiction; Illinois Cent. R. R. Co. v. Adams, 180 U. S. 28, 21 Sup. Ct. 251, 45 L. Ed. 410.

Suits against state officers held to be in fact against the state are: Those to recover money or property actually in possession of the state and mixed with its general funds; Governor of Ga. v. Madrazo, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 110, 7 L. Ed. 73; to recover taxes illegally assessed; Smith v. Reeves, 178 U. S. 436, 20 Sup. Ct. 919, 44 L. Ed. 1140; to foreclose a mortgage on a railroad of which the state had possession and legal title; Cunningham v. R. Co., 109 U. S. 446, 3 Sup. Ct. 292, 609, 27 L. Ed. 992; to have railroad bonds declared a lien on railroad stock owned by the state; Christian v. R. Co., 133 U. S. 233, 10 Sup. Ct. 260, 33 L. Ed. 589; to set aside a tax sale; Chandler v. Dix, 194 U. S. 590, 24 Sup. Ct. 766, 48 L. Ed. 1129; any suit on state bonds or coupons or evidence of debt of the state; Hagood v. Southern, 117 U. S. 52, 6 Sup. Ct. 608, 29 L. Ed. 805; McGahey v. Virginia, 135 U. S. 662, 10 Sup. Ct. 972, 34 L. Ed. 304; to compel the appropriation of certain funds to their payment; Louisiana v. Jumel, 107 U. S. 711, 2 Sup. Ct. 128, 27 L. Ed. 448; or to force the levy of a special tax therefor; North Carolina v. Temple, 134 U. S. 22, 10 Sup. Ct. 509, 33 L. Ed. 849; Louisiana v. Steele, 134 U. S. 230, 10 Sup. Ct. 511, 33 L. Ed. 891; or prevent the use of state bonds to pay a certain debt; Board of Liquidation v. McComb, 92 U. S. 531, 23 L. Ed. 623; to restrain state officers proceeding under a valid statute from reducing bridge tolls from those permitted under a previous law; Fitts v. McGhee, 172 U. S. 516, 19 Sup. Ct. 269, 43 L. Ed. 535; by a non-resident insurance company which seeks an injunction to restrain the state superintendent of insurance from revoking its license to do business in the state; Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. McNall, 81 Fed. 888; a suit against the state dispensary of South Carolina in the course of winding up its business; Murray v. Wilson Distilling Co., 213 U. S. 151, 29 Sup. Ct. 458, 53 L. Ed. 742; one against the governor in his official character; Moore v. American Transp. Co., 24 How. (U. S.) 16, 16 L. Ed. 674; one against officers of the state as representing the state's action; Oregon v. Hitchcock, 202 U. S. 60, 26 Sup. Ct. 568, 50 L. Ed. 935; an effort to enjoin state officers charged with the collection of taxes, and seeking to establish exemption from taxation under the state laws and the repayment of amounts previously collected, was, to all intents and purposes, a suit against the state, and in part for the recovery of money, and the state court had no jurisdiction; Bloxham v. R. Co., 35 Fla. 625, 17 South. 902; against the state board of agriculture to recover money alleged to be wrongfully collected by it as a license tax; Lord & Polk Chemical Co. v. Board, 111 N. C. 135, 15 S. E. 1032; a suit by a private citizen to enjoin the erection of a state building at a place other than that prescribed by law; Sherman v. Bellows, 24 Or. 553, 34 Pac. 549; a suit to determine the rights of conflicting claimants to a fund granted by congress to the states for agricultural colleges; Brown University v. Rhode Island College of Agri. & Mech. Arts, 56 Fed. 55.

Since a state is liable to suit only under a statute permitting it, the act authorizing the same must be strictly followed and carefully considered by the court in determining the scope and limitation of its power and jurisdiction; Wright v. State Bd. of Liquidation, 49 La. Ann. 1213, 22 South. 361. A state constitutional provision providing how suits may be brought against the state, has no application to municipal corporations; Goldtree v. San Diego, 8 Cal. App. 505, 97 Pac. 216.

The suit is held not to be against the state wherever it is against an officer of a state, as an individual, for some act done under color of office, pursuant to an unconstitutional statute; Grisar v. McDowell, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 363, 18 L. Ed. 863; Bates v. Clark, 95 U. S. 204, 24 L. Ed. 471; Scott v. Donald (No. 1), 165 U. S. 58, 17 Sup. Ct. 265, 41 L. Ed. 632; Tindal v. Wesley, 167 U. S. 204, 17 Sup. Ct. 770, 42 L. Ed. 137; where the law imposes upon a state officer a specific duty not affecting the general governmental affairs of the state, by the performance of which an individual has a distinct interest, which may be enforced by mandamus to compel performance or injunction to restrain inconsistent action; Rolston v. Fund. Com'rs, 120 U. S. 390, 7 Sup. Ct. 599, 30 L. Ed. 721; Scott v. Donald (No. 2), 165 U. S. 107, 17 Sup. Ct. 262, 41 L. Ed. 648; as an injunction at suit of a railroad company to restrain railroad commissioners from enforcing an unconstitutional rate law; McNeill v. R. Co., 202 U. S. 543, 26 Sup. Ct. 722, 50 L. Ed. 1142; Reagan v. Trust Co., 154 U. S. 362, 14 Sup. Ct. 1047, 38 L. Ed. 1014; Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 18 Sup. Ct. 418, 42 L. Ed. 819; Prout v. Starr, 188 U. S. 537, 23 Sup. Ct. 398, 47 L. Ed. 584; contra, State v. R. Co., 145 N. C. 495, 59 S. E. 570, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 966; or against state land commissioners to restrain them from acts alleged to be in violation of the plaintiff's contract of purchase of the lands from the state; Pennoyer v. McConnaughy, 140 U. S. 1, 11 Sup. Ct. 699, 35 L. Ed. 363; or against a state board of officers to restrain them from proceeding against a corporation engaged in interstate commerce, for failure to comply with state and statutory regulations; Louisiana v. Lagarde, 60 Fed. 186; or a proceeding for contempt in the federal courts against a state officer who has seized property in the hands of a receiver in attempting to collect a tax alleged to be illegal and attacked by proceeding in the federal court; In re Tyler, 149 U. S. 164, 13 Sup. Ct. 785, 37 L. Ed. 689; or by an individual from enforcing an unconstitutional law under which his rights and privileges would be violated; Davis v. Gray, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 203, 21 L. Ed. 447; Gunter v. R. Co., 200 U. S. 273, 26 Sup. Ct. 252, 50 L. Ed. 477; General Oil Co. v. Crain, 209 U. S. 211, 28 Sup. Ct. 475, 52 L. Ed. 754; particularly an invalid tax; Litchfield v. Webster Co., 101 U. S. 773, 25 L. Ed. 925; Memphis & L. R. Co. v. Railroad Com'rs, 112 U. S. 609, 5 Sup. Ct. 299, 28 L. Ed. 837; Allen v. R. Co., 114 U. S. 311, 5 Sup. Ct. 925, 962, 29 L. Ed. 200.

A citizen of another state cannot sue a state by the use of the name of his own state which he is permitted to use for that purpose; New Hampshire v. Louisiana, 108 U. S. 76, 2 Sup. Ct. 176, 27 L. Ed. 656; Louisiana v. Texas, 176 U. S. 1, 20 Sup. Ct. 251, 44 L. Ed. 347; but it was held that the supreme court has jurisdiction to enforce a property right in an action by one state against another; and one state may sue another on bonds of the latter of which the former is the donee and absolute owner; South Dakota v. North Carolina, 192 U. S. 286, 24 Sup. Ct. 269, 48 L. Ed. 448, where in a dissenting opinion, White, J., takes the ground that a state, by acquiring a claim of a private citizen on which under the 11th amendment he could not sue the state, cannot convert it into the subject-matter of a justiciable controversy, since to do so would destroy the prohibition of that amendment. Three justices concurred in the dissent. A state, even if it consents to be sued, cannot be sued by its own citizens in a federal court; Hans v. Louisiana, 134 U. S. 1, 10 Sup. Ct. 504, 33 L. Ed. 842; Murray v. Wilson Distilling Co., 213 U. S. 151, 29 Sup. Ct. 458, 53 L. Ed. 742; and a corporation cannot sue a state without its consent; Smith v. Reeves, 178 U. S. 436, 20 Sup. Ct. 919, 44 L. Ed. 1140.

While a state cannot be compelled by suit to perform its contracts, any attempt on its part to violate property or rights acquired under its contracts may be judicially resisted; and any law impairing the obligation of contracts under which such property rights are held is void; Hans v. Louisiana, 134 U. S. 1, 10 Sup. Ct. 504, 33 L. Ed. 842.

The relation of the federal courts to these cases was stated in Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. Railroad Commission of Alabama, 161 Fed. 925, where it was held that issuing an injunction by a federal court to restrain state officers from enforcing a state law involves no question of state rights or local self-government, and an injunction was granted against the state railroad commission. But the court of appeals reversed the decree upon the facts and dissolved the injunction having in the beginning of their opinion, however, made a general statement as to the law on the subject, as follows: "We assume as true and indisputable that the federal courts have jurisdiction and authority to annul and enjoin acts of a state legislature that are confiscatory or otherwise in conflict with the constitution; that they have no right to decline to exercise such jurisdiction when properly invoked; that every citizen, when the amount involved is sufficient and there is either diverse citizenship or a federal question involved, has the right to invoke such jurisdiction; that when such jurisdiction has attached it is exclusive, in the sense that state courts or state authority cannot interfere with it; that the process of injunction may be lawfully issued to preserve such jurisdiction from invasion by either civil or criminal proceedings; and that an injunctive suit to stay action by state officers under an unconstitutional state law is not necessarily a suit against the state. There is in our minds no doubt as to these general principles, though innumerable difficulties and disputations arise in their practical application;" Railroad Commission of Alabama v. R. Co., 170 Fed. 225, 231, 95 C. C. A. 117. A certiorari was denied; Central of Georgia R. Co. v. R. Comm., 214 U. S. 521, 29 Sup. Ct. 701, 53 L. Ed. 1066.

In a qualified sense separate states are sovereign and independent and the relations between them partake of something like the nature of international law. The supreme court by its decisions of controversies between states is constructing what may be called a body of interstate law; Kansas v. Colorado, 206 U. S. 46, 27 Sup. Ct. 655, 51 L. Ed. 956.

The supreme court has jurisdiction and authority to deal with a question between two states which if it were raised between two independent sovereignties might lead to war; Missouri v. Illinois, 200 U. S. 496, 26 Sup. Ct. 268, 50 L. Ed. 573.

As the remedies resorted to by independent states for the determination of controversies arising between them were withdrawn from the states by the constitution, a wide range of controversies susceptible of adjustment and not purely political in their nature was made justiciable by that instrument; Kansas v. Colorado, 185 U. S. 125, 22 Sup. Ct. 552, 46 L. Ed. 838; as to the practice, see Com. of Virginia v. West Virginia, 209 U. S. 514, 28 Sup. Ct. 614, 52 L. Ed. 914.

The supreme court has original jurisdiction of a bill filed by one state against another for relief from the deprivation by the direct action of the latter of the water of a river accustomed to flow through and across her country and consequent destruction of property and injury to health; Kansas v. Colorado, 185 U. S. 125, 22 Sup. Ct. 552, 46 L. Ed. 838; id., 206 U. S. 46, 27 Sup. Ct. 655, 51 L. Ed. 956.

The jurisdiction of the supreme court of controversies in which a state is a party is not affected by the question whether it is plaintiff or defendant, and where a state sought an injunction against a United States officer and the United States was, for the purposes of the case, a real party in interest, the court had jurisdiction; Minnesota v. Hitchcock, 185 U. S. 373, 22 Sup. Ct. 650, 46 L. Ed. 954.

The supreme court has no jurisdiction where the name of a state is used simply for the prosecution of a private claim; Kansas v. U. S., 204 U. S. 331, 27 Sup. Ct. 388, 51 L. Ed. 510; although a state may be sued by the United States without its consent, public policy forbids that the United States may without its consent be sued by a state; Kansas v. U. S., 204 U. S. 331, 27 Sup. Ct. 388, 51 L. Ed. 510.

A state bordering on the sea may, in the exercise of its sovereignty, extend its own borders one marine league from low water mark and make the region so annexed as much a part of the state as any other part of its territory, and therefore within the federal district; U. S. v. Imp. Co., 173 Fed. 426.

"There are many matters upon which different states may agree that can in no respect concern the United States. If, for instance, Virginia should come into possession and ownership of a small parcel of land in New York which the latter state might desire to acquire as a site for a public building, it would hardly be deemed essential for the latter state to obtain the consent of congress before it could make a valid agreement with Virginia for the purchase of the land." Virginia v. Tennessee, 148 U. S. 503, 13 Sup. Ct. 728, 37 L. Ed. 537, followed in Stearns v. Minnesota, 179 U. S. 246, 21 Sup. Ct. 73, 45 L. Ed. 162.

The District of Columbia and the territories are not states within the meaning of the constitution and of the Judiciary Act, so as to enable a citizen thereof to sue a citizen of one of the states in the federal courts; New Orleans v. Winter, 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 91, 4 L. Ed. 44; Barney v. Baltimore City, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 280, 18 L. Ed. 825; Hooe v. Jamieson, 166 U. S. 395, 17 Sup. Ct. 596, 41 L. Ed. 1049. But the District of Columbia is a "State of the Union," within the meaning of the treaty of 1853 between the United States and France, relieving Frenchmen from the disability of alienage in disposing of and inheriting property; Geofroy v. Riggs, 133 U. S. 253, 10 Sup. Ct. 295, 33 L. Ed. 642.

In Society. That quality which belongs to a person in society, and which secures to and imposes upon him different rights and duties in consequence of the difference of that quality.

In Practice. To make known specifically; to explain particularly: as, to state an account or to show the different items in an account; to state the cause of action in a declaration.

STATE LANDS. Tide lands belonging to the state are held not to be state lands. Seattle & M. Ry. Co. v. State, 7 Wash. 150, 34 Pac. 551, 22 L. R. A. 217, 38 Am. St. Rep. 866.

STATE PAPER OFFICE. An office established in London in 1578 for the custody of state papers. The head of it was the "Clerk of the Papers."

STATE SECRETS. See SECRETS OF STATE.

STATEMENT. The act of stating, reciting, or presenting verbally or on paper. Montague v. Thomason, 91 Tenn. 168, 18 S. W. 264. See PARTICULAR STATEMENT.

STATEMENT OF AFFAIRS. In English bankruptcy practice, the giving by the debtor of a list of creditors, secured and unsecured with the value of the securities, a list of bills discounted, and a statement of his property. Bank. Act 1869, § 19.

STATEMENT OF CLAIM. The specification of the plaintiff's cause of action. See DECLARATION. The term is now used in Pennsylvania under the Practice Act of 1887.

STATION. In Civil Law. A place where ships may ride in safety. Dig. 49. 12. 1. 13; 50. 15. 59.

A railroad company may exclude from its stations all persons except those using or desirous of using the railway, and may impose upon the rest of the public any terms it may deem proper as the condition of admittance; [1897] A. C. 479; to the same effect, 18 C. B. 46.

Where a railroad company promises to build and maintain a station and stop two trains a day for the use of one who has been induced thereby to purchase land, the railroad may be excused from such promise if its duty to the public is thereby disturbed; Atlanta & W. P. R. Co. v. Camp, 130 Ga. 1, 60 S. E. 177, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 594, 124 Am. St. Rep. 151, 14 Ann. Cas. 439.

A railroad company is bound to use only such degree of care in constructing its stations and platforms as is sufficient to protect passengers using ordinary care from injury; Lauterer v. R. Co., 128 Fed. 540, 63 C. C. A. 38.

See DEPOT.

STATIONER'S COMPANY. A body formed in 1557 in London of 97 London stationers and their successors, to whom was entrusted, in the first instance, and, under Orders in Council, the censorship of the press.

STATIONERS' HALL. The hall of the Stationers' Company at which every person claiming copyright must register his title, and without such registration no action shall be commenced against persons infringing it.

STATIST. A statesman; a politician; one skilled in government.

STATU LIBERI (Lat.). In Louisiana. Slaves for a time, who had acquired the right of being free at a time to come, or on a condition which was not fulfilled, or in a certain event which had not happened, but who in the meantime remained in the state of slavery." La. Civ. Code, art 37. See Valsain v. Cloutier, 3 La. 176, 22 Am. Dec. 179; Moose v. Allain, 4 Mart. (N. S. La.) 102. This is substantially the definition of the civil law. Hist. de la Jur. 1. 40; Dig. 40. 7. 1; Code 7. 2. 13.

STATUS. The status of an individual, used as a legal term, means the legal position of the individual in or with regard to the rest of the community. L. R. 4 P. D. 11. The rights, duties, capacities and incapacities which determine a person to a given class, constitute his status; Campb. Austin 137.

It also means estate, because it signifies the condition or circumstances in which one stands with regard to his property. In the Year Books, it was used in this sense; 2 Poll. & Maitl. Hist. E. L. 11.

The movement of progressive society has been from status to contract; Maine, Anc. Law 170.

"Maine's now celebrated dictum as to the movement from status to contract in progressive societies is perhaps to be understood as limited to the law of property, taking that term in its widest sense as inclusive of whatever has a value measurable in exchange. With that limitation the statement is certainly just, and has not ceased to be significant. . . . As regards the actual definition of different personal conditions, and the more personal relations incidental to them, it does not seem that a movement from status to contract can be asserted with any generality. . . . Status may yield ground to contract, but cannot itself be reduced to contract. On the other hand, contract has made attacks on property which have been repulsed. There was a time in the thirteenth century in which it seemed as if there was no rule of tenure that could not be modified by the agreement of parties. Our settled rules that only certain defined forms of interest in property can be created by private acts, our rule against perpetuities, are the answer of the common law to attempts to bring everything under private bargain and control. Maine guarded his position, however, to a considerable extent in the final words of this chapter, for he seems not to include marriage—at all events marriage among Western nations, which is preceded by and results from agreement of the parties—under the head of status. And, if the term is thus restricted, the gravest apparent exception to Maine's dictum is removed. This, of course, involves a sensible narrowing of the term 'status,' a much discussed term which, according to the best modern expositions, includes the sum total of a man's personal rights and duties (Salmond, Jurisprudence 253-257), or, to be verbally accurate, of his capacity for rights and duties (Holland, Jurisprudence 88). It is curious that the word 'estate,' which is nothing but the French form of 'status,' should have come to stand over against it in an almost opposite category. A man's estate is his measurable property; what we call his status is his position as a lawful man, a voter, and so forth. The liability of every citizen to pay rates and taxes is a matter of status; what a given citizen has to pay depends on his estate, or portions of it assigned as the measures of particular imposts. We have, too, an 'estate' in land, which so far preserves the original associations of 'status' that, as we have just noted, contract may not alter its incidents or nature." Pollock's Maine's Anc. Law 184.

As to Mr. Dicey's suggestion (Law and Public Opinion 283) that "the rights of workmen to compensation for accidents have become a matter, not of contract, but of status," Sir F. Pollock points out in the same note to Maine, at page 185, that many other kinds of contracts have long had incidents attached to them by law.

The action of assumpsit must be reckoned a technical instrument which gave no small help to the forces which were making for the transition from status to contract; 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 349.

STATUS QUO. The existing state of things at any given date.

STATUS QUO ANTE BELLUM. A phrase used in international law to indicate the condition of the territory of a belligerent and the ownership of the property of the subjects of such belligerent, as they existed prior to the breaking out of war, which, under the stipulations of some treaties of peace are restored to their former ownership. In other treaties, a belligerent who has possession of an enemy's territory or property at the end of the war retains it. See TREATY OF PEACE; UTI POSSIDETIS.

STATUTA INCERTI TEMPORIS. See NOVA STATUTA.

STATUTE. A law established by the act of the legislative power. An act of the legislature. The written will of the legislature, solemnly expressed according to the forms necessary to constitute it the law of the state.

It is said that "statute" (statutum) was first used in an act of 55 Henry III.; 21 Law Mag. & Rev. 310.

This word is used to designate the written law in contradistinction to the unwritten law. See COMMON LAW.

Among the civilians, the term statute is generally applied to laws and regulations of every sort; every provision of law which ordains, permits, or prohibits anything is designated a statute, without considering from what source it arises. Sometimes the word is used in contradistinction to the imperial Roman law, which, by way of eminence, civilians call the common law. Wharton.

A negative statute is one expressed in negative terms, and so controls the common law that it has no force in opposition to the statute. Bac. Abr. Statute (G).

An affirmative statute is one which is enacted in affirmative terms.

Such a statute does not necessarily take away the common law; Co. 2d Inst. 200; if, for example, a statute without negative words declares that when certain requisites shall have been complied with, deeds shall have a certain effect as evidence, this does not prevent their being used in evidence, though the requisites have not been complied with, in the same manner they might have been before the statute was passed; Jackson v. Bradt, 2 Caines (N. Y.) 169; or a custom; 6 Cl. & F. 41. Nor does such an affirmative statute repeal a precedent statute if the two can both be given effect; Dwarris, Statute 474. The distinction between negative and affirmative statutes has been considered inaccurate; 13 Q. B. 33.

A declaratory statute is one which is passed in order to put an end to a doubt as to what is the common law or the meaning of another statute, and which declares what it is and ever has been.

Penal statutes are those which command or prohibit a thing under a certain penalty. Bac. Abr. A statute affixing a penalty to an act, though it does not in words prohibit it, thereby makes it illegal; Hallett v. Novion, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 273; 37 E. L. & E. 475; Skelton v. Bliss, 7 Ind. 77. See INTERPRETATION.

A perpetual statute is one for the continuance of which there is no limited time, although it be not expressly declared to be so.

If a statute which did not itself contain any limitation is to be governed by another which is temporary only, the former will also be temporary and dependent upon the existence of the latter. Bac. Abr. Statute (D).

Private statutes or acts are those of which the judges will not take notice without pleading; such as concern only a particular species or person. See 1 Bla. Com. 86. Special or private acts are regarded as "rather exceptions than rules, being those which only operated on particular persons and private concerns" (cited with approval in Wells v. Nickles, 104 U. S. 447, 26 L. Ed. 825, where it was held that where an act amends a general act it is a public act).

Private statutes may be rendered public by being so declared by the legislature; 1 Bla. Com. 85; 4 Co. 76. And see 1 Kent 459. In England private statutes are said not to bind strangers; though they should not contain any saving of their rights. A general saving clause used to be inserted in all private bills; but it is settled that, even if such saving clause be omitted, the act will bind none but the parties. But this doctrine does not seem to be applicable to this country.

Public statutes are those of which the courts will take judicial notice without pleading or proof.

They are either general or local,—that is, have operation throughout the state at large, or within a particular locality. It is not easy to say what degree of limitation will render an act local. Thus, it has been held that a public act relating to one county only is not local within the meaning of a constitutional provision which forbids enactments of local bills embracing more than one subject; Conner v. New York, 5 N. Y. 285.

A remedial statute is one made to supply such defects or abridge such superfluities in the common law as may have been discovered. 1 Bla. Com. 86.

These remedial statutes are themselves divided into enlarging statutes, by which the common law is made more comprehensive and extended than it was before, and into restraining statutes, by which it is narrowed down to that which is just and proper. The term remedial statute is also applied to those acts which give the party injured a remedy; and in some cases such statutes are penal; Esp. Pen. Acts 1.

A temporary statute is one which is limited in its duration at the time of its enactment.

It continues in force until the time of its limitation has expired, unless sooner repealed. A statute which by reason of its nature has only a single and temporary operation—e. g. an appropriation bill—is also called a temporary statute.

There is also a distinction in England between general and special statutes. The former affect the whole community, or large and important sections, the interest of which may be identical with those of the whole body. Special statutes relate to private interests, and deal with the affairs of persons, places, classes, etc., which are not of a public character. Wilb. Stat. 218. See Wells v. Nickles, 104 U. S. 447, 26 L. Ed. 825.

Local statute is used by Lord Mansfield as opposed to personal statute, which relates to personal transitory contracts; whereas a local statute refers to things in a certain jurisdiction alone; e. g. the statute of frauds relates only to things in England; 1 W. Bla. 246.

As to mandatory and directory statutes, it is said that when the provision of a statute is the essence of the thing required to be done, it is mandatory; Norwegian Street, 81 Pa. 349; otherwise, when it relates to form and manner; and where an act is incident, or after jurisdiction acquired, it is directory merely; Davis v. Smith, 58 N. H. 17.

Expository statutes. Acts passed for the purpose of affecting the construction to be placed upon prior acts. They are often expressed thus: "The true intent and meaning of an act passed . . . be and is hereby declared to be;" "the provisions of the act shall not hereafter extend"; or "are hereby declared and enacted not to apply," and the like. This is a common mode of legislation. "It is always competent to change an existing law by a declaratory statute; and where the statute is only to operate on future cases it is no objection to its validity that it assumes the law to have been in the past what it is now declared that it shall be in the future." Cooley, Const. Lim. 94; such acts are binding upon the courts, although the latter, without such a direction, would have understood the language to have meant something different. They have the same effect upon the construction of former acts, in the absence of intervening rights, as if they had been embodied in the former act at the time of its passage; Endlich, Interpr. Stat. 365. See Pomeroy's Sedgw. Constr. Stat. Law 214; Sutherl. Stat. Constr. sec. 402; Washington, A. & G. R. Co. v. Martin, 7 D. C. 120; Dequindre v. Williams, 31 Ind. 444; People v. Board of Sup'rs, 16 N. Y. 424.

A statute declaring the meaning of a prior act, etc., will not be construed to be an invasion of the judicial function, but will be treated as a direct enactment controlling the meaning of the prior act; Singer Mfg. Co. v. McCulloch, 24 Fed. 667. But it has been held that the legislature cannot pass an act so as to compel the courts in the future to adopt a particular construction of an earlier statute; Com. v. Warwick, 172 Pa. 140, 33 Atl. 373, Mitchell, J., dissenting from the judgment of the court as being "an unprecedented and unwarranted invasion by the judiciary of the legislative authority." But see Titusville Iron Works v. Oil Co., 122 Pa. 627, 15 Atl. 917, 1 L. R. A. 361, and Haley v. Philadelphia, 68 Pa. 45, 8 Am. Rep. 153, where the doctrine seems to have been confined to retrospective legislation.

The legislature cannot prevent the courts from putting their own interpretation on an act, at least as to rights which vested before the declaratory act was passed; Virginia Coupon Cases, 25 Fed. 641; Stephenson v. Doe, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 508, 46 Am. Dec. 489.

See an article in 35 Am. L. Reg. & Rev. 25, by William M. Meigs.

It is a general rule that when the provision of a statute is general, everything which is necessary to make such provision effectual is supplied by the common law; Co. Litt. 235; Co. 2d Inst. 222; and when a power is given by statute, everything necessary for making it effectual is given by implication: quando lex aliquid concedit, concedere videtur et id sine quo res ipsa esse non potest; 12 Co. 130.

The provisions of a statute cannot be evaded by any shift or contrivance; 2 B. & C. 655. Whatever is prohibited by law to be done directly cannot legally be effected by an indirect and circuitous contrivance; 7 Cl. & F. 540.

Reference Bureaus. The mode of enacting laws is regulated by the constitution of the Union and of the several states respectively. The advantage of having a law officer, or board of officers, to revise bills and amendments of bills during their progress through the legislature, has been somewhat discussed. Agencies are established in some of the states for rendering technical assistance to legislators. Reference bureaus connected with state libraries, universities or historical societies have been established in Alabama, Connecticut, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Massachusetts, Nebraska, New York, North Dakota, Rhode Island and Virginia. These have been authorized by law in some states and in others without express authority. Reference and drafting bureaus have been established by statute in California, Indiana, Michigan, Ohio, Pennsylvania, South Dakota, Texas, Vermont and Wisconsin. Bureaus or offices have been created by statute or legislative rule for drafting work only in Connecticut, Massachusetts and New York.

In the Michigan act (1907) the bureau is required to procure and compile, in suitable and convenient form for ready reference and access, information as to proposed and pending legislation in other states and to investigate the operation and effect of new legislation in other states and countries, so that any legislator or citizen may have the fullest information thereon, and it shall also give such advice and assistance to the members of the legislature as they may require in the preparation of bills, and shall draft bills upon such subjects as they may desire.

See Report of the Committee on Legislative Drafting, Am. Bar Assoc., 1913, p. 622; also Report for 1882; Reports of Engl. Stat. Law Com. 1856-1857; Street, Council of Revision; PARLIAMENTARY COUNSEL.

Enacting legislation. As to formalities required it has been held that a statute which the legislative journals showed was never passed, was valid because signed by the presiding officers of the legislature; Wyatt v. Mfg. Co., 116 N. C. 271, 22 S. E. 120; and that it is not admissible to prove that an act signed by the governor was in fact passed by the legislature and sent to him within two days next preceding the final adjournment of the legislature in violation of the constitution; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Taggart, 141 Ind. 281, 40 N. E. 1051, 60 L. R. A. 671.

The signing by the speaker of the United States house of representatives, and by the president of the senate, in open session, of an enrolled bill, is an official attestation by the two houses that such bill has passed congress, and when the bill thus attested, receives the approval of the president, and is deposited in the department of state its authentication as a bill that has passed congress is complete and unimpeachable; Marshall Field & Co. v. Clark, 143 U. S. 649, 12 Sup. Ct. 495, 36 L. Ed. 294. See JOURNALS.

As to whether the president has the power to sign bills after the adjournment of congress, Attorney-General Wirt was of the opinion that he had not, and President Monroe acted on his opinion. President Lincoln signed the act of March 12, 1863, after the adjournment of congress. A house committee subsequently reported that in their opinion the act was not in force, but the house never acted upon their report. The court of claims holds that this act has been recognized by the supreme court, and was therefore valid; see 32 Amer. Law Rev. 211; U. S. v. Weil, 29 Ct. Cl. 549.

Attorney-General Garland advised President Cleveland that he was without authority to sign a bill after adjournment.

In U. S. v. Weil, 29 Ct. Cl. 523, it was held that the president had the power to sign bills after the adjournment of congress. In cases arising under state constitutions, it was held in Fowler v. Peirce, 2 Cal. 165; Hardee v. Gibbs, 50 Miss. 802, that the power to sign a bill ceased with the adjournment, but under the language of the Illinois constitution, a signature after adjournment was held valid; Seven Hickory v. Ellery, 103 U. S. 423, 26 L. Ed. 435. The President can sign a bill during a recess of congress; La Abra Silver Minn. Co. v. U. S., 175 U. S. 423, 20 Sup. Ct. 168, 44 L. Ed. 223 (not decided whether he can do so after final adjournment). See EXECUTIVE POWER.

In People v. Bowen, 21 N. Y. 517, it was held, under a constitutional provision almost identical with that of the constitution of the United States, that a signature after adjournment was valid. And this was followed in State v. Fagan, 22 La. Ann. 545.

Much discussion has arisen on the question whether a statute which appears to be contrary to the laws of God and nature, and to right reason, is void. Earlier dicta in the affirmative (see 8 Co. *118 a; 12 Mod. 687) are not now considered to be law; L. R. 6. C. P. 582. See Dwarris, Stat. 482. The question as applicable to this country is treated under CONSTITUTIONAL. It being historically true that the American people are a religious people, as shown by the religious objects expressed by the original grants and charters of the colonies, and the recognition of religion in the most solemn acts of their history, as well as in the constitutions of the states and the nation, the courts, in construing statutes, should not impute to any legislature a purpose of action against religion; Church of the Holy Trinity v. U. S., 143 U. S. 457, 12 Sup. Ct. 511, 36 L. Ed. 226.

As to statutes which contravene the constitution, see CONSTITUTIONAL.

By the common law, statutes took effect by relation back to the first day of the session at which they were enacted; 4 Term 660. The injustice which this rule often worked led to the statute of 33 Geo. III. c. 13, which declared that, except when otherwise provided, statutes should take effect from the day of obtaining the royal assent, unless otherwise ordered therein. This rule, however, does not obviate the hardship of holding men responsible under a law before its promulgation. By the Code Napoléon, a law takes effect in each department of the empire as many days after its promulgation in that department as there are distances of twenty leagues between the seat of government and the place of promulgation. The general rule in America is, that an act takes effect from the time when the formalities of enactment are actually complete, unless it is ordered otherwise or there is some constitutional or statutory rule on the subject; Cool-ey, Const. Lim. 187; Matthews v. Zane, 7 Wheat. (U. S.) 164, 5 L. Ed. 425.

The constitutions of many states contain provisions that acts shall not take effect till a certain time after their passage, or after adjournment of the legislature, but such constitutions usually contain also a provision that the legislature may, in a case of emergency, provide that an act shall take effect immediately, and it has become a common practice so to provide even in ordinary acts. But an act which merely provides that "it shall take effect on and after its passage and approval" does not come within such an emergency as to take effect immediately; State v. Exp. Co., 80 Neb. 823, 115 N. W. 619.

Where an act was passed May 16, which declared that it should take effect May 14, it went into effect on its passage; McLaughlin v. Newark, 57 N. J. L. 298, 30 Atl. 543.

The Tariff Act of 1897 took effect at the moment it was approved by the president, which was six minutes past 4 o'clock p. m., Washington time, on July 24, 1897, and goods imported and entered for consumption on that day, but prior to such approval, were dutiable under prior legislation; U. S. v. Iselin, 87 Fed. 194.

An act increasing taxes and annexing penalties, falls within the first article of the constitution prohibiting ex post facto laws, and giving effect to statutes only from the time of their receiving the president's signature; Salmon v. Burgess, 1 Hughes, 356, Fed. Cas. No. 12,262. "The law is an entirety. If, as to its penal features, it cannot be held to have gone into effect until 9 p. m. of the day of its enactment, neither can it be held to have gone into effect before that hour as to its other provisions." Id. See, also, U. S. v. Burr, 159 U. S. 78, 15 Sup. Ct. 1002, 40 L. Ed. 82, as to the tariff act of 1894.

Local and special legislation. In all but a few states constitutional provisions are found forbidding the passage of local or private or special laws. While these provisions were not unknown at an earlier date, the principle was fully developed in the Illinois constitution of 1870, and has become more fixed as a part of American constitutional law since then. In some states, such prohibited legislation is specified as "local or special," and in some "special or private," and in some "private, local, or special." The act of congress of July 30, 1886, prohibited local and special legislation in the territories. See Binney, Restrict. upon Loc. and Spec. Legisl. 130. The subject-matter of legislation to which this prohibition applies varies in different states. Mr. Binney has grouped them in a general way. See id. 132. Among the subject-matters most usually found are: changing names of persons; legitimization and adoption of children; divorce; granting charters; changing laws of descent; providing for the sale or conveyance of real estate of persons under disability; granting the right of eminent domain; regulating legal procedure; incorporating municipalities; creating offices; or regulating the fees of officers; laying out highways; providing for the management of public schools; taxation. In some states special laws are permitted only when a general law cannot be made applicable.

A general law is defined as "neither for one or more particular persons, nor to operate exclusively in any particular part or parts of the state"; Binney, Restr. etc. 22. Such an act is not necessarily universal and need not be one which operates on all persons or all things; a law which affects a class of persons or things may be a general law; Brooks v. Hyde, 37 Cal. 375; State v. Parsons, 40 N. J. L. 1. A law is to be regarded as such when its provisions apply to all objects of legislation, distinguished alike by quality and attribute which necessitate the enactment as manifest relation. Such laws must embrace all and exclude none whose condition and wants render such legislation equally necessary or appropriate to them as a class: Randolph v. Wood, 49 N. J. L. 88, 7 Atl. 286. See GENERAL LAWS.

A special law is one which relates either to particular persons, places, or things, or to persons, places, or things which though not particularized, are separated by any method of selection from the whole class to which the law might, but for such legislation, be applicable. Binney, Restr. etc. 26.

A local law is one whose operation is confined within territorial limits, other than those of the whole state or any properly constituted class or locality therein.

The features of local and special legislation overlap, and they are not conterminous. The matter to which a local law relates may be either general or special, but in either case the law itself is not in force outside of the locality for which it is passed.

The following are held special acts and invalid: An act for holding primary elections made applicable only to counties casting a certain number of votes at the last election, which makes it applicable only to two counties; Marsh v. Hanly, 111 Cal. 368, 43 Pac. 975; an act, though general in form, regulating the re-location of county seats which was in fact applicable to but a single county; Mode v. Beasley, 143 Ind. 306, 42 N. E. 727; an act for the extension of corporate limits of cities having a certain population which can be applicable only to one city; State v. Des Moines, 96 Ia. 521, 65 N. W. 818, 31 L. R. A. 186, 59 Am. St. Rep. 381; an act relating to the collection of taxes, cities of the first, second, and fourth class being excepted, and it not being confined to municipal matters; Van Loon v. Engle, 171 Pa. 157, 33 Atl. 77.

The following are not within the constitutional prohibition: An act amending a city charter granted previously to the adoption of the constitution; Cunningham v. Denver, 23 Colo. 18, 45 Pac. 356, 58 Am. St. Rep. 212; an act relating to a subject as to which there was already a local law; 96 Ga. 403; one providing a daily pay for jurors although it only applied to a single county in which there was already a special law, it being at the time of the passage of the act the existing rate in the remaining counties; State v. Sullivan, 62 Minn. 283, 64 N. W. 813; an act making it a misdemeanor to work as a barber on Sunday, exempting from its operation New York and Saratoga; People v. Sheriff of Kings County, 13 Misc. Rep. 587, 35 N. Y. Supp. 19; an act providing a different and better system of education for cities of ten thousand or more inhabitants than is enjoyed by the rest of the state; Holmes & Bull Furniture Co. v. Hedges, 13 Wash. 696, 43 Pac. 944.

A territorial act classifying counties according to the equalized assessed valuation of property and graduating salaries of county officers in reference to population is not a local special law under the act of congress; Harwood v. Wentworth, 162 U. S. 547, 16 Sup. Ct. 890, 40 L. Ed. 1069.

The proviso of a general act that it shall not apply to suits pending at its passage does not render it special; New York & O. L. Co. v. Weidner, 169 Pa. 359, 32 Atl. 557.

An act offering a reward for the first to obtain in each county an artesian well is void; McRae v. Cochise County, 5 Ariz. 26, 44 Pac. 299. At least two individuals, actual or potential, are necessary to constitute a class which may be the subject of an act on the subject concerning which special acts are forbidden; such a class cannot be created by statute, however general, which takes as a class characteristic, to designate the members of a class, peculiarities of a single individual; Groves v. Grant County Court, 42 W. Va. 587, 26 S. E. 460. An act forbidding a sale of stocks of bonds and provisions, cotton, etc., on margin without delivering the property is not a special act; State v. Gritzer, 134 Mo. 512, 36 S. W. 39; but an act prohibiting book-making and pool-selling excepting on a race course is a special act; State v. Walsh, 136 Mo. 400, 37 S. W. 1112, 35 L. R. A. 231; and so is an act permitting a limited divorce instead of an absolute divorce when asked by a person holding conscientious scruples against absolute divorce; Middleton v. Middleton, 54 N. J. Eq. 692, 35 Atl. 1065, 37 Atl. 1106, 36 L. R. A. 221, 55 Am. St. Rep. 602.

When there is a general act for the incorporation of companies with the right of amendment reserved to the state, any amendment thereto must affect all corporations incorporated under the act; Central Trust Co. of New York v. R. Co., 82 Fed. 1; and where it is limited to cities of a certain size whereby it can be applicable only to a certain city, it is special legislation and void; id.

Classification. Under modern constitutions which prohibit special legislation, it has been found necessary to permit of the classification of certain subjects of legislation, chiefly in relation to municipalities or what may be termed home rule.

While the classification of municipalities is permitted, it is held that not more than three classes can lawfully be made in cities in Pennsylvania; Appeal of Ayars, 122 Pa. 266, 16 Atl. 356, 2 L. R. A. 577; and that a classification, which is in effect legislation for certain cities to the exclusion of others which are really of the same class, is invalid; Appeal of Scowden, 96 Pa. 422.

A classification act may furnish a precedent for the legislature in future cases, but cannot control its action. The constitutionality of each law which establishes or adopts a classification must be judged of separately, and the mere fact that a classification has constitutionally been employed in one case does not bind the legislature to employ it again, even in a similar case; Calvo v. Westcott, 55 N. J. L. 78, 25 Atl. 269.

Wheeler v. Philadelphia, 77 Pa. 338 (1875), is an early and leading case on classification. It holds that a statute which relates to persons or things as a class is a general law, while a statute which relates to particular persons or things of a class is special; that the necessity for classification is recognized in the constitution by the creation of courts on a basis of population and that classification is incident to legislation and necessary to the promotion of the public welfare; that the question is not whether it is authorized but whether it is expressly prohibited in the constitution. It further holds that, for the purpose of taxation, real estate may be classified; as into timber lands, mineral lands, farm lands, etc., and that the act of 1874, which classifies cities according to their population, is constitutional.

The subject of classification in another connection is treated in EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS.

In a statute the words "it shall be lawful" are usually only permissive; they confer a faculty or power; but there may be something in the act imposing a duty to exercise such power, in which case the words become obligatory; 5 App. Cas. 222.

STATUTE MERCHANT. A security entered before the Mayor of London, or some chief warden of a city, in pursuance of 13 Ed. I. stat. 3, c. 1, whereby the lands of the debtor are conveyed to the creditor till out of the rents and profits of them his debt may be satisfied. 2 Bla. Com. 160. It is acknowledged before the court; Ames, Lect. Leg. Hist. 102.

STATUTE OF FRAUDS. See FRAUDS, STATUTE OF.

The statute of frauds "is a weapon of defence, not of offence," and "does not make any signed instrument a valid contract by reason of the signature, if it is not such according to the good faith and real intentions of the parties." Lord Selborne, C., in L. R. 8 Ch. 351.

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS. See LIMITATIONS.

STATUTE ROLLS. See ROLLS.

STATUTE STAPLE. The statute of the staple, 27 Ed. III. stat. 2, confined the sale of all commodities to be exported to certain towns in England, called estaple or staple, where foreigners might resort. It authorized a security for money, commonly called statute staple, to be taken by traders for the benefit of commerce; the mayor of the place is entitled to take recognizance of a debt in proper form, which had the effect to convey the lands of the debtor to the creditor till out of the rents and profits of them he should be satisfied. 2 Bla. Com. 160; 2 Rolle, Abr. 446; Bac. Abr. Execution (B. 1); Co. 4th Inst. 238.

The statute staple—the recognizance "in the nature of a statute staple," which afterwards became a usual form of security in the ordinary courts—was introduced in the staple courts. It was a bond of record acknowledged before the mayor of the staple. A seal was required and that was all that was necessary to attest the contract. A number of the most considerable towns in the kingdom were named as statute towns. To these the principle raw commodities of the kingdom were brought for sale and were known as the "staple" wares of England, but the term came to be applied almost exclusively to wool. The system came to an end about 1660. In 1669, a charter was granted to the staplers, as "The Mayor, Constables, and Merchants of the Staple of England." A court of the staple had jurisdiction of civil actions in which staplers were concerned. It was held by the mayor and constables of the staple, who had power to keep the peace and to arrest for trespass, debt, or breach of contract; Brodhurst, The staple, in 3 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. L. H. 16 (17 L. Q. R. 56).

STATUTES AT LARGE. Statutes in full or at length as originally enacted, in distinction from abridgments, compilations, and revisions. First used in one of the Elizabethan editions of the statutes; Ilbert, Legislative Methods 21.

A volume of United States Statutes at Large is published for each congress, and is the official publication of the acts of congress. See REVISED STATUTES. If there is any variance between an act of congress, as found in the printed volume of statutes, and the original, as enrolled and deposited with the secretary of state, the latter will prevail; McLaughlin v. Menotti, 105 Cal. 572, 38 Pac. 973, 39 Pac. 207.

STATUTI (Lat.). In Roman Law. Those advocates whose names were inscribed in the registers of matriculation, and formed a part of the college of advocates. The number of advocates of this class was limited. They were distinguished from the supernumeraries, from the time of Constantine to Justinian. See Calvinus, Lex.

STATUTORY OBLIGATION. An obligation arising under a statute. See OBLIGATION.

STATUTORY STAPLE. An ancient writ that lay to take the body of a person and seize the lands and goods of one who had forfeited a bond called statute staple. Reg. Orig. 151.

STATUTUM DE MERCATORIBUS. The statute of Acton Burnell (q. v.).

STATUTUM HIBERNIÆ DE COHÆREDIBUS. The third public act in the statute book. It appears to be an instruction given by the king to his justices in Ireland, directing them how to proceed in a certain point where they entertained doubt. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. L. 259.

STATUTUM SESSIONUM. The Statute Sessions. A meeting in every hundred of constables and householders, by custom, for the ordering of servants, and debating of differences between masters and servants, rating of wages, etc., 5 Eliz. c. 4.

STAY AND TRADE. Within the meaning of an insurance policy, covering a ship during her stay and trade at a place these words were held to mean during her stay there for the purpose of trade; a stay for a purpose unconnected with trade is a deviation. 42 L. J. Ex. 60. See DEVIATION.

STAY LAWS. Acts of the legislature prescribing a stay in certain cases, or a stay of foreclosure of mortgages, or closing the courts for a limited period, or otherwise suspending legal remedies. See STAY OF EXECUTION; MORATORIUM.

STAY OF EXECUTION. In Practice. A term during which no execution can issue on a judgment.

It is either conventional, when the parties agree that no execution shall issue for a certain period, or it is granted by law, usually on condition of entering bail or security for the money.

An execution issued before the expiration of the stay is irregular and will be set aside: and the plaintiff in such case may be liable to an action for damages. What is said above refers to civil cases.

In criminal cases, when a woman is capitally convicted and she is proved to be en-cinte there shall be a stay of execution till after her delivery. See PREGNANCY; JURY OF WOMEN.

A statute which authorizes stay of execution for an unreasonable and indefinite period, on judgments rendered on pre-existing contracts, is void; Bunn v. Gorgas, 41 Pa. 441; Stevens v. Andrews, 31 Mo. 205; a law permitting a year's stay upon judgments where security is given has been held invalid; Webster v. Rose, 6 Heisk. 93, 19 Am. Rep. 593. See Cooley, Const. Lim., 2d ed. 354, n.

STAYING PROCEEDINGS. The suspension of an action.

Proceedings are stayed absolutely or conditionally.

They are peremptorily stayed when the plaintiff is wholly incapacitated from suing: as, for example, when the plaintiff is not the holder, nor beneficially interested in a bill on which he has brought his action; 2 Cr. & M. 416; 3 Chitty, Pr. 628; or when the plaintiff admits in writing that he has no cause of action; 3 Chitty, Pr. 370, 630; or when an action is brought contrary to good faith; 3 Chitty, Pr. 633.

Proceedings are sometimes stayed until some order of the court shall have been complied with; as, when the plaintiff resides in a foreign country or in another state, or is insolvent, and he has been ruled to give security for costs, the proceedings are stayed until such security shall be given; 3 Chitty, Pr. 633, 635; or until the payment of costs in a former action; 1 Chitty, Bail. 195.

STEALING. This term imports, ex vi termini, nearly the same as larceny; but in common parlance it does not always import a felony. People v. Robertson, 3 Wheel. Cr. Cas. (N. Y.) 183.

In slander cases, it seems that the term stealing takes its complexion from the subject-matter to which it is applied, and will be considered as intended of a felonious stealing, if a felony could have been committed of such subject-matter; Dexter v. Taber, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 239; Wallis v. Mease, 3 Binn. (Pa.) 546. The word steal is held synonymous with theft. Carr v. State, 9 Tex. App. 463. See Young v. State, 12 Tex. App. 614.

STEAMSHIP. A vessel, the principal motive power of which is steam and not sails.

L. R. 7 Q. B. 569. See Western Ins. Co. v. Cropper, 32 Pa. 352, 75 Am. Dec. 561. The owner of a steamboat is not an innkeeper so as to be liable for personal property stolen from a passenger. Clark v. Burns, 118 Mass. 275, 19 Am. Rep. 456.

Undertaking to carry a passenger in the steerage of a steamship from one ocean port to another includes the furnishing of such passenger with a berth, unless it was understood beforehand that he was to make the voyage without it; The Oriflamme, 3 Sawy. 397, Fed. Cas. No. 10572; and see Patterson v. Steamship Co., 140 N. C. 412, 53 S. E. 224, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1012, 111 Am. St. Rep. 848.

See COMMON CARRIER; SLEEPING-CAR; SHIP; VESSEL.

STELLIONATE. In Civil Law. A name given generally to all species of frauds committed in making contracts.

This word is said to be derived from the Latin stellio, a kind of lizard remarkable for its cunning and the change of its color, because those guilty of frauds used every art and cunning to conceal them. But more particularly it was the crime of a person who fraudulently assigned, sold, or engaged the thing which he had before assigned, sold, or engaged to another, unknown to the person with whom he was dealing. Dig. 47. 20. 3; Code 9. 34. 1; Merlin, Répert.; La. Civ. Code, art. 2069; 1 Brown, Civ. Law 426. As a punishment those persons who granted double conveyances were declared infamous and their lives and goods were at the mercy of the king. Ersk. Prin. 441.

STELLIONATUS. A criminal fraud not amounting to any other definite offence. Pollock, Expansion of C. L. 84.

STENOGRAPHER. One who writes in short-hand, by using abbreviations or characters for words.

He does not come within the common-law definition of the word "clerk." In re Appropriations for Deputies, 25 Neb. 662, 41 N. W. 643. Within the meaning of a statute exempting laborers' wages from attachment, he was held a laborer; Cohen v. Aldrich, 5 Ga. App. 256, 62 S. E. 1015. Courts have the power to appoint them; People v. Kelley, 134 Ill. App. 642.

The depositions of witnesses taken in short-hand, and transcribed, will be suppressed, if not read to and signed by the witness, though the witness' subsequent attendance for the purpose could not be procured; In re Cary, 9 Fed. 754; but see contra, Brown v. Luehrs, 79 Ill. 576, where it is held that the transcript of evidence taken in short-hand is admissible, where the stenographer testifies that he transcribed the testimony, and that the transcript is correct; that the witnesses were sworn and testified as therein stated. See also Stewart v. Bank, 43 Mich. 257, 5 N. W. 302. Where it is sought to impeach a witness' testimony by proving his testimony at a former trial, the stenographer is not the only witness who may be called, but any one who heard the testimony may be; State v. McDonald, 65 Me. 466; Brice v. Miller, 35 S. C. 537, 15 S. E. 768.

A stenographic report of the testimony of an absent witness, at a former trial, may be admitted if complete and correct; Chicago, St. P., M. & O. R. Co. v. Myers, 80 Fed. 361, 25 C. C. A. 486; or a copy of testimony compared with a stenographic report thereof, by a person who was present at the trial and remembers the testimony as given; Southern R. Co. v. Williams, 113 Ala. 620, 21 South. 328. See MEMORANDUM.

In Pennsylvania, where a stenographer is appointed under the provisions of an act authorizing the appointment of stenographers in the several courts of the commonwealth, the stenographer who actually takes the testimony must certify to the correctness of the transcript which he files, and the trial judge should order the transcript filed and certify to its correctness; Woodward v. Heist, 180 Pa. 161, 36 Atl. 645, 1131.

The charges of a stenographer are not taxable for costs in a suit in equity; Bridges v. Sheldon, 7 Fed. 42; but the agreement of the parties may make them taxable costs, though not so by statute; 1 Bingh. 345. See Phares v. Barber, 61 Ill. 271; Misner v. Darling, 44 Mich. 438, 7 N. W. 77. It is held that the use of stenographers is so general that it must be assumed that when a court appoints an auditor, it by implication authorizes and directs him to make reasonable use of stenographers, and the charges therefor must be classed with the ordinary charges necessarily incurred by the auditor, which together with the auditor's fees are ordinarily taxable against the losing party; Corporation of St. Anthony in New Bedford v. Houlihan, 184 Fed. 252, 106 C. C. A. 394.

Compensation for testimony taken before a referee is the subject of contract, as a stenographer is not then an officer of the court; Coale v. Suckert, 18 Misc. Rep. 76, 41 N. Y. Supp. 583.

An association of stenographers, whose leading object is to control the prices charged by its members, is an illegal combination, and its rules will not be enforced; More v. Bennett, 140 Ill. 69, 29 N. E. 888, 15 L. R. A. 361, 33 Am. St. Rep. 216.

The dictation of a libellous letter to a confidential stenographer is held to be sufficient publication of the libel; Gambrell v. Schooley, 93 Md. 48, 48 Atl. 730, 52 L. R. A. 87, 86 Am. St. Rep. 414.

STEP-DAUGHTER. The daughter of one's wife by a former husband, or of one's husband by a former wife.

STEP-FATHER. The husband of one's mother by virtue of a marriage subsequent to that of which the person spoken of is the offspring.

STEP-MOTHER. The wife of one's father by virtue of a marriage subsequent to that of which the person spoken of is the offspring.

STEP-SON. The son of one's wife by a former husband, or of one's husband by a former wife.

STERE. A French measure of solidity, used in measuring wood. See MEASURE.

STERILITY. Barrenness; incapacity to produce a child. It is curable and incurable; when of the latter kind at the time of the marriage, and arising from impotency, it is a good cause for dissolving a marriage. 1 Foderé, Méd. Lég. § 254. See VIABILITY.

STERLING. Current money of Great Britain, but anciently a small coin worth about one penny, and so called, as some suppose, because it was stamped with the figure of a small star, or, as others suppose, because it was first stamped in England in the reign of King John by merchants from Germany called Esterlings. See HANSEATIC LEAGUE. Pounds sterling originally signified so many pounds in weight of these coins. Thus we find in Matthew Paris, A. D. 1242, the expression Accepit a rege pro stipendio tredecim libras esterlingorum. The secondary or derived sense is a certain value in current money, whether in coins or other currency. Lowndes 14; Watts, Gloss. Sterling.

STET PROCESSUS (Lat.). In Practice. An order made, upon proper cause shown, that the process remain stationary. As, where a defendant having become insolvent would, by moving judgment in the case of nonsuit, compel a plaintiff to proceed, the court will, on an affidavit of the fact of insolvency, award a stet processus. See 7 Taunt. 180; 1 Chitty, Bail. 738; 10 Wentw. Pl. 43.

STEVEDORE. A person employed in loading and unloading vessels. Dunlap, Adm. Pract. 98.

The contract of the stevedore with the ship is unquestionably maritime; Imbroke v. Hamburg-American Steam Packet Co., 190 Fed. 229; but he has no lien; The John Shay, 81 Fed. 216. See 70 L. R. A. 353, note. See LIENS.

STEWARD. Formerly an officer of disputes, namely, a keeper of the courts. Co. Litt. 61. See COURT OF MARSHALSEA.

STEWARD OF A MANOR. An officer who transacts all the legal and other business connected with the estate, and takes care of the court rolls. In royal manors he is appointed by patent. See 10 George IV. c. 40, § 14.

STEWARD OF ALL ENGLAND. In Old English Law. An officer who was invested with various powers; among others, to preside on the trial of peers. See COURT OF THE LORD HIGH STEWARD.

Bouv.—197

STEWARD OF THE HOUSEHOLD. See MARSHALSEA.

STEWES. Places formerly permitted in England to women of professed lewdness, who for hire would prostitute their bodies to all comers.

These places were so called because the dissolute persons who visited them prepared themselves by bathing,—the word stews being derived from the old French estuves, stove, or hot bath. Co. 3d Inst. 205.

STILLICIDIUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. The rain-water that falls from the roof or eaves of a house by scattered drops. When it is gathered into a spout, it is called flumen. See SERVITUS; Inst. 3. 2. 1; Dig. 8. 2. 2.

STINT. The proportionable part of a man's cattle which he may keep upon the common. The general rule is that the commoner shall not turn more cattle upon the common than are sufficient to manure and stock the land to which his right of common is annexed. There may be such a thing as common without stint or number; but this is seldom granted, and a grantee cannot grant it over. 3 Bla. Com. 239; 1 Ld. Raym. 407.

STIPEND. A provision made for the support of the clergy. Salary; settled pay. In a bequest of £100 for masses for the repose of the testator's soul, at a stipend of five shillings each, it was held to mean price and not to involve any attempt to create a perpetuity; 19 L. R. Q. B. 177.

STIPENDIARY ESTATES. Estates granted in return for services, generally of a military kind. 1 Steph. Comm. 174.

STIPENDIARY MAGISTRATES. Paid police magistrates, appointed in London and other cities and large towns of England, with the authority and jurisdiction of justices of the peace. There are sundry acts on the subject.

STIPULATED DAMAGE. See LIQUIDATED DAMAGE.

STIPULATIO (Lat.). In Roman Law. A contract made in the following manner: the person to whom the promise was to be made proposed a question to him from whom it was to proceed, fully expressing the nature and extent of the engagement; and, the question so proposed being answered in the affirmative, the obligation was complete. No consideration was required.

STIPULATIO AQUILIANA. In Civil Law. A particular application of the stipulatio, which was used to collect together into one verbal contract all the liabilities of every kind and quality of the debtor, with a view to their being released or discharged by an acceptilatio, that mode of discharge being applicable only to the verbal contract. Brown.

STIPULATION. A material article in an agreement.

The term appears to have derived its meaning from the use of stipulatio above given; though it is applied more correctly and more conformably to its original meaning to denote the insisting upon and requiring any particular engagement. 2 Pothier. Obl., Evans ed. 19.

In Practice. An agreement between counsel respecting business before a court. Anderson, L. Dict.

A case may be reversed on stipulation in the appellate court; Union Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Waters, 124 U. S. 369, 8 Sup. Ct. 510, 31 L. Ed. 474. A stipulation of counsel does not bind a court to retry a case; Kidd v. McMillan, 21 Ala. 325; nor to continue the argument of a motion; Ford v. Holmes, 61 Ga. 419; but it does bind the court on a question of costs; Dorr v. Steichen, 18 Minn. 26 (Gil. 10).

A stipulation entered into for the purpose of saving time may be repudiated, where the facts subsequently developed show that it was inadvertently signed; but sufficient notice must be given to prevent prejudice to the other party; Carnegie Steel Co. v. Iron Co., 185 U. S. 403, 22 Sup. Ct. 698, 46 L. Ed. 968.

In Admiralty Practice. A recognizance of certain persons (called in the old law fide jussores) in the nature of bail for the appearance of a defendant. 3 Bla. Com. 108.

These stipulations are of three sorts: namely, judicatum solvi, by which the party is absolutely bound to pay such sum as may be adjudged by the court; de judicio sisti, by which he is bound to appear from time to time during the pendency of the suit, and to abide the sentence; de ratio, or de rato, by which he engages to ratify the acts of his proctor: this stipulation is not usual in the admiralty courts of the United States.

The securities are taken in the following manner: namely, cautio fide jussoria, by sureties; pignoratitia, by deposit; juratoria, by oath: this security is given when the party is too poor to find sureties, at the discretion of the court; nuda promissoria, by bare promise: this security is unknown in the admiralty courts of the United States. Dunl. Adm. Pr. 150.

STIRPES (Lat.). Descents. The root-stem, or stock of a tree. Figuratively, it signifies in law that person from whom a family is descended, and also the kindred or family.

STOCK. In Mercantile Law. The capital of a merchant, tradesman, or other person, including his merchandise, money, and credits. The goods and wares he has for sale and traffic.

In Corporation Law. A right to partake, according to the amount of the party's subscription, of the surplus profits obtained from the use and disposal of the capital stock of the company. Ang. & A. Corp. § 557.

The capital stock of a corporation is that money or property which is put into a fund by those who, by subscription therefor, become members of the corporate body. Burrall v. R. Co., 75 N. Y. 211. The phrase capital stock has been objected to, as the two words have separate meanings, capital being the sum subscribed and paid into the company, and stock being the thing which the subscriber receives for what he pays in: Dos Passos, St. Brokers 579. See People v. Com'rs of Taxes and Assessments, 23 N. Y. 192. The interest which each person has in the corporation is termed a share, which is the right to participate in the profits of the corporation, and, upon its dissolution, in the division of its assets. See Burrall v. R. Co., 75 N. Y. 211. "Capital stock" has been held to mean the amount contributed by the shareholders, and not the property of the company; State v. Morristown Fire Ass'n, 23 N. J. L. 195.

Capital stock is the sum fixed by the corporate charter as the amount paid in or to be paid in by the stockholders for the prosecution of the business of the corporation and for the benefit of corporate creditors. Cook, St. & Stockh. § 9. It is to be clearly distinguished from the amount of property possessed by the corporation; id.

The property or means contributed by the stockholders as the fund or basis for the business or enterprise for which the corporation or association was formed. Bailey v. Clark, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 284, 22 L. Ed. 651. See definitions in People v. Coleman, 126 N. Y. 433, 27 N. E. 818, 12 L. R. A. 762; St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. v. Loftin, 30 Ark. 693; Bent v. Hart, 10 Mo. App. 146. Capital stock is a different thing from shares of stock; the latter are evidences of ownership; Wilkes Barre Deposit & Sav. Bk. v. Wilkes Barre, 148 Pa. 601, 24 Atl. 111. Stock is commonly used to mean shares of stock, and it has been so held in a tax statute; Lockwood v. Weston, 61 Conn. 211, 23 Atl. 9.

The capital stock of a corporation differs widely in legal import from the aggregate shares into which it is divided by its charter (Farrington v. Tennessee, 95 U. S. 686, 24 L. Ed. 558; People v. Coleman, 126 N. Y. 437, 27 N. E. 818, 12 L. R. A. 762); while the former includes only the fund of money or other property derived by it from the sale or exchange of its shares of stock, the latter represents the totality of the corporate assets and property; Hamor v. Engineering Co., 84 Fed. 396.

A share of stock is a right which its owner has in the management, profits, and ultimate assets of the corporation. Cook, St. & Stockh. § 12. So, also, in re Clementi, 92 N. Y. 592; Van Allen v. Assessors, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 585, 18 L. Ed. 229. It is the right to participate in stockholders' meetings, and in the profits of the business, and to require that the corporate property shall not be diverted from the original purposes: Forbes v. R. Co., 2 Woods 331, Fed. Cas. No. 4,926.

The number of shares depends upon the statutory regulations, or in their absence the agreement of the parties forming the corporation: Somerset & K. R. Co. v. Cushing, 45 Me. 524. Shares may be arranged in classes, one class being preferred to another in the distribution of profits; Kent v. Min. Co., 78 N. Y. 159. Voting may be restricted to a certain class.

The ownership of shares is usually attested by a certificate issued under the corporate seal; and when a new transfer is effected, such certificate is surrendered and cancelled, and a new one is issued to the transferee. A certificate need not be under seal: Coddington v. R. Co., 103 U. S. 409, 26 L. Ed. 400. But a person may be the owner of shares in a corporation without holding such certificate; Field v. Pierce, 102 Mass. 261; see Schaeffer v. Ins. Co., 46 Mo. 248; and, strictly speaking, a company need not issue any certificates or muniments of title, if not required to do so by law or its charter; Agricultural Bk. v. Burr, 24 Me. 256. The presence of a party's name on the stock books of the company is evidence of his ownership of shares; Appeal of Bank of Commerce, 73 Pa. 59. The possession of a corporate certificate of stock, duly issued, is a continuing affirmation of ownership of the stock by the person named therein; First Nat. Bank v. Lanier, 11 Wall. (U. S.) 369, 20 L. Ed. 172; which generally creates an estoppel against the company in favor of the holder; Holbrook v. Zinc Co., 57 N. Y. 616; though in England it is said to be merely a solemn affirmation that the specified amount of stock stands on the stock books in the name of the person specified in the certificate; L. R. 7 H. L. 496. Every stockholder is entitled to a certificate of his shares; Cecil Nat. Bank v. Bank, 105 U. S. 217, 26 L. Ed. 1039.

The stock of a national bank is said to be a species of chose in action, or an equitable interest which the shareholder possesses, and which he can enforce against the corporation. See Taggart v. Murray, 53 N. Y. 237. "If a share in a bank is not a chose in action, it is in the nature of a chose in action, and is personal property," per Shaw, C. J., in Hutchins v. Bank, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 421. Shares are not, strictly speaking, chattels; they bear a greater resemblance to choses in action; or, in other words, they are merely evidence of property; Ang. & A. Corp. § 560. They are now universally considered to be personal property; Ang. & A. Corp. § 557; Moraw. Priv. Corp. 119, 200; though in some earlier cases it was held otherwise. See Cook, St. & Stockh. § 12, n. They are not a debt; Dos Passos, St. Brokers 590. Shares in a corporation are said to be incorporeal personal property; Allen v. Pegram, 16 Ia. 173, per Dillon, J. In Louisiana, stock is property and not a credit; New Orleans Nat. B. Ass'n v. P. S. Wiltz & Co., 10 Fed. 330.

It is settled in England that shares in a joint-stock company are not goods, wares and merchandise within the statute of frauds; 11 A. & E. 205; it has been otherwise decided in Massachusetts; Tisdale v. Harris, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 9, uniformly followed in this country; Cook, St. & Stockh. § 339.

Stock is issued for money, in payment for property or labor, or as a stock dividend. It is established in England that stock may be issued for property, and such was the common law; Thomas v. Mueller, 106 Ill. 43. See Sanger v. Upton, 91 U. S. 60, 23 L. Ed. 220. The subject is usually regulated by statute in this country. Stock can be issued by way of a stock dividend, which "is lawful when an amount of money or property equal in value to the stock distributed as a dividend has been accumulated and is permanently added to the capital stock of the corporation." Cook, St. & Stockh. § 536.

It is generally held that stock cannot be issued at a discount, and made full paid; Handley v. Stutz, 139 U. S. 429, 11 Sup. Ct. 530, 35 L. Ed. 227 (see infra); [1897] A. C. 299; 38 Ch. Div. 415; 2 De G. F. & J. 295; 11 Manitoba 629; but it has been held that an agreement with the company that the holders should never be called upon to pay any further assessment upon stock is valid as between the parties; Scovill v. Thayer, 105 U. S. 143, 26 L. Ed. 968. See Lorillard v. Clyde, 86 N. Y. 384; L. R. 14 Ch. Div. 394.

Directors issued stock at a discount; its market price went above par. It was held that the issue was unlawful and that the directors were liable, but only for the difference between the price at which they issued it and its par value; [1894] A. C. 654.

Where stock is issued for property which is overvalued, the transaction may be set aside for fraud; Brant v. Ehlen, 59 Md. 1; Coit v. Amalgamating Co., 14 Fed. 12. The corporation, after issuing its stock as full paid cannot complain; Scoville v. Thayer, 105 U. S. 143; unless the entire transaction is such that equity will rescind it for actual fraud. See, as to overvaluing property, 7 Am. & E. Corp. Cas. 652; Elyton Land Co. v. Elevator Co., 92 Ala. 407, 9 South. 129, 12 L. R. A. 307, 25 Am. St. Rep. 65.

It has been held that a railroad company in need of funds may settle with a contractor by issuing stock to him as full-paid at twenty cents on the dollar, and that creditors of the company could not afterwards collect the difference between that and par; Clark v. Bever, 139 U. S. 96, 11 Sup. Ct. 468, 35 L. Ed. 88. This decision has been much criticised. The same court said subsequently, in Camden v. Stuart, 144 U. S. 104, 12 Sup. Ct. 585, 36 L. Ed. 363, that "the trust arising in favor of creditors by subscription to the stock of a corporation cannot be defeated by a stipulated payment of such a subscription nor by any device short of actual payment in good faith." While any settlement might be good between the corporation and the stockholders it is unavailing against creditors. As against creditors, a corporation cannot give away its stock or distribute it among shareholders, without receiving a fair equivalent therefor; Handley v. Stutz, 139 U. S. 417.

A contract by which directors of a street-railway company, acting in the name of a third person, are to construct the road, and divide between them the stock and bonds not required therefor, is fraudulent, and bonds issued pursuant thereto are void; Vanderveer v. R. Co., 82 Fed. 355.

A corporation has no power, in the absence of statutory authority, to increase or diminish its capital stock; Scovill v. Thayer, 105 U. S. 148, 26 L. Ed. 968; Salem Mill Dam Corp. v. Ropes, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 23; Grangers' L. & H. Ins. Co. v. Kamper, 73 Ala. 325; Winters v. Armstrong, 37 Fed. 508.

Where a corporation had a reserve fund which was not kept separate, and then sustained a loss which impaired its capital, held, that in reduction of its capital the loss of assets should be ratably apportioned between its reserve and its capital account; [1904] 2 Ch. 208.

As to overissue of shares, see OVERISSUE.

Transfer. A certificate of stock is transferable on the books of the company by the owner in person or by his agent under written authority, which is commonly executed in blank and which may be filled up by the transferee with the name of the agent, Ang. & A. Corp. § 564; New York & N. H. R. Co. v. Schuyler, 34 N. Y. 30; German Union Bldg. & Sav. F. Ass'n v. Sendmeyer, 50 Pa. 67. A transfer in blank is deemed sufficient in some jurisdictions to pass the legal title to the stock subject to the claims of the company upon the registered stockholders; 2 Ames, B. & N. 784; Cushman v. Jewelry Co., 76 N. Y. 365, 32 Am. Rep. 315; Duke v. Nav. Co., 10 Ala. 82, 44 Am. Dec. 472; in other cases such a transfer has been held to give the holder merely an equitable interest; Black v. Zacharie, 3 How. (U. S.) 483, 11 L. Ed. 690; Brown v. Adams, 5 Biss. 181, Fed. Cas. No. 1,986. Prof. Ames is of opinion that the true view is that such a transfer does not pass the legal title, but that it passes the equitable interest, coupled with an irrevocable power of attorney to acquire the legal title; 2 Ames, B. & N. 784. This irrevocable power may, in some cases, by the doctrine of estoppel, be acquired by the delivery of the certificate from one who has no such power himself; Thomp- son v. Toland, 48 Cal. 99; Stone v. Marye, 14 Nev. 362; Appeal of Pennsylvania R. Co., 86 Pa. 80; McNeil v. Bank, 46 N. Y. 325, 7 Am. Rep. 341. A seal is not necessary; Quiner v. Ins. Co., 10 Mass. 476; though usually employed.

Shares of stock are non-negotiable instruments, but through the doctrine of estoppel, stock certificates, with a power to transfer them, can be dealt in with nearly the same immunity as bills and notes; Dos Passos, Stock Brokers 596; and the same writer is of opinion that the time has come for the court to receive evidence of the general usage of the business world, so as to raise stock certificates to the dignity of negotiable instruments; id. 597; but see Aull v. Colket, 2 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 322, where evidence of such a usage was rejected; see, also, 38 Pa. 98. Professor Ames says (2 Bills & Notes 784): "Whether the custom of merchants will ever lead the courts to give those instruments (certificates of stock) the quality of negotiability may be an open question; but that they have not done so is clear." See Anderson v. Nicholas, 28 N. Y. 600; 14 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 163, n. In Bank v. Lanier, 11 Wall. (U. S.) 369, 20 L. Ed. 172, the court said that certificates, "although neither in form or character negotiable paper, approximate it as nearly as practicable."

Stock certificates are a peculiar kind of property. Although not negotiable paper, strictly speaking, they are frequently sold in open market as negotiable securities are; National S. D., S. & T. Co. v. Hibbs, 229 U. S. 391, 33 Sup. Ct. 818, 57 L. Ed. 1241, holding that where a bank's trusted agent took certain of its stock certificates, authenticated with evidence of title, to a broker, who sold them for full value, in good faith, and paid the proceeds to the bank's agent, the bank could not make any claim against the broker. In Russell v. Tel. Co., 180 Mass. 467, 62 N. E. 751, it is held that where there is a custom among banks and brokers for certificates of stock, with blank transfer, to pass from hand to hand without enquiry, one who entrusts a certificate with blank transfer to a broker, for the purpose of exchanging for a new certificate, is estopped to assert his title against a bona fide pledgee to whom the broker had fraudulently pledged the certificate for his own debt; whether the broker's act was larceny was immaterial; in delivering the opinion of the court, Holmes, C. J., cited Knox v. Eden Musée Americain Co., 148 N. Y. 441, 41 N. E. 988, 31 L. R. A. 779, 51 Am. St. Rep. 700; Appeal of Pennsylvania R. Co., 86 Pa. 80.

In case of the sale of the stock this power of attorney becomes irrevocable; Chew v. Bank, 14 Md. 299; but if such a power of attorney is forged or is made by a person not competent to make it, the corporation is liable for allowing the transfer; Chew v. Bank, 14

Md. 209. See Appeal of Pennsylvania R. Co., 86 Pa. 80; Pratt v. Mfg. Co., 123 Mass. 110, 25 Am. Rep. 37. A company may refuse to allow a transfer until satisfied of the party's right to make it; L. R. 9 Eq. 181; Bayard v. Bank, 52 Pa. 232; Magwood v. Bank, 5 S. C. 379.

A company is bound to require the surrender of the old certificate before allowing a transfer, and may refuse to act till it is surrendered; National Bk. v. R. Co., 21 Ohio St. 221; where a certificate cannot be found the company may refuse a new one or to make a transfer without proper indemnity, unless it be a clear case of loss; Galveston City Co. v. Sibley, 56 Tex. 269.

In a joint stock corporation, each stockholder, whether by purchase or original subscription, has the right, unless restrained by the charter or articles of association, to sell and transfer his shares, and, by transferring them, to introduce others in his stead; Morgan v. Struthers, 131 U. S. 246, 9 Sup. Ct. 726, 33 L. Ed. 132.

On a wrongful refusal to transfer stock the party may apply for a mandamus to make the transfer, or sue in equity for a decree of transfer, or for damages if a transfer is impossible, or bring an action at law for damages.

It is said that the rules for the protection of bona fide purchasers are based on estoppel, which extends not only as against previous owners, but against the corporation itself. It is said that the doctrine is being extended and that it may in time render certificates of stock more negotiable than negotiable instruments themselves; Cook, St. & Stockh. § 416; but it is also held that, as a certificate of stock is not negotiable either in form or character, whoever takes it, does so subject to its equities and burdens like every non-negotiable paper; and though ignorant of such equities and burdens, his ignorance does not enable him to hold it discharged therefrom; Hammond v. Hastings, 134 U. S. 401, 10 Sup. Ct. 727, 33 L. Ed. 960.

One who surrendered a share certificate bearing a forged transfer, and obtained in exchange a new certificate, must not only return the new certificate, but also pay damages to the company, although he bought the old certificate from his transferor and received the new one from the company in ignorance of the forgery; Boston & A. R. Co. v. Richardson, 135 Mass. 473. This liability of the innocent purchaser was based upon his implied representation or warranty of title, the court finding an analogy between the presentment of the certificate to the company for the purpose of substituting the purchaser in the place of the former registered shareholder and the transfer of a certificate to a third person by way of sale. See an article on "Forged Transfers of Stock" in Ames, Lectures on Legal History 393.

In Fry v. Smellie, [1912] 3 K. B. 282, A. C., shares with a transfer signed in blank were handed to an agent to use as collateral to borrow a certain sum; the agent borrowed a less sum; held, that the lender could hold the shares until payment of his loan. Vaughan Williams, L. J., distinguished France v. Clark, 22 Ch. D. 830, on the ground that there the party misusing the shares was merely a pledgee of the owner, and not, as in the case at bar, an agent with limited authority, as to which it was the duty of the owner to give notice to any one from whom the agent might borrow on the shares. He rested his decision, not on estoppel, but on the rule that, where one of two innocent persons must suffer, he who enables the fraud must bear the loss. This ruling was said to be in accord with the New York rule, and 15 App. Cas. 267 was cited to that effect. In 64 L. J. R. 473, a broker who received shares with a transfer in blank, with instructions to sell them, pledged them for his own debt; held, that the pledgee took no title.

A business corporation cannot make it a condition of transferring stock that the holder shall first have offered it to the directors, and shall have paid all his indebtedness to the corporation; Brinkerhoff-Farris T. & S. Co. v. Lumber Co., 118 Mo. 447, 24 S. W. 129. See note in 27 L. R. A. 272.

The unregistered pledgee of stock has priority over a subsequent attaching creditor; Tombler v. Ice Co., 17 Tex. Civ. App. 596, 43 S. W. 896; the same rule obtains in New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, South Carolina, Kentucky, Louisiana, Minnesota, and most other states except Connecticut; and in the federal courts, see Cook, St. & Stockh. § 487; Scott v. Bank, 15 Fed. 494; but see Williams v. Bank, 5 Blatchf. 59, Fed. Cas. No. 17,727.

Stock certificates may be attached in a state other than the home state of the company; Merritt v. Steel-Barge Co., 79 Fed. 228, 24 C. C. A. 530. See GARNISHMENT.

The Uniform Stock Transfer Act has been passed in Louisiana, Ohio, Maryland, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, Michigan, New York, and Wisconsin.

Sec. 1. The title to a certificate and the shares represented by it can be transferred only by the delivery of the certificate, endorsed thereon in blank or to a specified person, by the person appearing by the certificate to be the owner of the shares, or by a separate document containing a written assignment or power of attorney to sell, assign or transfer, signed by such person. The assignment or power of attorney may be either in blank or to a specified person. This provision applies although the charter or regulations or by-laws of the corporation and the certificate itself provide that the shares represented thereby shall be transferable only on the books of the corporation, or registered by a registrar or transferred by a transfer agent.

Sec. 4. The title of a transferee under a power of attorney not written upon the certificate, and of any person claiming under such transferee, shall cease if at any time prior to the surrender of the certificate, another person, for value and in good faith and without notice of the prior transfer, shall purchase and obtain delivery of such certificate and the written assignment or power of attorney of such person, though contained in a separate document.

Sec. 5. The delivery of a certificate in order to transfer title in accordance with the provisions of Sec. 1, is effectual except as provided in Sec. 7, though made by one having no right to possession and no authority from the owner of the certificate or from the person purporting to transfer the title.

Sec. 6. The endorsement of a certificate by the person appearing thereby to be the owner of the shares is effectual (except as provided in Sec. 7), though the endorser or transferor was induced by fraud, duress or mistake to make the endorsement or delivery, or has revoked the delivery of the certificate or authority given by the endorsement and delivery of the certificate, or has died or has become legally incapacitated after the endorsement whether before or after the delivery of the certificate, or has received no consideration.

Sec. 7. If the indorsement or delivery of a certificate—(a.) Was procured by fraud or duress, or (b.) Was made under such mistake as to make the indorsement or delivery inequitable, or if the delivery of a certificate was made—(c.) Without authority from the owner, or (d.) After the owner's death or legal incapacity, the possession of the certificate may be reclaimed and the transfer thereof rescinded, unless: 1. The certificate has been transferred to a purchaser for value, in good faith, without notice of any facts making the transfer wrongful, or, 2. The injured person has elected to waive the injury, or has been guilty of laches in endeavoring to enforce his rights. Any court of appropriate jurisdiction may enforce specifically such right to reclaim the possession of the certificate, or to rescind the transfer thereof, and, pending litigation, may enjoin the further transfer of the certificate or impound it.

Sec. 8. Although the transfer of a certificate or of shares represented thereby has been rescinded or set aside, nevertheless, if the transferee has possession of the certificate or of a new certificate representing part or the whole of the same shares of stock, a subsequent transfer of such certificate by the transferee, mediately or immediately, to a purchaser for value in good faith, without notice of any facts making the transfer wrongful, shall give such purchaser an indefeasible right to the certificate and the shares represented thereby.

Sec. 11. Any person who for value transfers a certificate, unless a contrary intention appears, warrants that the certificate is genuine; that he has a legal right to transfer it; and that he has no knowledge of any fact which would impair its validity.

Sec. 13. No attachment or levy upon shares of stock for which a certificate is outstanding shall be valid until the certificate is actually seized or surrendered to the corporation which issued it or its transfer be enjoined.

Sec. 14. A creditor whose debtor is the owner of a certificate shall be entitled to such aid from courts of appropriate jurisdiction by injunction and otherwise, in attaching such certificate as is allowed at law or in equity in regard to property which cannot readily be attached or levied upon by ordinary legal process.

Sec. 15. There shall be no lien in favor of a corporation upon the shares represented by a certificate or any restriction upon their transfer by virtue of any by-law, or otherwise, unless the right is stated upon the certificate.

Preferred stock entitles the holder to a priority in the dividends or earnings, over common stock. Guaranteed stock is the same thing; Taft v. R. Co., 8 R. I. 310, 5 Am. Rep. 575.

A corporation may issue preferred stock, in the absence of any prohibition; Continental Trust Co. v. R. Co., 86 Fed. 930; [1897] 1 Ch. 361; Lockhart v. Van Alstyne, 31 Mich. 76, 18 Am. Rep. 156; Kent v. Min. Co., 78 N. Y. 159; provision therefor is often contained in the by-laws. If there is no provision in the charter or the law, unanimous consent of stockholders is required; Lind. Comp. 396; Lockhart v. Van Alstyne, 31 Mich. 76, 18 Am. Rep. 156. After a company has been organized, and all or a part of the stock issued, preferred stock cannot be issued against the objection of minority holders of common stock; 4 De G., J. & S. 672; Kent v. Min. Co., 78 N. Y. 159; Cook, St. & Stockh. § 268; its issue will be enjoined in such case; 32 L. J. Ch. 711. But see 2 De G. & S., where an injunction was refused at the suit of five dissenting stockholders, the court declining, however, to declare the issue legal. An objecting stockholder must seek relief promptly; Kent v. Min. Co., 78 N. Y. 159; Taylor v. R. Co., 13 Fed. 152. Legislative power to issue preferred stock may be granted subsequently to the organization of the corporation; Covington v. Bridge Co., 10 Bush (Ky.) 69; Rutland & B. R. Co. v. Thrall, 35 Vt. 536. The terms or provision under which preferred stock is issued are matters of contract, to be gathered from the charter, by-laws, votes of stockholders, or directors, etc.; Bailey v. R. Co., 17 Wall. (U. S.) 96, 21 L. Ed. 611; Gordon's Ex'rs v. R. Co., 78 Va. 501, L. R. 20 Eq. 556; Rogers v. Land Co., 134 N. Y. 197, 32 N. E. 27.

There is no condition implied in a memorandum of association of a company that all shareholders are to be on an equality and a company whose memorandum and original articles do not authorize the issue of preference shares, can alter its articles so as to do so: [1897] 1 Ch. 361.

The holder of preferred stock is not a creditor of the corporation; St. John v. R. Co., 22 Wall. (U. S.) 136, 22 L. Ed. 743; Doe v. Transp. Co., 78 Fed. 64; Belfast & M. L. R. Co. v. Belfast, 77 Me. 445, 1 Atl. 362; Miller v. Ratterman, 47 Ohio St. 141, 24 N. E. 496; 61 L. J. 621; creditors have a priority over preferred stockholders; Warren v. King, 108 U. S. 389, 2 Sup. Ct. 789, 27 L. Ed. 769; Chaffee v. R. Co., 55 Vt. 110. It seems to have been held that a mortgage to secure preferred stock is valid. See Gordon's Ex'rs v. R. Co., 78 Va. 501; Miller v. Ratterman, 47 Ohio St. 141, 24 N. E. 496.

Preferred stockholders are entitled to dividends only from net earnings; Lockhart v. Van Alstyne, 31 Mich. 76; Warren v. King, 108 U. S. 389, 2 Sup. Ct. 789, 27 L. Ed. 769; Moraw. Pr. Corp. 457; an engagement to pay dividends when not earned, or out of capital, is void; L. R. 22 Ch. D. 349; Pittsburg & C. R. Co. v. Allegheny County, 63 Pa. 136; though they may be paid out of gross earnings, if the statute so directs; Gordon's Ex'rs v. R. Co., 78 Va. 501. A general guarantee of dividends by a railroad company means only when earned; Miller v. Ratterman, supra.

But dividends may be paid though the company have a floating debt; Hazeltine v. R. Co., 79 Me. 411, 10 Atl. 328, 1 Am. St. Rep. 330; but see Chaffee v. R. Co., 55 Vt. 110. Profits of a year can be divided although there was a debit balance in the years before; [1901] 2 Ch. 184. The directors may ordinarily exercise a reasonable discretion as to declaring dividends, even though there be net earnings applicable thereto; New York, L. E. & W. R. v. Nickals, 119 U. S. 296, 7 Sup. Ct. 209, 30 L. Ed. 363; but if they act oppressively, equity will interfere; Hazeltine v. R. Co., 79 Me. 411, 10 Atl. 328, 1 Am. St. Rep. 330.

A railroad company having a large deficiency issued preferred stock to raise money to pay its floating debt; it was held that it could pay dividends on such stock out of net earnings since its issue; Cotting v. R. Co., 54 Conn. 156, 5 Atl. 851.

Undeclared dividends (arrears of net earnings) pass with the transfer of preferred stock to the transferee; Cook, St. & Stockh. § 275; Manning v. Min. Co., 24 Hun (N. Y.) 360.

In the absence of anything to the contrary, preferred stock shares equally with common, upon a dissolution of the corporation; L. R. 5 Eq. 510; otherwise, if provided by the charter, a statute, or by the contract; L. R. 20 Eq. 59; that the holder has priority as to dividends but not as to assets, unless expressly provided, was held in Jones v. R. R., 67 N. H. 234, 30 Atl. 614, 68 Am. St. Rep. 650.

Preferred stock is ordinarily understood to mean such as is entitled to preference in dividends; Scott v. R. Co., 93 Md. 475, 49 Atl. 327.

If there is no contract to the contrary, the weight of authority clearly favors the preferred stockholder's right to share with common stock in profits after the latter have received a dividend equal to the stipulated preferred dividend. It made no difference that for years the preferred had had only 5 per cent. and the entire residue of the profits had gone to the common stock; Sternbergh v. Brock, 225 Pa. 279, 74 Atl. 166, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1078, 133 Am. St. Rep. 877.

Where there is a provision for cumulative dividends on preferred stock and a redemption clause, the stock can be redeemed only on payment of all arrears and of par of the stock; Sterling v. H. F. Watson Co., 241 Pa. 105, 88 Atl. 297.

Where the memorandum of association provided that preference shares should receive "out of the net profits of each year" a dividend of 10 per cent., it was held that they were not entitled to cumulative dividends; [1896] 2 Ch. 203.

Where preferred stockholders are entitled to "dividends of 8 per cent. per annum and to be preferred as to capital as well as dividends," they have no further interest in accumulated surplus earnings; Niles v. Mfg. Co., 196 Fed. 994.

In the absence of anything to the contrary, dividends will be taken to be cumulative; Westchester & P. R. Co. v. Jackson, 77 Pa. 321; Boardman v. R. Co., 84 N. Y. 157; L. R. 3 Eq. 356.

Profits for the year mean the surplus receipts after paying expenses and restoring the capital to the position it was at the beginning of the fiscal year; L. R. 16 Ch. 344. Net earnings are what are left after paying current expenses and interest on debts and everything else which the stockholders, preferred and common, as a body corporate, are liable to pay; Warren v. King, 108 U. S. 389, 2 Sup. Ct. 789, 27 L. Ed. 769.

Ordinarily the directors will not be justified in accumulating a reserve fund to liquidate a funded debt when it matures, to the exclusion of all right of preferred stockholders to their dividends; Hazeltine v. R. Co., 79 Me. 411, 10 Atl. 328, 1 Am. St. Rep. 330.

Preferred stock may be issued without the right to vote; Miller v. Ratterman, 47 Ohio St. 141, 24 N. E. 496.

Where preferred stock, entitled to a cumulative dividend, was bequeathed in trust to pay the income to a person for life, and no dividends had been declared during the period of the life tenancy, it was held that the life tenant's executor was not entitled to have the shares retained so as to have the arrears paid out of future preferential dividends; [1913] 2 Ch. 697. Dividends do not "accrue" until they are declared; see Allen v. Armstrong, 58 App. Div. 427, 68 N. Y. Supp. 1079. But if directors refuse to perform their legal duty to the preferred stock, equity will compel them to do so; Hazeltine v. R. Co., 79 Me. 411, 10 Atl. 328, 1 Am. St. Rep. 330.

The face value of preferred stock is in the nature of a debt and the interest thereon becomes a debt as soon as there are profits with which to pay it; Storow v. Mfg. Ass'n, 87 Fed. 612, 31 C. C. A. 139. Courts will not permit a corporation to assess preferred stockholders by refusing to pay dividends when net profits and the character of the business permit; id. A general guarantee of dividends is only in the event that they are earned; Miller v. Ratterman, 47 Ohio St. 141, 24 N. E. 496. Certificates of indebtedness to preferred stockholders, obligating payment of fixed dividends, earned or not, are illegal; National Salt Co. v. Ingraham, 122 Fed. 40, 58 C. C. A. 356. Preferred stock is in the nature of a debt and the interest becomes a debt as soon as there are profits; Storow v. Mfg. Ass'n, 87 Fed. 612, 31 C. C. A. 139. If profits clearly warrant a dividend the court will compel it; id.

As to a peculiar issue of deferred stock, see 39 Leg. Int. 98 (S. C. Pa.). The term is sometimes used in contra-distinction to preferred stock to indicate stock which receives a dividend only after the payment of a dividend on preferred stock.

"Special stock" is issued by corporations in Massachusetts. It is limited to two-fifths of the actual capital; it is subject to redemption at a fixed time; the holder is entitled to a half-yearly dividend, as upon a debt; the holders are not liable for the debts of the company, and the general stockholders are liable for all the debts until the special stock is redeemed. See Cook, St. & Stockh. §§ 13, 276.

Interest bearing stock has been recognized by the courts. The contract to pay interest is lawful only when interest is to be paid out of net earnings; Miller v. R. Co., 40 Pa. 237, 80 Am. Dec. 570; Barnard v. R. Co., 89 Mass. (7 Allen) 512; and in this view is merely a species of preferred stock.

At common law, a corporation cannot purchase shares of its own capital stock; 9 Ch. App. 54; but such a purchase is held legal and allowable; Douglas v. Dally News Co., 160 Ill. App. 506; West v. Grocery Co., 109 Ia. 488, 80 N. W. 555; Schaun v. Brandt, 116 Md. 560, 82 Atl. 551; Lindsay v. Co-operative Ass'n, 186 Mass. 371, 71 N. E. 797; Cole v. Realty Co., 169 Mich. 347, 135 N. W. 329; U. S. Steel Corp. v. Hodge, 64 N. J. Eq. 807, 54 Atl. 1, 60 L. R. A. 742; Richards v. Ernst Wiener Co., 207 N. Y. 59, 100 N. E. 592; Blalock v. Mfg. Co., 110 N. C. 99, 14 S. E. 501; Sweeney v. Underwriters Co., 29 S. D. 576, 137 N. W. 379; San Antonio Hardware Co. v. Sanger (Tex.) 151 S. W. 1104; Rogers v. Sav. Ass'n, 30 Utah, 188, 83 Pac. 754. National banks are prohibited from purchasing shares of their own stock; U. S. R. S. § 5201. When a corporation buys shares of its own stock, the capital stock is not reduced by that amount, nor is the stock merged; Ralston v. Bank, 112 Cal. 208, 44 Pac. 476. So long as the corporation retains the ownership, the stock is lifeless, without rights or powers, but at any time the corporation may resuscitate it by selling and transferring it to the purchaser, and it may be sold at its market value, and need not be held for its par value, as is necessary in an original issue of stock; Belknap v. Adams, 49 La. Ann. 1350, 22 South. 382. As a general rule a corporation has no implied power to purchase shares of the capital stock of another corporation. A railroad company unless expressly authorized so to do, cannot purchase shares of stock in another railroad company; Central R. Co. v. Collins, 40 Ga. 582.

English Law. In reference to the investment of money, the term "stock" implies those sums of money contributed towards raising a fund whereby certain objects, as of trade and commerce, may be effected. It is also employed to denote the moneys advanced to government, which constitute a part of the national debt, whereupon a certain amount of interest is payable. Since the introduction of the system of borrowing upon interminable annuities, the meaning of the word "stock" has become gradually changed; and, instead of signifying the security upon which loans are advanced, it has for a long time signified the principal of the loans themselves. In this latter sense we speak of the sale, purchase, and transfer of stock; Moz. & W. See Cavanaugh, Money Securities.

Stock, in England, signifies a number of paid-up shares, so united that the owner may subdivide it and transfer it in large or small quantities, irrespective of the number and par value of the shares; Cook, St. & Stockh. § 12. Stock can only exist in the paid-up state; L. R. 7 H. L. 717.

Debenture stock "is merely borrowed capital consolidated into one mass for the sake of convenience. Instead of each lender having a separate bond or mortgage, he has a certificate entitling him to a certain sum, being part of one large loan." Lindl. Companies 195. It has no connection with stock as commonly used in this country. See Simonsen, Deb. & Deb. St.

Descents. A metaphorical expression which designates in the genealogy of a family the person from whom others are descended: those persons who have so descended are called branches. See 1 Roper, Leg. 103; 2 Belt, Suppl. Ves. 307; BRANCH; DESCENT; LINE; STIRPES.

Farm Stock. See FENCES; RUNNING AT LARGE.

STOCK ASSOCIATION. A joint stock company (q. v.).

STOCK-BROKER. Relation of stock-broker and customer is that of principal and agent, not that of debtor and creditor; In re James Carothers & Co., 182 Fed. 501.

After the purchase of stock on margin by a stock-broker for a customer, the relation between them is that of pledgor and pledgee; Learock v. Paxson, 208 Pa. 602, 57 Atl. 1097; the title rests in the customer, subject to the payment of advances and commissions, he being a pledgee; Le Marchant v. Moore, 150 N. Y. 209, 44 N. E. 770. Where the broker, in such cases, rehypothecates the stock for his own purpose, it is a conversion; Rothschild v. Allen, 90 App. Div. 233, 86 N. Y. Supp. 42; see Talty v. Trust Co., 93 U. S. 321, 23 L. Ed. 886; German Sav. Bk. v. Renshaw, 78 Md. 475, 28 Atl. 281; Cook, Corp. § 471.

See STOCK EXCHANGE.

STOCK CERTIFICATE. See STOCK.

STOCK EXCHANGE. A building or room in which stock-brokers meet to transact their business of purchasing or selling stocks.

A voluntary association (usually unincorporated) of persons who for convenience in the transaction of business with each other, have associated themselves to provide a common place for the transaction of their business. See Dos Passos, St. Brok. 14; Biddle, St. Brok. 40, 43; Leech v. Harris, 2 Brewst. (Pa.) 571; White v. Brownell, 2 Daly (N. Y.) 329. It is usually not a corporation, and in such case it is not a partnership. In the absence of a statute its real estate is held by all the members in the same way as partnership real estate. At common law, all the members had to be joined in a suit; Dicey, Parties, 2d Am. ed. 148, 266; East Haddam Cent. B. Church v. Ecclesiastical Soc., 44 Conn. 259; though actions have been sustained against the exchange as a body; Leech v. Harris, 2 Brewst. (Pa.) 571; Appeal of Moxey, 9 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 441.

The members may make such reasonable regulations for the government of the body as they may think best; see People v. Medical Soc., 24 Barb. (N. Y.) 570; such rules bind the members assenting to them; Corn Exch. Ins. Co. v. Babcock, 4 Abb. Pr. (N. S.) 162; but their personal assent must appear; Austin v. Searing, 16 N. Y. 112, 69 Am. Dec. 665; it may be inferred from circumstances, as from their admissions and acting as members; L. R. 5 Eq. 63; Palmyra v. Morton, 25 Mo. 593; and a member is bound by a by-law passed during his membership, whether he votes for it or not; MacDowell v. Ackley, 8 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 464. It is said that the courts will prevent the interference with a member's rights in an unincorporated association where the latter is acting under a by-law which is unreasonable or contrary to public policy; Dos Passos, St. Brok. 36; White v. Brownell, 4 Abb. Pr. (N. S.) (N. Y.) 162; State v. Chamber of Commerce, 47 Wis. 670, 3 N. W. 760; but see People v. Board of Trade, 80 Ill. 134.

Stock Exchange, Seat in. Members of a stock exchange are entitled to what is known as a seat. Seats are held subject to the rules of the exchange. They are a species of incorporeal property—a personal, individual right to exercise a certain calling in a certain place, but without the attributes of descendibility or assignability, which are characteristic of other species of property; Dos Passos, St. Brok. 87; Biddle, St. Brok. 50. There has been much controversy as to whether a seat can be reached by an execution.

It has been said: "1. In the disposition of a seat or the proceeds thereof, the members of the exchange will be preferred to outside creditors. 2. The seat is not the subject of seizure and sale on attachment and execution. 3. The proceeds of the seat, in the hands of the exchange, are capable of being reached after members' claims have been satisfied, to the same extent and in the same manner as any other money or property of a debtor. 4. A person owning a seat in the exchange can be compelled, by proceedings subsequent to execution, or under the direction of a receiver, to sell his seat to a person acceptable to the exchange, and devote the proceeds to the satisfaction of his judgment debts." Dos Passos, St. Brok. 96. See 20 Alb. L. J. 414; Habenicht v. Lissak, 78 Cal. 351, 20 Pac. 874, 5 L. R. A. 713, 12 Am. St. Rep. 63. In Sparhawk v. Yerkes, 142 U. S. 1, 12 Sup. Ct. 104, 35 L. Ed. 915, it was held that a seat in a stock exchange is property, and passes to assignees in bankruptcy subject to the rules of the stock board. See Powell v. Waldron, 89 N. Y. 328, 42 Am. Rep. 301; Belton v. Hatch, 109 N. Y. 593, 17 N. E. 225, 4 Am. St. Rep. 495; Weaver v. Fisher, 110 Ill. 146.

A seat on the stock exchange is property and can be pledged; Nashua Sav. Bk. v. Abbott, 181 Mass. 531, 63 N. E. 1058, 92 Am. St. Rep. 430. It is property, though incumbered with conditions when purchased; Hyde v. Woods, 94 U. S. 523, 24 L. Ed. 264. But it is held in Pennsylvania that a seat on the exchange was not property subject to execution in any form; Pancoast v. Gowen, 93 Pa. 66; at least, not until the owner's debts due members of the board are paid; Pancoast v. Houston, 5 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 36; that it is personal and cannot be transferred without the approval of the board; Shoemaker v. Produce Exchange, 15 Phila. (Pa.) 103.

Stock exchange rules usually provide that seats are liable first to pay the members' debts to a fellow-member, or a firm of which the latter is a member; and also for arbitration committees to settle differences between members; Cochran v. Adams, 180 Pa. 289, 36 Atl. 854.

In the absence of any specific provision therefor, the expulsion of a member of the St. Louis stock exchange for fraud can not be considered as forfeiting to the exchange his property rights in his seat, and the proceeds, after paying any claims of the exchange or its members belong to the expelled member; In re Gaylord, 111 Fed. 717.

A regular register of all the transactions is kept by an officer of the association, and questions arising between the members are generally decided by an arbitration committee. The official record of sales is the best evidence of the price of any stock on any particular day. The stocks dealt in at the sessions of the board are those which are placed on the list by a regular vote of the association; and when it is proposed to add a stock to the list, a committee is appointed to examine into the matter, and the board is generally guided by the report of such committee.

A Missouri statute made it unlawful to keep in the state any office, store or other place for buying and selling stocks or commodities on margin or otherwise when not actually paid for or delivered at the time of the sale, without making a record of the transaction, and a memorandum stamped with a stamp issued by the state for the purpose. The act was held constitutional; Brodnax v. Missouri, 219 U. S. 287, 31 Sup. Ct. 238, 55 L. Ed. 219.

Where the tribunal provided by a board of trade for disciplining members expels a member in accordance with its own rules, the merits of the judgment thus rendered will not be inquired into collaterally; Nelson v. Board of Trade, 58 Ill. App. 399. The only question for the court to determine in proceedings to compel a stock exchange to reinstate an expelled member is as to the regularity of the proceedings; People v. Produce Exchange, 149 N. Y. 401, 44 N. E. 84.

See "Stock Exchange from Within," by W. C. Van Antwerp. As to methods on the London Stock Exchange, see Quarterly Rev. July, 1912. See Brodhurst, Law & Pr. of Stock Exchange (London); MARGIN; FUTURES.

STOCK-JOBBER. A dealer in stock; one who buys and sells stock on his own account on speculation.

STOCK NOTES. This term has no technical meaning and may as well apply to a note given on the sale of stock which the bank had purchased or taken in the payment of doubtful debts as to a note given on account of an original subscription to stock. Dunlap v. Smith, 12 Ill. 402.

STOCK ORDER. The order in chancery to prevent drawing out a fund in court to the prejudice of an assignee or lienholder.

STOCK YARDS. The business of stock yards is not of itself interstate commerce, within the meaning of the Sherman Act;

Hopkins v. U. S., 171 U. S. 578, 19 Sup. Ct. 40, 43 L. Ed. 290. But in U. S. v. Stock Yard Co., 226 U. S. 286, 33 Sup. Ct. 83, 57 L. Ed. 226, it was held that a stock yard was subject to the Act to Regulate Commerce and must conform to its requirements as to filing tariffs and desist from unlawful discriminations. That act, as amended, extends to all terminal facilities. The fact that a particular stock yard extends over the boundary line between two states does not make the business interstate commerce; Cotting v. Stock Yards Co., 183 U. S. 79, 22 Sup. Ct. 30, 46 L. Ed. 92.

Live stock shipped from various states to the yards of a stock yards association in another state by the solicitation and procurement of the members thereof, to be there sold or to be reshipped to other states if the market should be unsatisfactory, does not cease to be a subject of interstate commerce as soon as it reaches such yards and is there unloaded, nor until it has been further acted upon so as to become mingled with the mass of property in the state; Hopkins v. U. S., 171 U. S. 578, 19 Sup. Ct. 40, 43 L. Ed. 290.

A stock yards company maintaining tracks connecting with the tracks of railroad companies, and which by its own locomotives and servants transports cars containing interstate shipments to and from the tracks of the railroad companies, is held to be a common carrier engaged in interstate commerce, though it collects compensation only from the railroad companies and is paid under a contract between it and them; Union Stock Yards Co. of Omaha v. U. S., 169 Fed. 404, 94 C. C. A. 626.

The business of stock yards is of such a public nature as to justify a state legislature in imposing rules and regulations for its government; Cotting v. Stock Yards, 183 U. S. 79, 22 Sup. Ct. 30, 46 L. Ed. 92.

Where, in an action against a stock yards company to recover for overcharges on live stock, the answer fails to show that the statutory rates will not be a reasonable return on the money invested in the property devoted to such use, they are not so palpably unreasonable and unjust as applied to the defendant stock yards company as to amount to a taking of property without just compensation; Ratcliff v. Stock Yards Co., 74 Kan. 1, 86 Pac. 150, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 834, 118 Am. St. Rep. 298, 10 Ann. Cas. 1016.

On an issue as to whether railroad stock yards are a nuisance, evidence that there is no other reasonably convenient and practicable location is admissible; Dolan v. R. Co., 118 Wis. 362, 95 N. W. 385.

STOCKHOLDER. One who has property interests in the assets of a corporation and who is entitled to take part in its control and receive its dividends. Beal v. Bank, 67 Fed. 816, 15 C. C. A. 128. The word includes all members having a direct financial interest in the business of the corporation with power to participate in the profits and in the conduct of its affairs, though they hold no shares; Kimball v. Davis, 52 Mo. App. 194. The government may be a stockholder, and when it assumes this relation, it divests itself to that extent of its sovereign character; the same is true of a state; Feld, Corp. § 52; and of a municipal corporation, if it has legislative power; id.

One person can hold all the capital stock; Rhawn v. Furnace Co., 201 Pa. 637, 51 Atl. 360. Stockholders are not trustees for each other, and one may vote on any measure, though he has an interest adverse to the company; Blinn v. Gillett, 208 Ill. 473, 70 N. E. 704, 100 Am. St. Rep. 234; Windmuller v. Distributing Co., 115 Fed. 748.

They are conclusively presumed to be citizens of the state which created the corporation; Thomas v. Board, 195 U. S. 207, 25 Sup. Ct. 24, 49 L. Ed. 160. This presumption does not preclude them from asserting their actual citizenship to sustain the jurisdiction of a federal court in a suit brought by them as stockholders; Doctor v. Harrington, 196 U. S. 579, 25 Sup. Ct. 355, 49 L. Ed. 606.

At common law the members of a corporation are not liable for the debts of a corporation; Liverpool Ins. Co. v. Massachusetts, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 575, 19 L. Ed. 1029; French v. Teschemaker, 24 Cal. 540; Thomp. Liab. of Stockh. § 4; nor liable on their subscriptions, it is said, until the full capital stock is subscribed; Denny Hotel Co. v. Schram, 6 Wash. 134, 32 Pac. 1002, 36 Am. St. Rep. 130. After shares are legally full paid, no further payments can be required; Gray v. Coffin, 63 Mass. (9 Cush.) 192; French v. Teschemaker, 24 Cal. 540; unless provided by statute, as is done to a certain extent in some states. The holders of full-paid stock in an insolvent national bank are liable to creditors for a further assessment to the extent of the par value of the stock. There is also legislation that shareholders shall be personally liable to all wage-earners. By subscribing to stock in a foreign corporation, the subscriber subjects himself to the law of the foreign country in respect to the powers and obligations of such corporation; Nashua Sav. Bk. v. Agency Co., 189 U. S. 221, 23 Sup. Ct. 517, 47 L. Ed. 782.

The legislature cannot, after the purchase of stock, impose any additional liability unless it has reserved the power to alter the charter. Statutes have been passed in many states by which stockholders are liable under certain circumstances. The statutes are too various to be treated here. They may be liable in equity when they have assets of the corporation which they ought not to retain. So they may be liable when they have subscribed to the capital stock of the corporation which they have not paid in. The capital stock in such cases is said to be a trust fund for the benefit of creditors; Sanger v. Upton, 91 U. S. 56, 23 L. Ed. 220. The cases in which this doctrine has most frequently been applied have arisen out of suits brought to compel stockholders to pay the amounts unpaid upon their stock subscriptions.

The original holder of stock in a corporation is liable for unpaid instalments of stock without an express promise to pay, and a contract between him and the corporation or its agent limiting his liability is void as to creditors or the assignee in bankruptcy of the corporation. Representations made to the stockholder by an agent of the corporation as to the non-assessability of stock beyond a certain per cent. of its par value, constitute no defence to an action against the stockholder to enforce payment of the amount subscribed. The legal effect of the word "non-assessable" in the certificate is at most a stipulation against further assessments after the face value of the stock is paid; Upton v. Tribilcock, 91 U. S. 45, 23 L. Ed. 203. The transferee of stock, when the transfer was duly registered, is liable in the same way upon an implied promise; Webster v. Upton, 91 U. S. 65, 23 L. Ed. 384. So where the holder of shares had procured a transfer to his name, he was held liable for unpaid instalments, though he held the stock only as collateral security for debts due him by the transferor of the stock; Pullman v. Upton, 96 U. S. 328, 24 L. Ed. 818. Where certificates of stock had on their face a condition that the residue of eighty per cent. unpaid to the stock was to be paid on the call of the directors, when ordered by a vote of a majority of the stockholders, it was held that the absence of a call was no defence to an action for the residue by an assignee of the corporation in bankruptcy; Upton v. Hansbrough, 3 Biss. 417, Fed. Cas. No. 16,801. Agreements of members among themselves that stock shall be considered as "fully paid" are invalid; L. R. 15 Eq. 407. A corporation may, however, take in payment of its shares any property which it may lawfully purchase; Thomps. Liab. of Stockh. § 134; Moraw. Priv. Corp. 425; and stock issued therefor as full paid will be so considered; Foreman v. Bigelow, 4 Cliff. 508, Fed. Cas. No. 4,934.

A call by the proper authorities is ordinarily held to be necessary to fix the liability of a stockholder for unpaid instalments; Grosse Isle Hotel Co. v. T'Anson's Ex'rs, 43 N. J. L. 442; Spangler v. R. Co., 21 Ill. 276; L. R. 1 Ch. App. 535; but it is held that a suit may be brought without a call; Phoenix Warehousing Co. v. Badger, 67 N. Y. 300; and when a receiver has been appointed the call is made by a decree of the court; Scovill v. Thayer, 105 U. S. 143, 26 L. Ed. 968.

The United States courts formerly looked upon the capital stock as a trust fund for the benefit of corporate creditors; Sawyer v. Hoag, 17 Wall. (U. S.) 610, 620, 21 L. Ed. 731. In Clark v. Bever, 139 U. S. 96, 11 Sup. Ct. 468, 35 L. Ed. 88, it was said, quoting from Sawyer v. Hoag, that the capital stock of a corporation is a trust fund only sub modo. In Hollins v. Iron Co., 150 U. S. 371, 14 Sup. Ct. 127, 37 L. Ed. 1113, the expression "trust fund" was qualified by a statement that it had not been intended "to convey the idea that there was any direct and express trust attached to the property." In Gottlieb v. Miller, 154 Ill. 44, 39 N. E. 992, it was called a quasi-trust fund, and Pomeroy [Eq. Jur. 1046] says that such assets do not in any true sense constitute a trust and are called so only through analogy or metaphor.

In an article in 34 Am. L. Reg. 448 [1895], George Wharton Pepper strongly objects to the expression "trust fund" and considers that the trust theory is untenable. He quotes Mr. Justice Bradley in Graham v. R. Co., 102 U. S. 148, 26 L. Ed. 106, where he says that the conception is at war with notions which we derive from English law with regard to the nature of corporate bodies.

The same writer is of the opinion that the expression "trust fund" is one which is applied by American courts to the judicial recognition of the demand of the commercial world, which is in substance that the liability of a stockholder shall be unlimited up to the par value of his shares and he shall not be entitled to any legal principle which would entitle him to advantage against corporate creditors.

The trust fund doctrine as to the assets of an insolvent corporation appears to have been first announced by Judge Story in Wood v. Dummer, 3 Mas. 308, Fed. Cas. No. 17,944. The more recent decisions eliminate any trust feature from the capital stock; McDonald v. Williams, 174 U. S. 397, 401, 19 Sup. Ct. 743, 43 L. Ed. 1022; Milliken v. Caniso, 205 N. Y. 559, 98 N. E. 493. It was repudiated in Henderson v. Trust Co., 143 Ind. 561, 40 N. E. 516; O'Bear Jewelry Co. v. Volfer, 106 Ala. 205, 17 South. 525, 28 L. R. A. 707, 54 Am. St. Rep. 31, but Judge Thompson considers it "the only doctrine worthy of respect"; 5 Thomp. Corp. § 5115.

A Kansas statute gives a creditor of a corporation certain remedies against a stockholder, and gives such stockholders certain rights against other stockholders. Among other rights of the creditor was that of suing an individual stockholder wherever he could be found to an amount equal to the amount of stock owned by him. Where such an action was brought in Illinois, it was held that the courts of that state could not take jurisdiction of a question arising as to the respective relations of creditors and stockholders of a corporation of another state, where a special remedy is provided by statute, before there is a determination by the courts of such state of the just proportion of the corporate indebtedness to be borne by solvent stockholders of such corporation; Tuttle v. Bank, 161 Ill. 497, 44 N. E. 984, 34 L. R. A. 750; and in New York, in a similar action, it was said the purpose of the Kansas law cannot be carried out except by a proceeding in equity for an accounting to which all stockholders are parties; Marshall v. Sherman, 148 N. Y. 9, 42 N. E. 419, 34 L. R. A. 757, 51 Am. St. Rep. 654; that a remedy under a foreign law where it is perfectly apparent that complete justice cannot be done, and where it is plain that an equitable result can be accomplished only by the courts of the jurisdiction where the corporation was created, could not be enforced in the New York courts; Marshall v. Sherman, 148 N. Y. 9, 42 N. E. 419, 34 L. R. A. 757, 51 Am. St. Rep. 654.

In Pennsylvania the questions were considered whether the courts of that state would enforce the statutory liability under the laws of Kansas, and, if so, whether against separate stockholders or only in the form established by Pennsylvania practice in similar cases; Cushing v. Perot, 175 Pa. 66, 34 Atl. 447, 34 L. R. A. 737, 52 Am. St. Rep. 835, but the case was decided on other grounds. In the supreme court of the United States the liability imposed on the stockholders under this statute was held contractual in its nature, though statutory in its origin, and that an action could be maintained in any court of competent jurisdiction; Whitman v. Bank, 176 U. S. 559, 20 Sup. Ct. 477, 44 L. Ed. 587, and to the same effect; Ferguson v. Sherman, 116 Cal. 169, 47 Pac. 1023, 37 L. R. A. 622; Hancock Nat. Bk. v. Ellis, 166 Mass. 414, 44 N. E. 349, 55 Am. St. Rep. 414; Howell v. A. Manglesdorf & Co., 33 Kan. 194, 5 Pac. 759.

A holder of stock in trust is subject to assessment; Davis v. Baptist Soc., 44 Conn. 582, Fed. Cas. No. 3,633; L. R. 9 Eq. 175, 363 (but the cestui que trust is not; id.; even if he is a trustee of the corporation itself; U. S. Trust Co. v. Ins. Co., 18 N. Y. 226; Allibone v. Hager, 46 Pa. 48. As to national bank stock, see NATIONAL BANKS. It is held that a cestui que trust is bound to indemnify his trustee; L. R. 18 Eq. 16.

The remedy against stockholders may be in some states by garnishment under the judgment against the company; but more commonly it is by bill in equity and a receiver. It is held that the remedy of a creditor against a stockholder is in equity alone; Smith v. Huckabee, 53 Ala. 191; Terry v. Little, 101 U. S. 216, 25 L. Ed. 864. In equity the court decrees a call and the receiver collects the amount. The court may decree payment in full, leaving the stockholders to seek contribution among themselves; Cook, St. & Stockh. § 211.

In an action to enforce the payment of an assessment on unpaid stock, on behalf of creditors, a stockholder cannot set off a claim against the corporation; Handley v. Stutz, 139 U. S. 417, 11 Sup. Ct. 530, 35 L. Ed. 227; L. R. 1 Ch. 528; Thebus v. Smiley, 110 Ill. 316; otherwise, if the corporation itself sues; L. R. 19 Eq. 449. In New York there is a right of set-off at law against a corporation creditor, but not in equity; Christensen v. Colby, 43 Hun (N. Y.) 362.

A subscriber cannot set up against an action for calls that the corporation was not lawfully organized, if he is a director and was one of the original incorporators; United Growers Co. v. Eisner, 22 App. Div. 1, 47 N. Y. Supp. 906.

The better opinion is said to be that the statute of limitation begins to run only when a call has been made and payment thereunder is due; Cook, St. & Stockh. § 195; or from the order of court making the assessment; Glenn v. Marbury, 145 U. S. 507, 12 Sup. Ct. 914, 36 L. Ed. 790. It is held to run from the date of an assignment for creditors by the company; Franklin Sav. Bk. v. Bridges (Pa.) 8 Atl. 611; and in Great Western Tel. Co. v. Purdy, 83 Ia. 430, 50 N. W. 45, when the subscription is made; so also Williams v. Meyer, 41 Hun (N. Y.) 545; though where a creditor sues it does not run till he secures judgment; Christensen v. Quintard, 36 Hun (N. Y.) 334.

Statutes in various states provide for a forfeiture of stock for non-payment of subscriptions, and a sale. This right does not exist without a statute; nor can it be created by a mere by-law; but it may be by the consent of the stockholder if expressed on the face of his certificate; Cook, St. & Stockh. § 122; the remedy by forfeiture, when given, is in addition to the ordinary common-law remedies; id. § 124.

See Thomp. Liab. of Stockh.; McCarthy v. Lavasche, 89 Ill. 270, 31 Am. Rep. 88; 15 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 648.

In order to constitute one a shareholder, it is not necessary that a certificate should have been issued to him; Beckett v. Houston, 32 Ind. 393; Schaeffer v. Ins. Co., 46 Mo. 248.

The right to vote on his stock is a property right, in which he will be protected as against the doubtful claim of another to such stock; Lucas v. Milliken, 139 Fed. 816; Talbot J. Taylor & Co. v. Southern Pac. Co., 122 Fed. 147.

Where a director is required to be the holder of a certain number of shares as a qualification, he is presumed, on winding up, to have been the holder of that number of shares; [1892] 2 Ch. 158.

It is said that a stockholder may deal with his company at arm's length as a stranger might; Russell v. Gas Co., 184 Pa. 102, 39 Atl. 21. See PREFERENCE.

The rights of a stockholder are to attend stockholders' meetings, to participate in the profits of the business, and to require that the corporate property and funds shall not be diverted from their original purposes, and if the company becomes insolvent, to have its property applied to the payment of its debts.

For the invasion of these rights by the officers of a company, a stockholder may sue at law or in equity, according to the nature of the case. All remedies for injury to the property or rights of such a corporate body must be prosecuted in the name of the company; all demands against the company must be prosecuted against it by name. But where the officers and managers of a company, by fraud and collusion with third persons, are sacrificing, or are about to betray or sacrifice, the interests of the corporation, a stockholder may, for such breaches of trust and conspiracy, call the guilty parties to an account in a court of equity; Forbes v. R. Co., 2 Woods 323, Fed. Cas. No. 4,926, per Bradley, J.

Wherever a cause of action exists primarily in behalf of the corporation against directors, officers and others for wrongful dealing with corporate property, or wrongful exercise of corporate franchises, so that the remedy should regularly be obtained through a suit by and in the name of the corporation, and the corporation, either actually or virtually refuses to institute or prosecute such a suit, then, in order to prevent a failure of justice, an action may be brought and maintained by a stockholder or stockholders, either individually or suing on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, against the wrongdoing directors, officers, and other persons; but it is absolutely indispensable that the corporation itself should be joined as a party, usually as a co-defendant. The rationale of this rule should not be misapprehended. The stockholder does not bring such a suit because his rights have been directly violated or because the action is his, or because he is entitled to the relief sought; he is permitted to sue in this manner simply in order to set in motion the judicial machinery of the court. The stockholder, either individually, or as the representative of the class, may commence the suit and may prosecute it to judgment; but in every other respect, the action is the ordinary one brought by the corporation. It is maintained directly for the benefit of the corporation and the final relief, when obtained, belongs to the corporation, and not to the stockholder-plaintiff. The corporation is, therefore, an indispensably necessary party, not simply on the general principles of equity pleading, in order that it may be found by the decree; but in order that the relief, when granted, may be awarded to it, as a party to the record by the decree; 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1095. It is said this view completely answers the objections which are sometimes raised in suits of this class that the plaintiff has no interest in the subject matter of the controversy nor in the relief. In fact the plaintiff has no direct interest; the defendant corporation, alone, has any direct interest; the plaintiff is permitted, notwithstanding his want of interest, to maintain the action solely to prevent an otherwise complete failure of justice; Slattery v. Transp. Co., 91 Mo. 217, 4 S. W. 79, 60 Am. Rep. 245; Estate of Seiter v. Mowe, 182 Ill. 351, 55 N. E. 526; Grant v. Mountain Co., 93 Tenn. 700, 28 S. W. 90, 27 L. R. A. 98; Graham v. Mach. Works, 138 Iowa, 456, 114 N. W. 619, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 729.

In Dodge v. Woolsey, 18 How. (U. S.) 331, 15 L. Ed. 401, the right of a stockholder to bring a suit was said to be founded on a right of action existing in the corporation itself as the appropriate plaintiff and must be based upon some injurious action or threatened action upon the part of the corporation or the stockholders, destructive of the corporation or the rights of stockholders. A stockholder cannot sue except on a refusal to sue on the part of the corporation. This was said to be the leading case on the subject; Hawes v. Oakland, 104 U. S. 450, 26 L. Ed. 827, which followed Dodge v. Woolsey, and at the same term of the court rule 94 of the supreme court equity rules was promulgated, embodying substantially the language of the opinion of the court in Hawes v. Oakland. It provides that every bill brought by a stockholder against a corporation and other parties, founded on rights which may be properly asserted by the corporation, must be verified by oath and must contain an allegation that the plaintiff was a shareholder at the time of the transaction of which he complains, or that his share had devolved on him since by operation of law, and that the suit is not a collusive one to confer upon courts of the United States jurisdiction of a case of which it would not otherwise have cognizance. It must also set forth with particularity the efforts of the plaintiff to secure such action as he desires on the part of the directors and, if necessary, of the shareholders, and the cause of his failure to secure such action.

See, also, Detroit v. Dean, 106 U. S. 537, 1 Sup. Ct. 500, 27 L. Ed. 300; Taylor v. Holmes, 127 U. S. 489, 8 Sup. Ct. 1192, 32 L. Ed. 179; Porter v. Sabin, 149 U. S. 473, 13 Sup. Ct. 1008, 37 L. Ed. 815, where it is held that the corporation is a necessary party.

The complaining stockholder is entitled to his costs from the corporation; 2 Spell. Pr. Corp. 643.

A single stockholder can enjoin the use of the funds of the corporation in a project not authorized by charter or certificate when he became a shareholder; Stevens v. R. Co., 29 Vt. 545; this is protection to minority shareholders, but it at times becomes inconvenient, hence it is generally provided by statute or in the articles of incorporation that a change in the specified objects can be made by a certain number.

A stockholder has the right to prevent the sale or lease of all the corporate assets, when the corporation is in financial difficulty, for he has the right that the enterprise shall not be unnecessarily abandoned just as much as enlarged; Elyton Land Co. v. Dowdell, 113

Ala. 177, 20 South. 981, 59 Am. St. Rep. 105; but where the corporation is in an embarrassed financial condition, then the directors may lease or sell the assets if the same is done properly and ratified by the majority shareholders; Bartholomew v. Rubber Co., 69 Conn. 521, 38 Atl. 45, 61 Am. St. Rep. 57.

The court will not inquire into the stockholder's motive for bringing his bill against the corporation unless the same is admitted to be bad; L. R. 2 Ch. App. 459; but the suit must be brought on his own behalf and not as suing for some one else; Forrest v. Manchester Ry. Co., 4 De G., F. & J. 125; but it is held, where a share of stock is in the hands of a bona fide purchaser, he shall not be subject to any personal exception that was binding on his transferror; Parsons v. Joseph, 92 Ala. 403, 8 South. 788.

Where a corporation issues stock at an over-valuation for property to promoters who were the only existing shareholders, the subsequent shareholders, buying such stock, cannot sue through the corporation such promoters, since a corporation should not be allowed to disregard its assent previously given, and hence there is no wrong done to the corporation; Old Dominion Copper M. & S. Co. v. Lewisohn, 210 U. S. 206, 28 Sup. Ct. 634, 52 L. Ed. 1025; contra; Old Dominion Copper Co. v. Bigelow, 188 Mass. 315, 74 N. E. 653, 108 Am. St. Rep. 479.

Six distinct classes of creditors' bills against stockholders: 1. He may have subscribed for stock to be paid for in money, and by the terms of his subscription no call has to be made to render him liable, or the call has already been made; Hadden v. Spader, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 554. (2) Under the same contract of subscription, a call has to be made before the stockholder will be liable to pay; Hatch v. Dana, 101 U. S. 205, 25 L. Ed. 885. (3) The corporation has agreed that the stock issued to the stockholder for money, at less than par, shall be considered as fully paid; Coffin v. Ransdell, 110 Ind. 417, 11 N. E. 20; or the corporation has issued its stock as fully paid for property conveyed to it in lieu of money; Bank of Ft. Madison v. Alden, 129 U. S. 372, 9 Sup. Ct. 332, 32 L. Ed. 725. (4) The corporation has issued its stock as fully paid for property conveyed to it in lieu of money, (a) such property being grossly over-valued by the corporation, or (b) being materially over-valued, but the corporation acting in good faith, and in the exercise of its best judgment, or (c) the difference between the valuation assigned and the true value being immaterial. This class of cases sometimes involves statutory and constitutional provisions against "watered" stock, giving rise to further distinctions; Hastings Malting Co. v. Brewing Co., 65 Minn. 28, 67, 8 N. W. 652; Bank of Ft. Madison v. Alden, 129 U. S. 372, 9 Sup. Ct. 332, 32 L. Ed. 725; Bickley v. Schlag, 46 N. J. Eq. 533, 20 Atl. 250; Van Cleve v. Berkey, 143 Mo. 109, 44 S. W. 743, 42 L. R. A. 593; American Tube & Iron Co. v. Gas Co., 165 Pa. 489, 30 Atl. 940. (5) Where the corporation has conveyed the assets representing its capital to stockholders or others in fraud of creditors; Christensen v. Eno, 106 N. Y. 97, 12 N. E. 648, 60 Am. Rep. 429. (6) The corporation having been dissolved, the directors or trustees in liquidation have had the duties of trustees imposed on them by statute; Jacobs v. Sugar Co., 130 Fed. 589; Wilkinson v. Bertock, 111 Ga. 187, 38 S. E. 623.

Corporate creditor's suit to enforce payment of unpaid subscriptions can be properly brought only after a judgment at law has been obtained against the corporation, and an execution returned unsatisfied; Terry v. Anderson, 95 U. S. 628, 636, 24 L. Ed. 365; Wetherbee v. Baker, 35 N. J. Eq. 501; Cutright v. Stanford, 81 Ill. 240; Albright v. R. Co., 8 N. M. 422, 46 Pac. 448. The remedy against the corporation need not first be exhausted, where the corporation is bankrupt, notoriously insolvent, or has been formally dissolved; Fourth Nat. Bk. v. Franklyn, 120 U. S. 747, 7 Sup. Ct. 757, 30 L. Ed. 825; Firestone T. & R. Co. v. Agueir, 194 N. Y. 165, 86 N. E. 1116, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 628, 16 Ann. Cas. 1150; May v. Charlouis, 195 N. Y. 607, 89 N. E. 1105; Latimer v. Bank, 102 Iowa, 162, 71 N. W. 225.

Where a charter in one state authorized a corporation to do business in another state, it may become liable to the laws of the latter state making stockholders liable for the corporate debts, although contrary to the charter exempting them therefrom; Thomas v. Matthiessen, 232 U. S. 221, 34 Sup. Ct. 312, 58 L. Ed. —.

It has been held that if a corporation has power to reduce its capital stock, it may do so by purchasing a portion of its own shares; State v. Smith, 48 Vt. 266; City Bank of Columbus v. Bruce, 17 N. Y. 507; contra, Currier v. State Co., 56 N. H. 262; but it is held to be ultra vires for a corporation to dispose of any part of its property other than its surplus or net profits, in the purchase of shares of its own stock; Hamor v. Engineering Co., 84 Fed. 393. A corporation cannot buy its own stock if the rights of creditors are thereby prejudiced; Clapp v. Peterson, 104 Ill. 26; but apart from the rights of creditors, it is held in some states that such a transaction is lawful; Blalock v. Mfg. Co., 110 N. C. 99, 14 S. E. 501; First Nat. Bk. v. Flour Mills Co., 39 Fed. 89; Chicago, P. & S. W. R. Co. v. Marseilles, 84 Ill. 145. Accepting its own stock in payment of land sold by it is not necessarily invalid; Thompson v. Moxey, 47 N. J. Eq. 538, 20 Atl. 854; where the company is perfectly solvent; Fraser v. Ritchie, 8 Ill. App. 554. In England it is held that a corporation cannot purchase its own shares; 12 App. Cas. 409; and a stockholder may enjoin such purchase; L. R. 4 Ch. Div. 327.

A shareholder has a common law right, for proper purposes and under reasonable regulations as to time and place, to inspect the books of a corporation of which he is a member; it should not be granted for speculative or improper purposes; and it should not be denied when asked for legitimate purposes. A state court has authority to enforce the right; Guthrie v. Harkness, 199 U. S. 148, 26 Sup. Ct. 4, 50 L. Ed. 130, 4 Ann. Cas. 433 (a national bank). The right rests upon the proposition that those in charge are merely the agents of the stockholders; Cincinnati Volksblatt Co. v. Hoffmeister, 62 Ohio St. 189, 56 N. E. 1033, 48 L. R. A. 732, 78 Am. St. Rep. 707. The common law right of a stockholder to inspect the books of his corporation is not an absolute one, but one depending upon his motive in seeking the inspection; Varney v. Baker, 194 Mass. 239, 80 N. E. 524, 10 Ann. Cas. 989. A distinction is made between the right to inspect the books in general and the by-laws; In re Coats, 75 App. Div. 567, 78 N. Y. Supp. 429, where it was said that an application to examine the by-laws rested upon a different footing than an application for an inspection of the books and papers in general; that the by-laws constituted a part of the contract between the stockholder and the corporation and were binding upon both. A distinction has also been made between the right of a director to inspect the books of a corporation and the right of a stockholder to do so; People v. Paper Bag Co., 103 App. Div. 208, 92 N. Y. Supp. 1084. A corporation cannot deprive its stockholder of the right to inspect its books for the protection of his interests by offering to purchase his stock at a price fixed by it; Kuhnback v. Cut Glass Co., 220 Pa. 427, 69 Atl. 981, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 185; nor by offering to furnish him abstracts of them or to permit an inspection by an expert to be selected by it and him; id.; that the stockholder is also a stockholder in a rival company is not sufficient to deprive him of the right to examine its books; id.

The right to inspect the general books of a corporation is said to be a common law right the enforcement of which is discretionary with the court; Woodworth v. Bank, 154 Mich. 459, 117 N. W. 893, 118 N. W. 581. The right to inspect stock or transfer books is a statutory right the enforcement of which in a case within the terms of the statute is mandatory; People v. Bank, 105 App. Div. 409, 94 N. Y. Supp. 173; People v. Mines Co., 122 App. Div. 617, 107 N. Y. Supp. 188.

Where there was nothing in the record to show that the purpose for which an inspection was sought was unlawful or ulterior, and the stockholder in his written demand swore that his purpose was not inimicable to the corporation, in the absence of some substantial evidence on the question, the court said it would not be justified in ignoring the mandatory direction of the statute; Althouse

v. Giroux, 56 Misc. Rep. 509, 107 N. Y. Supp. 191.

The right given by statute may be exercised by an agent or attorney of the stockholder; Clawson v. Clayton, 33 Utah. 266, 93 Pac. 729; he may not, in the exercise of his right to have assistance, unduly interfere with the ordinary affairs of the company. Varney v. Baker, 194 Mass. 239, 80 N. E. 524, 10 Ann. Cas. 989. His right to inspection carries with it the right to make such extracts from the books as he requires; People v. Bank, 105 App. Div. 409, 94 N. Y. Supp. 173. He is not entitled to exercise the statutory right until he has had the transfer of stock to him entered upon the books of the company; Butterfly-Terrible G. Min. Co. v. Brind, 41 Colo. 29, 91 Pac. 1101; a stockholder's common law right of inspection is not affected by a statute conferring upon him a limited right; State v. Mfg. Co., 129 Mo. App. 206, 107 S. W. 1112.

A stockholder is not entitled to inspect the books of his corporation in order to ascertain whether a certain person against whom he has a claim by virtue of legal proceedings in a different state owns or has recently transferred shares of stock in the company; State v. Biscuit Co., 69 N. J. L. 198, 54 Atl. 241.

That the stockholder is a member of a company engaged in a competing business is not a ground for refusing his right to inspect the books; Hodder v. Hogg Co., 223 Pa. 196, 72 Atl. 553; because the stockholder is a competitor of the company, or an officer in a competing company, is not sufficient to raise the presumption that the purpose of the inspection is an improper one; Cobb v. Lagarde, 129 Ala. 488, 30 South. 326. The desire to ascertain the value of the stock of the company and whether its business was being conducted according to law was held to be a proper purpose; Guthrie v. Harkness, 199 U. S. 148, 26 Sup. Ct. 4, 50 L. Ed. 130, 4 Ann. Cas. 433. Statutes in many of the states granting the right are generally held to be declaratory of the common law; Guthrie v. Harkness, supra.

The right of access is as applicable in the case of a banking corporation as it is in any other kind of corporation; Tuttle v. Bank, 170 N. Y. 9, 62 N. E. 761. The authorities are fully examined and the right of inspection for proper purposes and at proper times is recognized in In re Steinway, 159 N. Y. 251, 53 N. E. 1103, 45 L. R. A. 461; Com. v. Iron Co., 105 Pa. 111, 51 Am. Rep. 184; to the same effect Deaderick v. Wilson, 67 Tenn. (8 Baxt.) 108; Huyler v. Cattle Co., 40 N. J. Eq. 392, 2 Atl. 274.

In issuing the writ of mandamus, the court will exercise a sound discretion and grant the right under proper safeguards to protect the interests of all concerned; Guthrie v. Harkness, supra.

A director is entitled to access to all the corporate books; Lawton v. Bedell (N. J.) 71 Atl. 490.

It is said to be customary for banking companies in England to insert in their constitutions a provision forbidding the inspection of customers' accounts by shareholders or creditors; L. R. 28 Ch. D. 620; but the subject appears to be now regulated there by statute; Cook, Corp. § 518.

A bank may be compelled by mandamus to exhibit to the assessing officer a list of its shareholders with their names and residences and the number of shares owned by each; Paul v. McGraw, 3 Wash. 296, 28 Pac. 532; so with an insurance company; Firemen's Ins. Co. v. Baltimore, 23 Md. 296; but it has been held that a statute authorizing a court to appraise decedents' estates for the fixing of an inheritance tax confers no authority upon such court to compel a private corporation in which the decedent held stock to produce its books and papers; State v. Carpenter, 129 Wis. 180, 108 N. W. 641, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 788.

See RECORDS; PRODUCTION OF BOOKS.

A stockholder has no right, by the inherent powers of a court of equity, to bring suit to wind up the business of a corporation; Bliven v. Iron Co., 60 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 280.

A suit in equity may be maintained by a creditor of a corporation against a stockholder only in the courts of the state in which the corporation is created, and the corporation is a necessary party defendant; State Nat. Bk. v. Sayward, 86 Fed. 45.

Contracts by individuals for the purchase of all the stock of a private corporation or to control it are valid and not against public policy; Borland v. Prindle, Weeden & Co., 144 Fed. 713; Scruggs v. Cotterill, 67 App. Div. 583, 73 N. Y. Supp. 882; so also where an agreement stipulated that the stock for five years should be held in one block, the vote to be determined by ballot between the owners; Smith v. R. Co., 115 Cal. 584, 47 Pac. 582, 35 L. R. A. 309, 56 Am. St. Rep. 119. But see VOTING TRUST. So also where a contract for the sale of a majority of the stock was entered into by all the stockholders and contained a provision that the plaintiffs should hold their corporate offices for five years at a specified salary; Kantzler v. Bensinger, 214 Ill. 589, 73 N. E. 874; but a contract by the holders of a controlling interest in a corporation to elect certain stockholders as officers thereof for a certain period at a specified salary was held contrary to public policy and void; Bensinger v. Kantzler, 112 Ill. App. 293; and an agreement for the organization of a corporation, accepting only those who would consent to the employment of a certain person as general agent, was held void; Flaherty v. Cary, 62 App. Div. 116, 70 N. Y. Supp. 951, affirmed 174 N. Y. 550, 67 N. E. 1082; and so were contracts by certain stockholders to elect certain persons to corporate offices; Bonta v. Gridley, 77 App. Div. 33, 78 N. Y. Supp. 961; Withers v. Edmunds, 26 Tex. Civ. App. 189, 62 S. W. 795.

A sale of the corporate property by a single holder of a majority of the stock by the use of a meeting of the directors, and a meeting of the stockholders, in legal form, for its fair value, but for a smaller amount than could have been obtained for it from another, is voidable at the election of the minority stockholders; Wheeler v. Bank Bld'g Co., 159 Fed. 391, 89 C. C. A. 477, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 892, 14 Ann. Cas. 917. So is a sale by a stockholder to himself for less than he could obtain for it from another, or any other act in his interest to the detriment of the minority stockholders; Pepper v. Adicks, 153 Fed. 383; Sage v. Culver, 147 N. Y. 241, 41 N. E. 513; Wright v. Min. Co., 40 Cal. 20; Chicago Hansom Cab Co. v. Yerkes, 141 Ill. 320, 30 N. E. 667, 33 Am. St. Rep. 315.

Where new stock is to be issued, the opportunity to subscribe to it must be offered, first, to the old shareholders in proportion to their original holdings; Stokes v. Trust Co., 186 N. Y. 285, 78 N. E. 1090, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 969, 9 Ann. Cas. 738; a by-law of a Colorado corporation limiting the right to vote to stock that has been paid in full is void; *Lilylands C. & R. Co. v. The issue of additional stock and its distribution pro rata among its stockholders, although without receiving payment therefor, is not in itself injurious to stockholders or creditors; Great Western Min. & Mfg. Co. v. Harris, 198 U. S. 561, 25 Sup. Ct. 770, 49 L. Ed. 1163.

After the annual meeting of the stockholders of a corporation had been duly organized, some stockholders without justification withdrew to break the quorum. Those remaining elected the defendants to office; such election was held valid; Com. v. Vandegrift, 232 Pa. 53, 81 Atl. 153, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 45. STOCKS. In Criminal Law. A machine, commonly made of wood, with holes in it, in which to confine persons accused of or guilty of crime.

It was used either to confine unruly offenders by way of security, or convicted criminals for punishment. This punishment has been generally abandoned in the United States; in England they were used as late as 1872.

STOLEN GOODS. See RECENT POSSESSION OF STOLEN GOODS; RECEIVER OF STOLEN GOODS.

STOP, LOOK, AND LISTEN RULE. See GRADE CROSSING.

STOP ORDER. A direction given by the purchaser to the broker to the effect that, if the stock touches the price named in the order while it is being held, the broker shall sell it at the best price available; Richter v. Poe, 109 Md. 20, 71 Atl. 420, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 174.

STOPPAGE IN TRANSITU. A resumption by the seller of the possession of goods not paid for, while on their way to the vendee and before he has acquired actual possession of them. Newhall v. Vargas, 15 Me. 314, 33 Am. Dec. 617.

Chancellor Kent has defined the right of stoppage in transitu to be that which the vendor has, when he sells goods on credit to another, of resuming the possession of the goods while they are in the possession of a carrier or middleman, in the transit to the consignee or vendee, and before they arrive into his actual possession, or the designation he has appointed for them, on his becoming bankrupt and insolvent; 2 Kent 702.

The right of stoppage in transitu is an equitable extension recognized by the courts of common law, of the seller's lien for the price of goods of which the buyer has acquired the property, but not the possession. This right is paramount to any lien created by usage or by agreement between the carrier and the consignee, for a general balance of account, but not to the lien of the carrier for freight; Potts v. R. Co., 131 Mass. 457, 41 Am. Rep. 247.

For most purposes, the possession of the carrier is considered to be that of the buyer; but by virtue of this right, which is an extension of the right of lien, the vendor may reclaim the possession before they reach the vendee, in case of the insolvency of the latter; Grout v. Hill, 4 Gray (Mass.) 361; 8 M. & W. 321, which gives a history of the law.

The vendor, or a consignor to whom the vendee is liable for the price; 3 East 93; 6 id. 17; Newhall v. Vargas, 13 Me. 103, 29 Am. Dec. 489; or a general or special agent acting for him; 9 M. & W. 518; Bell v. Moss, 5 Whart. (Pa.) 189; see Reynolds v. R. R., 43 N. H. 589; Seymour v. Newton, 105 Mass. 275; may exercise the right.

The goods sold must be unpaid for, either wholly or partially; Newhall v. Vargas, 15 Me. 314, 33 Am. Dec. 617; 2 Exch. 702. As to the rule where a note has been given, see 2 M. & W. 375; *Stubbs v. 612, 48 N. W. 26, 11 L. R. A. 347, 22 Am. St. Rep. 711. A seller cannot stop goods in transit simply because the buyer absconded before they reached him, where the buyer's insolvency is not shown; Smith v. Barker, 102 Ala. 679, 15 South. 340.

The vendor can bring suit for the price of the goods after he has caused them to be stopped in transitu, and while they are yet in his possession, provided he be ready to deliver them upon payment of the price; 1 Camp. 109; but the right of the vendor after stoppage exceeds a mere lien; for he may resell the goods; 6 Mod. 152.

There need not be a manual seizure: it is sufficient if a claim adverse to the buyer be made during their passage; 2 B. & P. 457; 9 M. & W. 518; Newhall v. Vargas, 13 Me. 93, 29 Am. Dec. 489.

The goods must be in transit; 3 Term 466; Wood v. Yeatman, 15 B. Monr. (Ky.) 270; Stanton v. Eager, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 474; Atkins v. Colby, 20 N. H. 154. Where goods sold are shipped by rail and a transfer company, under a previous general order of the buyer, receives the goods at the depot to convey them to the buyer's place of business, the goods are still in transit and the seller may still exercise his right of stoppage; Scott v. Dry-Goods Co., 48 Mo. App. 521. Goods shipped by a railroad company and delivered to a local transfer company having general orders from the buyers to receive goods on their behalf, and by it taken to the buyers' store, which was closed on account of insolvency, were held subject to stoppage; In re M. Burke & Co., 140 Fed. 971.

In order to preclude the right the goods must have come actually into the hands of the vendee or some person acting for him; 2 M. & W. 632; Conard v. Ins. Co., 1 Pet. (U. S.) 386, 7 L. Ed. 189; Covell v. Hitchcock, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 611; Sheppard v. Newhall, 54 Fed. 306, 4 C. C. The right can be defeated, where there is no special legislation on the subject, only by a transfer of the bill of lading; McElwee v. Lumber Co., 69 Fed. 302, 16 C. C. A. 232, 37 U. S. App. 266; but the assignment, undorsed, of a bill of lading will not defeat the right, if the goods are still in transit; Sheppard v. Newhall, 54 Fed. 306, 4 C. C. A. 352, 7 U. S. App. 544. The right expires when the goods have been delivered; id.

Where goods are in the hands of a carrier, they may be stopped, although the purchaser has handed to the shipping agent the bills of lading received by him from the vendor and received a bill of lading for them, and the purchaser is himself a passenger on the vessel on which they are shipped; L. R. 15 App. Cas. 391.

The delivery of goods at the buyer's store which was at the time in the possession of the sheriff under an attachment, is not a delivery to the consignee; Harris v. Temey, 85 Tex. 254, 20 S. W. 82, 34 Am. St. Rep. 796. See Jenks v. Fulmer, 160 Pa. 527, 28 Atl. 841.

The right of stoppage in transitu is not abrogated by the Bankruptcy Act of 1898, and may be exercised against the receiver or trustee; In re Darlington Co., 163 Fed. 385.

Where there is no contract to the contrary, express or implied, the employment of a carrier by a vendor of goods on credit constitutes all middlemen into whose custody they pass for transportation and delivery, agents of the vendor; and until the complete delivery of the goods, they are deemed in transitu; Calahan v. Babcock, 21 Ohio St. 281, 8 Am. Rep. 63. The right cannot be superseded by an attachment at the suit of a general creditor, levied while the goods are in transitu; Dickman v. Williams, 50 Miss. 500; Morris v. Shryock, 50 Miss. 590. If the vendor attach the goods while in transit, his right of stoppage will be destroyed; Woodruff v. Noyes, 15 Conn. 335. Where goods are to be delivered a part at a time, and various deliveries are so made, the right to stop the remaining portion is not lost; nor will the fact that the entire lot of goods was transferred on the books of the warehouse affect the right; Buckley v. Furniss, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 504. The right of stoppage in transitu is looked upon with favor by the courts; 2 Eden 77; Calahan v. Babcock, 21 Ohio St. 281, 8 Am. Rep. 63.

The effect of the exercise of this right is to repossess the parties of the same rights which they had before the vendor resigned his possession of the goods sold; 1 Q. B. 389; 10 B. & C. 99; Jordan v. James, 5 Ohio 98; Rogers v. Thomas, 20 Conn. 53; Chandler v. Fulton, 10 Tex. 2, 60 Am. Dec. 188.

The doctrine is not founded on any contract between the parties nor on any ethical principle, but upon the custom of merchants. It was first adopted in chancery and afterwards by the courts of law; 11 Q. B. D. 356, per Brett and Bowen, L. JJ.

By the Sales Act, the seller may stop goods on the buyer's insolvency. 1. Goods are in transit: (a) From the time of delivery to any carrier or bailee, until the buyer takes delivery of them from such carrier or bailee; (b) if the goods are rejected by the buyer, and the carrier or other bailee continues in possession of them, even if the seller has refused to receive them back. 2. Goods are no longer in transit: (a) if the buyer obtains delivery of the goods before their arrival at the appointed destination; (b) if, after the arrival of the goods at the appointed destination, the carrier or other bailee acknowledges to the buyer or his agent, that he holds the goods on his behalf and continues in possession of them as bailee for the buyer or his agent; and it is immaterial that a further destination for the goods may have been indicated by the buyer; (c) if the carrier or other bailee refuses to deliver the goods to the buyer, or his agent in that behalf. 3. If goods are delivered to a ship chartered by the buyer, it is a question depending on the circumstances of the particular case whether they are in possession of the master as carrier or as agent of the buyer. 4. If part delivery of the goods has been made to the buyer, or his agent in that behalf, the remainder of the goods may be stopped in transitu, unless such part delivery has been made under such circumstances as to show an agreement with the buyer to give up possession of the whole of the goods.

The exercise of the right by the unpaid seller may be: 1. By obtaining actual possession of the goods, or by giving notice of his claim to the carrier or other bailee, in whose possession the goods are. Such notice may be given either to the person in actual possession of the goods or to his principal. In the latter case, the notice, to be effectual, must be given at such time and under such circumstances that the principal, by the exercise of reasonable diligence, may prevent a delivery to the buyer. 2. When notice of a stoppage in transitu is given by the seller to the carrier, or other bailee in possession of the goods, he must re-deliver the goods to, or according to directions of, the seller. If, however, a negotiable document of title representing the goods has been issued by the carrier or other bailee, he shall not be obliged to deliver the goods to the seller unless such document is first surrendered for cancellation.

A carrier which is at service and expense in stopping goods in transit, for inspection and reloading for the benefit of the shipper, is entitled to compensation in addition to the additional expense incurred; Southern R. Co. v. Grain Co., 214 U. S. 297, 29 Sup. Ct. 678, 53 L. Ed. 1004.

STORE. To keep for safe custody. O'Neil v. Ins. Co., 3 N. Y. 122; Hynds v. Ins. Co., 16 Barb. (N. Y.) 119. A place where goods are sold at a profit. Alcorn v. State, 71 Miss. 464, 15 South. 37.

STORE-HOUSE. A building for the storage of goods, grain, food-stuffs, etc. A livery-stable has been held a store-house. Webb v. Com. (Ky.) 35 S. W. 1038.

STORE ORDERS. In some states the maintaining of general supply stores by companies or individual employers is forbidden.

An act requiring the redemption in cash of store orders is constitutional; Knoxville Iron Co. v. Harbison, 183 U. S. 13, 22 Sup. Ct. 1, 46 L. Ed. 55; State v. Coal Co., 36 W. Va. 802, 15 S. E. 1000, 17 L. R. A. 385; Hancock v. Yaden, 121 Ind. 366, 23 N. E. 253, 6 L. R. A. 576, 16 Am. St. Rep. 396; but it is held that statutes prohibiting the issuance of checks for labor performed redeemable in goods and merchandise interfere with the right of freedom of contract. Such statutes are not within the police power of the state; Jordan v. State, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 531, 103 S. W. 633, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 603, 14 Ann. Cas. 616 (which case see for a review of the decisions supporting this view); to the same effect, Leach v. Timber Co., 111 Mo. App. 650, 86 S. W. 579; State v. Loomis, 115 Mo. 307, 22 S. W. 350, 21 L. R. A. 789; Godcharles v. Wigeman, 113 Pa. 431, 6 Atl. 354. The legislature may not single out owners and operators of mines and manufactures of every kind, and provide that they should bear burdens not imposed on other owners of property or employers of labor, and prohibit them from making contracts which it is competent for other owners of property or employers of labor to make; State v. Goodwill, 33 W. Va. 179, 10 S. E. 285, 6 L. R. A. 621, 25 Am. St. Rep. 863.

A statute prohibiting mining, manufacturing or railroad corporations from paying wages otherwise than in legal tender money was held not to prevent an employé from giving an order on his employer to merchants or others as an assignment of wages to pay his debts; Shaffer v. Min. Co., 55 Md. 74. Giving an employé checks for merchandise in advance of pay day on his own voluntary application does not violate a statute providing that labor shall be paid for in lawful money; Avent Beattyville Coal Co. v. Com., 96 Ky. 218, 28 S. W. 502, 28 L. R. A. 273.

It is usurious to discount a store order for goods by paying twenty per cent. less than its face; Osborne v. Fuller, 92 S. C. 338, 75 S. E. 557, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1058.

STORES. The supplies for the subsistence and accommodation of a ship's crew and passengers. Under the word stores, tackle, apparel, etc., will not pass. 2 Stark. 105.

STOWAGE. In Maritime Law. The proper arrangement in a ship of the different articles of which a cargo consists, so that they may not injure each other by friction, or be damaged by the leakage of the ship.

The master of the ship is bound to attend to the stowage, unless by custom or agreement this business is to be performed by persons employed by the merchant; Abb.

Shipp. 13th ed. 391; Pardessus, Dr. Com. n. 721. See ARRAMEUR.

Merchandise and other property must be stored under deck, unless a special agreement or established custom and usage authorizes their carriage on deck. See SEA-WORTHY.

STOWAWAY. One who steals his passage. They shall not, as a rule, be examined or permitted to land at ports of the United States, but in rare cases may be, if they do not belong to the excluded class; U. S. v. Williams, 193 Fed. 228.

A stowaway, in England, is liable to a fine not exceeding £20 or imprisonment not exceeding four weeks, with a provision for arrest without warrant and summary trial before any sheriff or justice of the peace.

STRADDLE. See OPTION.

STRAND. The shore or bank of a sea or river. Cowell. That portion of the land lying between ordinary high and low water mark. Stillman v. Burfeind, 21 App. Div. 13, 47 N. Y. Supp. 280.

STRAND INN. See INNS OF COURT.

STRANDING. In Maritime Law. The running of a ship or other vessel on shore; it is either accidental or voluntary.

Accidental stranding takes place where the ship is driven on shore by the winds and waves and remains stationary for some time.

Voluntary stranding takes place where the ship is run on shore either to preserve her from a worse fate or for some fraudulent purpose. Marsh. Ins. b. 1, c. 12, s. 1.

It is of great consequence to define accurately what shall be deemed a stranding; but this is no easy matter. In one case, a ship having run on some wooden piles, four feet under water, erected in Wisbeach river, about nine yards from shore, which were placed there to keep up the banks of the river, and having remained on these piles until they were cut away, was considered by Lord Kenyon to have been stranded; Marsh. Ins. b. 7, s. 3. In another case, a ship arrived in the river Thames, and upon coming up to the pool, which was full of vessels, one brig ran foul of her bow and another vessel of her stern, in consequence of which she was driven aground, and continued in that situation an hour, during which period several other vessels ran foul of her. As to this, Lord Kenyon told the jury that, unskilled as he was in nautical affairs, he thought he could safely pronounce to be no stranding; 1 Camp. 131; 3 id. 431; 4 Maule & S. 503; 5 B. & Ald. 225; 4 B. & C. 736. See PERILS OF THE SEA.

When a vessel takes the ground in the ordinary course of navigation, from a natural deficiency of water, or from the ebb of the tide, it is not a stranding; 11 C. B. 876; Potter v. Ins. Co., 2 Sumn. 197, Fed. Cas. No. 11,339. But where a ship was fastened at the pier of a dock basin against the advice of the master, and when the tide ebbed, took the ground and fell over on her side, in consequence of which, when the tide rose, she filled with water, it was held to be a stranding; 4 M. & S. 77.

It may be said, in general terms, that in order to constitute a stranding, the ship must be in the course of prosecuting her voyage when the loss occurs; there must be a settling down on the obstructing object; and the vessel must take the ground by reason of extraordinary casualty, and not from one of the ordinary incidents of a voyage. Arn. Ins. §§ 297, 318. And see Strong v. Ins. Co., 31 N. Y. 106, 88 Am. Dec. 242; Lake v. Ins. Co., 13 Ohio 66, 42 Am. Dec. 188.

STRANGER. A person born out of the United States; but in this sense the term alien is more properly applied until he becomes naturalized.

A person who is not privy to an act or contract: example, he who is a stranger to the issue shall not take advantage of the verdict; Brooke, Abr. Record, pl. 3; Viner, Abr. 1. And see Com. Dig. Abatement (H 54); O'Donnell v. McIntyre, 118 N. Y. 156, 23 N. E. 455.

When a man undertakes to do a thing, and a stranger interrupts him, this is no excuse; Com. Dig. Condition (L 14). When a party undertakes that a stranger shall do a certain thing, he becomes liable as soon as the stranger refuses to perform it; Bac. Abr. Conditions (Q 4).

STRATAGEM. A deception either by words or actions, in times of war, in order to obtain an advantage over an enemy.

Stratagems, though contrary to morality, have been justified unless they have been accompanied by perfidy, injurious to the rights of humanity, as in the example given by Vattel of an English frigate, which during a war between France and England appeared off Calais and made signals of distress in order to allure some vessel to come to its relief, and seized a shallop and its crew who had generously gone out to render it assistance. Vattel, Droit des Gens, liv. 3, c. 9, § 178.

STRATOCRACY. A military government; government by military chiefs.

STREAM. A current of water. A body of water having a continuous flow in one direction. 34 L. R. Sc. 174. The right to a water-course is not a right in the fluid itself, so much as a right in the current of the stream. 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1612.

STREET. A public thoroughfare or highway in a city or village. It differs from a country highway; In re Road from Fitzwater St., 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 106. It means the whole surface and so much of the depth as is or can be used, not unfairly, for the ordinary purposes of a street. L. R. 4 Q. B. D. 121. A street is not an easement, but a dedication to the public of the occupation of the surface for passing and repassing; L. R. 3 Ch. 306; 1 Q. B. D. 703. See HIGHWAY.

A practical rule as to vehicles and pedestrians is that the rights of the latter are primary at crossings and secondary between crossings. This rule has been applied by Judge Sulzberger both in civil and criminal cases in the Philadelphia Common Pleas.

A street, besides its use as a highway for travel, may be used for the accommodation of drains, sewers, aqueducts, water, and gas-pipes, lines of telegraph, and for other purposes conducive to the general police, sanitary, and business interests of a city; Milhau v. Sharp, 17 Barb. (N. Y.) 435; Providence Gas Co. v. Thurber, 2 R. I. 15, 55 Am. Dec. 621; Cummins v. Seymour, 79 Ind. 491, 41 Am. Rep. 618. Its use belongs, from side to side and end to end, to the public; State v. Berdetta, 73 Ind. 193, 38 Am. Rep. 117. Unless there be some special restrictions when the same are acquired, streets and squares are for the public use at large as distinguished from the municipality; 2 Dillon, Mun. Cor. 656.

To enable a city lawfully to permit the use of its streets for poles, wires, etc., for telephone purposes, the power to do so must be expressly delegated to it; State v. Trenton, 36 N. J. L. 79; Texarkana v. Tel. Co., 48 Tex. Civ. App. 16, 106 S. W. 915; Logansport R. Co. v. Logansport, 114 Fed. 688; Birmingham & P. M. St. R. Co. v. R. Co., 79 Ala. 465, 58 Am. It was held not within the power of a municipal corporation to grant any exclusive privilege in its streets to any corporation so as to deprive itself of the right to revoke the same and grant like privileges to another; Montgomery L. & W. P. Co. v. Power Co., 142 Ala. 464, 38 South. 1026. It is held that a municipal corporation cannot, without legislative authority, grant a franchise to lay gas pipes in its streets; Elizabeth City v. Banks, 150 N. C. 407, 64 S. E. 189, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 925; East Tennessee Tel. Co. v. Russellville, 106 Ky. 667, 51 S. W. 308; Russell v. R. Co., 205 Ill. 155, 68 N. E. 727; Morristown, Tenn., v. Tel. Co., 115 Fed. 304, 53 C. C. A. 132; nor can it grant the exclusive privilege of the use of streets for mains, pipes and hydrants for water works; Syracuse Water Co. v. Syracuse, 116 N. Y. 167, 22 N. E. 381, 5 L. R. A. 546; Illinois T. & S. Bk. v. Arkansas City, 76 Fed. 271, 22 C. C. A. 171, 34 L. R. A. 518; Washington v. Monroe, 40 Wash. 545, 82 Pac. 888; nor sell a street or park;

The charter of a city, giving to a city supervision and control of all public highways and public grounds, does not authorize an ordinance for the leasing of space on the streets or sidewalks in front of business houses for use by produce dealers or other merchants; such use of the streets will constitute a nuisance; Chapman v. Lincoln, 84 Neb. 534, 121 N. W. 596, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 400.

A street may be used by individuals for the lading and unlading of carriages, for the temporary deposit of movables or of materials and scaffoldings for building or repairing, provided such use shall not unreasonably abridge or incommode its primary use for travel; 3 Camp. 230; 4 Ad. & E. 405; Com. v. Passmore, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 219; Callanan v. Gilman, 107 N. Y. 360, 14 N. E. 264, 1 Am. St. Rep. 831; Sikes v. Manchester, 59 Ia. 65, 12 N. W. 755; Mathews v. Kelsey, 58 Me. 56, 4 Am. Rep. 248.

Supp. 438; except when the rights of the public at large or of abutting property owners are not materially interrupted; Londonderry Tp. v. Berger, 2 Pears. (Pa.) 230. But it has been held that a municipality may authorize the use of streets for market purposes; Henkel v. Detroit, 49 Mich. 249, 13 N. W. 611, 43 Am. Rep. 464.

The same prohibition has been extended to fruit or lunch stands and booths, if public transit is materially interfered with; People v. Keating, 168 N. Y. 390, 61 N. E. 637; Chicago v. Pooley, 112 Ill. App. 343; State v. Berdetta, 73 Ind. 185, 38 Am. Rep. 117; also to hack stands; Odell v. Bretney, 38 Misc. Rep. 603, 78 N. Y. Supp. 67; *Pennsylvania Co. v. An ordinance making it unlawful to hold public meetings in city streets is constitutional; Pitts v. Atlanta, 121 Ga. 567, 49 S. E. 793, 67 L. R. A. 803, 104 Am. St. Rep. 167; so of an ordinance forbidding any public address upon any public property; Com. v. Davis, 162 Mass. 510, 39 N. E. 113, 26 L. R. A. 712, 44 Am. St. Rep. 389; and of a statute prohibiting unauthorized bodies of men from drilling or parading with arms in cities or towns; Com. v. Murphy, 166 Mass. 171, 44 N. E. 138, 32 L. R. A. 606; and an ordinance forbidding the beating of drums in the streets of a city without permission of the mayor (here held to cover the Salvation Army); Wilkes-Barre v. Garebed, 9 Kulp (Pa.) 273. A Salvation Army parade was held not to be an unlawful and tumultuous assembly; L. R. 9 Q. B. Div. 308; and in 57 L. T. N. S. 366, it was held that an ordinance prohibiting playing upon a musical instrument upon the street was void and that a Salvation Army was not punishable thereunder. In In re Gribben, 5 Okl. 379, 47 Pac. 1074, it was held that an ordinance prohibiting the making of noise upon the streets by musical instruments was invalid. As to playing organs on the street, see [1897] 1 Q. B. 84.

There is no right to display a red flag in a parade, which is likely to cause a breach of the peace; People v. Burman, 154 Mich. 150, 117 N. W. 589, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 251.

An attempt by a municipal corporation to prohibit loitering on the streets, so far as applied to persons conducting themselves in a peaceable, orderly manner, disturbing no one and committing no overt act, was held an interference with the constitutional right of personal liberty; St. Louis v. Gloner, 210 Mo. 502, 109 S. W. 30, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 494, 124 Am. St. Rep. 750; contra, Taylor v. Sandersville, 118 Ga. 63, 44 S. E. 845. An ordinance providing that whenever three or more persons obstruct a sidewalk, it should be the duty of the officer to request them to move on, and to arrest them upon refusing, was held unconstitutional; State v. Hunter, 106 N. C. 796, 11 S. E. 366, 8 L. R. A. 529.

An individual has no right to have an auction in a street; Com. v. Milliman, 13 S. & R. (Pa.) 403; or to keep a crowd of carriages standing therein; 3 Camp. 230; or to attract a disorderly crowd of people to witness a caricature in a shop-window; 6 C. & P. 636. It is held that an abutting owner may stop his carriage in front of his property, though it extend in front of the adjoining property, or may have a line of carriages running in front of neighbor's property, provided such use be reasonable and that a neighbor be allowed to drive up to his own door if desired; Jessel, M. R., in 5 Ch. Div. 713.

An encroachment upon a street, the dedication and acceptance of which is established, is nothing more or less than a nuisance, which cannot be aided by lapse of time; Yates v. Warrenton, 84 Va. 337, 4 S. E. 818, 10 Am. St. Rep. 860. In a suit by abutting owners to enjoin obstruction, no other parties defendant are necessary than the alleged trespasser; Hart v. Buckner, 54 Fed. 925, 5 C. A. 1.

A city is not responsible for every unauthorized act resulting in injury to travellers on a street; Joliet v. Seward, 86 Ill. 402, 29 Am. Rep. 35. So of coasting on a street; Altwater v. Baltimore, 31 Md. 462; Dudley v. Flemingsburg, 115 Ky. 5, 72 S. W. 327, 60 L. R. A. 575, 103 Am. St. Rep. 253, 1 Ann. Cas. 958; horse racing; McCarthy v. Munising, 136 Mich. 622, 99 N. W. 865; riding a bicycle on the sidewalk; Jones v. Williamsburg, 97 Va. 722, 34 S. E. 883, 47 L. R. A. 294; animals running at large; Rivers v. Augusta, 65 Ga. 376, 38 Am. St. Rep. 479); firing explosives in a street; Campbell's Adm'x v. Montgomery, 53 Ala. 527, 25 Am. Rep. 656; firing a cannon; Robison v. Greenville, 42 Ohio St. 625, 51 Am. Rep. 857; rioting on the streets, unless there is a statutory provision to the contrary; Bryant v. Orangeburg, 70 S. C. 137, 49 S. E. 229. But where a city, without authority, permitted a fair to be held in one of its streets, it was held liable to one who was injured in leaving such fair show while passing on an unsafe platform in the street giving access thereto; Van Cleef v. Chicago, 240 Ill. 318, 88 N. E. 815, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 636, 130 Am. St. Rep. 275. See, generally, a note to 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 636.

The owners of lands adjoining a street are not in some states entitled to compensation for damages occasioned by a change of grade or other lawful alteration of the street; 2 B. & A. 403; Radcliff's Ex'rs v. Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 195, 53 Am. Dec. 357; Seaman v. Washington, 172 Pa. 467, 481, 33 Atl. 756; Smith v. Washington, 20 How. (U. S.) 135, 15 L. Ed. 858; Broadwell v. Kansas, 75 Mo. 213, 42 Am. See EMINENT DOMAIN.

A city which in the repair of the streets places an obstruction in them must give appropriate warning of the same; Baltimore v. Maryland, 166 Fed. 641, 92 C. C. A. 335; Wilson v. Wheeling, 19 W. Va. 323, 42 Am. Rep. 780; Alexander v. Big Rapids, 76 Mich. 282, 42 N. W. 1071. If danger can be averted only by special precautions, such as placing guards or lighting the streets, it is bound to take these precautions; Guthrie v. Swan, 5 Okl. 779, 51 Pac. 562; Streeter v. Marshalltown, 123 Ia. 449, 99 N. W. 114; Pettengill v. Yonkers, 116 N. Y. 558, 22 N. E. 1035, 15 Am. St. Rep. 442. It must take proper precautions to prevent the removal of the lights or barriers, or ascertain the fact and replace them speedily if they are removed; Fox v. Chelsea, 171 Mass. 297, 50 N. E. 622.

The municipal authorities must remove dirt, rubbish and ashes from the street; Connor v. Manchester, 73 N. H. 233, 60 Atl. 436. A city may not allow a street to be used as a storage place for vehicles; Radichel v. Kendall, 121 Wis. 560, 99 N. W. 348; a gravel heater left standing unused for a week in the gutter of a street may be found to be a defect in the highway for which the city is liable to a traveller who is injured thereby; Griffin v. Boston, 182 Mass. 409, 65 N. E. 811; or a road scraper; Whitney v. Ticonderoga, 127 N. Y. 40, 27 N. E. 403; or a tool chest habitually in the highway, placed there by a contractor engaged in repairing sewers under a contract with the city; Warden v. City of N. Y., 123 App. Div. 733, 108 N. Y. Supp. 303.

A tunnel or subway for electric cars is held not to be an additional servitude and will give the owner no right to compensation; Sears v. Crocker, 184 Mass. 586, 69 N. E. 327, 100 Am. St. Rep. 577; in the proper sense a highway is primarily for travel, and a strong presumption arises that any use of the land for this purpose is within the scope of the proper use, even though its form may be entirely new. This presumption, however, may be rebutted by proof that the new mode of travel is necessarily very burdensome or prejudicial to the land owner; see 17 Harv. L. Rev. 409. Under the statutes of California a telephone corporation operating interstate and local lines in a city of the fifth class obtained rights to maintain its main lines in the streets, but not its local posts and wires, except subject to the regulations of the city; Pomona v. Tel. Co., 224 U. S. 330, 32 Sup. Ct. 477, 56 L. Ed. 788.

Under the statutes of several of the states, assessments are levied upon the owners of lots specially benefited by opening, widening, or improving streets, to defray the expense thereof; and such assessments have been adjudged to be a constitutional exercise of the taxing power; People v. Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 419, 55 Am. Dec. 266; In re Extension of Hancock Street, 18 Pa. 26; Nichols v. Bridgeport, 23 Conn. 189, 60 Am. Dec. 636; Alexander v. Baltimore, 5 Gill (Md.) 383, 46 Am. STRICT CONSTRUCTION. See CONSTRUCTION; INTERPRETATION.

STRICT SETTLEMENT. In England, a settlement to the use of the settlor for life, and after his death to the use that his widow may receive a rent charge (or jointure), subject to these life interests, to trustees for a long term of years in trust to raise by mortgage on the term a sum of money for the portions for his younger children, and subject thereto to the use of his first and other sons successively and the heirs male of their bodies, with the ultimate remainder in default of issue to the settlor in fee simple.

STRICTISSIMI JURIS (Lat. the most strict right or law). In general, when a person receives an advantage, as the grant of a license, he is bound to conform strictly to the exercise of the rights given him by it, and in case of a dispute it will be strictly construed. See Washburn v. Gould, 3 Stor. C. C. 159, Fed. Cas. No. 17,214.

STRICTUM JUS (Lat.). Mere law, in contradistinction to equity.

STRIKE. A combined effort by workmen to obtain higher wages or other concessions from their employers, by stopping work at a preconceived time. Where this is peaceably effected without positive breach of contract, it is not unlawful; Irving v. Dist. Council, 180 Fed. 896; but it sometimes amounts to conspiracy. Most of the decisions bear upon questions arising more or less indirectly from the strike.

The word "strike" is used to describe various kinds of conduct quite distinct from each other; 20 H. L. R. 254. A sympathetic strike is one wherein the strikers have no demands or grievances of their own, but strike for the purpose of indirectly aiding other employes or organizations; 1 Eddy. Comb. Sec. 520. They have not been directly held illegal, and are considered justifiable, though only to be resorted to in extreme cases; Mitchell, Org. Labor 304.

It is no answer to a suit against a common carrier for failure to deliver goods with reasonable promptness, that a strike among their employes prevented; Blackstock v. R. Co., 20 N. Y. 48, 75 Am. Dec. 372; Galena & C. U. R. Co. v. Rae, 18 Ill. 488, 68 Am. Dec. 574. But otherwise if the employes are discharged and afterwards interfere unlawfully with the business of the road; Cooley, Torts 640, n. Where a railroad company receives freight for shipment, it is not liable for delay in its delivery which is caused by a strike of its employes, accompanied by violence and intimidation of such a character as cannot be overcome by the company or controlled by the civil authorities when called upon; Haas v. R. Co., 81 Ga. 792, 7 S. E. 629; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Tisdale, 74 Tex. 8, 11 S. W. 900, 4 L. R. A. 545; Pittsburgh,

Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Hazen, 84 Ill. 36, 25 Am. Rep. 422.

In L. R. 6 Eq. 555, the president and secretary of a trades-union, and a printer employed by them, were restrained by injunction from posting placards and publishing advertisements, urging workmen to keep away from plaintiff's factory, where a strike against the reduction of wages was in progress; but in L. R. 10 Ch. 142, this case was overruled.

An attempt has been made to derive some of the authority for the use of an injunction in such cases to an extent not before recognized in the settled principles of equity jurisprudence from the English Judicature Act of 1873 as a consequence of the union of law and equity procedure. In 20 Ch. Div. 501, it is said that "the courts have interpreted this act as giving them power to restrain one man from persuading another to break his contract with a third person, when the object of such persuasion is the malicious injury to the third person."

Where a trades-union ordered a strike and posted pickets to persuade workmen from entering the employ of the plaintiff, such conduct was held to come within the terms of the act prescribing a penalty against every person who, with a view to compel any other person to abstain from doing, or to do any act which such other person has a legal right to do or abstain from doing, wrongfully and without legal authority . . . watches or besets the house or other place where such other person resides, or works, or carries on business, or happens to be, or the approach to such house or place." [1896] 1 Ch. 811.

The circuit court of the United States has jurisdiction to restrain the unlawful acts of persons engaged in a strike where they interfere with the operations of interstate commerce or with the transmission of the mails, and may enforce its injunction by proceedings in contempt which are not open to review on habeas corpus in the supreme court or any other court; In re Debs, 158 U. S. 564, 15 Sup. Ct. 900, 39 L. Ed. 1092.

A display of force by strikers against laborers who wish to work, such as surrounding them in large numbers, applying opprobrious epithets to them, and urging them in a hostile manner not to go to work, though no force be actually used, is as much intimidation as violence itself. Such conduct will be restrained by injunction, and the actors will be liable in damages to the employer of the laborers. Where new men employed to take the place of strikers are on their way to work, their time cannot be lawfully taken up and their progress interfered with by the strikers on any pretence or under any claim of right to argue or persuade them to break their contracts. Where a bill has been filed against strikers for an injunction and for damages for injuries caused by their illegal conduct, the plaintiff has a right to proceed with the case after the strike is over, for the purpose of recovering damages, and it is improper for a judge to express from the bench an opinion that the case should have been dropped; O'Neil v. Behanna, 182 Pa. 236, 37 Atl. 843, 38 L. R. A. 382, 61 Am. St. Rep. 702.

Strikes of laborers to raise wages or lock-outs by employers are lawful; 10 Cox, Cr. Ca. 592; Aluminum Castings Co. v. Local No. 84, 197 Fed. 221; Irving v. Dist. Council, 180 Fed. 896. Strikers who seek a legitimate end may not be enjoined from pursuing that end in a legitimate way merely because they may have overstepped the line and trespassed on the rights of their adversary, but a decree fixing a barrier at such line and subjecting them to punishment and damages for having crossed it is as far as the court can go; Iron Moulders' Union v. Allis-Chalmers Co., 166 Fed. 45, 91 C. C. A. 631, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 315. Workmen may seek, take or follow the advice of officers of their union as to the advisability of a strike; Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Switchmen's Union, 158 Fed. 541; a union may order a strike; Aluminum Castings Co. v. Local No. 84, 197 Fed. 223; workmen may peaceably persuade their fellow-workmen to leave their employer's service in order to compel an advance in wages; Rogers v. Evarts, 17 N. Y. Supp. 264.

An injunction against strikers should not prohibit either persuasion or picketing as such, but, when carried beyond their legitimate limits, they become duress or intimidation and as such may be enjoined; Iron Moulders' Union v. Allis-Chalmers Co., 166 Fed. 45, 91 C. C. A. 631, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 315; but the action of leaders of a strike, conducted primarily for the purpose of compelling recognition of a labor organization, in paying money to non-union employes of a complainant to induce them to leave its service, was held not within the limits of lawful persuasion and was enjoined; Tunstall v. Coal Co., 192 Fed. 808, 113 C. C. A. 132, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 453. The limits of lawful persuasion, when exercised by employes striking in order to better the conditions of their employment, are wider than when there is no complaint by employes, but the strike is directed by officials of an extended labor organization for the primary purpose of compelling its recognition; Tunstall v. Coal Co., 192 Fed. 808, 113 C. C. A. 132, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 453.

A combination of persons not themselves employes, to procure the latter to strike to the injury of the employer's business, was held to be a criminal conspiracy giving also the right to an injunction and damages; Pettibone v. U. S., 148 U. S. 197, 13 Sup. Ct. 542, 37 L. Ed. 419; Carew v. Rutherford, 106 Mass. 1, 8 Am. Rep. 287; Thomas v. R. Co., 62 Fed. 803; but the tendency in the American courts is not to treat such combinations as unlawful conspiracies; Arthur v. Oakes, 63 Fed. 310, 11 C. C. A. 209, 25 L. R. A. 414;

Johnston Harvester Co. v. Meinhardt, 60 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 168; where the evidence included facts showing intimidation, it is a criminal conspiracy; Newman v. Com. (Pa.) 34 Pitts. L. J. 313; and an injunction will be granted; Wick China Co. v. Brown, 164 Pa. 449, 30 Atl. 261.

Striking workmen may not coerce third persons not directly concerned in the strike into refusing to buy or use the products of their late employer, any more than he may lawfully coerce third persons into refusing them shelter or food, but the only means of injuring each other which are lawful in such a contest are those that operate directly and immediately upon the control and supply of work to be done and of labor to do it; Iron Moulders' Union v. Allis-Chalmers Co., 166 Fed. 45, 91 C. C. A. 631, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 315; Irving v. Joint District Council, 180 Fed. 899; Oxley Stave Co. v. Coopers' International Union, 72 Fed. 695.

It is unlawful for striking workmen by any means to induce apprentices under contract to serve the employer for definite terms to break such contract. Such conduct may be enjoined; Iron Moulders' Union v. Allis-Chalmers Co., 166 Fed. 45, 91 C. C. A. 631, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 315. Where the service of members of a trade union was neither special, extraordinary or unique in the sense that it could not otherwise be supplied, and that its loss would cause irreparable injury, an injunction could not be granted to restrain the individual laborers from striking; A. R. Barnes & Co. v. Berry, 156 Fed. 72.

A manufacturing company whose skilled workmen are on strike has the right to seek the aid of other manufacturers to make or complete its products, and the strikers have the reciprocal right to seek the aid of their fellow workmen in the employ of such other manufacturers to prevent that end. They may lawfully combine and co-operate for that purpose; Iron Moulders' Union v. Allis-Chalmers Co., 166 Fed. 45, 91 C. C. A. 631, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 315; the employers may lawfully combine to resist the combination of employes; Cote v. Murphy, 159 Pa. 420, 28 Atl. 190, 23 L. R. A. 135, 39 Am. St. Rep. 686.

A person not one of the parties enjoined by a strike injunction, while not strictly chargeable with breach of the injunction, in the same sense as the parties, is bound with other members of the public to observe its restrictions when known. He must not aid or abet its violation by others, nor set the known command of the court at defiance by interference or obstruction; and if he does so the court's power to punish is absolute; Garrigan v. U. S., 163 Fed. 16, 89 C. C. A. 494, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1295.

After the railroad strike at Chicago in 1894, a commission consisting of the two members appointed by the President and the commissioner of labor was authorized to examine the causes of the controversies and differences between railroad companies and other common carriers engaged in interstate transportation and their employes, the conditions accompanying them and the best means for adjusting them. As the result of the report of the commission on November 14, 1894, various bills were introduced in congress between January, 1895, and June 1, 1898, on which date an act was finally passed providing for investigation of the causes of such differences by the chairman of the interstate commerce commission and the commissioner of labor, and for the appointment of a board of arbitration. Section 10 of this act was declared unconstitutional in Adair v. U. S., 203 U. S. 161, 28 Sup. Ct. 277, 52 L. Ed. 436, 13 Ann. Cas. 764; but was severable from the rest of the act.

This act was repealed by Act July 15, 1913, which applied to common carriers by railroad or partly by railroad and partly by water, between the states or in foreign commerce, including bridges and ferries operated in connection with railroads, but excluding masters of vessels and seamen. It extends to employes, including all persons engaged in train service (but not street railroad service). In case of a controversy as to wages, hours of labor or conditions of employment, either party may apply to the board of mediation and conciliation created by the act, to bring about an amicable adjustment. Failing such adjustment, the board shall endeavor to induce the parties to arbitrate. The controversy is then submitted to a board of six, or, if the parties agree, to a board of three, chosen as follows: In case of a board of three, the employer and employes shall each select one arbitrator and those two shall select a third; if they fail to do so in five days, the third arbitrator is named by the board of mediation. In the case of a board of six, the employer and employes each name two, and those four name two more, or if they fail to name arbitrators, they are appointed by the board.

The award, with the testimony and papers, shall be filed in the United States district court office and shall be final and conclusive unless set aside for error of law apparent on the record. It shall go into effect ten days after filing, unless exceptions are filed for matter of law apparent on the record. An appeal lies within ten days to the circuit court of appeals.

Nothing in the act shall require any employe to render personal service without his consent; no injunction shall issue to compel him to perform any personal labor or service against his will. Receivers in federal courts, in control of the business of employers, may be heard before the arbitrators. Receivers may not reduce wages without the authority of the court, after twenty days' notice to the employes.

STRIKING A JURY. In English Practice. Where, for nicety of the matter in dispute, or other cause, a special jury is necessary, upon motion and rule granted thereon, the sheriff is to attend the prothonotary or proper officer with the book of freeholders, and to take indifferently forty-eight of the principal freeholders, when the attorneys on each side, being present, are to strike off twelve respectively, and the remaining twenty-four are returned. 3 Bla. Com. 357. Essentially the same practice prevails in New York, Pennsylvania, and other states; Tr. & H. Pr. § 636. See JURY; Graham, Pr. 277. In some of the states a special or struck jury is granted as of course upon the application of either party; but more generally it must appear to the court that a fair trial cannot be otherwise had, or that the intricacy and importance of the case require it. One of the parties being a citizen of color, the judge cannot properly direct a special jury to be impaneled, one-half of whom are of African descent; Nashville v. Sheperd, 3 Baxt. (Tenn.) 373; Virginia v. Rives, 100 U. S. 313, 25 L. Ed. 667. The statutory method of striking is held to be mandatory; Gallagher v. State, 26 Wis. 423; Long v. Spencer, 78 Pa. 303. See Abb. N. Y. Dig. tit. Trial §§ 196-208; Thomp. & Merr. Jur. § 14.

STRIKING OFF THE ROLL. Removing the name of a solicitor from the rolls of the court and thereby disentitling him to practise. See DISBAR.

STRIP. The act of spoiling or unlawfully taking away anything from the land, by the tenant for life or years, or by one holding an estate in the land less than the entire fee. Pub. St. Mass. [1882] 1295.

STRUCK. In Pleading. A word essential in an indictment for murder, when the death arises from any wounding, beating, or bruising. 1 Bulstr. 184; 5 Co. 122; Cro. Jac. 655; White v. Com., 6 Binn. (Pa.) 179, 6 Am. Dec. 443.

STRUCK JURY. See STRIKING A JURY.

STRUCK OFF. A term applied to a case which the court, having no jurisdiction over, and not being able to give judgment, order to be taken off the record. This is done by an entry to that effect.

As to the meaning of the words as used at an auction sale, see KNOCKED DOWN.

STRUCTURE. That which is built or constructed; an edifice or building of any kind. Poles connected by wires for the transmission of electricity; Forbes v. Electric Co., 19 Ore. 61, 23 Pac. 670, 20 Am. St. Rep. 793;

a mine or pit; Helm v. Chapman, 66 Cal. 291, 5 Pac. 352; a railroad track; Lee v. Barkhamsted, 46 Conn. 213; see Giant-Powder Co. v. R. Co., 42 Fed. 470, 8 L. R. A. 700 (contra, Rutherford v. R. Co., 35 Ohio St. 559); are structures. Swings or seats are not; Lothian v. Wood, 55 Cal. 159. See MECHANICS' LIEN.

STRUMPET. A harlot, or courtesan. Jacob, Law Dict.

STUDENTS. That one is a student in a university does not entitle him to vote where the university is situated, nor does it of itself prevent his voting there. He may vote at the seat of the university if he has his residence there and is otherwise qualified; Wickham v. Coyner, 30 Ohio C. C. 765; Berry v. Wilcox, 44 Neb. 82, 62 N. W. 249, 48 Am. St. Rep. 706. The mere fact of taking a room at a seminary for the sole purpose of studying does not constitute one a voter in the district in which the seminary is located; In re Goodman, 146 N. Y. 284, 40 N. E. 769; In re Garvey, 147 N. Y. 117, 41 N. E. 439; though he is in a Roman Catholic seminary studying for the priesthood, and has renounced all other homes, and, on admission to the priesthood, will continue in the seminary until assigned elsewhere by ecclesiastical superiors; In re Barry, 164 N. Y. 18, 58 N. E. 12, 52 L. R. A. 831; contra, In re Garvey, 147 N. Y. 117, 41 N. E. 439. The facts that the student is supported by his parents and spends his vacations with them are strong, but not necessarily conclusive, circumstances to prove that he has not changed his residence; Hall v. Schoenecke, 128 Mo. 661, 31 S. W. 97.

Students may become voters of the place where the college is located, if they are self-supporting and have given up their former residence and intend to remain in the county after their studies are over; In re Lower Oxford Contested Election, 2 Pa. Co. Ct. 323.

See CHANCELLOR'S COURTS IN THE TWO UNIVERSITIES; DOMICIL; COLLEGE.

STUFF GOWN. The professional robe worn by barristers of the outer bar; viz. those who are not queen's counsel. Brown. See BARRISTER; SILK GOWN.

STULTIFY (Lat. stultus, stupid). To make one out mentally incapacitated for the performance of an act.

It has been laid down by old authorities; Littleton § 405; 4 Co. 123; Cro. Eliz. 398; that no man should be allowed to stultify himself, i. e. plead disability through mental unsoundness. This maxim was soon doubted as law; 1 Hagg. Eccl. 414; 2 Bla. Com. 292; and has been completely overturned; 2 Kent 451.

STUMPAGE. The sum agreed to be paid to an owner of land for trees standing upon his land, the purchaser being permitted to enter upon the land and to cut down and remove the trees; in other words it is the price paid for a license to cut. Blood v. Drummond, 67 Me. 478.

STUPRUM (Lat.). In Roman Law. The criminal sexual intercourse which took place between a man and a single woman, maid, or widow, who had before lived honestly. Inst. 4. 18. 4; Dig. 48. 5. 6; 50. 16. 101.

SUB-CONTRACTOR. One who has entered into a contract, express or implied, for the performance of an act with the person who has already contracted for its performance. Phill. Mech. Liens § 44; Lester v. Houston, 101 N. C. 611, 8 S. E. 366.

SUB MODO (Lat.). Under a qualification. A legacy may be given sub modo, that is, subject to a condition or qualification.

SUB NOMINE (Lat.). In the name of.

SUB PEDE SIGILI (Lat.). Under the foot of the seal; under seal. This expression is used when it is required that a record should be certified under the seal of the court.

SUB POTESTATE (Lat.). Under, or subject to, the power of another: as, a wife is under the power of her husband; a child is subject to that of his father; a slave to that of his master.

SUB SALVO ET SECURO CONDUCTO (Lat.). Under safe and secure conduct. 1 Stra. 430.

SUB SILENTIO (Lat.). Under silence; without any notice being taken. Sometimes passing a thing sub silentio is evidence of consent. See SILENCE.

SUBINFEUDATION. The act of an inferior lord by which he carved out a part of an estate which he held of a superior, and granted it to an inferior tenant to be held of himself.

It was an indirect mode of transferring the fief, and resorted to as an artifice to elude the feudal restraint upon alienation. This was forbidden by the statute of Quia Emptores, 18 Ed. I.; 2 Bla. Com. 91; 3 Kent 406. See Cadw. Gr. Rents § 7; Chal. R. P. 18; QUIA EMPTORES; FEUDAL LAW; TENURE.

SUBJECT. An individual member of a nation, who is subject to the laws. This term is used in contradistinction to citizen, which is applied to the same individual when considering his political rights.

In monarchical governments, by subject is meant one who owes permanent allegiance to the monarch.

Subject is a wider term than citizen; there are members of the state who, by reason of natural or conventional disability, do not enjoy full political rights. To a certain extent, alien residents within a state may be deemed subjects. See Pollock, First Book of Jurispr. 57.

See ALLEGIANCE; CITIZENSHIP; NATURALIZATION.

SUBJECT-MATTER. The cause; the object; the thing in dispute.

It is a fatal objection to the jurisdiction of the court when it has not cognizance of the subject-matter of the action: as, if a cause exclusively of admiralty jurisdiction were brought in a court of common law, or a criminal proceeding in a court having jurisdiction of civil cases only; 10 Co. 68, 76; Com. v. Johnson, 8 Mass. 87. In such case, neither a plea to the jurisdiction nor any other plea would be required to oust the court of jurisdiction. The cause would be dismissed by the court.

SUBJECT TO INSURANCE. A provision in a charter-party, that the freight should be payable, subject to insurance, does not make the insurance by the ship-owner a condition precedent to his right to recover the freight, but means that the insurance premium is to be deducted from the freight. 27 L. J. Ex. 392.

SUBJECTION (Lat. sub, under, jacio, to put, throw). The obligation of one or more persons to act at the discretion or according to the judgment and will of others. Private subjection is subjection to the authority of private persons. Public subjection is subjection to the authority of public persons.

SUBMARINE TELEGRAPHS. See TELEGRAPH.

SUBMISSION (Lat. submitio,—sub, under, mittere, to put,—a putting under). Used of persons or things. A putting one's person or property under the control of another. Brouver v. Cotheal, 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 218. A yielding to authority. A citizen is bound to submit to the laws, a child to his parents, a guardian to his ward. A victor may enforce the submission of his enemy.

Every consent involves a submission, but it does not follow that a mere submission involves a consent. 9 C. & P. 722.

In Maritime Law. Submission on the part of the vanquished, and complete possession on the part of the victor, transfer property as between belligerents; The Alexander, 1 Gall. 532, Fed. Cas. No. 164.

In Practice. An agreement between parties, having a dispute, to submit their differences to voluntary arbitration. See ARBITRATION AND AWARD.

SUBMISSION BOND. The bond by which the parties agree to submit the matter in controversy to arbitration, and to abide by the award of the arbitrator. See ARBITRATION AND AWARD.

SUBNOTATIONS (Lat.). In Civil Law. The answers of the prince to questions which had been put to him respecting some obscure or doubtful point of law. See RESCRIPT.

SUBORNATION OF PERJURY. The procuring another to commit legal perjury, who in consequence of the persuasion takes the oath to which he has been incited. Hawk. Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 69, s. 10.

To complete the offence, the false oath must be actually taken, and no abortive attempt to solicit will complete the crime; 2 Show. 1; Com. v. Douglass, 5 Metc. (Mass.) 241.

But the criminal solicitation to commit perjury, though unsuccessful, is a misdemeanor at common law; 2 East 17; 1 Hawk. Pl. C. 435; 2 Bish. N. Cr. L. § 1197; 26 U. C. Q. B. 297. In fact it has been said: "There appears to have been a period in our law when the unsuccessful solicitation was deemed to constitute, without more, the full subornation of perjury; for as such it and other indictable attempts corruptly to influence a witness are treated of in some of the old books." 2 Bish. N. Cr. L. § 1197. In order to constitute the crime the false swearing procured must be itself perjury; State v. Wymberly, 40 La. Ann. 460, 4 South. 161. As to what constitutes perjury, see that title. An attempt at subornation of perjury may be shown in evidence at the trial of the cause to which the attempt relates against the guilty party. So also concealment of facts or documents such as a will, accounts, etc., which were in the power of the party to produce and which presumably he would produce; McHugh v. McHugh, 186 Pa. 197, 40 Atl. 410, 41 L. R. A. 805, 65 Am. St. Rep. 849; L. R. 5 Q. B. 314, approved Hastings v. Stetson, 130 Mass. 76. See Chicago City R. Co. v. McMahon, 103 Ill. 485, 42 Am. Rep. 29; Snell v. Bray, 56 Wis. 156, 14 N. W. 14.

In the case of an affidavit before the land office on an application to enter land, the affidavit need not have been subscribed; Nurnberger v. U. S., 156 Fed. 721, 84 C. C. A. 377.

For a form of an indictment for an attempt to suborn a person to commit perjury, see 2 Chitty, Cr. Law 480. There must be knowledge that the testimony is false on the part of both, he who solicits and he who is solicited; Coyne v. People, 124 Ill. 17, 14 N. E. 668, 7 Am. St. Rep. 324; U. S. v. Evans, 19 Fed. 912.

An indictment was held sufficient, though the precise persons to be suborned and the time and place of such suborning were not particularized; Williamson v. U. S., 207 U. S. 426, 28 Sup. Ct. 163, 52 L. Ed. 278.

SUBPÆNA (Lat. sub, under, pœna, penalty). A process to cause a witness to appear and give testimony, commanding him to lay aside all pretences and excuses, and appear before a court or magistrate therein named, at a time therein mentioned, to testify for the party named, under a penalty therein mentioned. This is called distinctively a subpœna ad testificandum.

On proof of service of a subpœna upon the witness, and that he is material, an attachment may be issued against him for a contempt, if he neglect to attend, as commanded.

Where a witness, duly served, fails to attend, and gives as his excuse that he knows no evidence relative to the issue or that the subpœna was taken out merely for vexatious purposes, the court may order it set aside. This was done in the case of the prime minister and home secretary of Great Britain; 25 T. L. R. 79. Members of the cabinet; People v. Smith, 3 Wheel. Cr. Cas. (N. Y.) 135; and congressmen may be subpœnaed (not while in attendance on or going to or from a session of congress; Respublica v. Duane, 4 Yeates [Pa.] 347), and probably the President of the United States. See U. S. v. Burr, Fed. Cas. No. 14,692. Official duties may be a sufficient excuse for not appearing. See Thompson v. R. Co., 22 N. J. Eq. 111. As a general rule, the court should assume that the executive is acting properly, and that his absence is due to his official duties; Appeal of Hartranft, 85 Pa. 433, 27 Am. Rep. 667. See 22 Harv. Law Rev. 376.

In Chancery Practice. A mandatory writ or process directed to and requiring one or more persons to appear at a time to come and answer the matters charged against him or them. The writ of subpœna was originally a process in the courts of common law, to enforce the attendance of a witness to give evidence; but this writ was used in the court of chancery for the same purpose as a citation in the courts of civil and canon law, to compel the appearance of a defendant, and to oblige him to answer upon oath the allegations of the plaintiff.

It was invented by John Waltham, bishop of Salisbury, and chancellor to Rich. II., under the authority of the statutes of Westminster II. and 13 Edw. I. c. 34, which enabled him to devise new writs; Cruise, Dig. t. 11, c. 1, § 12. See Vin. Abr. Subpœna; 1 Swanst. 209; Spence, Eq. Jur.

A Latin form of a subpœna is given in 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 433.

SUBPÆNA AD TESTIFICANDUM. See SUBPÆNA.

SUBPÆNA DUCES TECUM. A writ or process of the same kind as the subpœna ad testificandum, but with a clause requiring the witness to bring with him and produce to the court books, papers, etc., in his hands, tending to elucidate the matter in issue. 2 Bla. Com. 382.

This is the only method in most cases, of obtaining the production of a document in the hands of a person not a party to the action. The use of such processes seems to be, as suggested by Lord Ellenborough, C. J., "essential to the very existence and constitution of a court of common law"; 9 East 483, where he states that such writs cannot be traced earlier than the time of Charles II.

In the 16th century the practice of proving by witnesses the facts stated in the pleadings was growing. 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 489. By the middle of the 17th century the witnesses and the jury were regarded as so distinct that, if a party desired to have a juror testify, he was examined in open court. 1 id. 160. A statute in 1563 allowed process to compel the attendance of witnesses in chancery; id. 161.

In Wilson v. U. S., 221 U. S. 361, 31 Sup. Ct. 538, 55 L. Ed. 771, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 558, the opinion of Bayley, B., in 2 Cr. & M. 477 (a fully considered case), was quoted: "The origin of the subpœna duces tecum does not distinctly appear. It has been said that it was not introduced or known in practice till the reign of Charles II. . . . But there must have been some process similar to the subpœna duces tecum to compel the production of documents, not only before that time, but even before the statute of the 5th of Elizabeth. Prior to that statute there must have been a power in the crown (for it would have been utterly impossible to carry on the administration of justice without such power) to require the attendance in courts of justice of persons capable of giving evidence and the production of documents material to the cause, though in the possession of a stranger. . . . Whether he could require to be sworn not ad testificandum, but true answer to make to such questions as the court should demand of him, touching the possession or custody of the document, is not now the question. Perhaps he might; but we are clearly of opinion that he has no right to require that a party bringing him into court for the mere purpose of producing a document should have him sworn in such a way as to make him a witness in the cause, when it may often happen that he is a mere depository and knows nothing of the documents of which he has the custody."

The opinion proceeded:

"Where the documents of a corporation are sought, the practice has been to subpœna the officer who has them in his custody. But there would seem to be no reason why the subpœna duces tecum should not be directed to the corporation itself. Corporate existence implies amenability to legal process. The corporation may be sued; it may be compelled by mandamus, and restrained by injunction, directed to it. Possessing the privileges of a legal entity and having records, books and papers, it is under a duty to produce them when they may properly be required in the administration of justice." It was held that the ad testificandum clause is not essential to a subpœna duces tecum; the person producing the papers need not be sworn; they may be proved by others.

It can only be used to compel the production of books, papers, accounts, and the like which are comprehended under the term documentary evidence, and not to bring in court such things as stove patterns, for example; In re Shephard, 3 Fed. 12; Johnson Steel Street-Rail Co. v. Steel Co., 48 Fed. 191.

The writ may issue to a party to the action where he is competent as a witness notwithstanding a statute providing for an order for production to enable an inspection by the adverse party; Bonesteel v. Lynde, 8 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 226; contra, Trotter v. Latson, 7 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 261; Murray v. Elston, 23 N. J. Eq. 212.

The writ is compulsory and must be obeyed by the party to whom it is addressed; 4 Dowl. 273; U. S. v. Hunter, 15 Fed. 712; and it is a question for the court whether there is any valid reason why the paper shall not be produced and upon what conditions; id.; 2 Jones & Sp. 28; Chaplain v. Briscoe, 5 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 198. That the papers are private is not of itself ground for refusal; In re Dunn, 9 Mo. App. 261; Burnham v. Morrissey, 14 Gray (Mass.) 240, 74 Am. Dec. 676. He must bring them into court for its inspection, though he need not permit them to be given in evidence, if this would prejudice his rights; Bull v. Loveland, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 9.

"No witness, however, who is not a party to a suit, can be compelled to produce his title-deeds to any property, or any document the production of which might tend to criminate him, or expose him to any penalty or forfeiture; 2 Taunt. 115; Byass v. Sullivan, 21 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 50; but a witness is not entitled to refuse to produce a document in his possession only because its production may expose him to a civil action (3 Q. B. D. 618), or because he has a lien upon it." Steph. Dig. Ev. art. 118.

This is stated as the English rule, but in this country it is said that the weight of authority confines the excuse for not producing the document to the exposure to penalty or forfeiture or criminal prosecution; Bull v. Loveland, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 9.

A custodian of public documents will not be required to bring them into court under a subpœna duces tecum where official copies can be had; Delaney v. Philadelphia, 1 Yeates (Pa.) 403; or where their production would result in injury to the public; Gray v. Pentland, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 23; 7 Dowl. 693. Papers which are confidential communications are protected as oral statements of the same character would be, as, for example, papers of a client in the hands of his attorney; Durkee v. Leland, 4 Vt. 612; 9 M. & W. 609. "Although a paper should be in the legal custody of one man, yet if a subpœna duces tecum is served on another who has the means to produce it, he is bound to do so;" 1 Campb. 17.

Telegrams are not privileged, and the officers of a telegraph company must produce them under a subpœna duces tecum without respect to rules of the company to the contrary; U. S. v. Babcock, 3 Dill. 566, Fed. Cas. No. 14,484; U. S. v. Hunter, 15 Fed. 712; Ex parte Brown, 72 Mo. 83, 37 Am. Rep. 426; notwithstanding statutes forbidding the disclosure of such messages; Ex parte Brown, 72 Mo. 83. Corporations generally may be required to produce their books and papers which are essential to the rights of litigants; L. R. 9 C. P. 27; Wertheim v. Trust Co., 15 Fed. 718. See id., 15 Fed. 718.

A subpœna is ordinarily granted as of course; the applicant drafts his own form and he purchases it at his peril. The court may refuse to allow an excessive number of witnesses to be summoned; Butler v. State, 97 Ind. 378. A witness who denies its regularity should move before the return day; but where it was not served in time, he may appear then and move to set it aside. A second subpœna cannot issue after the first has been served and while it remains unreturned. The writ cannot be turned into a writ of replevin and used to impair the rights of the witness; Elting v. U. S., 27

Ct. Cl. 158. The federal practice is regulated by R. S. § 869.

If a person causes a subpœna to issue against another ostensibly to secure his attendance as a witness in a case, but in reality to compel him to pay a claim, it is an abuse of legal process; Dishaw v. Wadleigh, 15 App. Div. 205, 44 N. Y. Supp. 207.

A court will, in a proper case, set aside a subpœna duces tecum because it is too broad; Hoppe v. W. R. Ostrander & Co., 183 Fed. 786.

A witness is guilty of contempt who, expecting to be subpoenaed, but before issue, concealed himself; Aaron v. State, 62 So. 419. A defendant who attempted to persuade one wanted as a witness to avoid service of the subpœna is guilty of a misdemeanor; [1913] Vict. L. R. 380.

See DISCOVERY; PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS; SEARCHES AND SEIZURES.

SUBREPTIO (Lat.). In Civil Law. Obtaining gifts of escheat, etc., from the king by concealing the truth. Bell, Dict.; Calv. Lex. Subripere.

SUBREPTION. In French Law. The fraud committed to obtain a pardon, title, or grant, by alleging facts contrary to truth.

SUBROGATION. The substitution of another person in the place of the creditor, to whose rights he succeeds in relation to the debt. That change which puts another person in the place of the creditor, and which makes the right, the mortgage, or the security which the creditor has passed to the person who is subrogated to him,—that is to say, who enters into his right. Domat, Civ. Law, pt. i. l. iii. t. i. § vi.

It is the substitution of another person in place of the creditor, so that the person substituted will succeed to all the rights of the creditor, having reference to a debt due him. It is independent of any mere contractual relations between the parties to be affected by it, and is broad enough to cover every instance in which one party is required to pay a debt for which another is primarily answerable, and which in equity and conscience ought to be discharged by the latter; Johnson v. Barrett, 117 Ind. 551, 19 N. E. 199, 10 Am. St. Rep. 83.

It is a legal fiction by force of which an obligation extinguished by payment made by a third party is considered as continuing to subsist for the benefit of this third person, who makes but one and the same person with the creditor in the view of the law.

Subrogation gives to the substitute all the rights of the party for whom he is substituted; Ohio L. Ins. & T. Co. v. Winn, 4 Md. Ch. 253. Among the earlier civil-law writers, the term seems to have been used synonymously with substitution; or, rather, substitution included subrogation as well as its present limited signification. See Domat, Civ. Law, passim; Pothier. Obl. passim. The term substitution is now almost altogether confined to the law of devises and chancery practice. See SUBSTITUTION.

The word subrogation is originally found only in the civil law, and has been adopted, with the doctrine itself, thence into equity; but in the law as distinguished from equity it hardly appears as a term, except perhaps where, as in Pennsylvania, equity is administered through the forms of law. The doctrine of marshalling assets is plainly derived from the Roman law of subrogation or substitution; and although the word is, or, rather has been, used sparingly in the common law, many of the doctrines of subrogation are familiar to the courts of common law.

It is one thing to decide that a surety is entitled, on payment, to have an assignment of the debt, and quite another to decide that he is entitled to be subrogated or substituted as to the equities and securities to the place of the creditor, as against the debtor and his co-sureties; Story, Eq. Jur. § 493; Dennis v. Rider, 2 McLean, 451, Fed. Cas. No. 3,797; Williams v. Washington, 16 N. C. 137.

Conventional subrogation results, as its name indicates, from the agreement of the parties, and can take effect only by agreement. This agreement is, of course, with the party to be subrogated, and may be either by the debtor or creditor. La. Civ. Code 1249.

"The doctrine of subrogation is derived from the civil law (Springer's Adm'rs v. Springer, 43 Pa. 518). In this country, under the initial guidance of Chancellor Kent, its principles have been more widely developed than in England (Furnold v. Bank, 44 Mo. 338). It is treated as the creature of equity, and is so administered as to secure real and essential justice without regard to form (Id.), and is independent of any contractual relations between the parties to be affected by it (Eaton v. Hasty, 6 Neb. 419, 29 Am. Rep. 365). It is broad enough to include every instance in which one party pays a debt for which another is primarily answerable, and which in equity and good conscience should have been discharged by the latter (Harnsberger v. Yancey, 33 Gratt. (Va.) 527. See Johnson v. Barrett, 117 Ind. 551, 19 N. E. 199, 10 Am. St. Rep. 83)." Sheld. Subr. § 1; Har. Subr. 1, 22.

Subrogation does not take place until the payment of the whole debt; Columbia Finance & Trust Co. v. Ry. Co., 60 Fed. 794, 9 C. C. A. 264, 22 U. S. App. 54.

A principle which lies at the bottom of the doctrine is that the person seeking it must have paid the debt under grave necessity to save himself a loss. The right is never accorded to a volunteer; Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Middleport, 124 U. S. 534, 8 Sup. Ct. 625, 31 L. Ed. 537; Sheld. Subr. § 240; Shinn v. Budd, 14 N. J. Eq. 234; Hoover v.

Epler, 52 Pa. 522; Gadsden v. Brown, Speer's Eq. (S. C.) 37, 41, in which is a statement of the doctrine by Johnson, Ch., of which Miller, J., said in Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Middleport, 124 U. S. 549, 8 Sup. Ct. 625, 31 L. Ed. 537: "This is perhaps as clear a statement of the doctrine on this subject as is to be found anywhere."

But under the Louisiana code the payment of a mortgage debt by an ordinary creditor subrogates him to the rights of the mortgagee; Hall v. Hawley, 49 La. Ann. 1046, 22 South. 205; so also of a grantee of the premises who has paid the mortgage in good faith relying on representations that there were no junior liens; Johnson v. Tootle, 14 Utah 482, 47 Pac. 1033; but a mortgagee, who, for his own convenience, with knowledge of the facts, accepts several mortgages in discharge of the original one, is not entitled to subrogation; Seieroe v. Homan, 50 Neb. 601, 70 N. W. 244.

Where a bank lent money to a contractor to be used in carrying out his contract and some of it was used by him for paying laborers and material men, the bank was not entitled to subrogation to the claims of the latter; Lawrence v. U. S., 71 Fed. 228. As to subrogation to rights of labor, etc., claims, see McClung v. R. Co. (Tenn.) 42 S. W. 53; RECEIVER.

Persons are not entitled to the right of subrogation where such alleged right arises from tortious conduct of their own. A person who invokes the doctrine of subrogation must come into court with clean hands; German Bk. of Memphis v. U. S., 148 U. S. 573, 13 Sup. Ct. 702, 37 L. Ed. 564.

Legal subrogation takes place to its full extent—

First, for the benefit of one who being himself a creditor pays the claim of another who has a preference over him by reason of his liens and securities. For in this case, it is said, it is to be presumed that he pays for the purpose of securing his own debt; and this distinguishes his case from that of a mere stranger. Domat, Civ. Law. And so, at common law, if a junior mortgagor pays off, the prior mortgage, he is entitled to demand an assignment thereof; Appeal of Mosier, 56 Pa. 76, 93 Am. Dec. 783; Miller v. Whittier, 36 Me. 577.

Second, for the benefit of the purchaser of an immovable, who uses the price which he paid in paying the creditors to whom the inheritance was mortgaged.

Third, for the benefit of him who, being held with others or for others for the payment of the debt, has an interest in discharging it.

Subrogation takes place for the benefit of co-promisors or co-guarantors, as between themselves, and for the benefit of sureties against their principals. But between co-guarantors and co-promisors subrogation benefits him who pays the debt only to the extent of enabling him to recover from each separately his portion of the debt. As against his co-sureties, the surety increasing the value of their joint security is entitled to subrogation only to the amount actually paid; Tarr v. Ravenscroft, 12 Gratt. (Va.) 642. Any arrangement by one co-surety with the principal enures to the benefit of all the co-sureties; Tyus v. De Jarnette, 26 Ala. 280; Taylor v. Morrison, 26 Ala. 728, 62 Am. Dec. 747.

If one tenant in common pays a mortgage or other incumbrance upon the property, he may be subrogated to such lien to secure contribution from his co-tenants. A person who has lent money to a debtor for the purpose of discharging a debt may be subrogated by the debtor to the creditor's rights, and if the party who has agreed to advance the money for the purpose employs it himself in paying the debt and discharging the incumbrance on land given for its security, he is not to be regarded as a volunteer. After such an agreement with the debtor, he is not a stranger in relation to the debt, but he may in equity be entitled to the benefit of the security which he has satisfied with the expectation of receiving a new mortgage or lien upon the land for the money paid; Haverford L. & B. Ass'n v. Fire Ass'n, 180 Pa. 522, 37 Atl. 179, 57 Am. St. Rep. 657.

When a mortgage is taken upon land with the understanding that it shall be a first lien thereon, and that the money lent is to be applied by the mortgagee to the payment of a prior lien, and it is so applied, the mortgagee is subrogated to the rights of the prior incumbrancer when it is equitable to do so, although there was an antecedent second mortgage of which the subsequent mortgagee had no actual knowledge or notice; Traders' Bk. v. Myers, 3 Kan. App. 636, 44 Pac. 292.

Most of the cases of subrogation so called in the common law arise from transactions of principals and sureties. Courts of equity have held sureties entitled, upon payment of the debt due by their principal to the creditor, to have the full benefit of all the collateral securities, both of a legal and equitable nature, which the creditor has taken as an additional pledge for his debt; Story, Eq. Jur. § 499.

"A surety who completes a contract with the United States on the contractor's default is subrogated to the rights which the United States might assert against a fund created by the retention of 10 per cent. of the sums estimated from time to time as the value of the work done, in order to insure its completion; and this right relates back to the making of the contract, and is superior to any equitable lien asserted by a bank for moneys advanced to the contractor without the surety's knowledge before he began to complete the work." Moses v. U. S., 166 U. S. 571, 17 Sup. Ct. 682, 41 L. Ed. 1119.

Where the creditor's right to subrogation depends on the existence in the surety of the rights to which subrogation is sought, after the surety has parted with the thing given him for his protection, the creditor can have no subrogation; Cunningham v. R. Co., 156 U. S. 400, 15 Sup. Ct. 361, 39 L. Ed. 471.

It is a settled rule that in all cases where a party only secondarily liable on an obligation is compelled to discharge it, he has a right in a court of equity to stand in the place of the creditor, and be subrogated to all his rights against the party previously liable; Hays v. Ward, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 123, 8 Am. Dec. 554; Barker v. Parker, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 505; Union Bank of Md. v. Edwards, 1 Gill & J. (Md.) 346. This is clearly the case where the surety takes an assignment of the security; Norton v. Soule, 2 Me. (2 Greenl.) 341.

If a surety on a debt secured by mortgage pays the debt, he is entitled to the mortgage as security; 2 Sim. 155. In all cases, the payment must have been made by a party liable, and not by a mere volunteer; Sandford v. McLean, 3 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 117, 23 Am. Dec. 773; Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Middleport, 124 U. S. 534, 8 Sup. Ct. 625, 31 L. Ed. 537; but it will be applied whenever the person claiming its benefits has paid a debt for which another was primarily answerable, and which he was compelled to pay in order to protect his own rights or save his own property; McNeil v. Miller, 29 W. Va. 480, 2 S. E. 335; Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Middleport, 124 U. S. 534, 8 Sup. Ct. 625, 31 L. Ed. 537. The creditor must have had his claim fully satisfied; Union Bank of Md. v. Edwards, 1 Gill & J. (Md.) 347; and the surety claiming subrogation must have paid it; Kyner v. Kyner, 6 Watts (Pa.) 221; La Grange v. Merrill, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 625; Bonham v. Galloway, 13 Ill. 68; and is subrogated, where he has paid to redeem a security, only to the amount he has paid, whatever be the value of the security; Hill v. Manser, 11 Gratt. (Va.) 522. But giving a note is payment within this rule; Burke v. Cruger, 8 Tex. 66, 58 Am. Dec. 102. One who advances money to the mortgage creditor of his debtor, in the payment of interest accumulations on the mortgage debt, becomes legally subrogated, pro tanto to the mortgage creditor's right; Hobgood v. Schuler, 44 La. Ann. 537, 10 South. 812. When a mortgagor fails to protect junior incumbrancers against a prior lien when it is his duty to do so, they may pay it and be subrogated to the rights of the holder thereto; Memphis & L. R. R. v. Dow, 120 U. S. 287, 7 Sup. Ct. 482, 30 L. Ed. 595. The surety after paying the debt is entitled to enforce every security which the creditor has against the principal; Penn v. Ingles, 82 Va. 65.

When a surety pays the money to the creditor, to preserve the security for the benefit of the surety so paying, it must be assigned to a trustee, and in no other way can it be kept alive; Tiddy v. Harris, 101 N. C. 589, 8 S. E. 227.

Judgment obtained against the principal and surety does not destroy the relation as between themselves; Pettee v. Flewellen, 2 Ga. 239; La Farge v. Herter, 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 159. If a judgment is recovered against a debtor and surety separately for the same amount, the surety can enforce the judgment against his principal when assigned to him after he had paid the amount of the judgment; Clason v. Morris, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 524.

A surety in a judgment to obtain a stay of execution is not entitled to be substituted on paying the judgment, as against subsequent creditors; Appeal of Armstrong, 5 W. & S. (Pa.) 352. Nor can the surety be subrogated, although he has paid a judgment, if he has sued his principal and failed to recover; Fink v. Mahaffy, 8 Watts (Pa.) 384.

If a judgment is recovered and the sureties pay, they are entitled to be subrogated; Pott v. Nathans, 1 W. & S. (Pa.) 155, 37 Am. Dec. 456; McDougald v. Dougherty, 14 Ga. 674; Ottman v. Moak, 3 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 431; even where a mortgage had been given them, but which turned out to be invalid; Miller v. Pendleton, 4 Hen. & M. (Va.) 436. This seems to be contradicted in Carr's Adm'r v. Glasscock's Adm'r, 3 Gratt. (Va.) 343.

Entry of satisfaction on a judgment does not destroy subrogation, if the entry was not made at the instance of the surety; Baily v. Brownfield, 20 Pa. 41.

Where the surety has become liable on the contract of his principal, when the principal fails to perform the contract, the surety may pay and be subrogated; New Hampshire Savings Bank v. Colcord, 15 N. H. 119, 41 Am. Dec. 685; thus, where the surety was held on a bond which he was obliged to pay; Fox v. Alexander, 36 N. C. 340; McDaniels v. Mfg. Co., 22 Vt. 274; and this even where the bond was given to the U. S. to pay duties on goods belonging to a third person; Enders v. Brune, 4 Rand. (Va.) 438. And where the bond was given for the payment of the price of land, he was allowed to sell the land; Franklin Ins. Co. v. Drake, 2 B. Monr. (Ky.) 50. But it is said the mere payment does not ipso facto subrogate him; Rittenhouse v. Levering, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 190. The surety on a bond of a county auditor is entitled to proceed by subrogation, after it has paid the county the loss occasioned by the auditor; National Surety Co. v. Bank, 156 Fed. 21, 84 C. C. A. 187, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 155, 13 Ann. Cas. 421.

If the surety be also a debtor, there will be no substitution, unless expressly made; Appeal of Erb, 2 Pen. & W. (Pa.) 296; and the person who claims a right of subrogation must have superior equities to those opposing him; Harrisburg Bank v. German, 3 Pa. 300.

Sureties of a surety, and his assignee, are entitled to all the rights of the surety, and to be substituted to his place as to all remedies against the principal or his estate; Elwood v. Deifendorf, 5 Barb. (N. Y.) 398; McDaniels v. Mfg. Co., 22 Vt. 274.

A surety cannot compel the creditor to exhaust his security before coming on the surety; 37 N. J. L. J. 370.

The debt of the acceptor of a bill is not extinguished by the payment of the bill by the indorser or drawer; for the same rights will remain against him, in their favor, which the holder had himself, unless he is a mere accommodation acceptor; Story, Bills § 422. See a limitation in Per Lee v. Onderdonk, 19 Barb. (N. Y.) 562. But if payment is made by an indorser who had not received due notice, it is at his own risk, and he can ordinarily have no recourse over to third persons; Chitty, Bills, c. 9; Har. Subr. 174.

An accommodation acceptor is not entitled on payment to a security given to an accommodation indorser; Gomez v. Lazarus, 16 N. C. 205.

An accommodation indorser who is obliged to pay the note is subrogated to the collateral securities; Toler v. Cushman, 12 La. Ann. 733. This subrogation operates in the civil law for the benefit of a holder by intervention (i. e. who pays for the honor of the drawer).

Payment of a note by an indorser actually bound, produces the legal effect of subrogating him to the rights of the last holder; Seixas v. Gonsoulin, 40 La. Ann. 351, 4 South. 453. One paying the note of another by mistake is not entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the payee; Charnock v. Jones, 22 S. D. 132, 115 N. W. 1072, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 233.

This species of subrogation (by indorsement) is to be distinguished from that which a surety on a note has when he is compelled to pay. Such surety is entitled to the benefit of all the securities which the holder has; Barnes v. Morris, 39 N. C. 22; Hill v. Voorhies, 22 Pa. 68; Perley v. Langley, 7 N. H. 236.

In the civil law, an agent who buys goods for his principal with his own money is so far subrogated to the principal's rights that if he fails the agent may sell his goods as if they were his own; Cour de Cass. Nov. 14, 1810.

An insurer of real property is subrogated to the rights of the insured against third parties who are responsible for the loss at common law; 2 B. & C. 254; Hart v. R. Corp., 13 Metc. (Mass.) 99, 46 Am. Dec. 719; Connecticut Fire Ins. Co. v. R. Co., 73 N. Y. 399, 29 Am. Rep. 171; Rockingham Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Boshier, 39 Me. 253, 63 Am. Dec. 618; Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. R. Co., 25 Conn. 265, 65 Am. Dec. 571. And it is well settled in some states that the mortgagee cannot, after payment of his debt by the underwriter, enforce his claim against the mortgagor, but that the underwriter is subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee; Smith v. Ins. Co., 17 Pa. 253, 55 Am. Dec. 546; Foster v. Van Reed, 70 N. Y. 19, 26 Am. Rep. 544; Norwich Fire Ins. Co. v. Boomer, 52 Ill. 442, 4 Am. Rep. 618. So in Canada; 1 Low. Can. 222. The contrary view, however, has been consistently maintained in Massachusetts; King v. Fire Ins. Co., 7 Cush. (Mass.) 1, 54 Am. Dec. 683.

But an insurance company is not subrogated to the rights of a mortgagee who has paid the premiums himself, so as to demand an assignment of the mortgage before paying his claim when the buildings were burned; Foster v. Fire Ins. Co., 2 Gray (Mass.) 216; 8 Hare 216.

The insurer, upon paying to the assured the amount of the loss, total or partial, of the goods insured, becomes, without any formal assignment or any express stipulation to that effect in the policy, subrogated in a corresponding amount to the assured's right of action against the carrier or other person responsible for the loss, and in a court of admiralty may assert in his own name that right of the shipper; Liverpool & G. W. Steam Co. v. Ins. Co., 129 U. S. 397, 9 Sup. Ct. 469, 32 L. Ed. 788. As between a common carrier of goods and an underwriter upon them, the liability to the owner for their loss is primarily upon the carrier, while the liability of the insurer is only secondary; Wager v. Ins. Co., 150 U. S. 99, 14 Sup. Ct. 55, 37 L. Ed. 1013.

Ordinarily as between the insurer, claiming subrogation, and the insured, the amount of the recovery against the person whose tort caused the loss represents the entire loss suffered by the insured; Stoughton v. Gas Co., 165 Pa. 428, 30 Atl. 1001.

Under a statute directing, through its standard form of insurance policy, the subrogation of the insurer to the rights of the insured against the party primarily responsible for the loss, such subrogation is a legal right, which must prevail unless a stronger equity be shown against it; and, where the insured recovers a judgment against such party, the insurer is subrogated to his rights therein; Stoughton v. Gas Co., 35 Wkly. Notes Cas. 519.

"An insurance company which has paid a loss upon partnership goods is not prevented, by the subsequent death of one of the partners and the resulting dissolution of the firm, from maintaining a suit in admiralty in the partnership name to recover the amount of the loss from the carrier." The Queen, 78 Fed. 155.

An insurer upon paying a loss to the assured can take nothing by subrogation but the rights of the assured, and if the assured has no right of action, none passes to the insurer; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Ins. Co., 139 U. S. 223, 11 Sup. Ct. 554, 35 L. Ed. 154; Wager v. Ins. Co., 150 U. S. 99, 14 Sup. Ct. 55, 37 L. Ed. 1013.

The doctrine of subrogation does not apply to life insurance; Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. R. Co., 25 Conn. 265, 65 Am. Dec. 571. But see, Ætna Ins. Co. v. R. Co., 3 Dill. 1, Fed. Cas. No. 96. An accident insurance company does not become subrogated to the rights of the policy holder against one who negligently causes injury, unless there is a provision to that effect in the policy; Gatzweiler v. Light Co., 136 Wis. 34, 116 N. W. 633, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 211, 128 Am. St. Rep. 1057, 16 Ann. Cas. 633.

If one lends money to an insane person to purchase real estate, he cannot be subrogated to the rights of his debtor against the vendor, so as to compel the latter to return the purchase money to him; Murphree v. Clisby, 168 Ala. 339, 52 South. 907, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 933; and so where one advances money to pay an encumbrance on a minor's property, where he takes as security a deed of trust executed with the sanction of the probate court, but which proves to be without legal justification, he cannot be subrogated to the benefit of the old encumbrance after it has been cancelled on the record; Capen v. Garrison, 193 Mo. 335, 92 S. W. 368, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 838. But in Hughes v. Thomas, 131 Wis. 315, 111 N. W. 474, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 744, 11 Ann. Cas. 673, it was held that where money is advanced to an executor to pay a mortgage the payor expecting to receive security on the fee, whereas the security bound only the life estate, he was entitled to subrogation to the rights of the mortgagee. The mere payment of the debt at the instance of the debtor does not entitle the payor to subrogation to the lien of the creditor; In re Coleman, 136 Fed. 820, 69 C. C. A. 496.

An original stockholder compelled to pay calls on stock after its assignment, is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the corporation against the delinquent assignee only upon clear proof of acceptance of the transfer by the latter; Tripp v. Appleman, 35 Fed. 19.

In the civil law, whoever paid privileged debts, such, for example, as the funeral expenses, had by subrogation the prior claim: Eorum ratio prior est creditorum quorum pecunia ad creditoris privilegios pervenit. Dig. de reb. anc. jud. pos. l. 24, § 3.

So, if during the community of goods arising from the relation of husband and wife, an annuity which was due from one of them only was redeemed by the money belonging to both, the other was subrogated pleno jure as to that part of the claim; Pothier, Obl. pt. 3, c. 1, art. 6, § 2.

In the civil law, the consignee of goods who pays freight is said to be subrogated to the rights of the carrier and forwarder; Cour de Cass., 7th Dec. 1826. The common law does not recognize this right as a subrogation. But see LIEN.

In marshalling assets, where a mortgagee has a lien on two funds, if he satisfy himself out of one which is mortgaged to a junior mortgagee so as to extinguish the fund, the junior mortgagee is subrogated to the other fund; Hunt v. Townsend, 4 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 510.

The right of subrogation is a personal right, but may be assigned; Harrisburg Bk. v. German, 3 Pa. 300; and the creditors of the surety may claim the benefit of the right; Neff v. Miller, 8 Pa. 347; Bibb v. Martin, 14 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 87. As to which of two parties liable for the debt shall be subrogated, see Bellows v. Allen, 23 Vt. 169.

Where one is subrogated to a mortgage, it is not necessary that it be assigned to him; Walker v. King, 45 Vt. 525; though such assignment would only strengthen his position; Davis v. Pierce, 10 Minn. 376 (Gil. 302). The right of subrogation to a prior incumbrance is sometimes enforced by a court of equity by compelling the holder of it to assign it to the party entitled to subrogation; Johnson v. Zink, 51 N. Y. 333; Appeal of Lyon, 61 Pa. 16.

One who is liable to contribute to the payment of a prior lien on property on which he holds security, who is obliged to pay the whole of such claim to protect his own interest, may be subrogated thereto for the purpose of compelling contribution from the other persons liable for a part thereof; Tarbell v. Durant, 61 Vt. 516, 17 Atl. 44.

The weight of authority denies subrogation when the sole object of a suit in equity is to avoid the statute of limitations; Burrus v. Cook, 215 Mo. 496, 114 S. W. 1065.

The creditor need not be made a party to a bill to obtain subrogation; M'Nairy v. Eastland, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 310.

See LIEN; MARSHALLING ASSETS.

SUBSCRIBE. To write underneath. Wild Cat Branch v. Ball, 45 Ind. 213. To affix a signature. In re Strong's Will, 16 N. Y. Supp. 104. It may sometimes be construed to mean to give consent to or to attest. 24 L. J. Q. B. 171.

SUBSCRIBING WITNESS. One who subscribes his name to a writing in order to be able at a future time to prove its due execution. An attesting witness.

In order to make a good subscribing witness, it is requisite that he should sign his name to the instrument himself, at the time of its execution, and at the request or with the assent of the party; Hollenback v. Fleming, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 303; 11 M. & W. 168; Mullen v. McKelvy, 5 Watts (Pa.) 399.

The practice is, if the subscribing witness cannot be produced, to prove his signature, and that proves the signature of the maker of the instrument.

If the subscribing witness is out of the jurisdiction, and no person can be found within the jurisdiction who can prove his handwriting, the handwriting of the obligor may be proved.

Quære whether, if the handwriting of the witness is proved, that of the obligor ought not to be also; Clark v. Sanderson, 3 Binn. (Pa.) 192, 5 Am. Dec. 368.

Wigmore, Code of Evidence, states the rule that the attesting witnesses to a document must first be called as being applicable only where attesting witnesses to a document are required by law. The attesting witnesses must first be called, or it must be shown that their testimony is unavailable—the witnesses being dead, or outside the jurisdiction, or cannot be found, etc. It may be shown that the document is more than thirty years old, raising a presumption that the witnesses are dead. The rule does not apply, because of an estoppel or some other rule of positive law, or because of a rule of pleading or a judicial admission, or if the opponent claims under the same instrument, but not because it was merely produced by the opponent.

SUBSCRIPTION. That kind of imperial constitution which was granted in answer to the prayer of a petitioner who was present. Calvinus.

SUBSCRIPTION (Lat. sub, under, scribo, to write). The placing a signature at the bottom of a written or printed engagement; or it is the attestation of a witness by so writing his name; but it has been holden that the attestation of an illiterate witness by making his mark is a sufficient subscription. 2 Ves. Sen. 454; 3 P. Wms. 253.

The act by which a person makes an agreement over his signature in writing, to furnish a sum of money for a particular purpose; as, a subscription to a charitable institution, a subscription for a book, for a newspaper, and the like.

One who subscribes, agreeably to the statute and by-laws of a chartered company, acquires a right to his shares, which is a sufficient consideration to make the subscription obligatory on him; but otherwise where the organization was not yet effected; McCarty v. R. Co., 87 Pa. 332; Boyd v. R. Co., 90 Pa. 169. A subscription for the payment of certain sums of money to a contemplated corporation, to be formed for a purpose for which the subscribers were to derive benefits, may be enforced by the corporation when formed; and no formal acceptance of the subscription or notice of such acceptance is necessary to make it binding; Richelieu Hotel Co. v. Encampment Co., 140 Ill. 248, 29 N. E. 1044, 33 Am. St. Rep. 234.

A subscription of a certain sum towards paying off a church debt made long after the debt was contracted and the church built, is without consideration and cannot be enforced; First Cong. Church v. Gillis, 17 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 614. A mere subscription for a charitable object cannot be enforced; Twenty-Third St. Bapt. Church v. Cornell, 117 N. Y. 601, 23 N. E. 177, 6 L. R. A. 807; Cottage St. M. E. Church v. Kendall, 121 Mass. 528, 23 Am. Rep. 286; Pratt v. Trustees, 93 Ill. 475, 34 Am. Rep. 187; University of Des Moines v. Livingston, 57 Ia. 307, 10 N. W. 738, 42 Am. Rep. 42. A gratuitous subscription to promote the object for which a corporation is established, cannot be enforced unless the promisee has, in reliance on the promise sued on, done something or incurred or assumed some liability or obligation; it is not sufficient that others were led to subscribe by the subscription sought to be enforced; Cottage Street Church v. Kendall, 121 Mass. 528, 23 Am. Rep. 286; Twenty-Third St. Baptist Church v. Cornell, 117 N. Y. 601, 23 N. E. 177, 6 L. R. A. 807; University of Des Moines v. Livingston, 57 Ia. 307, 10 N. W. 738, 42 Am. Rep. 42. The consideration which supports the promise of a subscriber to an enterprise is expenditure by the promisee on the faith of the subscription and not advantage to be gained by the promisor; Kinsley v. Military Encampment Co., 41 Ill. App. 259; McCabe v. O'Connor, 69 Ia. 134, 28 N. W. 573. See Johnson v. University, 41 Ohio St. 527. Until liability has been incurred or acts have been done on the strength of the subscription, it may be withdrawn, and it is revoked by the insanity or death of the subscriber; Beach v. Church, 96 Ill. 177; Helfenstein's Estate, 77 Pa. 328, 18 Am. Rep. 449.

It has been held that a subscription, to be binding, should be a promise to some particular person or committee; and there should be an agreement on the part of such person or committee to do something on their part: as, to provide materials or erect a building; Phillips Limerick Academy v. Davis, 11 Mass. 114, 6 Am. Dec. 162; Troy Conference Academy v. Nelson, 24 Vt. 189; Hamilton College v. Stewart, 1 N. Y. 581.

If advances were fairly authorized, and have been made on the strength of the subscriptions, it will be deemed sufficient to make them obligatory; Farmington Academy v. Allen, 14 Mass. 172, 7 Am. Dec. 201; Warren v. Stearns, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 73; Robertson v. March, 4 Ill. (3 Scam.) 198; University of Vermont v. Buell, 2 Vt. 48; they form a consideration for each other; Edinboro Academy v. Robinson, 37 Pa. 210, 78 Am. Dec. 421.

The subscriptions to a common object are not usually mutual or really concurrent, and can only be held binding on grounds of public policy. See George v. Harris, 4 N. H. 533, 17 Am. Dec. 446; Trustees of Church in Hanson v. Stetson, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 506; Com'rs Canal Fund v. Perry, 5 Ohio 58.

A subscription for shares implies a promise to pay for them, and this promise sustains an action to collect, without proof of any particular consideration; San Joaquin Land & Water Co. v. Beecher, 101 Cal. 70, 35 Pac. 349; Rutenbeck v. Hohn, 143 Ia. 13, 121 N. W. 698, 136 Am. St. Rep. 731. An express promise to pay is not necessary in an English corporation, the statutes providing that the subscription shall be a debt due from the subscriber; Nashua Savings Bank v. Anglo-American Land Co., 189 U. S. 221, 23 Sup. Ct. 517, 47 L. Ed. 782. The signing of the subscription paper is an implied promise to pay the subscription; Hawley v. Upton, 102 U. S. 314, 26 L. Ed. 179; Planters' & Merchants' Ind. Packet Co. v. Webb, 144 Ala. 666, 39 So. 562; Carnahan v. Campbell, 158 Ind. 226, 63 N. E. 384; Merrimac Min. Co. v. Levy, 54 Pa. 227, 93 Am. Dec. 697; even though the subscription was before incorporation; Richelieu Hotel Co. v. Encampment Co., 140 Ill. 248, 29 N. E. 1044, 33 Am. St. Rep. 234; Athol M. H. Co. v. Carey, 116 Mass. 471; Peninsular R. Co. v. Duncan, 28 Mich. 130; Edinboro Academy v. Robinson, 37 Pa. 210, 78 Am. Dec. 421. The corporation may bring an action at law for damages against a subscriber to a preliminary subscription list who refuses to take and pay for the stock; Quick v. Lemon, 105 Ill. 578; Rhey v. Plank-Road Co., 27 Pa. 261; Mt. Sterling Coal Road Co. v. Little, 14 Bush (Ky.) 429. A corporation may defeat a subscriber's action for stock by proving that it never accepted his subscription; Badger Paper Co. v. Rose, 95 Wis. 145, 70 N. W. 302, 37 L. R. A. 162; Starrett v. Ins. Co., 65 Me. 374. But no formal acceptance by the corporation is necessary in order to enforce a subscription; Cozart v. Herndon, 114 N. C. 252, 19 S. E. 158; Da Ponte v. Breton, 121 La. 454, 46 South. 571; Louisiana Purchase Expo. Co. v. Emerson, 163 Mo. App. 465, 143 S. W. 843.

See CONTRACT.

SUBSCRIPTION LIST. The subscription list of a newspaper is an incident to the newspaper, and passes with the sale of the printing materials; McFarland v. Stewart, 2 Watts (Pa.) 111, 26 Am. Dec. 109.

SUBSELLIA. Lower seats or benches occupied by the judices and by inferior magistrates when they sat in judgment, as distinguished from the tribunal of the praetor. Calvinus.

SUBSEQUENT ACTION. A second action commenced after the issue of a writ, but before judgment obtained in a first action, is held to be a subsequent action. 51 L. J. Q. B. 279.

SUBSEQUENT CONDITION. See CONDITION.

SUBSIDY. In English Law. An aid, tax, or tribute granted by parliament to the king for the urgent occasions of the kingdom, to be levied on every subject of ability, according to the value of his lands or goods. Jacob, Law Dict.

In International Law. The assistance given in money by one nation to another to enable it the better to carry on a war, when such nation does not join directly in the war. Vattel, liv. 3, § 82. See NEUTRALITY; SUBVENTION.

Aid given by the government to some commercial enterprise, as to a steamship line.

The appropriations of money by the act of 1895, to be paid to certain manufacturers and producers of sugar who had complied with the provisions of the act of 1890, were held to be within the power of congress to make; U. S. v. Realty Co., 163 U. S. 427, 16 Sup. Ct. 1120, 41 L. Ed. 215.

An intention to surrender the right to demand the carriage of mails over subsidized railroads at reasonable rates, assumed in construing a statute of the United States, is opposed to the established policy of congress; Wis. C. R. Co. v. U. S., 164 U. S. 190, 17 Sup. Ct. 45, 41 L. Ed. 399.

SUBSOIL. The word includes, prima facie, all that is below the actual surface, down to the centre of the earth. 17 L. J. C. P. 162. It is a wider term than mines, quarries, or minerals. 2 L. R. Ir. 339.

SUBSTANCE. That which is essential: it is used in opposition to form.

It is a general rule that on any issue it is sufficient to prove the substance of the issue. For example, in a case where the defendant pleaded payment of the principal sum and all interest due, and it appeared in evidence that a gross sum was paid, not amounting to the full interest, but accepted by the plaintiff as full payment, the proof was held to be sufficient; 2 Stra. 699; 1 Phil. Ev. 161.

SUBSTANTIAL DAMAGES. Damages, assessed by the verdict of a jury, which are worth having, as opposed to nominal damages (q. v.).

SUBSTANTIVE. Dependent upon itself. State v. Ricker, 29 Me. 89.

The positive law of duties and rights is commonly called Substantive Law; procedure, considered in its relation to substantive law, is called Adjective Law. Pollock, First Book of Jurispr. 79. The distinction between Substantive Law & Practice is modern; id. 250.

SUBSTITUTE. One placed under another to transact business for him. In letters of attorney, power is generally given to the attorney to nominate and appoint a substitute. Without such power, the authority given to one person cannot, in general, be delegated to another, because it is a personal trust and confidence, and is not, therefore, transmissible. The authority is given to him to exercise his judgment and discretion, and it cannot be said that the trust and confidence reposed in him shall be exercised at the discretion of another; 2 Ves. 645. But an authority may be delegated to another when the attorney has express power to do so; T. Jones 110. See Story, Ag. § 13.

SUBSTITUTED EXECUTOR. One appointed to act in the place of another executor, upon the happening of a certain event.

SUBSTITUTED SERVICE. Service of process upon another than the person upon whom it should be made, where the latter is impossible. Hunt, Eq. pt. i. ch. 2, § 1; Lush. Pr. 867. But an order must be obtained from the court to allow of substituted service, the application for which must be supported by affidavit; Moz. & W. It is usually applied to cases where property is within the jurisdiction (q. v.) of the court and process of some sort or notice of the proceeding is required to be given out of the jurisdiction; and so in divorce proceedings where service on the respondent outside of the jurisdiction is necessary or permitted by the rules. See SERVICE.

SUBSTITUTIO HÆREDIS. See HÆRES.

SUBSTITUTION. In Civil Law. The putting of one person in the place of another, so that he may, in default of ability in the former, or after him, have the benefit of a devise or legacy. Direct substitution is merely the institution of a second legatee in case the first should be either incapable or unwilling to accept the legacy. Fiduciary commissary substitution is that which takes place when the person substituted is not to receive the legacy after the first legatee, and, consequently, must receive the thing bequeathed from the hands of the latter. Merlin, Répert. See SUBROGATION.

SUBTERRANEAN WATERS. Subterranean streams, as distinguished from subterranean percolations, are governed by the same rules, and give rise to the same rights and obligations, as flowing surface streams; Wheatley v. Baugh, 25 Pa. 528, 64 Am. Dec.

721; 2 H. & N. 186. The owner of the land under which a stream flows can, therefore, maintain an action for the diversion of it, if such diversion took place under the same circumstances as would have enabled him to recover, if the stream had been wholly above ground; Wheatley v. Baugh, 25 Pa. 528, 64 Am. Dec. 721; Haldeman v. Bruckhart, 45 Pa. 518, 84 Am. Dec. 511; 5 H. & N. 982; Cole Silver Min. Co. v. Water Co., 1 Sawy. 470, Fed. Cas. No. 2,989. But in order to bring subterranean streams within the rules governing surface streams, their existence and their course must be, to some extent, known or notorious; Roath v. Driscoll, 20 Conn. 533, 52 Am. Dec. 352; Haldeman v. Bruckhart, 45 Pa. 518, 84 Am. Dec. 511; it must be proved that there was a well defined and discerned stream, and not merely a percolation; Williams v. Ladew, 161 Pa. 283, 29 Atl. 54, 41 Am. St. Rep. 891. Where there is nothing to show that the waters of a spring are supplied by any defined flowing stream, the presumption will be that they have their source in the ordinary percolations of water through the soil; Hanson v. McCue, 42 Cal. 303, 10 Am. Rep. 299. As these percolations spread themselves in every direction through the earth, it is impossible to avoid disturbing them without relinquishing the necessary enjoyment of the land; the law does not therefore forbid their disturbance; Craig v. Shippenburg Borough, 7 Pa. Super. Ct. 526.

The question has arisen how far one has the right to gather in his well or reservoir water which otherwise would have percolated through the soil of his property. It is suggested by Judge Cooley as a satisfactory principle that it may lawfully be done for the actual use of the proprietor inasmuch as the waters belong to no one until they are collected and they may be appropriated by the one who collects and puts them to use; but one will not be permitted to dig a hole to injure his neighbor; 14 Alb. L. J. 63. He considers it impracticable to apply to subterranean waters percolating through the soil the same rules which are used to regulate the rights of the proprietor in a running stream. "Such a rule," he adds, "would raise questions of unreasonable use and cause difficulties both of evidence and application that would make the right of such waters more troublesome than valuable." Id. This question was considered in Acton v. Blundell, 12 M. & W. 324, by Tindal, C. J., who drew a distinction between such cases and those which concerned surface streams, and held the defendant liable in damage for drawing off a supply of water from a well used to run a mill, by a coal-pit three quarters of a mile from the well. This case was afterwards referred to as making for the first time a distinction between underground and surface waters; 7 Exch. 282, 300; it is recognized as settling the rule in England, and is followed in many of the American courts; 7 H. L. Cas. 349; 12 Q. B. 753; Frazier v. Brown, 12 Ohio St. 310; Chase v. Silverstone, 62 Me. 175, 16 Am. Rep. 419; Clark v. Conroe's Estate, 38 Vt. 473; Brown v. Illius, 25 Conn. 593. See Ang. Waters, § 114, where the cases are collected.

It is held that subterranean waters flowing in known, definite channels, are subject to the same rule as surface waters; Williams v. Ladew, 161 Pa. 283, 29 Atl. 54, 41 Am. St. Rep. 891; 17 L. R. Ir. 459; otherwise they may be drained; 7 H. L. Cas. 349; Delhi v. Youmans, 50 Barb. (N. Y.) 316; Chase v. Silverstone, 62 Me. 175, 16 Am. Rep. 419 (though done with malice; Phelps v. Nowlen, 72 N. Y. 39, 28 Am. Rep. 93; [1895] A. C. 557; but see Swett v. Cutts, 50 N. H. 439, 9 Am. Rep. 276); but not, it is held, if the supply of water in surface streams on the land of adjoining owners is thereby diminished; L. R. 6 Ch. 483.

Where the owner of land sinks a well solely for the purpose of draining his neighbor's spring, statutes in thirteen states provide that he must make compensation for his malevolent act. In two other states the opposite has been decided. Ames, Lectures on Leg. Hist. 449.

The only classification of subterranean waters made by the common law is based on the method of transmission through the ground, and is that they belong to one of only two classes, namely: 1. Underground currents of water flowing in known and defined channels or water courses. 2. Water passing through the ground beneath the surface in channels which are undefined and unknown. The rights to the waters of the first class are governed by the rules of law governing surface streams; while the waters of the second class are treated as mere percolations, and, therefore, as belonging to the owner of the soil wherein they are found; 7 H. L. Cas. 349. The first of these subterranean water courses have all the characteristics of surface water courses; that is, they have beds, banks forming a channel, and a current of water. Under the arid region doctrine of appropriation, the tendency has been more and more to treat the waters flowing or percolating beneath the surface the same, to a great extent, as surface streams, except as to what is now known as diffused percolations, i. e. those waters which, so far as known, do not contribute to the flow of any definite stream or body of surface or subterranean waters, and as to these there still remains a distinction, in that they are considered as a part of the very soil itself and belong to the realty in which they are found. Diffused percolations being but a component part of the ground where they are found, it follows that they are not subject to ownership separate and distinct from the soil itself. And from their very nature they cannot be treated as are the waters of defined and known streams, either surface or subterranean. It therefore follows that there can be no riparian rights to these waters; Willow Creek Irr. v. Michaelson, 21 Utah, 248, 60 Pac. 943, 51 L. R. A. 280, 81 Am. St. Rep. 687; Howard v. Perrin, 200 U. S. 71, 26 Sup. Ct. 193, 50 L. Ed. 374.

Those subterranean waters whose channels are known and defined are subdivided into known independent subterranean water courses, and known dependent subterranean water courses. The former are those which, independent of the influence of any surface streams, flow underneath the surface of the land in well defined and known channels, the courses of which can be distinctly traced; Tampa Waterworks Co. v. Cline, 37 Fla. 586, 20 South. 780, 33 L. R. A. 376, 53 Am. St. Rep. 262; Los Angeles v. Pomeroy, 124 Cal. 597, 57 Pac. 585. Where an independent underground stream has once become defined and known as such, the same principles of law of the jurisdiction where the same is found governs it as governs the surface streams. Therefore, if the laws of that particular jurisdiction recognize only the common law of riparian rights, only such rights attach to these streams, and in favor of the riparian owners thereon; Willis v. Perry, 92 Ia. 297, 60 N. W. 727, 26 L. R. A. 124. In those states where the common law of riparian rights has been abolished, and the law recognizes only the rights which can be acquired by the arid region doctrine of appropriation, such is the law governing the rights which can be acquired to the waters of these streams. And, in those states which have the dual laws governing waters within their respective jurisdictions of both the common law of riparian rights and the arid region doctrine of appropriation, the same rules govern the rights to the known independent subterranean water courses and the waters flowing therein as govern surface streams; Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255, 4 Pac. 919, 10 Pac. 674; Strait v. Brown, 16 Nev. 317, 40 Am. Rep. 497. See IRRIGATION.

The second class are the known, defined, subterranean water courses. These waters are dependent for their supply upon the surface streams, or are the underflow, sub-surface flow, sub-flow, or undercurrent, as they are at times called, of surface streams. These waters may be defined as those which slowly find their way through the soil, sand, and gravel constituting the beds of streams, or the lands under and adjacent to the surface streams, and are themselves a part of the surface streams. The underflow of surface streams, being portions of them, are governed by the same rules as the surface streams themselves; L. R. 6 Ch. 483; Delhi v. Youmans, 45 N. Y. 362, 6 Am. Rep. 100; Los Angeles v. Pomeroy, 124 Cal. 597, 57 Pac. 585; Vineland Irr. Dist. v. Irr. Co., 126 Cal. 486, 48 Pac. 1057, 46 L. R. A. 820; Platte Valley Irr. Co. v. Mill Co., 25 Colo.

77, 53 Pac. 334; Herriman Irr. Co. v. Keel, 25 Utah 96, 69 Pac. 719.

The rule that there are correlative rights in percolating water which would prevent one person who could gain access to it from exhausting it to the injury of others having an equal access to it was adopted in Katz v. Walkinshaw, 141 Cal. 116, 70 Pac. 663, 74 Pac. 766, 64 L. R. A. 236, 99 Am. St. Rep. 35.

The right to take subterranean water for use at a distance cannot be determined by the relative area or value of the local lands and those to which it is to be taken; Newport v. Water Co., 149 Cal. 531, 87 Pac. 372, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1098; in Cohen v. Water Co., 151 Cal. 680, 91 Pac. 584, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 752, it was held that percolating water might be taken for use on land other than that on which it was found, if it could be done without injury to adjoining owners or prior appropriators.

See IRRIGATION; RIPARIAN RIGHTS; PERCOLATING WATERS; WATERS; WATER-COURSES.

As between two corporations pumping water from their respective premises for sale, one cannot complain of the diversion of percolating water by the other; Merrick Water Co. v. Brooklyn, 32 App. Div. 454, 53 N. Y. Supp. 10.

The plaintiff cannot recover damages because the defendant, while draining its land, withdrew water from the subterranean soil of the plaintiff's adjoining land which caused a consolidation of the earth and a settlement of the surface; N. Y., etc., Filtration Co. v. Jones, 39 Wash. L. R. 718 (D. C. Ct. App.).

SUBTRACTION (Lat. sub, away, trahō, to draw). The act of withholding or detaining anything unlawfully.

The principal descriptions of this offence are: (1) Subtraction of suit, and service, consisting of a withdrawal of fealty, suit of court, rent, or customary services, from the lord or landlord; 2 B. & C. 827. (2) Of titles. (3) Of conjugal rights. (4) Of legacies, which is the withholding of legacies by an executor. (5) Of church rates, a familiar class of cases in England, consisting in the refusal to pay the amount of rate at which any individual parishioner has been assessed for the necessary repairs of the parish church. Brown, Dict.

SUBTRACTION OF CONJUGAL RIGHTS. See RESTITUTION OF CONJUGAL RIGHTS.

SUBVENTION. A subsidy; a grant, usually from the government. See SUBSIDY.

SUCCESSION. In Louisiana. The right and transmission of the rights and obligations of the deceased to his heirs. The estate, rights, and charges which a person leaves after his death, whether the property exceed the charges or the charges exceed the property, or whether he has left only charges without property. The succession not only includes the rights and obligations of the deceased as they exist at the time of his death, but all that has accrued thereto since the opening of the succession, as also of the new charges to which it becomes subject. That right by which the heir can take possession of the estate of the deceased, such as it may be.

Irregular succession is that which is established by law in favor of certain persons or of the state in default of heirs either legal or instituted by testament.

Legal succession is that which is established in favor of the nearest relations of the deceased.

Testamentary succession is that which results from the constitution of the heir, contained in a testament executed in the form prescribed by law. See HEIR; DESCENT; Pothier, des Successions; Toullier, l. 3, tit. 1.

In Common Law. The mode by which one set of persons, members of a corporation aggregate, acquire the rights of another set which preceded them. This term in strictness is to be applied only to such corporations. 2 Bla. Com. 430.

SUCCESSION DUTY. A duty payable, in England, upon succession to property.

An excise or duty upon the right of a person to receive property by devise or inheritance from another under the regulations of the state. State v. Switzler, 143 Mo. 287, 45 S. W. 245, 40 L. R. A. 280, 65 Am. St. Rep. 653.

A tax placed on the gratuitous disposition of property which passes on the death of any person by means of a transfer (called either a disposition or a devolution) from one person, called the predecessor, to another person, called the successor. Property chargeable with this tax is called a succession. Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U. S. 48, 20 Sup. Ct. 747, 44 L. Ed. 969.

SUCCESSOR. One who follows or comes into the place of another.

This term is applied more particularly to a sole corporation, or to any corporation. The word heir is more correctly applicable to a common person who takes an estate by descent. Alger v. Fay, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 322; Co. Litt. 8 b.

"No doubt, for a long time, only the word 'heirs' was used in charters of incorporation, and then 'heirs and successors,' and finally 'successors' alone became recognized as more appropriate. . . . The change from 'heirs' to 'successors' was gradual and marked by alternations in their use, and sometimes by the use of both." A. M. Eaton in 1902 Amer. Bar Assn. Rep. 321.

It seems probable that in a limitation to a corporation sole, unless the word "successors" be used, the donee obtains only an estate for life. But this is really equivalent to saying that he takes the estate in his personal capacity, burdened, it may be, with a trust in behalf of his office. A limitation to a corporation aggregate, though without words of inheritance, will confer a fee simple.

Where electrotype plates belonged to two firms and "their heirs and successors," and they passed to one of the firms, and thence to one of its members, who sold them to a third firm, the latter was held not a "successor." Meyer v. Estes, 164 Mass. 457, 41 N. E. 683, 32 L. R. A. 283.

A person who has been appointed or elected to some office after another person.

SUCCINCT. Brief, compressed, terse; hence, compressed in narrow shape; concise. Wolfe v. Walsey, 2 Ind. App. 549, 28 N. E. 1004.

SUDDER. In Hindu Law. The chief seat of government.

SUE. To commence or to continue legal proceedings for the recovery of a right. See U. S. v. Moore, 11 Fed. 251; ACTION; SUIT.

SUED OUT. A summons is not sued out till it passes from the clerk to a proper officer with a bona fide intention to have it served. West v. Engel, 101 Ala. 509, 14 South. 333.

SUERTE. In Spanish Law. A small lot of ground. McMullen v. Hodge, 5 Tex. 83.

SUFFER. To approve; to consent to; to permit and not to hinder. Selleck v. Selleck, 19 Conn. 505; Gregory v. U. S., 17 Blatchf. 330, Fed. Cas. No. 5,803. See PERMIT.

SUFFERANCE. Consent given one from a failure to object; negative permission; toleration; allowance.

SUFFERANCE, TENANT AT. A tenant who has come rightfully into possession of lands by permission of the owner and continues to occupy the same after the period for which he is entitled to hold by such permission. 1 Washb. R. P. 392; 2 Bla. Com. 150; Co. Litt. 57 b; Coomler v. Hefner, 86 Ind. 108.

It may arise where a tenant wrongfully holds over after the expiration of his term, differing from tenancy at will where possession is by permission; 4 Kent 113; Edwards v. Hale, 9 Allen (Mass.) 462. It can hardly be called an estate; 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 107. It is not a tenancy, but merely permissive occupation, determinable at any moment, and inalienable by the occupier; Jenks, Modern Land Law 77.

It is of infrequent occurrence, but is recognized as so far an estate that the landlord must enter before he can bring ejectment against the tenant; 3 Term 292; 1 M. & G. 644. If the tenant has personally left the house, the landlord may break in the doors; 1 Bingh. 58; Dorrell v. Johnson, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 263; and the modern rule seems to be that the landlord may use force to regain possession, subject only to indictment if any injury is committed against the public peace; 14 M. & W. 437; 1 W. & S. 90; Ives v. Ives, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 235; Low v. Elwell, 121 Mass. 309, 23 Am. Rep. 272.

SUFFERANCE WHARVES. Such as may be appointed by the commissioners for the purpose of customs, under the British act of 1876.

SUFFICIENTLY. In a statute requiring the carrier sufficiently to water and feed live stock in transit the word is not too indefinite to carry a penalty. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Gray (Tex.) 24 S. W. 837.

SUFFRAGAN (L. Lat. suffraganeus). A titular bishop ordained to assist the bishop of the diocese in his spiritual functions, or to supply his place. By 26 Hen. VIII, every bishop could present two names to the king, who appointed one of them a bishop suffragan of the same see. Jacob, L. D. So called because by his suffrage ecclesiastical causes were to be judged. T. L.

A diocesan bishop in his relation to his metropolitan; an assistant bishop. Encycl. Br.

A suffragan has charge of a definite portion of a large diocese. A coadjutor is appointed as an assistant and successor of an old and infirm bishop. Oxford Dict.

SUFFRAGE. Vote; the act of voting.

Participation in the suffrage is not of right, but is granted by the state on a consideration of what is most for the interest of the state; Cooley, Const., 2d ed. 752; Spencer v. Board of Registration, 8 D. C. 169, 29 Am. Rep. 582; U. S. v. Anthony, 11 Blatchf. 200, Fed. Cas. No. 14,459. The grant of suffrage makes it a legal right until it is recalled, and it is protected by the law as property is. The states establish rules of suffrage except as shown below. Suffrage is never a necessary accompaniment of state citizenship, and the great majority of citizens are always excluded from it. On the other hand, suffrage is sometimes given to those who are not citizens; as has been done by no less than twelve of the states, in admitting persons to vote, who, being aliens, have merely declared their intentions to become citizens.

The right of voting in England, Ireland and Scotland has been confined to men from the earliest times down to the present day. The usage is inveterate; [1909] A. C. 160. The subject was also discussed in L. R. 4 C. P. 374. In Minor v. Happersett, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 162, 22 L. Ed. 627, it was held that the right of suffrage was not, at the adoption of the constitution, co-extensive with citizenship of the states, and therefore a state constitution which confined the right of voting to "male citizens of the United States" was no violation of the United States constitution.

The following states, by their constitutions or by constitutional amendments, have adopted woman suffrage: Wyoming, 1869;

Colorado, 1893; Utah, 1896; Idaho, 1896; Washington, 1910; California, 1911; Oregon, 1912; Arizona, 1912; Kansas, 1912; Illinois (partially), 1913; and Alaska, 1913. Limited rights have been conferred in other states.

It has been said that the constitution of the United States confers the right to vote upon no one. That right comes to the citizens of the United States when they possess it at all, under state laws. But the fifteenth amendment confers upon them a new exemption: From discrimination in elections on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude; U. S. v. Reese, 92 U. S. 214, 23 L. Ed. 563; U. S. v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 23 L. Ed. 588. See Cooley, Const., 2d ed. 14; Hare, Am. Const. L. 524; ELECTION; VOTER; CIVIL RIGHTS; WOMAN.

SUGAR BOUNTY. See SUBSIDY.

SUGGESTIO FALSI (Lat.). A statement of a falsehood. This amounts to a fraud whenever the party making it was bound to disclose the truth.

The following is an example of a case where chancery will interfere and set aside a contract as fraudulent, on account of the suggestio falsi: A purchaser applied to the seller to purchase a lot of wild land, and represented to him it was worth nothing, except for a sheep pasture, when he knew there was a valuable mine on the lot, of which the seller was ignorant. The sale was set aside; Livingston v. Iron Co., 2 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 390. See CONCEALMENT; MISREPRESENTATION; REPRESENTATION; SUPPRESSIO VERI.

SUGGESTION. Information. It is applied to those cases where, during the pendency of a suit, some matter of fact occurs which puts a stop to the suit in its existing form, such as death or insolvency of a party; the counsel of the other party announces the fact in court or enters it upon the record: the fact is usually admitted, if true, and the court issues the proper order thereupon. See 2 Sell. Pr. 191.

SUGGESTIVE INTERROGATION. A phrase which has been used by some writers to signify the same thing as leading question. 2 Bentham, Ev. b. 3, c. 3. It is used in the French law.

SUI GENERIS. Of its own kind or class.

SUI HÆREDES. In Civil Law. One's own heirs; proper heirs. Inst. 2, 19, 2.

SUI JURIS (Lat. of his own right). Possessing all the rights to which a freeman is entitled; not being under the power of another, as a slave, a minor, and the like.

To make a valid contract, a person must, in general, be sui juris. Every one of full age is presumed to be sui juris. Story, Ag. 10.

SUICIDE (Lat. suus, himself, cedere, to kill). Self-destruction.

This was once regarded by the common law as exclusively a felonious act; of late, however, it has been often treated as the result of insanity, to be followed by all the legal consequences of that disease, so far as it is practicable. That suicide may be committed by a person in the full enjoyment of his reason, there can be no doubt; nor can there be any doubt that it is often the result of unquestionable insanity. Between the two kinds of suicide here indicated, the medical jurist is obliged to discriminate, and in performing this duty the facts on the subject should be carefully considered.

The instinct of self-preservation is not so strong as to prevent men entirely from being tired of life and seeking their own destruction. They may have exhausted all their sources of enjoyment, their plans of business or of honor may have been frustrated, poverty or dishonor may be staring them in the face, the difficulties before them may seem utterly insurmountable, and, for some reason like these, they calmly and deliberately resolve to avoid the evil by ending their lives. The act may be unwise and presumptuous, but there is in it no element of disease. On the other hand, it is well known that suicidal desires are a very common trait of insanity,—that a large proportion of the insane attempt or meditate self-destruction. It may be prompted by a particular delusion, or by a sense of irresistible necessity. It may be manifested in the shape of a well-considered, persistent intention to seize upon the first opportunity to terminate life, or of a blind, automatic impulse acting without much regard to means or circumstances. As the disease gives way and reason is restored, this propensity disappears, and the love of life returns.

Besides these two forms of the suicidal propensity, there are other phases which cannot be referred with any degree of certainty to either of them. Persons, for instance, in the enjoyment of everything calculated to make life happy, and exhibiting no sign of mental disease, deliberately end their days. Another class, on approaching a precipice or a body of water, are seized with a desire, which may be irresistible, to take the fatal plunge. Many are the cases of children who, after some mild reproof, or slight contradiction, or trivial disappointment, have gone at once to some retired place and taken their lives. Now, we are as little prepared to refer all such cases to mental disease as we are to free voluntary choice. Every case, therefore, must be judged by the circumstances accompanying it, always allowing the benefit of the doubt to be given to the side of humanity and justice.

By the common law, suicide was treated as a crime, and the person forfeited all chattels real or personal, and various other property; 4 Bla. Com. 190. This result could be avoided by establishing the insanity of the party; and in England courts have favored this course whenever the legal effect of suicide would operate as a punishment. On the other hand, where the rights and interests of other parties are involved, the question of insanity is more closely scrutinized; and ample proof is required of the party on whom the burden of proof lies.

To be guilty of this offence, the deceased must have had the will and intention of committing it, or else he committed no crime; but he also has been so considered who occasions his own death whilst maliciously attempting to kill another; Hawk. Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 27, s. 4. As he is beyond the reach of human laws, he cannot be punished. The English law, indeed, attempted to inflict a punishment by a barbarous burial of his body, and by forfeiting his property to the king; Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 9; 4 Bla. Com. 189; but forfeiture in this species of felony, as in other kinds, has been wholly abolished by the Felony Act of 1870, 33 & 34 Vict. c. 23; 4 Steph. Com. 62; one who kills another at his request incurs the same guilt as if not requested; 8 C. & P. 418; in Massachusetts, an attempt to commit suicide is not punishable, but one who, in attempting it, kills another, commits an indictable homicide; Com. v. Mink, 123 Mass. 422, 25 Am. Rep. 109; one who counsels a suicide which is committed in his presence is guilty as principal; 8 C. & P. 418; State v. Ludwig, 70 Mo. 412; Com. v. Bowen, 13 Mass. 359, 7 Am. Dec. 154; Russ. & R. 523.

But in Sanders v. State, 54 Tex. Cr. R. 101, 112 S. W. 68, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 243, it was held that one is not guilty of murder in inducing another to take poison which results in the latter's death, if the latter knew the character of the poison and took it voluntarily for the purpose of committing suicide, which is not unlawful unless made so by statute. As to the effect of repentance and withdrawal from a suicide pact and the effort to dissuade the other person from it, see State v. Webb, 216 Mo. 378, 115 S. W. 998, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1142, 129 Am. St. Rep. 518, 16 Ann. Cas. 518, where it was held that in such case it is not necessary that the deceased should have abandoned his purpose and led the accused in good faith to believe that he had done so.

A note in 17 Harv. L. R. 566, suggests that the fact that no punishment by way of forfeiture of goods or the like could be administered under our law for suicide had given rise to the belief that it was not a crime even within jurisdictions in which the common law prevails. The inconsistencies of some American decisions are noted and the conclusion reached that it is no less criminal in this country than in England, but that the policy of the law is different, no punishment being prescribed for the suicide, because impracticable, but the aiding or abetting being usually punishable as a crime.

Evidence of an intention to commit suicide is material in a murder case, where the deceased was found dead under circumstances not inconsistent with the theory of suicide; Com. v. Trefethen, 157 Mass. 180, 31 N. E. 961, 24 L. R. A. 235.

See FELO DE SE; SELF-DESTRUCTION; INSURANCE.

In regard to wills made just before committing suicide, the prevalent doctrine is that the act of self-destruction may not necessarily imply insanity, and that if the will is a rational act, rationally done, the sanity of the testator is established; Brooks v. Barrett, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 94; 1 Hagg. Eccl. 109; 2 Eccl. 415; Succession of Bey, 46 La. Ann. 773, 15 South. 297, 24 L. R. A. 577.

It has been held that when the owner of a deposit receipt gives it to another, the gift to take effect at the death of the donor, under such circumstances that the jury find it to have been done in contemplation of suicide, it is not a good donatio mortis causa; [1896] 2 I. R. 204.

It is held in England, in regard to life insurance, that in every case of intentional suicide, whatever may have been the mental condition, the policy becomes void; [1905] 1 K. B. 31; 5 Mann. & G. 639. In 1 F. & F. 22, the court charged the jury the question was, did the assured know he was throwing himself out of the window. If he did, no recovery could be had under the policy. Otherwise, if he did not. Such appears to be the rule in Ohio, Maryland, and Massachusetts; Knickerbocker L. Ins. Co. v. Peters, 42 Md. 414; Cooper v. Ins. Co., 102 Mass. 227, 3 Am. Rep. 451; and, it is said, in Germany, Holland, and France; 6 Ins. L. J. 719; May, Ins. § 312.

When the question then came before the United States supreme court in Life Ins. Co. v. Terry, 15 Wall. 580, 21 L. Ed. 236, it held that the assured must have acted under the control of such reasoning faculties as to be able to understand the moral character, general nature and consequences of his act, and this doctrine was frequently reaffirmed in that court and followed in state courts; Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Akins, 150 U. S. 468, 14 Sup. Ct. 155, 37 L. Ed. 1148; Blackstone v. Ins. Co., 74 Mich. 592, 42 N. W. 156, 3 L. R. A. 486; New Home L. Ass'n v. Hagler, 29 Ill. App. 437; Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Groom, 86 Pa. 92, 27 Am. Rep. 689; Newton v. Ins. Co., 76 N. Y. 426, 32 Am. Rep. 335. Where the insurance is for the benefit of a third person, suicide is never a defense unless expressly made so by the contract; Fitch v. Ins. Co., 59 N. Y. 573, 17 Am. Rep. 372; Kerr v. Ben. Ass'n, 39 Minn. 174, 39 N. W. 312, 12 Am. St. Rep. 631; unless the policy is fraudulently taken out for the purpose of providing for the family and creditors of the insured; Smith v.

Ben. Soc., 51 Hun (N. Y.) 575, 4 N. Y. Supp. 521. The trend of the decisions as stated led to an effort by the life insurance companies to evade them by making the exception "suicide, sane or insane," and this was held to prevent a recovery; Bigelow v. Ins. Co., 93 U. S. 284, 23 L. Ed. 918; Pierce v. Ins. Co., 34 Wis. 389; Streeter v. Acc. Soc., 65 Mich. 199, 31 N. W. 779, 8 Am. St. Rep. 882; Scarth v. Mut. L. Soc., 75 Ia. 346, 39 N. W. 658; Adkins v. Ins. Co., 70 Mo. 27, 35 Am. Rep. 410; and the same has been held with reference to a provision in a policy against suicide, "felonious or otherwise, sane or insane;" Scarth v. Mut. L. Soc., 75 Ia. 346, 39 N. W. 658; by his "own act or intention, whether sane or insane;" Adkins v. Ins. Co., 70 Mo. 27, 35 Am. Rep. 410; or "die by his own hand, sane or insane;" Streeter v. Acc. Soc., 65 Mich. 199, 31 N. W. 779, 8 Am. St. Rep. 882; or "shall die by his own hand or act, sane or insane;" De Gogorza v. Ins. Co., 65 N. Y. 233; but death by the suicide of the insured, although insane, is not "death by his own hand," whereby the policy is to be void in that event; Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York v. Leubrie, 71 Fed. 843, 18 C. C. A. 332, 38 U. S. App. 37; and the provision in a policy that if the insured shall "die by his own hand while insane," the insurer shall pay the amount of the premiums and interest, applies only in case the self-destruction is intentional; but where the insured killed himself while incapable of knowing the effect of his act, the whole amount of the policy can be recovered; Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. v. Daviess' Ex'r, 87 Ky. 541, 9 S. W. 812; or if death is accidental; Keels v. Life Ass'n, 29 Fed. 198.

The words "felonious or otherwise," used in a policy, are held equivalent to "sane or insane;" Riley v. Ins. Co., 25 Fed. 315; but not the words, "die by his own hand or act, voluntary or otherwise;" Jacobs v. Ins. Co., 8 D. C. 632; or the words, "under any circumstances die by his own hand;" Schultz v. Ins. Co., 40 Ohio St. 217, 48 Am. Rep. 676.

A Missouri statute, declaring that in all suits upon policies of life insurance it shall be no defense that the insured committed suicide, applies not only to cases where the insured takes his own life voluntarily and in full possession of his mental faculties, but to all cases of self-destruction, whether sane or insane, unless the insured contemplated suicide at the time he made his application for the policy; Knights Templars' & Masons' Indemnity Co. v. Jarman, 187 U. S. 197, 23 Sup. Ct. 108, 47 L. Ed. 139. That statute was held in a subsequent case to be a legitimate exercise of the power of the state, and stipulations in the policy conflicting with it were void; Whitfield v. Life Ins. Co., 205 U. S. 489, 27 Sup. Ct. 578, 51 L. Ed. 895.

The full amount of the policy is recoverable under a statute which provides that suicide shall be no defense to an action on an insurance policy, unless it was contemplated at the time of obtaining the policy that the suicide, whether sane or insane, shall only be entitled to recover the amount of the premiums paid; Knights Templars' & Masons' Life Indemnity Co. v. Berry, 50 Fed. 511, 1 C. C. A. 561. Where a statute provides that "all companies, after having received three annual premiums, are estopped from defending on any other ground than fraud," . . . the defendant may set up the defence of suicide; Starck v. Ins. Co., 134 Pa. 45, 19 Atl. 703, 7 L. R. A. 576, 19 Am. St. Rep. 674. Contra, Royal Circle v. Achter-rath, 204 Ill. 549, 68 N. E. 492, 63 L. R. A. 452, 98 Am. St. Rep. 224.

Where the insured, while insane and unable to realize the consequences of his act, and without intending thereby to take his life, cuts his throat, his death comes within the terms in the policy providing that death shall be by "external, violent, and accidental means;" Blackstone v. Ins. Co., 74 Mich. 592, 42 N. W. 156, 3 L. R. A. 486.

Where one secured a policy of life insurance, and, being financially embarrassed, killed himself in order to secure money for the payment of his debts, the policy was held void, although it was silent as to suicide; Ritter v. Life Ins. Co., 169 U. S. 139, 18 Sup. Ct. 300, 42 L. Ed. 693; but if such a policy is made payable to the wife of the insured, she may recover on it although her husband committed suicide; Morris v. Life Assur. Co., 183 Pa. 563, 39 Atl. 52.

A beneficiary in a mutual benefit certificate, who under the terms of the contract can be changed at any time by the insured, cannot recover if the insured takes his own life while sane, although there is no provision in the certificate against suicide; Davis v. Royal Arcanum, 195 Mass. 402, 81 N. E. 294, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 722, 11 Ann. Cas. 777. Suicide of a member of a mutual benefit society will not defeat a recovery on his benefit certificate issued in favor of his wife, in the absence of express provision in the contract to that effect, although the beneficiary had not a vested interest which could not be defeated by the member; Grand Legion, Select Knights of America v. Beaty, 224 Ill. 346, 79 N. E. 565, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1124, 8 Ann. Cas. 160; Parker v. Life Ass'n, 108 Ia. 117, 78 N. W. 826; Supreme Conclave v. Miles, 92 Md. 613, 48 Atl. 845, 84 Am. St. Rep. 528; Robson v. Order of Foresters, 93 Minn. 24, 100 N. W. 381; Knights of Pythias v. Weller, 93 Va. 605, 25 S. E. 891; even if subsequently a by-law was adopted denying the right to recover in such cases; Feierstein v. Supreme Lodge, 69 App. Div. 53, 74 N. Y. Supp. 558; Sautter v. Supreme Conclave, 72 N. J. L. 325, 62 Atl. 529; or where the by-law was void for lack of authority; Supreme Lodge K. of P. v. La Malta, 95 Tenn. 157, 31 S. W. 493, 30 L. R. A. 838; or where the application contained an anti-suicide clause which was void for lack of authority; Supreme Lodge Knights of

In many cases suicide while sane is held to be a defense though there was no provision as to the effect of it if the policy was payable to the insured or his personal representatives; Patterson v. Life Ins. Co., 100 Wis. 118, 75 N. W. 980, 42 L. R. A. 253, 69 Am. St. Rep. 889; Seiler v. Life Ass'n, 105 Ia. 87, 74 N. W. 941, 43 L. R. A. 537; Hunziker v. Supreme Lodge K. of P., 117 Ky. 418, 78 S. W. 201; Shipman v. Protected Home Circle, 174 N. Y. 398, 67 N. E. 83, 63 L. R. A. 347; where the policy was payable to the estate of the insured, suicide while sane, was no defense unless expressly so provided; Campbell v. Supreme Conclave Heptasophs, 66 N. J. L. 274, 49 Atl. 550, 54 L. R. A. 576.

Where suicide was the defence to an action on an insurance policy, it was not error to charge that "the law does not presume murder; it must be proved;" and, if the evidence is equal as between murder and suicide, the jury must find for the defendant; Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Egbert, 84 Fed. 411, 28 C. C. A. 281; and in an action on such a policy where the evidence is conflicting and quite evenly balanced as to whether death was caused by the intentional or accidental act of the deceased, it will be presumed that death resulted from accident; Ingersoll v. Knights of Golden Rule, 47 Fed. 272. It has been said that the question is not precisely whether a party is insane or not, but whether he understood the physical nature and consequences of his act, and had sufficient will to make the act voluntary; Nimick v. Life Ins. Co., 10 Am. L. Reg. (N. S.) 101, Fed. Cas. No. 10,266. See Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Akens, 150 U. S. 468, 14 Sup. Ct. 155, 37 L. Ed. 1148; Wharton, Mental Unsoundness; Phill. Ins.

The burden of showing a suicide rests with the company; Gooding v. Life Ins. Co., 46 Ill. App. 307; Whitlatch v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 71 Hun (N. Y.) 146, 24 N. Y. Supp. 537; Leman v. Life Ins. Co., 46 La. Ann. 1189, 15 South. 388, 24 L. R. A. 589, 49 Am. St. Rep. 348. In making the proof necessary to establish the liability of an insurer, the plaintiff is entitled to the presumption that a sane man would not commit suicide, as well as of other rules of law established for the guidance of courts and juries in the investigation and determination of facts; Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Akens, 150 U. S. 468, 14 Sup. Ct. 155, 37 L. Ed. 1148; and while proofs of loss, stating suicide as the cause of death, are admissible, they are not conclusive; Leman v. Life Ins. Co., 46 La. Ann. 1189, 15 South. 388, 24 L. R. A. 589, 49 Am. St. Rep. 348; and, where the defence is fraud, suicide may be shown to be the agency by which the fraud was accomplished, although by the policy suicide was no defence; Smith v. N. B. Society, 123 N. Y. 85, 25 N. E. 197, 9 L. R. A. 616.

SUIT (L. Lat. secta; from Lat. sequi, to follow. French, suite). An action.

It is more general than "action," which is almost exclusively applied to law, and denotes any legal proceeding of a civil kind brought by one person against another; Appleton v. Turnbull, 84 Me. 72, 24 Atl. 592; Dullard v. Phelan, 83 Ia. 471, 50 N. W. 204. It includes actions at law as well as proceedings in equity; Elk Garden Co. v. Thayer Co., 179 Fed. 556.

Suit is a generic term, of comprehensive signification, and applies to any proceeding in a court of justice in which the plaintiff pursues, in such court, the remedy which the law affords him for the redress of an injury or the recovery of a right. McPike v. McPike, 10 Ill. App. 333.

The word suit in the twenty-fifth section of the Judiciary Act of 1789 applies to any proceeding in a court of justice in which the plaintiff pursues in such court the remedy which the law affords him. An application for a prohibition is, therefore, a suit; Weston v. Charleston, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 449, 7 L. Ed. 481. According to the Code of Practice of Louisiana, art. 96, a suit is a real, personal, or mixed demand made before a competent judge, by which the parties pray to obtain their rights and a decision of their disputes. In that acceptation, the words suit, process, and cause are in that state almost synonymous. See SECTA; Steph. Pl. 427; 3 Bla. Com. 395; 1 Chitty, Pl. 399; Bemis v. Faxon, 4 Mass. 263; Burdick v. Green, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 14; Kolb's Case, 4 Watts (Pa.) 154; 3 Story, Const. § 1719. In its most extended sense, the word suit includes not only a civil action, but also a criminal prosecution, as, indictment, information, and a conviction by a magistrate; Hamm, N. P. 270. Suit is applied to proceedings in chancery as well as in law; 1 Sm. Ch. Dec. 26; and is, therefore, more general than action, which is almost exclusively applied to matters of law; Didier v. Davison, 10 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 516.

The witnesses or followers of the plaintiff. 3 Bla. Com. 295. See SECTA.

Suit of court, an attendance which a tenant owes to his lord's court. Cowell. Every copyholder of a manor, in the absence of special custom, formed one of the copyhold "homage" and was bound to attend the customary court on the usual days, upon pain of fine, distress, and forfeiture. Formerly no administrative or even ministerial act affecting the constitution of the manor could be done elsewhere than in the lord's court. It was the duty of the homage to "present" or take formal notice of any circumstance affecting the manor. Under an act of 1894, a customary court must still be held for recording a consent to a grant of a copyhold tenement out of the waste. Jenks, Modern Land Law 67.

Suit covenant, where one has covenanted to do suit and service in his lord's court.

Suit custom, where service is owed time out of mind.

Suithold, a tenure in consideration of certain services to the superior lord.

The following one in chase; as, fresh suit. A petition to a king, or a great person, or a court.

SUIT SILVER. A small sum of money paid in lieu of attendance at the court barons. Cowell.

SUITE (French). Those persons who by his authority follow or attend an ambassador or other public minister.

In general, the suite of a minister are protected from arrest, and the inviolability of his person is communicated to those who form his suite; Vattel, lib. 4, c. 9, § 120. See Respublica v. De Longchamps, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 111, 1 L. Ed. 59; Baldw. 240; AMBASSADOR.

SUITOR. One who is a party to a suit or action in court. One who is a party to an action. In its ancient sense, suitor meant one who was bound to attend the county court; also one who formed part of the secta.

SUITORS' FUND IN CHANCERY. In England. A fund consisting of moneys which, having been paid into the court of chancery, are placed out for the benefit and better security of the suitors, including interest from the same. By stat. 32 & 33 Vict. c. 91, sec. 4, the principal of this fund, amounting to over £3,000,000, was transferred to the commissioners for the reduction of the national debt. Moz. & W.

SUM. The sense in which it is most commonly used is "money"; a quantity of money or currency; any amount indefinitely, a sum of money, a small sum, or a large sum. U. S. v. Van Auken, 96 U. S. 368, 24 L. Ed. 852.

SUMMARY CONVICTION. A phrase applied to proceedings which result in the sentence of an accused person without jury trial. At common law it was applied only in cases of contempt. Such proceedings are now frequently provided for by statute, either for trial by a court without a jury, or a final disposition of criminal cases by the committing magistrate. Such statutes are, in derogation of the right of trial by jury, secured by the state and federal constitutions and therefore must provide a right of appeal to a court having a jury. They usually apply only to lesser offences and to hardened offenders.

Summary proceedings as enumerated by Blackstone comprehend: 1. All trials of offences and frauds contrary to the laws of the excise and other branches of revenue which are to be determined by the commissioners of the respective departments and justices of the peace in the country; such convictions are absolutely necessary for due collection of the public money. 2. Convictions before justices of the peace in order to inflict divers petty, pecuniary mulcts and corporal penalties for such disorderly offences as common swearing, drunkenness, vagrancy, idleness, etc. 3. Attachments for contempt and the subsequent proceedings thereon. 4 Bla. Com. 280. See SUMMARY PROCEEDING; CONVICTION.

SUMMARY JURISDICTION. The jurisdiction of a court to give a judgment or make an order itself forthwith. See CONTEMPT. For a synopsis of the present law in England, see Encycl. Br.

SUMMARY PROCEEDING. A form of trial in which the ancient established course of legal proceedings is disregarded, especially in the matter of trial by jury, and, in the case of the heavier crimes, presentment by a grand jury. See Jones v. Robbins, 8 Gray (Mass.) 329.

In no case can the party be tried summarily unless when such proceedings are authorized by legislative authority, except perhaps in cases of contempts; for the common law is a stranger to such a mode of trial; 4 Bla. Com. 280. See 2 Kent 73; Taylor v. Porter, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 145, 40 Am. Dec. 274; Jones v. Robbins, 8 Gray (Mass.) 329; Hoke v. Henderson, 15 N. C. 15, 25 Am. Dec. 677; Jones' Heirs v. Perry, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 59, 30 Am. Dec. 430.

The term summary proceedings is applied to proceedings under statute for enabling landlords promptly to dispossess tenants who hold over after default in payment of rent, or after expiration of the term.

SUMMING UP. The act of making a speech before a court and jury, after all the evidence has been heard, in favor of one of the parties in the cause. When the judge delivers his charge to the jury, he usually sums up the evidence in the case. See OPENING AND CLOSING.

SUMMON. In Practice. To notify the defendant that an action has been instituted against him, and he is required to answer to it at a time and place named. This is done by a proper officer either giving the defendant a copy of the summons, or leaving it at his house, or by reading the summons to him. See SERVICE.

SUMMONES. In Old Practice. A writ by which a party was summoned to appear in court.

SUMMONERS. Petty officers who cite men to appear in any court.

SUMMONS. The name of a writ commanding the sheriff, or other authorized officer, to notify a party to appear in court to answer a complaint made against him and in the said writ specified, on a day therein mentioned. 3 Bla. Com. 279.

SUMMONS AND ORDER. In English Practice. In this phrase the summons is the application to a common-law judge at chambers in reference to a pending action, and upon it the judge or master makes the order. Moz. & W.

SUMMONS AND SEVERANCE. See SEVERANCE.

SUMMUM JUS (Lat.). Extreme right, strict right. See MAXIMS, Summum jus, etc.

SUMPTUARY LAWS. Laws relating to the expenses of the people, and made to restrain excess in apparel, food, furniture, etc.

They originated in the view that luxury is, in some of its degrees, opposed to public policy, and that the state is bound to interfere against it. Montesquieu, Esprit des Loix, b. 7, c. 2, 4, and Tacitus, Ann. b. 2, ch. 33, b. 3, ch. 52.

In England, in 1336, it was enacted, 10 Edw. III. c. 3, that inasmuch as many mischiefs had happened to the people of the realm by excessive and costly meats, by which, among other things, many who aspired in this respect beyond their means were impoverished and unable to aid themselves or their liege lord in time of need, all men were forbidden to have served more than two courses at a meal, each of but two sorts of victual, except on the principal feasts of the year, and then only three courses were allowed. 4 Com. 170. Subsequent statutes, 1363, 1463, 1482, regulated the dress, and to some extent the diet, of the people, with careful regard to their rank. The substance of these statutes will be found in Knight's History of Eng. p. 272. They were repealed by 1 Jac. I. c. 25. An act of 30 Car. II. c. 3, which ordered the dead to be buried in woollen shrouds, was not repealed until 53 Geo. III. c. 108.

SUNDAY. The first day of the week.

It commences at twelve o'clock on the night between Saturday and Sunday, and ends in twenty-four hours thereafter; Kilgour v. Miles, 6 Gill & J. (Md.) 268. See Hiller v. English, 4 Strobb. (S. C.) 493 (a very learned case); State v. Green, 37 Mo. 466; Bryant v. Biddeford, 39 Me. 193; Stebbins v. Leowolf, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 137. It is so provided by statute in Minnesota, Connecticut, Massachusetts, South Dakota, Louisiana, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin, Vermont, and Hawaii. In New Mexico and Virginia, it is the time between sunrise of Sunday and midnight of the same day.

The Sabbath, the Lord's day, and Sunday, all mean the same thing; Kilgour v. Miles, 6 Gill & J. (Md.) 268; Gunn v. State, 89 Ga. 341, 15 S. E. 458.

The stat. 5 & 6 Edw. V. c. 3, enacted that Sunday should be strictly observed as a holy day, provided that in case of necessity it should be lawful to labor, ride, fish, or work at any kind of work. The Book of Sports (1618) declared that, after divine service, the people should not be disturbed from any lawful recreation. The stat. 29 Car. II. c. 7, provided that no tradesman, artificer, workman, laborer, or other person whatsoever, should exercise any worldly business, etc., upon the Lord's day, works of necessity and charity alone excepted. It also forbade the execution of legal process on that day. This has been followed substantially in America, with a tendency to greater strictness. This includes all business, public or private, done in the ordinary calling of the person; 5 B. & C. 406; ordinary calling means that which the ordinary duties of the calling bring into continued action; 7 B. & C. 596; Salter v. Smith, 55 Ga. 245.

The Missouri act relates to Sunday as a day of rest and not to its religious character; State v. R. Co., 239 Mo. 196, 143 S. W. 785. In Dist. of Col. v. Robinson, 36 Wash. L. Rep. 101, it was held that the legislature may impose upon citizens only obligations of a civil and not of a religious nature. The early colonial statute, with its penalties against blasphemy, was considered to be obsolete.

Many statutes except those who observe the seventh day; others do not; and such legislation is constitutional; Soc. for Visitation of Sick v. Com., 52 Pa. 126, 91 Am. Dec. 931; Neuendorff v. Duryea, 69 N. Y. 557, 25 Am. Rep. 235; Com. v. Has, 122 Mass. 40; the fact that one believes the seventh day is the Sabbath, but does not observe it as such, does not bring him within the exception; Liberman v. State, 26 Neb. 464, 42 N. W. 419, 18 Am. St. Rep. 791. Connecticut (1907) exempts Seventh Day Sabbatharians from the operation of the Sunday labor act of 1793. The benefit of the act is obtained only by filing a written statement of religious belief in the office of the public prosecutor. In Michigan, an act permits them to perform servile labor on Sunday if they do not disturb persons attending places of worship; and they may keep open their places of business on Sunday, and the latter in Ohio, by act.

Jews are bound to observe the civil regulations for keeping Sunday; Soc. for Visitation of Sick v. Com., 52 Pa. 125, 91 Am. Dec. 931. In New York writs against Jews cannot be made returnable on Saturday; Martin v. Goldstein (Mun. Ct.) 39 N. Y. Supp. 254. In most of the states, Jews are placed in the same class in this respect with Seventh Day Sabbatharians. The Pennsylvania laws do not except Jews and will not permit them to claim exemption on the ground of religious faith from the statutes which prohibit work on Sunday. A municipal ordinance in Louisiana, which permitted Jews to engage in business on Sunday, was held constitutional; Shreveport v. Levy, 26 La. Ann. 671, 21 Am. Rep. 553.

Cases of necessity are determined by the moral fitness of the work; Com. v. Nesbit, 34 Pa. 409. Charity includes everything which proceeds from a sense of moral duty, or a feeling of kindness and humanity, and is intended wholly for the comfort and relief of another, and not for one's own pleasure and benefit;

Doyle v. R. Co., 118 Mass. 197, 19 Am. Rep. 431. A note given to a lawyer on Sunday for services in bailing a prisoner is a work of charity; Few v. Gunter, 10 Ga. App. 100, 72 S. E. 720.

Necessity may arise out of particular occupations; Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Towboat Co., 23 How. (U. S.) 219, 16 L. Ed. 433; U. S. v. Powell, 14 Wall. (U. S.) 494, 20 L. Ed. 726; Hennersdorf v. State, 25 Tex. App. 597, 8 S. W. 926, 8 Am. St. Rep. 448; but not when it is a work of mere convenience or profit; Pate v. Wright, 30 Ind. 476, 95 Am. Dec. 705. Necessity should be construed reasonably; it is a question of moral propriety; State v. R. Co., 239 Mo. 196, 142 S. W. 785.

Shaving a man is not a work of necessity; State v. Wellott, 54 Mo. App. 310; Com. v. Waldman, 140 Pa. 89, 21 Atl. 248, 11 L. R. A. 563; Com. v. Dextra, 143 Mass. 28, 8 N. E. 756. See infra. Reaping a field of oats on Sunday in order to prevent the loss thereof is a work of necessity; Johnson v. People, 42 Ill. App. 594; so is repaving a city street in a populous neighborhood; 156 App. Div. 601.

Running street railways on Sunday was held illegal; Sparhawk v. R. Co., 54 Pa. 401; contra, Wood v. R. Co., 72 N. Y. 196, 28 Am. Rep. 125; and see Augusta & Summerville R. Co. v. Renz, 55 Ga. 126.

For an employé of a contractor to work on a building on Sunday violates the Sunday law; Lane v. State (Tex.) 150 S. W. 637.

When statutes forbid travelling on Sunday, there can be no recovery for injuries from defective streets; Connolly v. Boston, 117 Mass. 64, 19 Am. Rep. 396; Johnson v. Irasburgh, 47 Vt. 32, 19 Am. Rep. 111; but see Sutton v. Wauwatosa, 29 Wis. 21; unless the party was travelling from motives of necessity or charity; Crosman v. Lynn, 121 Mass. 301; as riding to a funeral or for health; Eaton v. Ins. Co., 89 Me. 570, 36 Atl. 1048; or walking for exercise; O'Connell v. Lewiston, 65 Me. 34, 20 Am. Rep. 673. But in actions for torts against individuals by common carriers, it is no defence that the injury occurred upon Sunday; Mohney v. Cook, 26 Pa. 342, 67 Am. Dec. 419; Schmid v. Humphrey, 48 Ia. 652, 30 Am. Rep. 414; contra, Lyons v. Desotelle, 124 Mass. 387. Most of the cases are otherwise; Big. L. C. Torts 711; see Bucher v. R. Co., 125 U. S. 555, 8 Sup. Ct. 974, 31 L. Ed. 795; and the law in Massachusetts was altered in 1877.

Except as to judicial acts, which are void when done on Sunday; 1 W. Bl. 526; Ball v. U. S., 140 U. S. 118, 11 Sup. Ct. 761, 35 L. Ed. 377; Parsons v. Lindsay, 41 Kan. 336, 21 Pac. 227, 3 L. R. A. 658, 13 Am. St. Rep. 290; see DIES NON (but a New York city magistrate may try and sentence one for disorderly conduct; People v. Fox, 150 App. Div. 114, 134 N. Y. Supp. 642); the common law makes no distinction between Sunday and any other day. The English cases decided after the act of Charles II., supra, merely avoided contracts made in pursuance of one's ordinary calling; see 1 Cr. & J. 180; Merritt v. Earle, 31 Barb. (N. Y.) 41; 4 M. & W. 270; but in most of the states contracts made on Sunday are invalid; see Hilton v. Houghton, 35 Me. 143; Adams v. Gay, 19 Vt. 358; Kepner v. Keefer, 6 Watts (Pa.) 231, 31 Am. Dec. 460; Hill v. Sherwood, 3 Wis. 343; and if not executed, cannot be enforced; Calhoun v. Phillips, 87 Ga. 482, 13 S. E. 593; Aspell v. Hosbein, 98 Mich. 117, 57 N. W. 27. In New York any business but judicial may be done on Sunday; Batsford v. Every, 44 Barb. (N. Y.) 618.

Generally speaking executory contracts made on Sunday will not be enforced, while executed contracts will not be disturbed; Chestnut v. Harbaugh, 78 Pa. 473; Horton v. Ruffinton, 105 Mass. 399; Ellis v. Hammond, 57 Ga. 179; Nibert v. Baghurst, 47 N. J. Eq. 201, 20 Atl. 252; but see Bloom v. Richards, 2 Ohio St. 388; Johnson v. Brown, 13 Kan. 529, as to executory contracts. Delivery on Sunday passes title against the vendor; Moore v. Murdock, 26 Cal. 514; Banks v. Werts, 13 Ind. 203; but see Tucker v. Mowrey, 12 Mich. 378; a church subscription on Sunday is valid in Pennsylvania; 12 Repr. 665; and Michigan; 21 Alb. L. J. 293. See Catlett v. Trustees, 62 Ind. 365, 30 Am. Rep. 197. A contract of sale made on Sunday is not saved from being a Sunday contract by the fact that the purchase-money was not paid until Monday; Grant v. McGrath, 56 Conn. 333, 15 Atl. 370. A contract dated on Sunday may be shown to be erroneously dated; Stacy v. Kemp, 97 Mass. 166; and it may be shown that a contract bearing a secular date was actually executed on Sunday; Bank v. Mayberry, 48 Me. 198; but not against a bona fide holder without notice; Clinton Nat. Bk. v. Graves, 48 Ia. 228. When a contract takes effect on delivery, the date is not material; Prather v. Harlan, 6 Bush (Ky.) 185; Peake v. Conlan, 43 Ia. 297; and a note executed on Sunday but delivered on another day is valid; Goss v. Whitney, 24 Vt. 189; Hilton v. Houghton, 35 Me. 143.

A deed made on Sunday is not within a contract forbidding the making of contracts on Sunday; Wooldridge v. Wooldridge, 69 W. Va. 554, 72 S. E. 654, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 653; where negotiations for a contract were begun on Saturday, continued on Sunday and closed on Monday, the contract was valid; Curtin v. Gas Co., 233 Pa. 397, 82 Atl. 503; where a contract of exchange of land was made on Saturday and put in writing on Sunday, the broker was entitled to his commissions; McCormick v. Hazard, 77 Misc.

Rep. 190, 136 N. Y. Supp. 91. The appointment of an agent to sign a contract for the sale of land on Sunday is invalid; Kryzminski v. Callahan, 213 Mass. 207, 100 N. E. 335, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 140; otherwise of a release executed on Sunday but the consideration paid on a later day; Ross v. Oliver Bros., 152 Ky. 437, 153 S. W. 756; anything done on Sunday in performance of a valid contract will not be treated as a nullity; Gordon v. Levine, 197 Mass. 263, 83 N. E. 861, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 243, 125 Am. St. Rep. 361.

Defendant hired an automobile from the plaintiff on a Sunday for the purpose of joy riding, which was in violation of the Sunday law. On a subsequent secular day the defendant promised to pay the plaintiff for the ride, but it was held that the plaintiff could not recover; Jones v. Belle Isle, 13 Ga. App. 437, 79 S. E. 357.

A contract made on Sunday may be ratified; Johnson v. Willis, 7 Gray (Mass.) 164; Sumner v. Jones, 24 Vt. 317; Russell & Co. v. Murdock, 79 Ia. 101, 44 N. W. 237, 13 Am. St. Rep. 348; but see Butler v. Lee, 11 Ala. 885, 46 Am. Dec. 230; but only by an express agreement and not by mere acquiescence; Hill v. Hite, 79 Fed. 826; but it is held that a note made on Sunday cannot be ratified; Moseley v. Bank, 3 Ala. App. 614, 57 South. 91; a will executed on Sunday is valid; Bennett v. Brooks, 9 Allen (Mass.) 118; Rapp v. Reehling, 124 Ind. 36, 23 N. E. 777, 7 L. R. A. 496. A contract for an advertisement in a Sunday paper is invalid; Smith v. Wilcox, 24 N. Y. 353, 82 Am. Dec. 302; contra, Sheffield v. Balmer, 52 Mo. 474, 14 Am. Rep. 430.

A verdict in a homicide case submitted to the jury on Saturday may be received and the jury discharged on Sunday; Ball v. U. S., 163 U. S. 662, 16 Sup. Ct. 1192, 41 L. Ed. 300. A verdict received on Sunday is valid; Burrage v. State, 101 Miss. 598, 58 South. 217.

Laws requiring all persons to refrain from their ordinary callings on Sunday have been held not to encroach on the religious liberty of the people; Cooley, Const. Lim., 2d ed. 584, 725; they may be sustained as police regulations; Kurtz v. People, 33 Mich. 279; Frollickstein v. Mobile, 40 Ala. 725; Clinton v. Wilson, 257 Ill. 580, 101 N. E. 192. The legislature may regulate the observance of Sunday; People v. Dunford, 207 N. Y. 17, 100 N. E. 433. Idaho (1907) prohibits horse-racing and opening saloons on Sunday; Colorado only prohibits selling liquors (until six o'clock Monday morning) and carrying on the business of a barber; Georgia forbids running trains on Sunday; in Porto Rico all business must close at twelve o'clock noon on Sunday. California has had no Sunday laws whatever since 1883.

Under an act making it unlawful to open a shop on Sunday, for the sale of goods, etc., a barber cannot be convicted; State v. Krech, 10 Wash. 166, 38 Pac. 1001. A statute forbidding barbers to carry on their trade on Sunday is constitutional, under the police power: People v. Havnor, 149 N. Y. 195, 43 N. E. 341, 31 L. R. A. 689, 52 Am. St. Rep. 707; notwithstanding the act allows barbers in the cities of New York and Saratoga to work till one o'clock; but in Illinois (Eden v. People, 161 Ill. 296, 43 N. E. 1108, 32 L. R. A. 639, 52 Am. St. Rep. 365), it is held that an act forbidding barbers to work at their trade on Sunday is a taking of property without due process of law; and that it is not a proper exercise of the police power. See, also, Ex parte Jentzsch, 112 Cal. 468, 44 Pac. 803, 32 L. R. A. 664. But an ordinance regulating the doing of business on Sunday is within the police power of a city; Clinton v. Wilson, 257 Ill. 580, 101 N. E. 192.

Any act forbidding railroad trains to run on Sunday does not constitute a regulation of, and an obstruction to, interstate commerce, and is valid; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Com., 88 Va. 95, 13 S. E. 340, 13 L. R. A. 107, 29 Am. St. Rep. 705; Hennington v. Georgia, 163 U. S. 299, 16 Sup. Ct. 1086, 41 L. Ed. 166; State v. R. Co., 24 W. Va. 783, 49 Am. Rep. 290; but an act forbidding all manner of servile labor on Sundays, etc., is held to be void, so far as it affects interstate traffic; Adams Exp. Co. v. Board, 65 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 72. The running of trains is within the prohibition of a statute which punishes any person who labors in his calling on Sunday, or employs his servants in so doing, except in works of necessity or charity; State v. R. Co., 24 W. Va. 783, 49 Am. Rep. 290; but it has been held that running an excursion train on Sunday is a work of necessity; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Com. (Ky.) 30 S. W. 778; so is delivery of milk to customers; Topeka v. Hempstead, 58 Kan. 328, 49 Pac. 87.

Acts have been passed forbidding baseball playing on Sunday. The cases differ as to their constitutionality. See 56 Alb. L. J. 202; 57 id. 258. Baseball does not come within the class of "sports" prohibited on Sunday; Territory v. Davenport, 17 N. M. 214, 124 Pac. 795, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 407.

No one is bound to do work in performance of his contract on Sunday, unless the work by its very nature or by express agreement is to be done on that day and can be then done without a breach of law; Cock v. Bunn, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 326; Barrett v. Allen, 10 Ohio 426. Parties to a contract for program privileges at an opera house, contemplating the giving of Sunday concerts, will not be presumed to have intended violation of the Sunday law in giving such entertainment; Strauss & Co. v. Hammerstein, 152 App. Div. 128, 136 N. Y. Supp. 613. Where an acrobat's contract was for $300 for each week, Sunday would be excluded if performances on that day were unlawful; Keith v. Kellermann, 169 Fed. 196.

Sundays are computed in the time allowed for the performance of an act; 10 M. & W.

331; but if the last day happen to be a Sunday, it is to be excluded, and the act must, in general, be performed on Monday; 3 Chitty, Pr. 110; Street v. U. S., 133 U. S. 299, 10 Sup. Ct. 309, 33 L. Ed. 631; Monroe Cattle Co. v. Becker, 147 U. S. 47, 13 Sup. Ct. 217, 37 L. Ed. 72. Notes and bills, when they fall due on Sunday, are payable on Saturday, unless a statute provides otherwise. The indorsement of a note creates a new contract, and is an act within the statute prohibiting secular business on Sunday; Bank v. Kingsley, 84 Me. 111, 24 Atl. 794.

See NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS. See, as to the origin of keeping Sunday as a holiday, Story, Pr. Notes § 220; Story, Bills § 223. See, generally; 17 Am. L. Reg. (N. S.) 285; 3 Rep. Am. Bar Association (1880); 2 Am. L. Rev. 226; 21 Alb. L. J. 424 (Sabbath-breaking); 28 Am. L. Reg. 137, 209, 273; State v. Lorry, 7 Baxt. (Tenn.) 95, 32 Am. Rep. 557; Schmid v. Humphrey, 48 Ia. 652, 30 Am. Rep. 417; McGrath v. Merwin, 112 Mass. 467, 17 Am. Rep. 122 (legality of labor on Sunday); 3 id. 371, n.; Sparhawk v. R. Co., 54 Pa. 401; 3 Cr. L. Mag. 632 (Sabbath-breaking; works of necessity). The Massachusetts law on this subject depends more on its peculiar legislation and customs than any general principles of justice or law; Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Steam Towboat Co., 23 How. U. S. 209, 16 L. Ed. 433.

As to execution of legal process on Sunday, see DIES NON.

See HOLIDAY; POLICE POWER; Friedenberg, Sunday Laws.

SUNKEN WRECK. Where part of the frame of a ship was sunk beneath the surface of the sea and partially imbedded in the bottom, as was also a quantity of iron ore that formed a part of the cargo of the ship, it was held to be a sunken wreck within the meaning of the collision clause of a policy of insurance; [1893] Prob. 248.

SUPER ALTUM MARE (Lat.). Upon the high sea. See HIGH SEAS.

SUPER-JURARE. A term anciently used, when a criminal, who tried to excuse himself by his own oath or that of one or two witnesses, was convicted by the oaths of many more witnesses. Moz. & W.

SUPER STATUTO VERSUS SERVANTES ET LABORATORES. A writ which lay against him who kept any servants who had left the service of another contrary to law.

SUPER VISUM CORPORIS (Lat.). Upon view of the body. When an inquest is held over a body found dead, it must be super visum corporis. See CORONER; INQUEST.

SUPERCARGO. In Maritime Law. A person specially employed by the owner of a cargo to take charge of and sell to the best advantage merchandise which has been shipped, and to purchase returning cargoes and to receive freight, as he may be authorized.

Supercargoes have complete control over the cargo and everything which immediately concerns it, unless their authority is either expressly or impliedly restrained; 12 East 381. Under certain circumstances they are responsible for the cargo; Bridge v. Austin, 4 Mass. 115; see Pawson's Adm'rs v. Donnell, 1 Gill & J. (Md.) 1, 19 Am. Dec. 213; but the supercargo has no power to interfere with the government of the ship; 3 Pardessus, n. 646. Not now used.

SUPERFICIARIUS (Lat.). In Civil Law. He who has built upon the soil of another, which he has hired for a number of years or forever, yielding a yearly rent. This is not very different from the owner of a lot on ground-rent in Pennsylvania. Dig. 43. 18. 1.

SUPERFICIES (Lat.). In Civil Law. Whatever has been erected on the soil.

SUPERFLUOUS LANDS. Lands acquired by a railroad company under its statutory powers and not required for the purpose of the undertaking. See 10 Jur. Rev. 281.

Slips of land above and below a tunnel; 51 L. J. Q. B. 172; land under arches which carry a railway; 48 L. J. Ch. 258; mines under a surface required or which may be required for the undertaking; 46 L. J. Q. B. 509; are not superfluous lands; but the whole of the land beyond the boundary wall of a railway is superfluous, even though that wall be also a retaining wall thicker at the base than at the surface, and though part of such land would be within a line drawn on the surface vertically above the line of the footings of the wall; 52 L. J. Ch. 198.

SUPERFŒTATION. The conception of a second embryo during the gestation of the first, or the conception of a child by a woman already pregnant with another, during the time of such pregnancy.

This, though doubted, seems to be established by numerous cases; 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 193; Cassan, Superfœtation; New York Medical Repository; 1 Briand, Méd. Lég. prem. partie, c. 3, art. 4; 1 Fodéré, Méd. Lég. § 299; Buffon, Hist. Nat. de l'Homme, Puberté; With. & Beck, Med. Jurispr.

SUPERINDUCTIO (Lat.). In the Civil Law. A species of obliteration. Dig. 28. 4. 1. 1

SUPERINSTITUTION. The institution of one upon another, as where two persons are admitted and are instituted to the same benefice, under adverse titles. Cowell.

SUPERINTENDENT REGISTRAR. An officer who superintends the registration of births, deaths, and marriages in England and Wales. Whart.

SUPERIOR. One who has a right to command; one who holds a superior rank: as, a soldier is bound to obey his superior.

In estates, some are superior to others: an estate entitled to a servitude or easement over another estate is called the superior or dominant, and the other the inferior or servient estate. 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1612.

SUPERIOR COURT. A term applied collectively to the three courts of common law at Westminster: namely, the king's bench, the common pleas, the exchequer; and so in Ireland.

It denotes a court of intermediate jurisdiction between the courts of inferior or limited jurisdiction and the courts of last resort.

In American Law. A court of intermediate jurisdiction between the inferior courts and those of last resort. See the several states.

SUPERNUMERARII (Lat.). In Roman Law. Those advocates who were not statuti, which title see.

The statuti were inscribed in the matriculation books, and formed a part of the college of advocates in each jurisdiction. The supernumeraries were not attached to any bar in particular, and could reside where they pleased: they took the place of advocates by title as vacancies occurred in that body.

SUPERONERATIO (L. Lat.). Surcharging a common: i. e. putting in beasts of a number or kind other than the right of common allows. It can only be of a common appendant or appurtenant. Bracton 229. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 23, § 4, gives two remedies, novel disseisin and writ of admeasurement, by which latter remedy no damages are recovered till the second offence. Now, distraining, trespass, and case are used as remedies. 3 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 238.

SUPERONERATIONE PASTURA. A writ that formerly lay against him who was impleaded in the county court for the surcharge of a common for his cattle and the cause was removed into one of the superior courts.

SUPERSEDEAS (Lat. that you set aside). In Practice. The name of a writ containing a command to stay the proceedings at law.

An auxiliary process designed to supersede the enforcement of the judgment of the court below, brought up by writ of error for review. Williams v. Bruffy, 102 U. S. 249, 26 L. Ed. 135.

Originally it was a writ directed to an officer, commanding him to desist from enforcing ing the execution of another writ which he was about to execute, or which might come in his hands. In modern times the term is often used synonymously with a "stay of proceedings," and is employed to designate the effect of an act or proceeding which of itself suspends the enforcement of a judgment; Dulin v. Coal Co., 98 Cal. 306, 33 Pac. 123.

It is granted on good cause shown that the party ought not to proceed; Fitzh. N. B. 236. There are some writs which, though they do not bear this name, have the effect to supersede or stay the proceedings: namely, a writ of error when bail is entered operates as a supersedeas; and a writ of certiorari to remove the proceeding of an inferior into a superior court has, in general, the same effect; 8 Mod. 373; Grubb v. Fox, 6 Binn. (Pa.) 461. But under special circumstances, the certiorari has not the effect to stay the proceeding, particularly where summary proceedings, as to obtain possession under the landlord and tenant law, are given by statute; Grubb v. Fox, 6 Binn. (Pa.) 460. See Bacon, Abr.; Com. Dig. Yelv. 6, n.

See APPEAL AND ERROR; UNITED STATES COURTS.

SUPERSTITIOUS USE. In English Law.

When lands, tenements, rents, goods, or chattels are given, secured, or appointed for and toward the maintenance of a priest or chaplain to say mass; for the maintenance of a priest or other man to pray for the soul of any dead man in such a church or elsewhere; to have and maintain perpetual obits, lamps, torches, etc., to be used at certain times to help to save the souls of men out of purgatory; in such cases the king, by force of several statutes, is authorized to direct and appoint all such uses to such purposes as are truly charitable; Bac. Abr. Charitable Uses and Mortmain (D); Duke, Char. Uses 105; 6 Ves. 567; 4 Co. 104.

The doctrine has no recognition in this country; Appeal of Seibert, 18 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 276; and a bequest to support a Catholic priest, and perhaps other uses void in England, would not be considered as superstitious uses; Methodist Church v. Remington, 1 Watts (Pa.) 219, 26 Am. Dec. 61; Witman v. Lex, 17 S. & R. (Pa.) 88, 17 Am. Dec. 644. Yet many of the superstitious uses of the English law would fail to be considered as charities, and would undoubtedly come under the prohibition against perpetuities. See CHARITIES; CHARITABLE USES; 1 Jarm. Wills, ch. ix. In England there are three classes of persons who have been held obnoxious to the law against superstitious uses: 1. Roman Catholics. 2. Protestant dissenters. 3. Jews. Their various disabilities have been almost wholly removed.

See MASSES.

SUPERVISOR. An overseer; a surveyor.

An officer whose duty it is to take care of the highways.

The chief officer of a town or organized township in the states of Michigan, Illinois, Wisconsin, and Iowa. He has various duties assigned him by the statutes as a town officer, and likewise represents his town in the general assembly, or county board of supervisors. See BOARD OF SUPERVISORS.

SUPERVISORS OF ELECTION. Persons appointed and commissioned by the United States circuit judges to supervise the registration of voters and the holding of elections for representatives in congress under R. S. §§ 2011-2031; repealed by the act of Feb. 8, 1894. As to what was the registration of voters under this act, see REGISTRATION. While this legislation was in force it was held that in case of a question as to what political organization should be recognized by the court in appointing supervisors, the body which was recognized by the last state convention of the party should be considered as its representative organization; subject, however, to modification by change of circumstances; In re Appointment of Supervisors of Election, 9 Fed. 14. The legislation of congress in vesting the appointment of supervisors in the courts was constitutional, and in the exercise of its supervisory power over elections for senators and representatives, new duties may be imposed by congress on the officers of election and new penalties for breach of duty; Ex parte Siebold, 100 U. S. 371, 25 L. Ed. 717; Ex parte Clarke, 100 U. S. 399, 25 L. Ed. 715. See ELECTION.

SUPPLEMENTAL. That which is added to a thing to complete it.

SUPPLEMENTAL ANSWER. One filed in chancery for the purpose of correcting, adding to, and explaining an answer already filed. Sm. Ch. Pr. 334. In New York and states having similar practice it is an additional answer to the complaint. It may be to allege a release after issue joined; Guliano v. Whitenack, 3 Misc. 54, 22 N. Y. Supp. 560; or to set up facts excusing non-payment where the defence of payment was relied on, until the time of trial; Voak v. Inv. Co., 51 Minn. 450, 53 N. W. 708.

SUPPLEMENTAL BILL. In Equity Practice. A bill brought as an addition to an original bill to supply some defect in its original frame or structure which cannot be supplied by amendment. See Stafford v. Howlett, 1 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 200; Walker v. Gilbert, 7 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 456; Cunningham's Adm'r v. Rogers, 14 Ala. 147. It may be brought by a plaintiff or defendant; 2 Ball & B. 140; Baker v. Whiting, 1 Sto. 218, Fed. Cas. No. 786; and as well after, as before, a decree; O'Hara v. Shepherd, 3 Md. Ch. Dec. 306; 1 Macn. & G. 405; Story, Eq. Pl. § 338; Secor v. Singleton, 41 Fed. 725; but must be within a reasonable time; Woodruff's Ex'rs v. Brugh, 6 N. J. Eq. 465.

If there has been a change of interest in a pending equity suit, the proper method to introduce another party or to substitute one party for another, is by a supplemental bill or by an original bill in the nature of a supplemental bill; Ross v. City of Ft. Wayne, 63 Fed. 466, 11 C. C. A. 288, 24 U. S. App. 113.

A supplemental bill in the nature of a bill of review cannot be entertained where no new facts pertinent to the litigation are discussed except such as were known to the complainants at the date of the original decree; City of Omaha v. Redick, 63 Fed. 1, 11 C. C. A. 1, 27 U. S. App. 204.

It may be filed when a necessary party has been omitted; 6 Madd. 369; Ensworth v. Lambert, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 605; Robertson v. Winchester, 85 Tenn. 171, 1 S. W. 781; to introduce a party, who has acquired rights subsequent to the filing of the original bill; Campbell v. Polk Co., 3 Ia. 472; when, after the parties are at issue and witnesses have been examined, some point not already made seems to be necessary, or some additional discovery is found requisite; Stafford v. Howlett, 1 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 200; when new events referring to and supporting the rights and interests already mentioned have occurred subsequently to the filing of the bill; Story, Eq. Pl. 336; 5 Beav. 253; for the statement only of facts and circumstances material and beneficial to the merits, and not merely matters of evidence; Jenkins v. Eldredge, 3 Sto. 299, Fed. Cas. No. 7267; when, after a decision has been made on the original bill, it becomes necessary to bring other matter before the court to get the full effect of it; Story, Eq. Pl. § 336; when a material fact, which existed before the filing of the bill, has been omitted, and it can no longer be introduced by way of amendment; Ridgeway v. Toram, 2 Md. Ch. Dec. 303; Mitf. Ch. Pl. 55, 61, 325; but only by special leave of court, when it seeks to change the original structure of the bill and introduce a new and different case; 4 Sim. 76, 628; Dias v. Merle, 4 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 259. Where, after a final decree, a person who has succeeded to the interest of the complainant in such manner as to entitle him to the full benefit of the decree, finds it necessary to invoke further action to obtain such benefit, he may file a supplemental bill in the original suit; Secor v. Singleton, 41 Fed. 725; but when an executor is substituted as a party in place of his decedent, he need not file a supplemental pleading; Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Trimble, 83 Fed. 85, 27 C. C. A. 404. After a decree disposing of the issues, the filing of a new bill by other parties, involving other issues, although connected with the subject-matter of the original litigation, is to be considered a new litigation, although styled a "supplemental bill" and permitted to be filed in the original cause, and the complainant in the original cause is entitled to notice, and will not be bound without it; Great Western Tel. Co. v. Purdy, 162 U. S.

329, 16 Sup. Ct. 810, 40 L. Ed. 986. And a supplemental bill filed upon leave granted and notice, which makes an essentially different case from that contemplated in the order granting leave to file it, will be ordered to be taken from the files; Stockton v. Tobacco Co., 53 N. J. Eq. 400, 32 Atl. 261.

The bill must be in respect to the same title, in the same person as the original bill; Story, Eq. Pl. 339; and no relief can be had under it upon a cause of action, which did not exist when the original bill was filed; Heffron v. Knickerbocker, 57 Ill. App. 339; Neubert v. Massman, 37 Fla. 91, 19 So. 625. If the original bill shows no title to relief, a supplemental bill cannot be filed based on facts afterwards occurring; but if the original bill is well founded, a supplemental bill may be filed showing a further title to relief; New York S. & T. Co. v. R. Co., 74 Fed. 67; Putney v. Whitmire, 66 Fed. 385. After a decree has been directed for complainant, a stranger will not be permitted to file a supplemental bill based on his purchase of the cause of action, until a decree is actually entered in the original cause; Hazleton Tripod-Boiler Co. v. R. Co., 72 Fed. 325. A bill by a surviving partner, to settle the partnership affairs, is separate, and distinct from a bill to subject real estate of the deceased partner to firm debts, and the statute of limitations cannot be avoided by styling the second suit a supplemental bill; White v. Joyce, 158 U. S. 128, 15 Sup. Ct. 788, 39 L. Ed. 921. When a patent was assigned to a stranger pending a suit for infringement, the assignee cannot obtain the benefit of the suit brought by the assignor, by a supplemental bill, but he may do it by an original bill in the nature of a supplemental bill; Ross v. Ft. Wayne, 58 Fed. 404. In a suit to remove a cloud from a title, where there is a decree establishing such title in the complainant, which carries a right to possession, a supplemental bill may be filed to enforce that right; Root v. Woolworth, 150 U. S. 401, 14 Sup. Ct. 136, 37 L. Ed. 1123.

It must state the original bill, and the proceedings thereon; and, when it is occasioned by an event which has occurred subsequently to the original bill, it must state that event and the consequent alteration with regard to the parties. In general, the supplemental bill must pray that all defendants appear and answer the charges it contains; Story, Eq. Pl. § 343. But the supreme court equity rules (Feb. 1, 1913) provide that the statements in the original suit need not be set forth unless the circumstances of the case may require it.

SUPPLEMENTARY PROCEEDINGS. Proceedings supplementary to an execution, directed to the discovery of the debtor's property and its application to the debt for which the execution is issued. They are purely statutory, and the statute limits the power of the courts to existing rights and things in case at the time of their institution; 18 N. Y. L. J. 1517. The New York statute entitles the judgment creditor to an order of examination "upon proof . . . that the judgment debtor has property which he unjustly refuses to apply towards the satisfaction of the judgment, etc." And where it appears from the examination "that the judgment debtor has, in his possession or under his control, money or other personal property belonging to him," the judge may order such money to be paid over and such other personal property to be delivered up; such proceedings are directed against property which, at the time of the order for his examination, the judgment debtor has in his possession or under his control, or which is actually due to him. No property subsequently acquired, no future earnings of any kind, and no earnings for personal services rendered within sixty days preceding such order, if necessary for the use of his family, can be reached; id.; Winters v. McCarthy, 2 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 357; Potter v. Low, 16 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 549. They do not affect money coming to the debtor, unless it is actually due when the order is obtained; id.; Stewart v. Foster, 1 Hilt. (N. Y.) 505; Columbian Institute v. Cregan, 3 N. Y. St. 287; or earnings due after the service of the order; Gerregani v. Wheelwright, 3 Abb. Prac. (N. S. N. Y.) 264; or the salary of a public officer, while in the hands of a disbursing officer in common with other money; Waldman v. O'Donnell, 57 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 215, 217. Proof as to the possession or control by the judgment debtor must be clear; Peters v. Kerr, 22 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 3; and doubts whether the money was earned before or after the order should be resolved in favor of the debtor; Potter v. Low, 16 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 549. If the debtor have a family dependent upon him, he may, if necessary, have sixty days' back earnings exempt; Code Civ. Proc. N. Y. § 2463; and this is held to be a humane provision which should be construed liberally in favor of the debtor; Miller v. Hooper, 19 Hun (N. Y.) 394. But this does not include money received by a saloon-keeper in his business; Prince v. Brett, 21 App. Div. 190, 47 N. Y. Supp. 402.

The return of an execution unsatisfied is sufficient to authorize a resort to supplementary proceedings; Klepsch v. Donald, 18 Wash. 150, 51 Pac. 352.

The appointment of a receiver in such proceedings dissolves a partnership of which the judgment debtor is a member; Guild v. Meyer, 56 N. J. Eq. 183, 38 Atl. 959.

Where the judgment is against a married woman she may be examined as to her separate estate; [1892] 2 Q. B. 626.

The enforcement of orders in such proceedings is by treating the defendant as in contempt, and a debtor is liable thereto for collecting rent; Stevens v. Dewey, 13 App. Div. 312, 43 N. Y. Supp. 130; or drawing out a savings bank deposit held in trust for another; 18 N. Y. L. J. 1520.

An act (1879)-which enables the plaintiff to examine the defendant on oath as to his property, fraudulently concealed, is unconstitutional, because no one is obliged to give evidence which may incriminate himself; Horstman v. Kaufman, 97 Pa. 147, 39 Am. Rep. 802. Another act was passed in 1913.

SUPPLETORY OATH. In Ecclesiastical Law. An oath given by the judge to the plaintiff or defendant upon half proof, as by one witness, already made. The oath added to the half proof enables the judge to decide. It is discretionary with the judge; 3 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 370.*

SUPPLICATIO (Lat.). In Civil Law. A petition for pardon of a first offense; also, a petition for reversal of judgment; also, equivalent to duplicatio, which is our rejoinder. Calvinus, Lex.

SUPPLICAVIT (Lat.). In English Law. The name of a writ issuing out of the king's bench or chancery for taking sureties of the peace: it is commonly directed to the justices of the peace, when they are averse to acting in the affair in their judicial capacity. 4 Bla. Com. 233.

SUPPLICIUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. A corporal punishment ordained by law; the punishment of death: so called because it was customary to accompany the guilty man to the place of execution and there offer supplications for him.

SUPPLIES. In English Law. Extraordinary grants to the king by parliament to supply the exigencies of the state. Jacob.

Means of provision or relief; stores.

SUPPLY CLAIMS. See MORTGAGE; RECEIVERS.

SUPPORT. The right of support is an easement which one man, either by contract or prescription, enjoys, to rest the joists or timbers of his house upon the wall of an adjoining building owned by another person. 3 Kent 435. See Washb. Easem.

A right to the support of one's land so as to prevent its falling into an excavation made by the owner of adjacent lands.

This support is of two kinds, lateral and subadjacent. Lateral support is the right of land to be supported by the land which lies next to it. Subadjacent support is the right of land to be supported by the land which lies under it. See LATERAL SUPPORT; MINES AND MINING.

Support is also generally used to mean articles for the sustenance of the family, as food, etc. Grant v. Dabney, 19 Kan. 389, 27 Am. Rep. 125. See FAMILY.

SUPPRESS. To put a stop to when actually existing. The word does not extend to preventing by suppressing what may lead to a thing. 34 L. J. M. C. 9.

SUPPRESSIO VERI (Lat.). Concealment of truth.

In general, a suppression of the truth when a party is bound to disclose it vitiates a contract. In the contract of insurance, a knowledge of the facts is required to enable the underwriter to calculate the chances and form a due estimate of the risk; and, in this contract perhaps more than any other, the parties are required to represent everything with fairness; 1 W. Bla. 594.

Suppressio veri, as well as suggestio falsi, is a ground to rescind an agreement, or at least not to carry it into execution; 1 Ball & B. 241; Moseley's Adm'rs v. Buck, 3 Munf. (Va.) 232, 5 Am. Dec. 508; Mechanics' Bk. v. Lynn, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 383, 7 L. Ed. 185; Livingston v. Iron Co., 2 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 390; 1 Story Eq. Jur., 13th ed. § 204. See CONCEALMENT; MISREPRESENTATION; REPRESENTATION; SUGGESTIO FALSI.

SUPPRESSION OF EVIDENCE. Where evidence in an equity case on letters patent is taken out of order, the court will usually entertain a motion to suppress it, though where no harm can result, it is sometimes allowed to stand till the hearing. If no such motion be made, the testimony will stand; Rob. Pat. § 1128; when the evidence is filed that which is inadmissible will sometimes be stricken out on motion; id.; but more commonly it stands over for final hearing. Where, in equity, in a patent case, a witness not named in the answer, testified to prior use, it will be considered at the hearing unless a motion be made to suppress it, even though it was taken under objection; 6 Fish. 452.

SUPRA PROTEST. Under protest. See ACCEPTANCE; ACCEPTOR; BILLS OF EXCHANGE; PROTEST, PAYMENT UNDER.

SUPREMACY. Sovereign dominion, authority, and pre-eminence; the highest state. In the United States the supremacy resides in the people, and is exercised by their constitutional representatives, the president and congress. See SOVEREIGNTY; ACT OF SUPREMACY.

SUPREME. That which is superior to all other things.

SUPREME COURT. A court of superior jurisdiction in many of the states of the United States.

The name is properly applied to the court of last resort, and is so used in most of the states. In nearly all the states there is a supreme court, but in one or two there is a court of appellate jurisdiction from the supreme court.

See SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

SUPREME COURT OF ERRORS. An appellate tribunal, and the court of last resort, in the state of Connecticut.

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE. See COURTS OF ENGLAND.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES. In the Appendix of 131 U. S. is given a list of the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States. It is here given, and is brought down to date. The names of the Chief Justices in the following list are in capitals. The first date is the date of commission; the last is the date of death in office (or of resignation or retiring if so noted). See biographical notes on the Federal Judges in 30 Fed. Cas. 1361; Hampton L. Carson's interesting and able work on the Supreme Court.

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT. An appellate tribunal, and the court of last resort, in the states of Maine, Massachusetts, and New Hampshire. See those titles.

SUPREME POWER. The highest authority in the state. Ruth. Nat. L. b. 2, c. 4, p. 67.

SURCHARGE. To put more cattle upon a common than the herbage will sustain or than the party hath a right to do. 3 Bla. Com. 237. In case of common without stint it could only happen when insufficient herbage was left for the lord's own cattle; 1 Rolle, Abr. 399. The remedy was by distraining the beasts beyond the proper number; an action of trespass which must have been brought by the lord of the manor; an action on the case, or a writ of admeasurement of pasture. 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 238, n.

In Equity Practice. To prove the omission of an item from an account which is before the court as complete, which should be inserted to the credit of the party surcharging; Story, Eq. Jur. § 525; 2 Ves. 565; Perkins v. Hart, 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 237, 6 L. Ed. 463. It is opposed to falsify, which see. Leave to surcharge and falsify is granted in preference to opening an account, in case of an account stated by the parties or reported by an auditor, where the party obtaining the liberty would be concluded by the account were it not granted. See ACCOUNT; AUDITOR.

SURETY. A person who binds himself for the payment of a sum of money, or for the performance of something else, for another. See SURETYSHIP.

SURETY COMPANIES. Acts authorizing surety companies to be sole surety, or to act in a fiduciary capacity without other security, are not invalid as granting a special or exclusive privilege; Roane Iron Co. v. Trust Co., 99 Wis. 273, 74 N. W. 818, 67 Am. St. Rep. 856; Coleman's Adm'r v. Parrott, 13 S. W. 525, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 947; Gans v. Carter, 77 Md. 1, 25 Atl. 663; so as to acting as guardian; Johnson v. Johnson, 88 Ky. 275, 11 S. W. 5.

A surety company, having a capital stock of $550,000, with undertakings given in various suits amounting to $5,000,000, and on bonds for the fidelity of employees amounting to $12,000,000, where its losses on the latter did not exceed one-eighth of the premiums received and it had full collateral security for the former, was accepted as surety; Rosenwald v. Ins. Co., 9 N. Y. Civ. Pro. Rep. 444; but the same company was held insufficient on substantially the same showing in 9 N. Y. Civ. Proc. R. 444, note.

The premium paid by a libellant in admiralty to a surety company for a bond for costs required by rule of court is taxable as costs; The Bencliff, 158 Fed. 377 (C. C., E. D. of Pa.), reversing the earlier practice. So of a bond given for the release of a libelled vessel; The South Portland, 95 Fed. 295; and of a bond given by the claimant of a libelled vessel, under admiralty rule 53, to respond in damages as claimed in a cross libel; Jacobsen v. Expedition Co., 112 Fed. 73, 50 C. C. A. 121; and an appeal and supersedeas bond; Edison v. Mutoscope Co., 117 Fed. 192; and a supersedeas bond on a writ of error; Jones v. Edward B. Smith Co., 183 Fed. 990; Church v. Wilkeson-Tripp Co., 58 Wash. 262, 108 Pac. 596, 109 Pac. 113, 137 Am. St. Rep. 1059 (under a statute); contra, as to an appeal bond, on the ground that there is no authority for taxing such an item; Lee Injector Mfg. Co. v. Injector Co., 109 Fed. 964, 48 C. C. A. 760 (C. C. A., 6th Cir., per Lurton, C. J.); such premium is not taxable in bankruptcy; In re Hoyt, 119 Fed. 987.

A statute permitting a surety company's premium on a trustee's bond to be charged as part of his expenses is constitutional; In re Clark's Estate, 195 Pa. 527, 46 Atl. 127, 48 L. R. A. 587, with full note.

A surety company, which absorbs the assets of another surety company and assumes its liabilities, is liable on a bond executed by its predecessor; Manny v. Surety Co., 103 Mo. App. 716, 78 S. W. 69. A surety company which executed a supersedeas bond under an act of congress is estopped to deny that such act authorized it to execute the bond; Ranney-Alton M. Co. v. Const. Co., 2 Ind. T. 134, 48 S. W. 1028.

The courts generally hold that a paid surety company can be relieved from its obligation of suretyship only where a departure from the contract is shown to be a material variance; Young v. Bonding Co., 228 Pa. 373, 77 Atl. 623; Philadelphia v. Deposit Co., 231 Pa. 208, 80 Atl. 62, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1085; U. S. v. Guaranty Co., 178 Fed. 721; Justice v. Surety Co., 209 Fed. 105.

See INSURANCE; TRUST COMPANIES; SURETYSHIP.

SURETY OF THE PEACE. See PEACE.

SURETYSHIP. An undertaking to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another, by which the surety becomes bound as the principal or original debtor is bound.

It is an accessory promise by which a person binds himself for another already bound, and agrees with the creditor to satisfy the obligation, if the debtor does not. Hope v. Board, 43 La. Ann. 738, 9 South. 754.

The liability of indorsers of notes given by tobacco growers upon advances by warehousemen is held to be that of guarantors, not sureties; Carsey v. Swan, 150 Ky. 473, 150 S. W. 534; so of a person who is not a party to a note which is to become a valid obligation against the maker upon its delivery to the payee, by writing his name upon the back of it; Bates v. Worthington, 163 Ill. App. 75.

The subjects of guaranty and suretyship are however, nearly related, and many of the principles are common to both. See GUARANTY. There must be a principal debtor liable, otherwise the promise becomes an original contract; and, the promise being collateral, the surety must be bound to no greater extent than the principal. Suretyship is one of the contracts included in the statute of frauds; 29 Car. II. c. 3.

The contract must be supported by a consideration, like every other promise. Without that, it is void, apart from the statute of frauds, and whether in writing or not; 4 Taunt. 117; Cobb v. Page, 17 Pa. 469; Bacharach v. McCurrach, 43 Ill. App. 584; Briggs v. Latham, 36 Kan. 205, 13 Pac. 129.

Kent, C. J., divides secondary undertakings into three classes: 1. Cases in which the guaranty or promise is collateral to the principal contract, but is made at the same time and becomes an essential ground of the credit given to the principal or direct debtor. Here there is not, and need not be, any other consideration than that moving between the creditor and original debtor. 2. Cases in which the collateral undertaking is subsequent to the creation of the debt, and was not the inducement to it, though the subsisting liability is the ground of the promise without any distinct and unconnected inducement. Here there must be some further consideration shown, having an immediate respect to such liability; for the consideration for the original debt will not attach to this subsequent promise. 3. When the promise to pay the debt of another arises out of some new and original consideration of benefit or harm moving between the newly contracting parties. The two first classes of cases are within the statute of frauds: the last is not; Leonard v. Vredenburg, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 29, 5 Am. Dec. 317. This classification has been reviewed and affirmed in numerous cases; Mallory v. Gillett, 21 N. Y. 415; Loomis v. Newhall, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 159.

The rule that the statute does not apply to class third has, however, been doubted; and it appears to be admitted that the principle is there inaccurately stated. The true test is the nature of the promise, not of the consideration; Maule v. Bucknell, 50 Pa. 39; 94 E. C. L. R. 885. But see infra.

A simpler division is into two classes. Where the principal obligation exists before the collateral undertaking is made. Where there is no principal obligation prior in time to the collateral undertaking. In the last class the principal obligation may be contemporaneous with or after the collateral undertaking. The first class includes Kent's second and third, the second includes Kent's first, to which must be added cases where the guaranty referring to a present or future principal obligation does not share the consideration thereof, but proceeds on a distinct consideration. Moreover, there are other original undertakings out of the statute of frauds and valid though by parol, besides his third class. These are where the credit is given exclusively to the promisor though the goods or consideration pass to another. Under this division, undertakings of the first class are original: 1. When the principal obligation is thereby abrogated. 2. When without such abrogation the promisor for his own advantage apparent on the bargain undertakes for some new consideration moving to him from the promisee. 3. Where the promise is in consideration of some loss or disadvantage to the promisee. 4. Where the promise is made to the principal debtor on a consideration moving from the debtor to the promisor; Theob. Sur. 37, 49. The cases under these heads will be considered separately.

First, where the principal obligation is pre-existent, there must be a new consideration to support the promise; and where this consideration is the discharge of the principal debtor, the promise is original and not collateral, as the first requisite of a collateral promise is the existence of a principal obligation. This has been held in numerous cases. The discharge may be by agreement, by novation or substitution, by discharge on final process, or by forbearance under certain circumstances; 4 B. & P. 124; Mallory v. Gillett, 21 N. Y. 412; Walker v. Penniman, 8 Gray (Mass.) 233.

But the converse of this proposition, that where the principal obligation remains, the promise is collateral, cannot be sustained, though there have been repeated dicta to that effect; Browne, Stat. Fr. § 193; Jackson v. Rayner, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 291; denied in Mallory v. Gillett, 21 N. Y. 415; Langdon v. Brumby, 7 Ala. 54; Templeton v. Bascom, 33 Vt. 132.

The main question arising in cases under this head is whether the debtor is discharged; and this is to a great extent a question for the jury. But if in fact the principal debt is discharged by agreement and the new promise is made upon this consideration, then the promise is original, and not collateral; Wood v. Corcoran, 1 Allen (Mass.) 405.

But where there is an existing debt, for which a third party is liable to the promisee, and the promisor undertakes to be responsible for it, still the contract need not be in writing if its terms are such that it effects an extinguishment of the original liability; Eden v. Chaffee, 160 Mass. 225, 35 N. E. 675.

A discharge of the debtor from custody, or surrender of property taken on an execution, is a good discharge of the debt; 11 M. & W. 857; Anderson v. Davis, 9 Vt. 137, 31 Am. Dec. 612; Mallory v. Gillett, 21 N. Y. 415.

Where the transaction amounts to a sale of the principal debt in consideration of the new promise, the debtor is discharged, and the promise is original; 3 B. & C. 855. So where a purchaser of goods transfers them to another, who promises the vendor to pay for them, this is a substitution and an original promise; 5 Taunt. 450; Whitbeck v. Whitbeck, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 266, 18 Am. Dec. 503; Rice v. Carter's Adm'r, 33 N. C. 298; Rowe v. Whittier, 21 Me. 545.

A mere forbearance to press the principal debt is not such a discharge of the debtor as will make the promise original; 1 Sm. L. C. 387; Mallory v. Gillett, 21 N. Y. 412; Jones v. Walker, 13 B. Monr. (Ky.) 356; but where the forbearance is so protracted as to discharge the debtor, it may be questioned whether the promise does not become original; Templeton v. Bascom, 33 Vt. 132.

Second, the promise will be original if made in consideration of some new benefit moving from the promisee to the promisor; Kutzmeyer v. Ennis, 27 N. J. Law, 371; Farley v. Cleveland, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 432, 15 Am. Dec. 387; Bull. N. P. 281.

Third, the promise is original where the consideration is some loss to the promisee or principal creditor; but it is held in many such cases that the loss must also work some benefit to the promisor; 6 Ad. & E. 564; Maner v. Washington, 3 Strobb. Eq. (S. C.) 177; Lawrence v. Fox, 20 N. Y. 268. As to merely refraining from giving an execution to the sheriff, see Russell v. Babcock, 14 Me. 140.

There have been decisions which hold that the mere relinquishment of a lien by the plaintiff takes the case out of the statute; Slingerland v. Morse, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 464. It would seem that a surrender of a lien merely is not sufficient consideration; Nelson v. Boynton, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 396, 37 Am. Dec. 148; but it must appear that the surrender is in some way beneficial to the promisor, as when he has an interest in the property released; Prime v. Koehler, 77 N. Y. 91; Conradt v. Sullivan, 45 Ind. 180, 15 Am. Rep. 261; Curtis v. Brown, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 488.

The rule is well settled that when the leading object of a promisor is to induce a promisee to forego some lien, interest, or advantage, and thereby to confer on the promisor a privilege or benefit which he would not otherwise possess or enjoy, an agreement made under such circumstances and upon such a consideration is a new, original, and binding contract, although the effect of it may be to assume the debt and discharge the liability of another; 6 Maule & S. 204; Alger v. Scoville, 1 Gray (Mass.) 391. The advantage relinquished by the promisee must directly enure to the benefit of the promisor, so as in effect to make it purchase by the promisor; Curtis v. Brown, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 488; Jackson v. Rayner, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 291. It is stated in many cases that the promise is original where the consideration moves to the promisor. The true test, however, must be found not in the consideration, but in the nature of the promise. Wherever the new promisor undertakes for his own default; where his promise is virtually to pay his own debt in a peculiar way, or if, by paying the debt, he is really discharging a liability of his own, his promise is original. The only case in which consideration can affect the terms of the promise is where the consideration of the promise is the extinguishment of the original liability; Colt v. Root, 17 Mass. 229; Rollison v. Hope, 18 Tex. 446; Emerson v. Slater, 22 How. (U. S.) 28, 16 L. Ed. 360.

Fourth, the promise is original if made on a consideration moving from the debtor to the promisor; Gold v. Phillips, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 412; Mason v. Hall, 30 Ala. 599; Alger v. Scoville, 1 Gray (Mass.) 391; Emerson v. Slater, 22 How. (U. S.) 28, 16 L. Ed. 360; Peyson v. Conniff, 32 Neb. 269, 49 N. W. 340.

For the rule in a class of cases quite analogous, see Prather v. Vineyard, 9 Ill. 40; Drakeley v. Deforest, 3 Conn. 272.

Where the guaranty relates to a contemporaneous or future obligation, the promise is original, (a) if credit is given exclusively to the promisor, (b) if the promise is merely to indemnify.

In the first of these cases the question to whom credit was given must be ultimately for the jury in each case. If there is any primary liability, and the creditor resorts to the principal debtor first, the promise is collateral. Thus, if the promisor says, "Deliver goods to A, and I will pay you," there is no primary obligation on the part of A, and the promise is original; Nelson v. Boynton, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 396, 37 Am. Dec. 148. But if he says, "I will see you paid," or, "I promise you that he will pay," the promise would be collateral; 1 H. Bla. 120; Andrews v. Creegan, 7 Fed. 477; Wagner v. Hallack, 3 Colo. 176; Stone v. Walker, 13 Gray (Mass.) 613; Boston v. Farr, 148 Pa. 220, 23 Atl. 901 (where it was left to the jury to decide whether it was an original undertaking).

A promise to indemnify merely against contingent loss from another's default is original; Myers v. Morse, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 425. A doubt is expressed by Browne, Stat. of Frauds, § 158, whether the fact that mere indemnity is intended, makes the promise original, because in many cases—those where the indemnity is against the default of a third person—there is an implied liability of that person, and the promise is collateral thereto. Now, there are three classes of cases. First, it is clear that where the indemnity is against the promisor's default or debt he is already liable without his promise; and to use this as a defence and make the promise collateral thereto would be using the law as a cover to a fraud; Stocking v. Sage, 1 Conn. 519; 6 Bingh. 506; Fenner v. Lewis, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 42; Weld v. Nichols, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 538. Second, so where the only debt against which indemnity is promised is the promisee's, this, being not the debt of another, but of the promisee, is clearly not within the statute, but the promise is original. And even if the execution of such a promise would discharge incidentally some other liability, this fact does not make the promise collateral; 13 M. & W. 561; Alger v. Scoville, 1 Gray (Mass.) 391; Mersereau v. Lewis, 25 Wend. (N. Y.) 243; Soule v. Albee, 31 Vt. 142. Third, but where there is a liability implied in another person, and the promise refers to his liability or default, and if executed will discharge such liability or default, the promise would seem on reason to be collateral and binding like a suretyship for future advances—that is, when accepted; Draughan v. Bunting, 31 N. C. 10; 10 Ad. & E. 453; Kingsley v. Balcome, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 131. But in many cases the rule is broadly stated that a promise to indemnify merely is original; 8 B. & C. 728 (overruled, 10 Ad. & E. 453); Alger v. Scoville, 1 Gray (Mass.) 391; Harrison v. Sawtel, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 242, 6 Am. Dec. 337 (overruled, Kingsley v. Balcome, 4 Barb. [N. Y.] 131); Holmes v. Knights, 10 N. H. 175; Smith v. Sayward, 5 Me. 504. In other cases the distinction is made to rest on the fact that the engagement is made to the debtor; Aldrich v. Ames, 9 Gray (Mass.) 76; 11 Ad. & E. 438; and in other cases, on the futurity of the risk or liability: Perley v. Spring, 12 Mass. 297.

The last ground is untenable; future guarantees binding when accepted or acted upon, and those against torts are expressly to the contrary. The first ground is too broad, as shown above; and the second seems to ignore the clear primary liability of the principal debtor.

If a third person makes a direct and unconditional agreement to pay for property of which another is to receive the benefit, the agreement being contemporaneous with the sale of the property, and the intention both of the promisor and the promisee being that the promisor is liable in the first instance for the payment of the purchase price, the agreement is treated as an original agreement and not within the statute of frauds, as where goods were sold to a third person on credit of the promisor; Lanam v. Jones, 134 Ala. 570, 33 South. 343; Sheppard v. Newton, 139 N. C. 533, 52 S. E. 143; Canthron Lumber Co. v. Hall, 76 Ark. 1, 88 S. W. 594; where the landlord of a boarding house instructed the proprietor of a meat market to let his tenant (operating the boarding house) have what meat she wanted and charge it to him; Sears v. Flodstrom, 5 Idaho, 314, 49 Pac. 11; where a contractor promised a grocer to pay for groceries furnished a subcontractor; Lusk v. Throop, 189 Ill. 127, 59 N. E. 529; where instructions were given to furnish to designated persons all the goods they wanted, to charge them directly to the promisor; Temple v. Goldsmith, 118 Mich. 172, 76 N. W. 324; Phelps v. Stone, 172 Mass. 355, 52 N. E. 517; Lessenich v. Pettit, 91 Ia. 609, 60 N. W. 192; where a promisor agreed to pay for property sold to a third party in goods to be furnished by him to the seller; Lindsey v. Heaton, 27 Neb. 662, 43 N. W. 420; Chick v. Coal Co., 78 Mo. App. 234; Mankin v. Jones, 63 W. Va. 373, 60 S. E. 248, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 214.

A promise to become surety for any amount of silver up to a stated amount which one might place in the hands of another for manufacture is also held an original promise; Marquand v. Hipper, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 520; an agreement to repay expenses to be incurred in providing a funeral for the brother of the promisor; McNamee v. McNamee, 9 N. Y. St. R. 720; an agreement by a solicitor to pay the amount required of his client as the condition of a continuance, where the terms were not accepted by his client; Sampson v. Swift, 11 Vt. 315.

Where the surrounding circumstances show that it was the intent of the promisor, in using language of this character, to be bound primarily, he will be held as an original promisor; Davis v. Patrick, 141 U. S. 489, 12 Sup. Ct. 58, 35 L. Ed. 826; Meldrum v. Kenefick, 15 S. D. 370, 89 N. W. 863; Higgins v. Hallock, 60 Hun, 125, 14 N. Y. Supp. 550 affirmed, 138 N. Y. 606, 33 N. E. 1082.

An agreement by an employer of labor that he would see the board of his laborers paid has been held an original promise; Grant v. Wolf, 34 Minn. 32, 24 N. W. 289; Knig v. Lumber Co., 80 Minn. 274, 83 N. W. 170; Marr v. R. Co., 121 Ia. 117, 96 N. W. 716.

It is said that "a mere promise of indemnity which is not collateral to any liability on the part of another, either express or implied, is not within the statute, and such a case illustrates the rule that when there is no principal, the promise need not be in writing. On the other hand, when the promise to indemnify is in fact a promise to pay the debt of another, then clearly such promise is within the statute, and the fact that it is in form a promise to indemnify will make no difference." Brandt, Sur. & Guar. § 59. See 4 B. & S. 414.

When the principal obligation is void, voidable, not enforceable, or unascertained, the promise is original, there being in this case no principal obligation to sustain the promise as collateral; Browne, Stat. Fr. § 156. It may be questionable, however, whether the promise will in such case be original unless the promisor knows the principal liability to be void or voidable; Burge, Surety 6; but this question may be settled by the principle that where credit is given to the principal, notwithstanding his obligation is void or voidable, the promise of the surety is collateral; 4 Bingh. 470; Conn v. Coburn, 7 N. H. 368, 26 Am. Dec. 746; but if no such credit is given or implied, the promise is collateral. See Erwin v. Downs, 15 N. Y. 576; Drake v. Flewellen, 33 Ala. 106; Veazie v. Willis, 6 Gray (Mass.) 90. Such would be the guaranty of an infant's promise; Conn v. Coburn, 7 N. H. 368, 26 Am. Dec. 746; and this is accordingly so held; Chapin v. Lapham, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 467 (but see Dexter v. Blanchard, 11 Allen (Mass.) 365, contra, as to the promise of a father to pay the debt of a minor son); Norton v. Eastman, 4 Me. (Greenl.) 521; though a distinction has been made in the case of a married woman; 4 Bingh. 470; Unangst v. Fitler, 84 Pa. 135; Davis v. Statts, 43 Ind. 103, 13 Am. Rep. 382; but the promise is collateral where the married woman has separate property which she can charge with the payment of her debts, and the credit is given exclusively to her; Connerat v. Goldsmith, 6 Ga. 14.

Where the defendants were sureties on a note given by a minor, who disaffirmed the contract upon attaining his majority, the defendants were not liable on the note; Keokuk County Bank v. Hall, 106 Ia. 540, 76 N. W. 832; but, in Gates v. Tebbetts, 83 Neb. 573, 119 N. W. 1120, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1000, 17 Ann. Cas. 1183, it was held that the general rule is that one who becomes surety for a married woman, minor or other person, incapable of contracting, is not released by a discharge of the principal debtor.

Where the liability is unascertained at the time of the promise, the promise is original; as the liabilities must concur at the time of the undertaking to make a guaranty; Browne, Stat. Fr. § 196; 1 Salk. 27; contra, Ambl. 330. Under this head would come a promise to pay damages for a tort, there being no principal liability until judgment; 1 Wils. 305; or where the liability rests upon a future award; Jepherson v. Hunt, 2 Allen (Mass.) 417; and liability upon indefinite executory contracts in general. It is, however, said that the liability may be prospective at the time the promise is made. See Huffcut's Ans. Contr. 72.

The promise is clearly original where the promisor undertakes for his own debt. The rule is, unless the promisor himself or his property is ultimately to be made liable in default of the principal debtor, the statute does not apply; Browne, Stat. Fr. § 177. Thus, an engagement by one who owes the principal debtor to retain the principal debt, so that it may be attached by trustee or garnishee process, is not a collateral promise; Towne v. Grover, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 306; Ellenwood v. Fufts, 63 Barb. (N. Y.) 321; Dee v. Downs, 50 Ia. 310.

So an agreement by a purchaser to pay part of the purchase-money to a creditor of the vendor is an agreement to pay his own debt; Lee v. Newman, 55 Miss. 365; Morrison & Co. v. Hogue, 49 Ia. 574; Wilson v. Bevans, 58 Ill. 232; or to pay a debt due a promisee by a third person out of moneys owing by a promisor to such third person; Estabrook v. Gebhart, 32 Ohio 415; Whitbeck v. Whitbeck, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 266, 18 Am. Dec. 503; Wilson v. Bevans, 58 Ill. 233; or for the application of a fund due a promisor by a third party; Justice v. Tallman, 86 Pa. 147. Such an agreement is an original promise.

Under the statute of frauds. At common law, a contract of guaranty or suretyship could be made by parol; but by the statute of frauds, 29 Car. II. c. 3, "no action shall be brought whereby to charge the defendant upon any special promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another person, . . . unless the agreement upon which such action shall be brought, or some memorandum or note thereof, shall be in writing and signed by the party to be charged therewith, or by some person thereunto lawfully authorized;" so that under the statute all contracts of guaranty and suretyship must be in writing and signed. The words debt and default in the statute refer to contracts; 2 East 325; and debt includes only pre-existing liability; Perley v. Spring, 12 Mass. 297; miscarriage refers to torts; 2 B. & Ald. 613. Torts are accordingly within the statute, and may be guaranteed against; 2 B. & Ald. 613; Turner v. Hubbell, 2 Day (Conn.) 457, 2 Am. Dec. 115; though this has been doubted in regard to future torts; 1 Wils. 305. Perhaps a guaranty against future torts might be open to objections on the ground of public policy. But the unchallenged contracts of modern indemnity companies would seem to show that such an objection would not prevail.

A guaranty of indemnity to a surety is within the statute of frauds; Waterman v. Ressester, 45 Ill. App. 155.

The doctrine that a future contingent liability on the part of the principal is not within the statute; 1 Salk. 27; Perley v. Spring, 12 Mass. 297; is not tenable; and it is clear, both by analogy and on authority, that such a liability may support a guaranty, although such cases must be confined within very narrow limits, and the mere fact of the contingency is a very strong presumption that the promise is original; Browne, Stat. Fr. § 196; Harrington v. Rich, 6 Vt. 668; Hartley v. Varner, 88 Ill. 561.

Where the promise is made to the debtor, it is not within the statute; Reed, Stat. Fr. 76; Price v. Combs, 12 N. J. L. 188; Mather v. Perry, 2 Den. (N. Y.) 162. "We are of opinion that the statute applies only to promises made to the person to whom another is answerable;" 11 Ad. & E. 446; Alger v. Scoville, 1 Gray (Mass.) 391. The word another in the statute must be understood as referring to a third person, and not to a debt due from either of the contracting parties; Preble v. Baldwin, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 552. False and deceitful representations of the credit or solvency of third persons are not within the statute; Browne, Stat. Fr. § 181; 4 Camp. 1.

The English rule required the consideration to be expressed; 5 East 10. It could not be proved by parol; 4 B. & Ald. 595. But by 19 & 20 Vict. no such promise shall be deemed invalid by reason only that the consideration does not appear in writing or by necessary inference from a written instrument; 7 C. B. (N. S.) 361. The rule varies in different states, and in some states is settled by statute. See Brandt, Sur. & Guar. § 82. In some states there are statutes similar to the English statutes. In other states the consideration is required by statutes to be expressed. Of states where statutes are silent, some have accepted and some rejected the English construction of statutes of frauds in Wain v. Walters, 5 East 10, supra.

The courts lay hold of any language which implies a consideration; Church v. Brown, 21 N. Y. 315. So where the guaranty and the matter guaranteed are one simultaneous transaction, both will be construed in connection, and the consideration expressed in the latter applied to the support of the former, if these are words of reference in the guaranty; Simons v. Steele, 36 N. H. 73.

Formation of the obligation. In construing the language of the contract to decide whether it constitutes an original promise or a guaranty, it is difficult to lay down a general rule: the circumstances of particular cases vary widely. See GUARANTY; [1894] 1 Q. B. 288. "One test is if the promisor is totally unconnected with the transaction except by means of his promise to pay the loss, the contract is a guaranty; if he is to derive some benefit from it, his contract is an indemnity." Id. The word guaranty or surety may or may not indicate correctly the contract, and the circumstances of the case may make an indorser liable as a guarantor or surety, without any words to indicate the obligation; Ketchell v. Burns, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 456.

In general, if a promissory note is signed or indorsed when made by a stranger to the note he becomes a joint promisor and liable on the note; Childs v. Wyman, 44 Me. 433, 69 Am. Dec. 111; Riley v. Gerrish, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 104; Schneider v. Schiffman, 20 Mo. 571; and this will be true if indorsed after delivery to the payee in pursuance of an agreement made before the delivery; Hawkes v. Phillips, 7 Gray (Mass.) 284; but parol evidence may be introduced to show that he is a surety or guarantor; Fraser v. McConnell, 23 Ga. 368; Eberhart v. Page, 89 Ill. 550. If the third party indorses after delivery to the payee without any previous agreement, he is merely a second indorser; Taylor v. McCune, 11 Pa. 466; Hoffman v. Moore, 82 N. C. 313; and he is liable as a maker to an innocent holder; Page v. Lathrop, 20 Mo. 591. But it was held otherwise where the signature was on the face of the note; Sargent v. Robbins, 19 N. H. 572; and the same is held where he signs at inception of the note, in pursuance of a custom, leaving a blank for the payee's signature above his name; Weaver v. Marvel, 12 La. Ann. 517. Such an indorser is held to guaranty that the note shall be collectible when due; Gillespie v. Wheeler, 46 Conn. 410. The time of signing may be shown by parol evidence; Bright v. Carpenter, 9 Ohio 139, 34 Am. Dec. 432.

A payee or subsequent party who executes a guarantee upon a bill or note is not liable as indorser; Davis v. Campbell, 3 Stew. (Ala.) 319; Springer v. Hutchinson, 19 Me. 359; contra, Vanzant v. Arnold, 31 Ga. 210; Partridge v. Davis, 20 Vt. 499.

It has been held that a third person indorsing in blank at the making of the note may show his intention by parol; Moies v. Bird, 11 Mass. 436, 6 Am. Dec. 179; but not if he describes himself as guarantor, or if the law fixes a precise liability upon indorsements in blank; Seabury v. Hungerford, 2 Hill, (N. Y.) 80. But this has been doubted; 33 E. L. & E. 282. In New York the cases seem to take the broad ground that an indorser in blank, under all circumstances, is an indorser merely, and cannot be made a guarantor or surety; Spies v. Gilmore, 1 N. Y. 324. See Goad v. Martin, 95 U. S. 90, 24 L. Ed. 341.

The consideration to support a parol promise to pay the debt of another must be such as would be good relating to the payment of that particular debt or of any other of equal amount; Thomas v. Delphy, 33 Md. 373. It need not necessarily be a consideration distinct from that of the principal contract. An executed or past consideration to the principal is not sufficient; Pratt v. Hedden, 121 Mass. 116; Clopton v. Hall, 51 Miss. 482.

The giving of new credit where a debt already exists has been held a sufficient consideration to support a guaranty of the old and new debt; Loomis v. Newhall, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 159; Hargroves v. Cooke, 15 Ga. 321; but the weight of authority would seem to require that there should be some further consideration; Reed, Stat. Fr. 70; De Wolf v. Rabaud, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 476, 7 L. Ed. 227; Sears v. Brink, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 211, 3 Am. Dec. 475; Elliott v. Giese, 7 Harr. & J. (Md.) 457. A consideration that will take a case out of the statute of frauds must be such a consideration as will make the collateral debt, agreed to be paid, the debt of the promisor. It must be an original undertaking; Waterman v. Ressester, 45 Ill. App. 155.

Forbearance to sue the debtor is a good consideration, if definite in time; Coffin v. Trustees, 92 Ind. 337; Dahlman v. Hammel, 45 Wis. 466; or even if of considerable time; Cro. Jac. 683; or reasonable time; Board of Directors v. Peterson, 4 Wash. 148, 29 Pac. 995. But there must be an actual forbearance, and the creditor must have had a power of enforcement; 4 East 465. But the fact that it is doubtful whether such a power exists, does not injure the consideration; 5 B. & Ad. 123. Forbearance has been held sufficient consideration even where there was no well-grounded claim; 18 L. J. C. P. 222; Kuns' Ex'r v. Young, 34 Pa. 60; contra, Cabot v. Haskins, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 83. A short forbearance, or the deferment of a remedy, as postponement of a trial, or postponement of arrest, may be a good consideration; and perhaps an agreement to defer indefinitely may support a guaranty; Livingston v. Roosevelt, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 257, 4 Am. Dec. 273; Sage v. Wilcox, 6 Conn. 81. A mere agreement not to push an execution is too vague to be a consideration; McKinney v. Quilter, 4 McCord (S. C.) 409; and a postponement of a remedy must be made by agreement as well as in fact; Mecorney v. Stanley, 8 Cush. (Mass.) 85; Sage v. Wilcox, 6 Conn. 81; 11 C. B. 172.

The contract of suretyship may be entered into absolutely and without conditions, or its formation may be made to depend on certain conditions precedent. But there are some conditions implied in every contract of this kind, however absolute on its face. In the case of bonds, as in other contracts of suretyship, it is essential that there should be a principal, and a bond executed by the surety is not valid until executed by the principal also. One case, 10 Co. 100 b, sometimes cited to the contrary, is not clear to the point. The argument that the surety is bound by his recital under seal fails, especially in all statute bonds, where one important requisite of the statute, that the bond should be executed by the principal, fails; Wood v. Washburn, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 24; 4 Beav. 383.

Where the surety's undertaking is conditional on others joining, and this condition is known to the creditor, he is not ordinarily liable until they do so; 4 B. & Ad. 440; Hunt v. State, 53 Ind. 321; Goff v. Bankston, 35 Miss. 518; Belleville Sav. Bank v. Bornman, 124 Ill. 200, 16 N. E. 210; contra, if the obligee is ignorant of the condition; Millett v. Parker, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 608; Dair v. U. S., 16 Wall. (U. S.) 1, 21 L. Ed. 491; Chase v. Hathorn, 61 Me. 505. So the surety is not bound if the signatures of his co-sureties are forged, although he has not made his signature expressly conditional on theirs; 2 Am. L. Reg. 349; but see 8 id. N. S. 665. Where a bond to a sheriff; Police Jury v. Haw, 2 La. 41; and an administration bond; State v. Gregory, 119 Ind. 503, 22 N. E. 1; were signed in expectation by the party signing that other sureties would sign, and the bond was delivered without such other signatures, the surety was held liable. If a condition upon which a surety signs be known to the creditor and be not complied with, the surety is not liable; Jones v. Keer, 30 Ga. 93.

Where sureties signed a bond in ignorance of the fact that the principal had not signed, they are not bound; School Dist. No. 80 v. Lapping, 100 Minn. 139, 110 N. W. 849, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1105. A bond executed and delivered to the court clerk, to avoid an injunction, is binding on all the parties notwithstanding a collateral condition by one of the sureties that it was not to be used until an indemnity bond had been given him; Hendry v. Cartwright, 14 N. M. 72, 89 Pac. 309. See 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1105, note. Persons who sign a note as sureties on condition that it shall not become binding unless the signature of a third person is secured as co-surety are not liable until such signature is secured; Bank of Benson v. Jones, 147 N. C. 419, 61 S. E. 193, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 343.

The acceptance of the contract by the promisee by words or by acts under it is often made a condition precedent to the attaching of the liability of the surety. The general rule is that where a future guaranty is given, absolute and definite in amount, no notice of acceptance is necessary; but if it is contingent and indefinite in amount, notice must be given; Norton v. Eastman, 4 Me. (Greenl.) 521; Stafford v. Low, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 67; but the promisee has a reasonable time to give such notice; Paige v. Parker, 8 Gray (Mass.) 211.

Where defendant, at plaintiff's request, wrote him a letter guaranteeing payment for any goods which another might purchase, and goods were subsequently purchased, and the defendant's relations with the purchaser were such as should have kept him informed of these transactions, the mere lack of notice of acceptance of the guaranty is no bar to recovery; Drucker v. Heyl-Dia, 52 Misc. 142, 101 N. Y. Supp. 796.

A distinction is to be made between a guaranty and an offer to guaranty. No notice of acceptance is requisite when a guaranty is absolute; Bank of La. v. Coster's Ex'rs, 3 N. Y. 212, 53 Am. Dec. 280; Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank v. Kercheval, 2 Mich. 511; but an offer to guaranty must have notice of acceptance; and till accepted it is revocable; 12 C. B. N. S. 784; 6 Dow. H. L. C. 239; Shupe v. Galbraith, 32 Pa. 10; and where acceptance is required, it may be as well implied by acts as by words; as, by receiving the written guaranty from the promisor; Paige v. Parker, 8 Gray (Mass.) 211; or by actual knowledge of the amount of sales under a guaranty of the purchase-money; Noyes v. Nichols, 28 Vt. 160.

The rule requiring notice is said to be based upon "the nature and definition of a contract, which requires the assent of a party to whom a proposal is made, to be signified to the party making it, in order to constitute a binding promise. . . . The rule proceeds upon the ground that the case in which it applies is an offer or proposal on the part of the guarantor, which does not become binding as an obligation until accepted by the party to whom it is made; that, until then, it is inchoate and incomplete and may be withdrawn by the proposer." Davis v. Wells, Fargo & Co., 104 U. S. 159, 26 L. Ed. 686. When the guaranty is contemporaneous with the principal contract, notice is unnecessary; Nading v. McGregor, 121 Ind. 465, 23 N. E. 283, 6 L. R. A. 686; Lemp v. Armengol, 86 Tex. 690, 28 S. W. 941; so, where there has been a precedent request; Hasselman v. Japanese Development Co., 2 Ind. App. 180, 27 N. E. 318, 28 N. E. 207; contra, Kay v. Allen, 9 Pa. 320. Notice must be given of an offer to guarantee advances to be made by another to a third party, in order to bind the guarantor; 1 M. & S. 557. Knowledge that a guaranty is being acted upon is sufficient in the case of guaranties of existing debts, or of contemporaneous debts; Davis v. Wells, Fargo & Co., 104 U. S. 159, 26 L. Ed. 686. But in case of guaranties of the repayment of future advances, the cases are in conflict as to whether notice is necessary. That notice is necessary, see Davis v. Wells, Fargo & Co., 104 U. S. 159, 26 L. Ed. 686; that it is generally unnecessary, see Union Bank of La. v. Coster's Ex'rs, 3 N. Y. 203, 53 Am. Dec. 280; Crittenden v. Fiske, 46 Mich. 70, 8 N. W. 714, 41 Am. Rep. 146; that it is necessary where the amount of the proposed advance is uncertain, but unnecessary where it is certain, see Snyder v. Click, 112 Ind. 233, 13 N. E. 581. See, generally, Huffcut's Ans. Contr. 27. One who, as surety, executes a bond with another, conditioned for the payment of the moneys advanced the other, is not entitled to notice of the acceptance of the bond by the obligee; Hall v. Weaver, 34 Fed. 104.

Where a contract of guaranty is signed by the guarantor without any previous request of the other party, and in his absence and for no other consideration between them, except future advances to be made to the principal debtor, there must be an acceptance of the guaranty by the other party in order to complete the contract; Davis Sewing Machine Co. v. Richards, 115 U. S. 527, 6 Sup. Ct. 173, 29 L. Ed. 480; Barnes Cycle Co. v. Reed, 84 Fed. 605; Gardner v. Lloyd, 110 Pa. 285, 2 Atl. 562; Coe v. Buehler, 110 Pa. 366, 5 Atl. 20.

Construction and extent of obligation. The liability of a surety cannot exceed, in any event, that of the principal, though it may be less. The same rule does not apply to the remedies, which may be greater against the surety. But, whatever may be the liability imposed upon the surety, it is clear that it cannot be extended by implication beyond the terms of the contract. His obligation is strictissimi juris, and cannot be extended beyond the precise terms of the contract; Walsh v. Bailie, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 180; Coughran v. Bigelow, 9 Utah 260, 34 Pac. 51. Sureties are never held responsible beyond the clear and absolute terms and meaning of their undertakings, and presumptions and equities are never allowed to enlarge, or in any degree to change, their legal obligations; Leggett v. Humphreys, 21 How. (U. S.) 66, 16 L. Ed. 50. And this rule has been repeatedly reaffirmed; McCluskey v. Cromwell, 11 N. Y. 598; Kellogg v. Stockton, 29 Pa. 460; Smith v. U. S., 2 Wall. (U. S.) 235, 17 L. Ed. 788. It is quite true, that in one sense, the contract of a surety is strictissimi juris, and it is not to be extended beyond the express terms in which it is expressed. The rule, however, is not a rule of construction of a contract, but a rule of application of the contract after the construction of it has been ascertained.

The obligation of sureties cannot be extended by implication or enlarged construction of the terms of the contract entered into; Crane v. Buckley, 203 U. S. 441, 27 Sup. Ct. 56, 51 L. Ed. 260; but the rule is relaxed in the case of a compensated surety who is regularly engaged in that business; Keefer v. School Dist., 203 Pa. 337, 52 Atl. 245; Atlantic Trust & Deposit Co. v. Laurinburg, 163 Fed. 690, 90 C. C. A. 274.

Where the question is as to the meaning of the language of the contract, there is no difference between the contract of the surety and that of anybody else; Gamble v.

Cuneo, 21 App. Div. 413, 47 N. Y. Supp. 548.

The remedies against the surety may be more extensive than those against the principal, and there may be defences open to the principal, but not to the surety,—as, infancy or coverture of the principal,—which must be regarded as a part of the risks of the surety; St. Albans Bank v. Dillon, 30 Vt. 122, 73 Am. Dec. 295.

The liability of the surety extends to and includes all securities given to him by the principal debtor, the converse of the rule stated below in the case of collateral security given to the creditor; Paris v. Hulett, 26 Vt. 308. Thus a creditor is entitled in equity to the benefit of all securities given by the principal debtor for the indemnity of his surety; Haven v. Foley, 18 Mo. 136. If the surety receives money from the principal to discharge the debt he holds it as trustee of the creditor; Green v. Dodge, 6 Ohio 80, 25 Am. Dec. 736.

A creditor is bound to use proper care and intelligence in the management and collection of collateral securities; the surety will be released to the extent of the loss occasioned by his negligence; Bank of Philippi v. Kittle, 69 W. Va. 171, 71 S. E. 109, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 699, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 113.

A payment made by the principal before the claim is barred by the statute of limitations, keeps the debt alive as to the surety; otherwise, if made after the statute has run; Cross v. Allen, 141 U. S. 528, 12 Sup. Ct. 67, 35 L. Ed. 843.

In the common case of bonds given for the faithful discharge of the duties of an office, the bond covers only the particular term of office for which it is given, and it is not necessary that this should be expressly stated; nor will the time be extended by a condition to be bound "during all the time A (the principal) continues," if after the expiration of the time A holds over merely as an acting officer, without a valid appointment; Ward v. Whitney, 3 Sandf. (N. Y.) 403. The circumstances of particular cases may extend the strict rule stated above, as in the case of officers annually appointed. Here, although the bond recites the appointment, if it is conditioned upon his faithful accounting for money received before his appointment, the surety may be held; 9 B. & C. 35; Worcester Bank v. Reed, 9 Mass. 267, 6 Am. Dec. 65. But the intention to extend the time, either by including past or future liabilities, must clearly appear; 4 B. & P. 175. See Anaheim Water Co. v. Parker, 101 Cal. 483, 35 Pac. 1048. Generally the recital cannot be enlarged and extended by the condition; Theob. Surety 66. And where the recital sets forth an employment for twelve months, this time is not controlled by a condition, "from time to time annually, and at all times thereafter during the continuance of this employment," although the employment is actually continued beyond the year; 2 B. & Ald. 431; Chelmsford Co. v. Demarest, 7 Gray (Mass.) 1.

So the obligation may cease by a change in the character of the office or employment; 3 Wils. 530; but an alteration in the character of the obligees, by taking in new partners, does not necessarily terminate the obligation; 10 B. & C. 122. But where an essential change takes place, as the death of the obligee, the obligation is terminated, although the business is carried on by the executors; 1 Term 18.

Where one becomes surety for two or either of them, the obligation is terminated by the death of one of the principals; 1 Bingh. 452; but this is where the obligation is essentially personal; and where a bond for costs was given by two as "defendants," the surety was not discharged by the death of one; 5 B. & Ald. 261. A surety for a lessee is not liable for rent after the term, although the lessee holds over; Brewer v. Knapp, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 332.

If the law provides that a public officer shall hold over until a successor is appointed, the sureties on the official bond are liable during such holding over; Thompson v. State, 37 Miss. 518; Amherst Bank v. Root, 2 Metc. (Mass.) 522; contra, in the case of officers of corporations; Chelmsford Co. v. Demarest, 7 Gray (Mass.) 1; but the liability of such surety extends only for such reasonable time as would enable the successor to be appointed; State v. Powell, 40 La. Ann. 241, 4 South. 447. And this provision is not controlled by an alteration of the law extending the term but leaving the provision intact; Com. v. Drewry, 15 Gratt. (Va.) 1. But when the term of an office created by statute or charter is not limited, but merely directory for an annual election, it seems the surety will be liable, though after the year, until his successor is qualified; Sparks v. Bank, 3 Del. Ch. 225.

In bonds, the penalty is the extreme amount of liability of the surety; but various circumstances may reduce the liability below this; Clark v. Bush, 3 Cow. (N. Y.) 151; 6 Term 303. If the engagement of the surety is general, the surety is understood to be obligated to the same extent as his principal, and his liability extends to all the accessories of the principal obligations; Scully v. Hawkins, 14 La. Ann. 183.

A surety's liability will not ordinarily extend beyond the penal sum of the bond, unless he has in some way resisted or obstructed the recovery of the claim; Thomas Laughlin Co. v. Am. Surety Co., 114 Fed. 627, 51 C. C. A. 247.

A surety on a cashier's bond is not liable for money collected by the cashier as an attorney-at-law, and not accounted for to the bank; Dedham Bank v. Chickering, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 314. So also where one was surety, and the bond was conditioned on the accounting by the principal for money received by him in virtue of his office as parish overseer, the surety was held not liable for money borrowed by the principal for parochial purposes; 7 B. & C. 491. But a surety on a collector's bond is liable for his principal's neglect to collect, as well as failure to pay over; 6 C. & P. 106.

As the surety is only liable to the obligations fairly intended at the execution of the bond, he cannot be held for a breach of new duties attached to his principal's office; Dedham Bank v. Chickering, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 314; or if any material change is made in the duties; Boston Hat Manufactory v. Messinger, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 223. A surety on an official bond is said to be liable generally for the faithful performance of duties imposed upon the officer, whether by laws enacted before or after the execution of the bond, where such duties are properly within the scope of the office; Brandt, Sur. & Guar. § 548.

If one guarantees payment for services, and the promisee partly performs the services, but fails of completing them from no fault of his own, the guarantor is liable to the amount of the part-performance; Mellen v. Nickerson, 12 Gray (Mass.) 445.

A bond for faithful performance of duties renders the sureties responsible for ordinary skill and diligence, as well as for integrity; American Bank v. Adams, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 303.

A continuing guaranty up to a certain amount covers a constant liability of that amount; but if the guaranty is not continuing, the liability ceases after the execution of the contract to the amount limited; 3 B. & Ald. 593.

A guaranty may be continuing or may be exhausted by one act. It is said that there is no general rule for determining the question; Brandt, Sur. & Guar. § 156. The general principle may be thus stated: When by the terms of the undertaking, by the recitals in the instrument, or by a reference to the custom and course of dealing between the parties, it appears that the guaranty looked to a future course of dealing for an indefinite time, or a succession of credits to be given, it is to be deemed a continuing guaranty, and the amount expressed is to limit the amount for which the guarantor is to be responsible, and not the amount to which the dealing or whole credit given is to extend; Douglass v. Reynolds, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 113, 8 L. Ed. 626; 3 B. & Ald. 593. Thus, a guaranty for any goods to one hundred pounds is continuous; 12 East 227; or for "any debts not exceeding," etc.; 2 Camp. 413; or, "I will undertake to be answerable for any tallow not exceeding," etc., but "without the word any it might perhaps have been confined to one dealing;" 3 Camp. 220. The words, "I do hereby agree to guaranty the payment of goods according to the custom of their trading with you, in the sum of £200." are held to constitute a continuing guaranty; 6 Bingh. 244; so of the words, "I agree to be responsible for the price of goods purchased at any time, to the amount of," etc.; Bent v. Hartshorn, 1 Mete. (Mass.) 24. The words "answerable for the amount of five sacks of flour" are clearly not continuous; 6 Bingh. 276. The court will look at the surrounding circumstances, in order to determine; L. R. 4 C. P. 595.

The contracts of guaranty and suretyship are not negotiable or assignable, and in general can be taken advantage of only by those who were included as obligees at the formation of the contract; Bleeker v. Hyde, 3 McLean, 279, Fed. Cas. No. 1,537. See GUARANTY. Accordingly, the contract is terminated by the death of one of several obligees; 4 Taunt. 673; or by material change, as incorporation; 3 B. & P. 34. But where a bond is given to trustees in that capacity, their successors can take advantage of it; 12 East 399. The fact that a stranger has acted on a guaranty does not entitle him to the benefits of the contract; Partridge v. Davis, 20 Vt. 499; and this has been held in the case of one of two guarantees who acted on the guaranty; Smith v. Montgomery, 3 Tex. 199. A guaranty is not negotiable, whether made by a payee or subsequent party to a bill or note; McDoal v. Yoemans, 8 Watts (Pa.) 361.

It is held that a guaranty addressed to no one in particular may be acted on by any one: Lowry v. Adams, 22 Vt. 160; but the true rule would seem to be that in such cases a party who had acted on the contract might show, as in other contracts, that he was a party to it within the intention at the making; the mere fact that no obligee is mentioned does not open it to everybody.

In an action against sureties for violation of a bond by the principals, it is not necessary to allege any violation on the part of the sureties; Farley v. Moran, 3 Cal. Unrep. 572, 31 Pac. 158.

The rule of construction applied to ordinary sureties is not applicable to the bonds of fidelity and casualty companies; any doubtful language should be construed most strongly against the surety and in favor of the indemnity which the insured had reasonable ground to expect; Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Supreme Council, 63 Fed. 48, 11 C. C. A. 96, 22 U. S. App. 439.

Enforcement of the obligation. As the surety cannot be bound to any greater extent than the principal, it follows that the creditor cannot pursue the surety until he has acquired a full right of action against the principal debtor. A surety for the performance of any future or executory contract cannot be called upon until there is an actual breach by the principal. A surety on a promissory note cannot be sued until the note has matured, as there is no debt until that time. All conditions precedent to a right of action against the principal must be complied with. Where money is payable on demand, there must have been a demand and refusal. But it is not necessary that the creditor should have exhausted all the means of obtaining his debt. In some cases it may be requisite to notify the surety of the default of the debtor, or to sue the debtor; but this depends upon the particular conditions and circumstances of each case, and cannot be considered a condition precedent in all cases. Even where the creditor has a fund or other security to resort to, he is not obliged to exhaust this before resorting to the surety; he may elect either remedy, and pursue the surety first. But if the surety pay the debt, he is entitled to claim that the creditor should proceed against such fund or other security for his benefit; Fawcetts v. Kimmey, 33 Ala. 261. And if the creditor having received such collateral security, avail himself of it, he is bound to preserve the original debt; for in equity the surety will be entitled to subrogation; Denny v. Lyon, 38 Pa. 98, 80 Am. Dec. 463. A judgment against the principal may be assigned to the surety upon payment of the debt; Tyler v. Hildreth, 77 Hun (N. Y.) 580, 28 N. Y. Supp. 1042. But an assignment of the debt must be for the whole; the surety cannot pay a part and claim an assignment pro tanto; Gannett v. Blodgett, 39 N. H. 150.

In general, it is not requisite that notice of the default of the principal should be given to the surety, especially when the engagement is absolute and for a definite amount; 14 East 514. The guarantor on a note is not entitled to notice as an indorser; Greene v. Thompson, 33 Ia. 293; Simpson's Ex'r v. Bovard, 74 Pa. 351; Sterling v. Stewart, 74 Pa. 445, 15 Am. Rep. 559; Barker v. Scudder, 56 Mo. 272. Laches in giving notice to the surety upon a draft of the default of the principal can only be set up as a defence in an action against the surety, in cases where he has suffered damage thereby, and then only to the extent of that damage; Bank v. Coster's Ex'rs, 3 N. Y. 203, 53 Am. Dec. 280; it is no defence to an action against a surety on a bond that the plaintiff knew of the default of the principal, and delayed for a long time to notify the surety or to prosecute the bond. Morris Canal & B. Co. v. Van Vorst's Adm'x, 21 N. J. L. 100. Mere passive delay in prosecuting a remedy against a principal does not release a surety; Benedict v. Olson, 37 Minn. 431, 35 N. W. 10; Edwards v. Dargan, 30 S. C. 177, 8 S. E. 858; Bank v. Homesley, 99 N. C. 531, 6 S. E. 797; not even if prolonged until the statute of limitations has run; Nelson v. Bank, 69 Fed. 798, 16 C. C. A. 425. Sureties on a superseadeas bond are not entitled to have a suit thereon stayed till attached lands of the principal are sold and the security exhausted; Davis v. Patrick, 57 Fed. 909, 6 C. C. A. 632.

A judgment against a principal is at least prima facie evidence against the surety, though he was not notified of the action; Dexter, Horton & Co. v. Sayward, 66 Fed. 265.

Discharge of obligation. The obligation may be discharged by acts of the principal or by acts of the creditor. Payment, or tender of payment, by the one, and any act which would deprive the creditor of remedies which in case of default would enure to the benefit of the surety, are instances of discharge. In the first place, a payment by the debtor would of course operate to discharge the liability. The only questions which can arise upon this point are, whether the payment is applicable to the payment in question, and as to the amount. Upon the first of these, this contract is governed by the general rule that the debtor can apply his payment to any debt he chooses. The surety has no power to modify or direct the application, but is bound by the election of the principal; 2 Bingham, N. C. 7. If no such election is made by the debtor, the creditor may apply the payment to whichever debt he sees fit; Brewer v. Knapp, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 336. This power, however, only applies to voluntary payments, and not to payments made by process of law; Blackstone Bank v. Hill, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 129. A surety on a promissory note is discharged by its payment, and the note cannot be again put in circulation; Chapman v. Collins, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 163; so, also, extension of time by the holder of a note at the request of one maker without the knowledge of the other who signed as a surety, releases the latter though the holder did not know of the relation between the two makers at the time the note was given; Scott v. Scruggs, 60 Fed. 721, 9 C. C. A. 246, 23 U. S. App. 280.

Where one of two sureties to a contract assented to a change which altered his liability to his prejudice, it was held that the other surety was released but the former was bound for the whole liability; Mundy v. Stevens, 61 Fed. 77, 9 C. C. A. 366, 17 U. S. App. 442, 463. Whatever will discharge the surety in equity will be a defence at law; People v. Jansen, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 337, 5 Am. Dec. 275; Boston Hat Manufactory v. Messinger, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 223.

A release of the principal debtor operates as a discharge of the surety; [1893] A. C. 313; though the converse is not true; Bridges v. Phillips, 17 Tex. 128; [1893] App. Cas. 313; Trotter v. Strong, 63 Ill. 272; unless the obligation is such that the liability is joint only, and cannot be severed. But if the creditor, when releasing the principal, reserves his remedies against the surety, the latter is not discharged; L. R. 7 C. P. 9; 4

Ch. App. Cas. 204; and "a creditor who is fully indemnified is not discharged by the release of the principal." Brandt, Sur. & Guar. § 147. The release of one of several sureties is said to release the others only so far as the one released would have been liable for contribution to the co-sureties; Jemison v. Governor of Ala., 47 Ala. 390; but see Starry v. Johnson, 32 Ind. 438. Other cases hold such a release to be a discharge of the co-sureties; Stockton v. Stockton, 40 Ind. 225; Towns v. Riddle, 2 Ala. 694. When the discharge of one surety varies the contract; Mitchell v. Burton, 2 Head. (Tenn.) 613; or increases the risk of the co-sureties, they are released also.

Fraud or alteration avoids a contract of suretyship. Fraud may be by the creditor's misrepresentation or concealment of facts. Unless, however, the contract between the debtor and creditor is unusual, the surety must ask for information; 12 Cl. & F. 109; Warren v. Branch, 15 W. Va. 21. The creditor has been held bound to inform a surety of debtor's previous default; Rheem v. Wheel Co., 33 Pa. 358; L. R. 7 Q. B. 666; contra, 21 W. R. 439; Roper v. Trustees of Lodge, 91 Ill. 518, 33 Am. Rep. 60; though not of his mere indebtedness; 17 C. B. (N. S.) 482. But to accept a surety relying on the belief that there are no unusual circumstances increasing his risk, knowing that there are such, and neglecting to communicate them, is fraud; Franklin Bank v. Cooper, 36 Me. 179; Hubbard v. Briggs, 31 N. Y. 518. The fraud must be practised on the surety; Evans v. Keeland, 9 Ala. 42. The forgery of the signature of a surety on a constable's bond will release another surety, signing the same upon the representation that such signature is genuine; Cornell v. People, 37 Ill. App. 490.

Sureties for a corporation which has succeeded to the rights of a party who contracted under seal, can not avoid liability on the ground that the original contract was secured by fraudulent representations; Elliott v. Brady, 192 N. Y. 221, 85 N. E. 69, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 600, 127 Am. St. Rep. 898.

Any material alteration in the contract without the assent of the surety, or change in the circumstances, will discharge the surety; even though trivial, or to the advantage of the surety; Prairie State Bank v. U. S., 164 U. S. 238, 17 Sup. Ct. 142, 41 L. Ed. 412; 3 B. & C. 605. Such are the cases where the sureties on a bond for faithful performance are released by a change in the employment or office of the principal; 6 C. B. (N. S.) 550. But it seems that an alteration by the legislature in an official's duties will not discharge surety as long as they are appropriate to his office; People v. Vilas, 36 N. Y. 459, 93 Am. Dec. 520. If the principal and obligee change the terms of the obligation without the consent of the surety, the latter is discharged; Miller v. Stewart, 4 Wash. C. C. 26, Fed. Cas. No. 9,591. A change in the amounts of payments to be made under the principal contract releases the surety who had no knowledge of the change and did not consent; Mundy v. Stevens, 61 Fed. 77, 9 C. C. A. 366.

Any material alteration of the contract guaranteed, without the consent of the surety, discharges him; American Bonding Co. v. Inv. Co., 150 Fed. 17; U. S. v. Freel, 186 U. S. 309, 22 Sup. Ct. 875, 46 L. Ed. 1177; contra, Prescott Nat. Bank v. Head, 11 Ariz. 213, 90 Pac. 328, 21 Ann. Cas. 990. Where the contract provided that changes may be made in plans and specifications by written agreement of the parties, the surety is not so discharged by modifications agreed upon which are not so extensive as radically to change the contract and substitute a different one; U. S. v. Walsh, 115 Fed. 697, 52 C. C. A. 419. Where the changes are not indorsed upon the contract as provided, the surety will be released; Loneragan v. Trust Co., 101 Tex. 63, 104 S. W. 1061; 106 S. W. 876, 129 Am. St. Rep. 803. In Erfurth v. Stevenson, 71 Ark. 199, 72 S. W. 49, it was held that a material change, consented to by the principal and the builder, discharged the surety.

If the creditor, without the assent of the surety, gives time to the principal, the surety is discharged; 3 Y. & C. 187; 2 B. & P. 61. So where he agrees with the principal to give time to the surety; L. R. 7 Ch. App. 142. But not if without consideration; Kriz v. Pokrok, 46 Ill. App. 418; Gordon v. Bank, 144 U. S. 97, 12 Sup. Ct. 657, 36 L. Ed. 360; nor does the reducing the rate of interest on a debt and allowing it to run along after maturity on payment of interest, without any binding contract for an extension for a definite time; Field v. Brokaw, 148 Ill. 654, 37 N. E. 80. And not where a creditor reserves his rights against the surety; 16 M. & W. 128; 4 H. L. C. 997. The rule applies where a state is a creditor; Braswell v. Gay, 75 N. C. 515.

A surety may file a bill in equity to enjoin the collection of a note where time has been given to the real principal; Grier v. Flitcraft, 57 N. J. Eq. 556, 41 Atl. 425. The surety is usually discharged where an extension is given to the principal debtor; Fanning v. Murphy, 126 Wis. 538, 105 N. W. 1056, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 666, 110 Am. St. Rep. 946, 5 Ann. Cas. 435; but a mere extension by an attorney who is charged with the collection of a note, will not release the surety thereon, if no security is thereby lost; Hall v. Presnell, 157 N. C. 290, 72 S. E. 985, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 62, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1293; and an administrator has no authority to give time on a note executed by his intestate, so as to release the sureties thereon; Davies County Bank & T. Co. v. Wright, 129 Ky. 21, 110 S. W. 361, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1122. Where the surety is a joint maker of a note, although known to be a surety to the payee, he is not discharged by the extension of time to the principal debtor; Vanderford v. Bank, 105 Md. 164, 66 Atl. 47, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 129; Richards v. Bank, 81 Ohio 348, 90 N. E. 1000, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 99. A provision for stay of execution in a judgment for overdue rent will not release the lessee's surety if the extension of time is not beyond the time in which execution could have been legally obtained; Bothfeld v. Gordon, 190 Mass. 567, 77 N. E. 639, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 764, 112 Am. St. Rep. 341, 5 Ann. Cas. 642.

The contract must be effectual, binding the creditor as well as the debtor; and it is not enough that the creditor merely forbears to press the debtor; Horne v. Bodwell, 5 Gray (Mass.) 457; Kirby v. Studebaker, 15 Ind. 45. See, also, 9 Cl. & F. 45; Forbes v. Sheppard, 98 N. C. 111, 3 S. E. 817; Stuart v. Lancaster, 84 Va. 772, 6 S. E. 139; Uniontown Bank v. Mackey, 140 U. S. 220, 11 Sup. Ct. 844, 35 L. Ed. 485. Mere forbearance or delay of a creditor in enforcing his rights against the principal does not release the surety, who may, if he chooses, pay the debt, and, becoming subrogated to the creditor's rights, control the claim to his own satisfaction; Purdy v. Forstall, 45 La. Ann. 814, 13 South. 95.

Delay short of the limitation period in enforcing payment of a bond will not release the sureties from liability thereon; Clinton County v. Smith, 238 Mo. 118, 141 S. W. 1091, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 272.

The receipt of interest on a promissory note, after the note is overdue, is not sufficient to discharge the surety; 6 Gray 319; nor is taking another bond, as collateral security to the original, having a longer time to run; Remsen v. Graves, 41 N. Y. 474.

As a requisite to the binding nature of the agreement, it is necessary that there should be some consideration; Grover v. Hoppock, 26 N. J. L. 191; Freeland v. Compton, 30 Miss. 424; a part payment by the principal is held not to be such a consideration; Roberts v. Stewart, 31 Miss. 664. Prepayment of interest is a good consideration; Dubuisson v. Folkes, 30 Miss. 432; but not an agreement to pay usurious interest, where the whole sum paid can be recovered back; Farrell v. Bean, 10 Md. 227; though it would seem to be otherwise if the contract is executed, and the statutes of usury only provide for a recovery of the excess; Armistead v. Ward, 2 Patt. & H. (Va.) 504.

It has been questioned how far the receipt of interest in advance shows an agreement to extend the time: it may undoubtedly be a good consideration for such an agreement, but does not of itself constitute it. At the most it may be said to be prima facie evidence of the agreement; People's Bank v. Pearsons, 30 Vt. 711; 1 Y. & C. 620.

The surety is not discharged if he has given his assent to the extension of the time; Wright v. Storrs, 6 Bosw. (N. Y.) 600. Such assent by one surety does not bind his co-surety; Crosby v. Wyatt, 10 N. H. 318; and subsequent assent given by the surety without new consideration, after he has been discharged by a valid agreement for delay, will not bind him; Merrimack County Bank v. Brown, 12 N. H. 320. He need not show notice to the creditor of his dissent; Riggins' Ex'rs v. Brown, 12 Ga. 271.

Where one surety consents to a change in the original contract and the other does not, the former is bound and the latter is not; Mundy v. Stevens, 61 Fed. 77, 9 C. C. A. 366.

The burden of showing a surety's consent to an alteration in the contract is on the plaintiff, when set up by him; Mundy v. Stevens, 61 Fed. 77, 9 C. C. A. 366.

Where an execution against a principal is not levied, or a levy is postponed without the consent of the surety, he is discharged from his liability as surety, unless he has property of the principal in his hands at the time; if he has property in his hands liable for the principal's debts, the creditors of the principal may insist on an application of the property to the payment of their debts; Glass v. Thompson, 9 B. Monr. (Ky.) 235. A creditor must not only fail, but negligently fail, to enforce a lien, in order to exonerate sureties; Mingus v. Daugherty, 87 Ia. 56, 54 N. W. 66, 43 Am. St. Rep. 354. Marriage of the principal and creditor discharges the surety, destroying the right of action; Govan v. Moore, 30 Ark. 667.

If the creditor releases any security which he holds against the debtor, the surety will be discharged; Com. v. Vanderslice, 8 S. & R. (Pa.) 452; Allen v. O'Donald, 23 Fed. 573; Sample v. Cochran, 84 Ind. 594; but if the security only covers a part of the debt, it would seem that the surety will be released only pro tanto; Appeal of Neff, 9 W. & S. (Pa.) 36; Guild v. Butler, 127 Mass. 386; so of an execution levied and afterwards relinquished; the surety is discharged to the extent to which he has been injured; Winston v. Yeargin, 50 Ala. 340; but the surety is not discharged unless he is injured by the release of the levy; Iglehart v. State, 2 G. & J. (Md.) 243; Stephens v. Bank, 88 Pa. 157, 32 Am. Rep. 438. Nor will it matter if the security is received after the contract is made; Brandt, Sur. & Guar. § 426; contra, 1 Drewry 333. A creditor who has the personal contract of his debtor, with a surety, and has also or takes afterwards property from the principal as a pledge or security for his debt, is to hold the property fairly and impartially for the benefit of the surety as well as himself, and if he parts with it without the knowledge or against the will of the surety he shall lose his claim against the surety to the amount of the property so surrendered, in equity; Springer v. Toothaker, 43 Me. 381, 69 Am. Dec. 66; Hays v. Ward, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 129, 8 Am. Dec. 554; or at law; Com. v. Vanderslice, 8 S. & R. (Pa.) 457. The fact that other security, as good as, or better than, that surrendered, was substituted for it, will not preclude the surety from availing himself of the discharge; New-Hampshire Savings Bank v. Colcord, 15 N. H. 119, 41 Am. Dec. 685; Kirkpatrick v. Howk, 80 Ill. 122.

A creditor who has given up a lien on the debtor's property must prove that the surety was not injured thereby; Allen v. O'Donald, 23 Fed. 573. If the relinquishment of the lien materially alters the contract, the surety is wholly discharged; 1 Q. B. Div. 669; when the creditor has, by way of compromise, given up a lien of doubtful validity, and applied the money received, as far as it would go, in payment of the principal debt, the creditor must show that an attempt to realize on the property against which the lien existed would have been successful; Bedwell v. Gephart, 67 Ia. 44, 24 N. W. 585. But a creditor is not under any obligation to take active steps to obtain a lien by execution. Generally, where a creditor has, by negligence, lost security held by him for the debt or undertaking, the surety is discharged. In some cases he has been held to diligence in realizing on such security; in other cases his inaction has been held not to discharge the surety; Brandt, Sur. & Guar. § 440.

But a surety is not discharged by the fact that the creditor has released or compounded with his co-surety; much less if his co-surety has been released by process of law. The only effect of such a release or composition is that the surety is then not liable for the proportion which would properly fall on his co-surety; 6 Ves. 605. This at least is the doctrine in equity; although it may be questioned whether it would apply at law where the obligation is joint; 4 Ad. & E. 675.

But if the obligation is joint and several, a surety is not released from his proportion by such discharge of his co-surety; Klingensmith v. Klingensmith's Ex'r, 31 Pa. 460.

The death of a surety on a bond conditioned for the repayment of advances to the principal does not terminate the liability, and his estate is liable for advances made after his death; Hecht v. Weaver, 34 Fed. 111.

Rights of surety against principal. Until default, the surety has, in general, no rights against the principal, except the passive right to be discharged from the obligation on the conditions stated before. But after default on the part of the principal, and before the surety is called upon to pay, the latter has a remedy against the further continuance of the obligation, and he cannot in all cases compel the creditor to proceed against the debtor; but the English courts of equity allow him to bring a bill against the debtor, requiring the latter to exonerate him; 2 Bro. C. C. 579.

A co-surety has a right in equity to compel the principal debtor to relieve him from liability by paying off the debt; [1909] 2 Ch. 401. A bill quia timet by a surety against his principal will not lie until the debt or liability has become due or ascertained, or the risk of loss has become imminent; 22 Ch. D. 561. In L. R. 6 Eq. 410, it was held that a surety, though he had not paid anything, could maintain a bill for payment of the debt and for indemnity.

A surety for a debt which the creditor neglects or refuses to enforce by proper proceedings for that purpose, may, by bill in equity, bring both debtor and creditor before the court, and have a decree to compel the debtor to make payment and discharge the surety; Hannay v. Pell, 3 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 432; and in courts having full equity powers there can be no doubt of the right of a surety, after a debt has become due, to file a bill to compel the principal debtor to pay, whether the surety has himself been sued or not; Hays v. Ward, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 123, 8 Am. Dec. 554; Moore v. Topliff, 107 Ill. 241; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Little, 41 N. J. Eq. 519, 7 Atl. 356. Where there is an accrued debt and the surety's liability is admitted, he has a right to compel the principal to relieve him, by paying off his debt. In sustaining such an action he need not prove that the creditor has refused to sue the principal debtor; 31 L. R. Ir. 181.

The surety, after payment of the debt, may recover the amount so paid of the principal, the process varying according to the practice of different courts; 2 Term 104; Howe v. Ward, 4 Me. (Greenl.) 200; Bonham v. Galloway, 13 Ill. 68. A promise to pay the surety is implied, where there is no express promise; Martin v. Ellerbe's Adm'r, 70 Ala. 326; and assumpsit will lie; 6 M. & W. 153. But before a surety can recover of his principal because of his suretyship, he must have first paid the debt of his principal or some part of it; Minick v. Huff, 41 Neb. 516, 59 N. W. 795. But he may pay the debt before it is due, without the request of the principal, and, after it is due, sue the principal; Ross v. Menefee, 125 Ind. 432, 25 N. E. 545.

And such payment refers back to the original undertaking, and overrides all intermediate equities, as of the assignee of a claim against the surety assigned by the principal before payment; Barney v. Grover, 28 Vt. 391.

The payment must not be voluntary, or made in such a manner as to constitute a purchase; for the surety, by purchasing the claim, would take the title of the creditor, and must claim under that. By an involuntary payment is intended only a payment of a claim against which the surety cannot defend. It is not necessary that a suit should be brought. But a surety who pays money on a claim which is absolutely barred has no remedy against the principal; Randolph's Adm'r v. Randolph, 3 Rand. (Va.) 490.

A surety, having in his hands funds or securities of the principal, may apply them to the discharge of the debt; McKnight v. Bradley, 10 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 557; but where the fund is held by one of two sureties he must share the benefit of it with his co-surety; Leary v. Cheshire, 56 N. C. 170; Whipple v. Briggs, 28 Vt. 65. But a surety who has security for his liability may sue the principal on his implied promise, unless it was agreed that he should look to the security only; Cornwall v. Gould, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 444. A surety need not account to his co-surety for the simple indebtedness by himself to the principal; Davis v. Toulmin, 77 N. Y. 280.

Payment of a note by a surety by giving a new note is sufficient payment, even if the new note has not been paid when the suit is commenced; Chandler v. Brainard, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 280; Pearson v. Parker, 3 N. H. 366, contra, where judgment had been rendered against the surety; Sangston v. Gaither, 3 Md. 47; or by conveyance of land; Brown v. Dutton, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 213.

If the surety pays too much by mistake, he can recover only the correct amount of the principal; 1 Dane, Abr. 197. If a surety discharges his obligation for a less sum than its full amount, he can only claim against the principal the actual sum paid; Price v. Horton, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 526, 23 S. W. 501; with interest; Bushong v. Taylor, 82 Mo. 660; and costs; Feamster v. Withrow, 12 W. Va. 611.

Extraordinary expenses of the surety, which might have been avoided by payment of the money, or remote and unexpected consequences, are never considered as coming within the contract; Hayden v. Cabot, 17 Mass. 169; Wynn v. Brooke, 5 Rawle (Pa.) 106. Costs incurred and paid by the surety in litigating in good faith the claim of the creditor can be recovered of the principal; Downer v. Baxter, 30 Vt. 467; Elwood v. Deifendorf, 5 Barb. (N. Y.) 398; but not so if the litigation is in bad faith; Holmes v. Weed, 24 Barb. (N. Y.) 546; Cranmer v. McSwords, 26 W. Va. 412; or where the surety, being indemnified for his liability, incurred expenses in defending a suit contrary to the expressed wishes of the principal, and after being notified by him that there was no defence to such action; Beckley v. Munson, 22 Conn. 299. A surety cannot recover indirect or consequential damages from the principal; Brandt, Sur. & Guar. § 213; or damages for the sacrifice of his property; Vance v. Lancaster, 3 Hayw. (Tenn.) 130, or for his failure in business due to his incurring the liability in question; Hayden v. Cabot, 17 Mass. 169.

Joint sureties who pay the debt of the principal may sue jointly for reimbursement;

Appleton v. Bascom, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 169; Thomas v. Carter, 63 Vt. 609, 22 Atl. 720, 14 L. R. A. 82; and if each surety has paid a moiety of the debt, they have several rights of action against the principal; Peabody v. Chapman, 20 N. H. 418.

Bail. "When bail is given, the principal is regarded as delivered to the custody of his sureties. Their dominion is a continuance of the original imprisonment. Whenever they choose to do so, they may seize him and deliver him up in their discharge, and if that cannot be done at once they may imprison him until it can be done. They may exercise their rights in person or by an agent. They may pursue him into another state, arrest him on the Sabbath, and, if necessary, may break and enter his house for that purpose." Taylor v. Taintor, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 371, 21 L. Ed. 287; In re Von Der Ahe, 85 Fed. 959.

Rights of surety against creditor. It is not quite clear whether a surety can enforce any remedies on the part of the creditor before actual payment by the surety; and, of course, as connected with this, what is the effect of a request by the surety to the creditor to proceed against the debtor, and neglect or refusal to comply by the creditor. The objection to discharging the surety on account of such neglect is the fact that the surety may pay the debt and at once become subrogated to all the rights of the creditor; Mitchell v. Williamson, 6 Md. 210. But where there are courts in the exercise of full equity powers, the surety may insure a prompt prosecution either by discharging the obligation and becoming by substitution entitled to all the remedies possessed by the creditor, or he may by bill coerce the creditor to proceed; King v. Baldwin, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 554; In re Babcock, 3 Sto. 393, Fed. Cas. No. 696; though in the latter case he would probably be required to indemnify the creditor against the consequences of risk, delay, and expense; Whitridge v. Durkee's Ex'rs, 2 Md. Ch. 442. The same indemnity would in general be required where a request is made; but it has been held that a simple request to sue the principal debtor, without a tender of expenses, or a stipulation to pay them, or an offer to take the obligation and bring suit, is sufficient to discharge the surety, unless the creditor at the time of the notice expressly puts his refusal to sue on the ground of the trouble and expense, and offers to proceed if that objection be removed; Wetzel v. Sponsler's Ex'rs, 18 Pa. 460. A creditor is not bound to make use of active diligence against a principal debtor on the mere request of a surety; Taylor v. Beck, 13 Ill. 376. There must be an express declaration by the surety that he would otherwise hold himself discharged; Baker v. Kellogg, 29 Ohio St. 663; Fidler v. Hershey, 90 Pa. 363.

There is a line of cases which hold that if the surety, after the principal debt is due, calls upon the creditor to bring suit against the principal who is then solvent, and the creditor fails to do so, and the principal becomes insolvent, the surety is discharged; Brandt, Sur. & Guar. § 239; King v. Baldwin, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 386, 8 Am. Dec. 415; Cope v. Smith, 8 S. & R. (Pa.) 110, 11 Am. Dec. 582; Martin v. Skehan, 2 Colo. 614. So where the creditor has sufficient mortgage security, and, after request to sue and refusal, the property depreciates in value; Remsen v. Beekman, 25 N. Y. 552. The request to sue must be clear and distinct; Brandt, Sur. & Guar. § 240; and must be made after the debt matures; Hellen v. Crawford, 44 Pa. 105, 84 Am. Dec. 421. That such request must be in writing, see Petty v. Douglass, 76 Mo. 70. The great majority of cases hold that the surety cannot be discharged by a request to the creditor to sue, etc.; Brandt, Sur. & Guar. § 242; Gage v. Bank, 79 Ill. 62; Huff v. Slife, 25 Neb. 448, 41 N. W. 289, 13 Am. St. Rep. 497; Dennis v. Rider, 2 McLean 451, Fed. Cas. No. 3,797.

In Wilds v. Attix, 4 Del. Ch. 258, Bates, Ch., reviews the cases and sustains this view. He points out that the contrary decision in King v. Baldwin, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 386, 8 Am. Dec. 415, was made by the casting vote of a lay senator, against the opinion of Kent, C. J., and that, while followed in New York, it has not been favorably regarded even there.

The obligation to see that the debt is paid rests upon the surety and not upon the creditor and the latter owes the former no active diligence; Hier v. Harpster, 76 Kan. 1, 90 Pac. 817, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 204, 13 Ann. Cas. 919. The failure of the holder of a note to present it against the estate of the principal does not discharge a surety thereon; Jackson v. Benson, 54 Ia. 654, 7 N. W. 97; Bull v. Coe, 77 Cal. 57, 18 Pac. 808, 11 Am. St. Rep. 235; so of bonds: Willis v. Chowning, 90 Tex. 617, 40 S. W. 395, 59 Am. St. Rep. 842; Smith v. Smithson, 48 Ark. 261, 3 S. W. 49. The contrary was held in Siebert v. Quesnel, 65 Minn. 107, 67 N. W. 803, 60 Am. St. Rep. 441. The surety on a note cannot exonerate himself by notice to the holder to present it against the principal's estate; Hickam v. Hollingsworth, 17 Mo. 475; Jordan v. Bank, 5 Ga. App. 244, 62 S. E. 1024.

The surety who pays the debt of the principal in full is entitled to have every advantage which the creditor has in pursuing the debtor, and for this purpose may have assignment of the debt, or be subrogated either in law or equity; Gannett v. Blodgett, 39 N. H. 150. Whether the remedy will be by subrogation, or whether the suit must be in the name of the creditor, will depend upon the rules of practice in the different states;

Denny v. Lyon, 38 Pa. 98, 80 Am. Dec. 463. The right of subrogation does not depend upon any contract or request by the principal debtor, but rests upon principles of equity: Mathews v. Aikin, 1 N. Y. 595; Lumpkin v. Mills, 4 Ga. 343; and, though originating in courts of equity, is now fully recognized as a legal right; La Farge v. Herter, 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 159. In equity, payment of a debt by a surety does not extinguish it, but operates as an assignment to the surety, with all the creditor's rights; Beune v. Schnecko, 100 Mo. 250, 13 S. W. 82. A surety may apply to the court by motion to compel the assignment of a judgment against him and his principal on his offer to pay the judgment; Tyler v. Hildreth, 77 Hun 580, 28 N. Y. Supp. 1042.

A surety of a defaulting government contractor who completes the work may sue to recover a balance due his principal in his own name; Hitchcock v. U. S., 27 Ct. Cls. 185.

Rights of surety against co-surety. The co-sureties are bound to contribute equally to the debt they become liable to pay when their undertaking is joint, or joint and several, not separate and successive; McDonald v. Magruder, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 470, 7 L. Ed. 744; but the creditor may recover the whole amount from one surety; Caldwell v. Roberts, 1 Dana (Ky.) 355. To support the right of contribution, it is not necessary that the sureties should be bound by the same instrument: Young v. Shunk, 30 Minn. 503, 16 N. W. 402; 14 Ves. 160. But where two sureties are bound by separate and distinct agreements for distinct amounts, although for equal portions of the same debt, there is no right of contribution between them; McDonald v. Magruder, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 470. The right of contribution rests only on the principle of equity, which courts of law will enforce, that where two persons are subject to a common burden it shall be borne equally between them: Church v. Fire Ins. Co., 66 N. Y. 225; in such cases the law raises an implied promise from the mutual relation of the parties; Warner v. Morrison, 3 Allen (Mass.) 566. If contribution would, as between co-sureties, be inequitable, it will not be awarded; Dennis v. Gillespie, 24 Miss. 581. The right of a surety to seek contribution arises on making payment which discharges the sureties from action; Pass v. Grenada County, 71 Miss. 426, 14 South. 447. Where a surety pays the debt of his principal, he cannot enforce contribution from one who signed simply as his surety; Bulkeley v. House, 62 Conn. 459, 26 Atl. 352, 21 L. R. A. 247.

It is not necessary that the co-sureties should know of the agreements of each other, as the principle of contribution rests only on the equality of the burden, and not on any privity; 2 B. & P. 270; Appeal of Cottrell, 23 Pa. 294; Owen v. McGehee, 61 Ala. 440; but a volunteer is not entitled to contribution; there must be a contract of suretyship; Appeal of Mosier, 56 Pa. 80, 93 Am. Dec. 783. See 22 Am. L. Reg. 529 (a full article).

A surety may compel contribution for the costs and expenses of defending a suit, if the defence were made under such circumstances as to be regarded as prudent; Fletcher v. Jackson, 23 Vt. 581, 56 Am. Dec. 98; see Bright v. Lennon, 83 N. C. 183; Wagen-seller v. Prettyman, 7 Ill. App. 192; this has been held to include attorney fees; Gross v. Davis, 87 Tenn. 226, 11 S. W. 92, 10 Am. St. Rep. 635 (see Acers v. Curtis, 68 Tex. 423, 4 S. W. 551): whether the attorney employed was successful or not; Backus v. Coyne, 45 Mich. 584, 8 N. W. 694. And where the suit is defended at the instance or request of the co-surety, costs would be a subject of contribution, both on equitable grounds and on the implied promise; 1 Mood. & M. 406.

A claim for contribution extends to all securities given to one surety; Ramsey v. Lewis, 30 Barb. (N. Y.) 403. If one of several sureties takes collaterals from the principal, they will enure to the benefit of all; Paulin v. Kaighn, 27 N. J. Law, 503. Where one of several sureties is secured by a mortgage, he is not bound to enforce his mortgage before he pays the debt or has reason to apprehend that he must pay it, unless the mortgagor is wasting the estate; and if the mortgagor be wasting the mortgage property, and the surety secured by the mortgage fails to enforce his rights, he is chargeable, as between himself and his co-sureties, with the fair vendible value of the mortgaged property at a coercive sale; Teeter v. Pierce, 11 B. Monr. (Ky.) 399. The surety in a suit for contribution can recover only the amount which he has actually paid. Any reduction which he has obtained must be regarded as for the benefit of all the co-sureties; Tarr v. Ravenscroft, 12 Gratt. (Va.) 642. And see Lytle's Ex'r v. Pope's Adm'r, 11 B. Monr. (Ky.) 297. But he is not obliged to account for a debt due by him to the principal; Appeal of Leiter, 10 W. N. C. (Pa.) 225.

The right of contribution may be controlled by particular circumstances; thus, where one becomes surety at the request of another, he cannot be called on to contribute by the person at whose request he entered into the security; Cutter v. Emery, 37 N. H. 567.

One of several co-sureties cannot obtain contribution against the others until he has actually paid more than his own share, but he is entitled to a declaration of his right to contribution, and to a prospective order that on paying his own share he shall be indemnified against further liability; [1893] 2 Ch. 514.

The relation between co-sureties may be shown by parol evidence; Barry v. Ransom, 12 N. Y. 462; Harshman v. Armstrong, 43 Ind. 126; Camp v. Simmons, 62 Ga. 73.

A surety who is fully indemnified by his principal cannot recover contribution from his co-surety for money paid by him, but must indemnify himself out of the means placed in his hands; Morrison v. Taylor, 21 Ala. 779, n. A co-surety has the same responsibility for keeping alive securities in favor of his co-surety, from whom he claims contribution, as a creditor has on behalf of sureties; 8 J. & Sp. 424. Ordinarily any indemnity, by way of a lien on property, obtained by one surety, after he became such, enures to the benefit of all, and if he lose it by his neglect, it bars contribution. See Brandt, Sur. & Guar. § 271.

The remedy for contribution may be either in equity or at law. The result reached is the same, with one important exception: in the case of the insolvency of one of the sureties. In such cases the law takes no notice of the insolvency, but awards the paying surety his due proportion as if all were solvent. But equity does not regard the insolvent surety, but awards contribution as if he had never existed; Acers v. Curtis, 68 Tex. 423, 4 S. W. 551; Morrison v. Poyntz, 7 Dana (Ky.) 307, 32 Am. Dec. 92; 6 B. & C. 689. One surety cannot by injunction arrest the proceedings at law of his co-surety against him for contribution unless he tenders the principal and interest due such co-surety, who has paid the principal, or alleges that he is ready and willing to bring the same into court to be paid to him as a condition of the court's interference; Craig v. Ankeney, 4 Gill (Md.) 225. Where surety has been compelled to pay the debt of his principal, and one of his co-sureties is out of the jurisdiction of the court, and others are within it, the surety who has paid is at liberty to proceed in a suit in equity for contribution against those co-sureties only who are within the jurisdiction, by stating the fact in his bill, and the defendants will be required to make contribution without regard to the share of the absent co-surety; Liddell v. Wiswell, 59 Vt. 365, 8 Atl. 680; Jones v. Blanton, 41 N. C. 115, 51 Am. Dec. 415. See, generally, 1 Lead. Cas. Eq. *100. A bill in equity will lie, by one surety against a co-surety, before the principal debt is paid, to compel him to contribute. A surety who consents to the creditor's giving time to the principal loses his right of contribution as against one who does not consent; Brown v. McDonald, 8 Yerg. (Tenn.) 158, 29 Am. Dec. 112. In equity, in proceeding for contribution, it must be shown that the principal is insolvent; Daniel v. Ballard, 2 Dana (Ky.) 296; but not at law; Buckner's Adm'r v. Stewart, 34 Ala. 529; Rankin v. Collins, 50 Ind. 158; contra, Morrison v. Poyntz, 7 Dana (Ky.) 307, 32 Am. Dec. 92; Leak v. Covington, 99 (N. C.) 559, 6 S. E. 241.

The statute of limitations does not run as against a surety claiming contribution until his own liability is ascertained; [1893] 2 Ch. 514. It runs against partial payments on the debt, from the time he pays the creditor more than his proportion of the debt; Bushnell v. Bushnell, 77 Wis. 435, 46 N. W. 442, 9 L. R. A. 411.

Litigants and their sureties are subject to the power of the sovereign to extend the right of review and appeal pending litigation; William W. Bierce v. Waterhouse, 219 U. S. 320, 31 Sup. Ct. 241, 55 L. Ed. 237.

The surety on a bond in judicial proceedings is represented therein by his principal and becomes responsible, to the amount of the penalty, for amendments allowed by the court which do not introduce new causes of action; William U. Bierce v. Waterhouse, 219 U. S. 320, 31 Sup. Ct. 241, 55 L. Ed. 237.

Conflict of laws. The contract of suretyship, like other contracts, is governed by the lex loci contractus; but the locus is not necessarily the same as that of the principal contract. Thus, the contract made by the indorser of a note is, not to pay the note where it is payable, but that if not paid there he will pay it at the place where the indorsement is made; Hicks v. Brown, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 142; Prentiss v. Savage, 13 Mass. 20. The lex loci applies as well to the interest as to the principal amount. A question has been made in the case of bonds for faithful performance given by public officers; and in these it has been held that the place of performance is to be regarded as the place of making the contract, and sureties are bound as if they made the contract at the seat of the government to which the bonds are given. And under this rule the obligation of all on the bond is governed by the same law, although the principal and sureties may sign in different states; Cox v. U. S., 6 Pet. (U. S.) 172, 8 L. Ed. 359. A letter of guaranty written in the United States and addressed to a person in England must be construed according to the laws of England; Bell v. Bruen, 1 How. (U. S.) 169, 11 L. Ed. 85.

SURFACE WATERS. Waters of a casual and vagrant character, which ooze through the soil or diffuse or squander themselves over the surface, following no definite course. Schaefer v. Marthaler, 34 Minn. 489, 26 N. W. 726, 57 Am. Rep. 73. They are waters which, though customarily and naturally flowing in a known direction and course, have nevertheless no banks or channel in the soil; and include waters which are diffused over the surface of the ground and are derived from rains and melting snows, occasional outbursts of water which in time of freshet or melting of snows descended from the mountains and inundate the country, and the moisture of wet, spongy, springy, or boggy ground. See Lessard v. Stram, 62 Wis. 114, 22 N. W. 284, 51 Am. Rep. 715; Macomber v. Godfrey, 108 Mass. 221, 11 Am. Rep. 349; Barkley v. Wilcox, 86 N. Y. 147, 40 Am. Rep. 519.

Waters that over-flow and continue in a general course back into the regular water course from which they started, or into another water course, do not become surface waters. Jefferson v. Hicks, 23 Okl. 684, 102 Pac. 79, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 214.

Where water, whether coming from springs or rains or melting snows, has flowed over lands of the complainant, in a well-defined channel, for a period of time so long that the memory of men runneth not to the contrary, to and upon lands of an adjoining proprietor, the court will, by its mandatory injunction, require such adjoining proprietor to remove any obstruction placed upon his lands to prevent such water from flowing to and over his lands; Schnitzius v. Bailey, 48 N. J. Eq. 409, 22 Atl. 732. The natural flowage of water from an upper estate to a lower one is a servitude which the owner of the latter must bear, though the flowage be not in a natural water course with well-defined banks; Leidlein v. Meyer, 95 Mich. 586, 55 N. W. 367; Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Groves, 20 Okl. 101, 93 Pac. 755, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 802.

Overflow from a river in time of high water is surface water; Jean v. Pennsylvania Co., 9 Ind. App. 56, 36 N. E. 159; but the superabundant waters of a river at times of ordinary floods, spreading beyond its banks, but forming one body and flowing within their accustomed boundaries in such floods, are not surface waters which a riparian owner may turn off as he will; Cairo, V. & C. R. Co. v. Brevoort, 62 Fed. 129, 25 L. R. A. 527. In agricultural land the natural flow of water from lands of a higher upon those of a lower level cannot be made the subject of an action of damages; but a different rule applies in towns and cities; Bentz v. Armstrong, 8 W. & S. (Pa.) 40, 42 Am. Dec. 265; McMahon v. Thornton, 5 Super. Ct. Pa. 495.

The owner of the dominant estate is not liable for the hastening of the surface water therefrom, although, it results in the wearing of ditches in the servient estate; Pohlman v. R. Co., 131 Ia. 89, 107 N. W. 1025, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 146; he may increase the volume and accelerate the flow without incurring liability for damages to owners of lower land; Mason v. Com'rs Fulton Co., 80 Ohio 151, 88 N. E. 401, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 903, 131 Am. St. Rep. 689. If the owner of the lower property could in the exercise of ordinary care, protect it, he cannot recover damage for injury by surface waters; L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Moore, 31 Ky. L. Rep. 141, 101 S. W. 934, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 579. If the upper proprietor, in the interest of good husbandry and without negligence, collects surface water in a ditch and allows it to flow in the natural course of drainage to the lands of his neighbors, he is not liable therefor; Flesner v. Steinbruck, 89 Neb. 129, 130 N. W. 1040, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1055. The owner of a city property may protect it from surface water flowing from adjacent land, even to the extent of closing a drain which he discovers to be injurious to his land, and he incurs no liability to the owners of adjacent lands by injury caused by the water backing upon them; Levy v. Nash, 87 Ark. 41, 112 S. W. 173, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 155. Where a highway was being repaired and culverts were closed through which surface waters naturally drained and surface water thereby accumulated in large quantities upon the property of the dominant estate, the owners thereof are liable for casting it in a body on to the lower land; Martin v. Schwertley, 155 Ia. 347, 136 N. W. 218, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 160.

See SUBTERRANEAN WATERS; WATERS.

SURGEON. One who applies the principles of the healing art to external diseases or injuries, or to internal injuries or malformations, requiring manual or instrumental intervention. One who practises surgery.

This definition is imperfect, it being impossible to define the term surgeon or surgery. The term surgery, or chirurgery, comes from two Greek words signifying the hand and work, meaning a manual procedure by means of instruments, or otherwise, in the healing of injuries and the cure of disease. The practice of medicine, in contradistinction to the practice of surgery, denotes the treatment of disease by the administration of drugs or other sanative substances. There cannot be a complete separation between the practice of medicine and surgery, as they are developed by modern science, and understood by the most learned in the two professions; the principles of both are the same throughout, and no one is qualified to practise either who does not properly understand the fundamental principles of both.

The general principles of law defining the civil responsibilities of physicians and surgeons are the same as those that apply to and govern the conduct of lawyers, shipbuilders, and other classes of men whose employment requires them to transact business demanding special skill and knowledge; Leighton v. Sargent, 27 N. H. 468, 59 Am. Dec. 388; Whart. & Stille, Med. Jur. 750.

See PHYSICIAN.

SURMISE. In Ecclesiastical Law. An allegation in a libel. Phill. Ecc. Law 1445. Formerly where a defendant pleaded a local custom it was necessary for him to surmise, that is to suggest, that such custom should be certified to the court by the mouth of the reporter. Without such a surmise the issue was to be tried by the country as other issues of fact. 1 Burr. 251.

SURNAME. A name which is added to the Christian name. In modern times these have become family names. They are called surnames, because originally they were written over the name in judicial writings and contracts. See NAME.

SURPLUS. That which is left from a fund which has been appropriated for a particular purpose; the remainder of a thing; the overplus; the residue. See 18 Ves. 466. It has an appropriate application to personal property or money, but, when used in a will, may include real estate; Byrnes v. Baer, 86 N. Y. 210. See SAVINGS BANKS; RESERVE.

Whether a policy holder in a life insurance company shall participate in the surplus rests in the discretion of the officers as to what amount shall be distributed and when; Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Brown, 213 U. S. 25, 29 Sup. Ct. 404, 53 L. Ed. 682.

A policy which permits participation in surplus earnings is (in the absence of wrongdoing or mistake) entitled only to a distribution according to the method adopted by the company and not to his share of the entire surplus; Greeff v. Life Assur. Soc., 160 N. Y. 19, 54 N. E. 712, 46 L. R. A. 288, 73 Am. St. Rep. 659.

The fact that stockholders claim the surplus of an insurance company, and the officers of the company do not actively deny the claim, gives no ground for a receivership at the suit of a policy holder claiming that the surplus belongs to the policy holders; Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Brown, 213 U. S. 25, 29 Sup. Ct. 404, 53 L. Ed. 682. See PROFITS.

SURPLUSAGE. In Accounts. A greater disbursement than the charges amount to. A balance over. 1 Lew. 219.

In Pleading. Allegations of matter wholly foreign and impertinent to the cause. All matter beyond the circumstances necessary to constitute the action is surplusage; 5 East 275; Allaire v. Ouland, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 52; Kottwitz v. Bagby, 16 Tex. 656. Generally, matter of surplusage will be rejected and will not be allowed to vitiate the pleading; Co. Litt. 303 b; 2 Saund. 306, n. 14; Thomas v. Ropsa, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 462; Brown v. Manter, 21 N. H. 535, 53 Am. Dec. 223; as new and needless matter stated in an innuendo; Thomas v. Crowell, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 272, 5 Am. Dec. 269; even if repugnant to what precedes; 10 East 142; but if it shows that the plaintiff has no cause of action, a demurrer will lie; 2 East 451; 2 W. Bla. 842; Wilson v. Codman's Ex'r, 3 Cra. (U. S.) 193, 2 L. Ed. 408. Where the whole of an allegation is immaterial to the plaintiff's right of action, it may be struck out as surplusage; U. S. v. Burnham, 1 Mas. 57, Fed. Cas. No. 14,690. Matter laid under a videlicet, inconsistent with what precedes, may be rejected as surplusage; Vail v. Lewis, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 450, 4 Am. Dec. 300; and when the unnecessary matter is so connected with what is material that it cannot be separated, the whole matter may be included in the traverse; Dy. 365; 2 Saund. 206 a, n. 21; and the whole must be proved as laid; Adm'rs of Conn v. Ex'rs of Gano, 1 Ohio 483, 13 Am. Dec. 639; Steph. Plead. 422; but an averment, which is surplusage and can be stricken out without injury to the rest, will not vitiate a pleading; Hampshire Manufacturers' Bank v. Billings, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 87.

When words occur in a statute which can be given no effect consistent with the plain meaning of the statute they must be rejected as surplusage; U. S. v. Jackson, 143 Fed. 783, 75 C. C. A. 41.

SURPRISE. In Equity Practice. The act by which a party who is entering into a contract is taken unawares, by which sudden confusion or perplexity is created, which renders it proper that a court of equity should relieve the party so surprised. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 120, n.

The situation in which a party is placed without any default of his own, which will be injurious to his interests. Rawle v. Skipwith, 8 Mart. N. S. (La.) 407.

Jeremy, Eq. Jur. 366, 383, note, seems to think that the word surprise is a technical expression, and nearly synonymous with fraud. It is sometimes used in this sense when it is deemed presumptive of, or approaching to, fraud. 1 Fonbl. Eq. 123; 3 Ch. Cas. 56, 74, 103, 114.

Surprise, as a ground for the granting of a rehearing in equity, must be something unexpectedly arising under circumstances which the party was not reasonably called upon to anticipate and which ordinary foresight could not guard against; Anderson Land & Stock Co. v. McConnell, 171 Fed. 475.

In Law. The general rule is that when a party or his counsel is taken by surprise, in a material point or circumstance which could not have been anticipated, and when want of skill, care, or attention cannot be justly imputed, and injustice has been done, a new trial should be granted; Hill, New Tri. 521. Surprise may be good ground for a new trial in criminal as in civil cases; 10 E. L. & E. 105; but in neither case is surprise arising after verdict sufficient to warrant an application to the discretion of the court; 2 Parker 673. Nor will a new trial be granted where the ground of the surprise is evidence which was clearly within the issues presented by the pleadings; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Shearer, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 343, 21 S. W. 133; or unless one made application for a postponement of the trial in order that he might repair the injury done him by the unexpected testimony; Overton v. State, 57 Ark. 60, 20 S. W. 590.

It is not ground for a new trial that a defendant was taken by surprise by the court's calling the attention of the jury to a statute relating to its legal obligation, though, had it foreseen such action, it might have had further evidence on the question of fact; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Voelker, 129 Fed. 522, 65 C. C. A. 226, 70 L. R. A. 264.

See NEW TRIAL; PLEADING.

SURREBUTTER. In Pleading. The plaintiff's answer to the defendant's rebutter. It is governed by the same rules as the replication. See 6 Com. Dig. 185; 7 id. 389.

SURREJOINDER. In Pleading. The plaintiff's answer to the defendant's rejoinder. It is governed in every respect by the same rules as the replication. Steph. Pl. 77; 7 Com. Dig. 389. See PLEADING.

SURRENDER. A yielding up of an estate for life or years to him who has an immediate estate in reversion or remainder, by which the lesser estate is merged in the greater by mutual agreement. Co. Litt. 337 b. See Welcome v. Hess, 90 Cal. 507, 27 Pac. 369, 25 Am. St. Rep. 145.

The deed by which the surrender is made.

A surrender is of a nature directly opposite to a release; for, as the latter operates by the greater estate descending upon the less, the former is the falling of a less estate into a greater, by deed. A surrender immediately divests the estate of the surrenderor, and vests it in the surrenderee, even without the assent of the latter; Shepp. Touchst. 300.

The technical and proper words of this conveyance are, surrender and yield up; but any form of words by which the intention of the parties are sufficiently manifested will operate as a surrender; 1 Term 441; Com. Dig. Surrender (A).

The surrender may be express or implied. The latter is when an estate incompatible with the existing estate is accepted, or the lessee takes a new lease of the same lands; Livingston v. Potts, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 28; 1 B. & Ald. 50. See Beall v. White, 94 U. S. 389, 24 L. Ed. 173; Martin v. Stearns, 52 Ia. 347, 3 N. W. 92; LANDLORD AND TENANT.

To yield; render up. Nolander v. Burns, 48 Minn. 13, 50 N. W. 1016.

SURRENDER OF A PREFERENCE. The surrender by a preferred creditor, to the assignee in bankruptcy, of all that he has received under such preference, as a necessary step, under the bankrupt law, to obtaining a dividend of the estate. In re Richter's Estate, 1 Dill. 544, Fed. Cas. No. 11,803.

The word "as generally defined may denote either compelled or voluntary action"; Kepel v. Bank, 197 U. S. 356, 25 Sup. Ct. 443, 49 L. Ed. 790. In Bankruptcy Act 1898, § 57g, providing that creditors must surrender preferences before having claims allowed, "it is unqualified and generic, and hence embraces both meanings;" id.

SURRENDER OF CRIMINALS. The act by which the public authorities deliver a person accused of a crime, and who is found in their jurisdiction, to the authorities within whose jurisdiction it is alleged the crime has been committed. In England the crown has the option of either surrendering or refusing to surrender a British subject accused of an extradition offence in a foreign country; [1896] 1 Q. B. 230. See EXTRADITION; FUGITIVE FROM JUSTICE.

SURRENDER TO USES OF WILL. Formerly a copyhold interest would not pass by will unless it had been surrendered to the use of the will. By 55 Geo. III. this is no longer necessary; 1 Steph. Com. 639.

SURRENDEREE. One to whom a surrender has been made.

SURRENDEROR. One who makes a surrender; as, when the tenant gives up the estate and cancels his lease before the expiration of the term. One who yields up a freehold estate for the purpose of conveying it.

SURROGATE (Lat. surrogatus, from subrogare, or surrogare, to substitute). In English Law. A deputy or substitute of the chancellor, bishop, ecclesiastical or admiralty judge, appointed by him. He can grant licenses, hold courts, and adjudicate cases, to the same extent and with the same authority as his principal, provided his grant of powers has been coextensive with those possessed by his principal. The office has arisen by usage, but is sanctioned by canon 128, and recognized by statute.

In American Law. A term used in some states to denote the judge to whom jurisdiction of the probate of wills, the grant of administration and of guardianship is confided. In some states he is called surrogate, in others, judge of probate, register, judge of the orphans' court, etc. He is ordinarily a county officer, with a local jurisdiction limited to his county.

SURROGATE'S COURT. In the United States, a state tribunal, with similar jurisdiction to the court of ordinary, court of probate, etc., relating to matters of probate, etc. See 2 Kent 409.

SURVEY. The act by which the quantity of a piece of land is ascertained; the paper containing a statement of the courses, distances, and quantity of land is also called a survey.

A survey made by authority of law, and duly returned into the land office, is a matter of record, and of equal dignity with the patent; Steele's Heirs v. Taylor, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 226, 13 Am. Dec. 151. See Lunt v. Holland, 14 Mass. 149; Kirby v. Lewis, 39 Fed. 66; Harry v. Graham, 18 N. C. 76, 27 Am. Dec. 226; and is not open to any collateral attack in the courts; Russell v. Land Grant Co., 158 U. S. 253, 15 Sup. Ct. 827, 39 L. Ed. 971. Where a survey was made in good faith and has been unchallenged for over fifteen years, whatever doubts may exist as to its correctness must be resolved in favor of the title as patented; U. S. v. Hancock, 133 U. S. 193, 10 Sup. Ct. 264, 33 L. Ed. 601.

In construing maps of official surveys, courts give effect to the meaning expressed by their outlines, as well as by their language; St. Louis v. R. Co., 114 Mo. 13, 21 S. W. 202. The declarations of a dead surveyor, when made on the ground, are competent evidence as to boundaries; so are his field notes, if authenticated otherwise than by his mere declarations; Collins v. Clough, 222 Pa. 472, 71 Atl. 1077, 15 Ann. Cas. 871.

An ancient survey of a manor is admissible evidence of its boundaries; 62 J. P. 661.

By survey is also understood an examination; and in this sense it is constantly employed in insurance and in admiralty law.

SURVEY OF A VESSEL. A public document looked to both by underwriters and owners as affording the means of ascertaining at the time and place the state and condition of the ship and other property at hazard.

SURVEYOR. See DECLARATIONS.

SURVEYOR OF THE PORT. A revenue officer appointed for each of the principal ports of entry, whose duties chiefly concern the importations at his port and the determination of their amount and valuation. U. S. R. S. § 2627.

SURVIVAL OF ACTIONS. See ACTIO PERSONALIS, etc.

SURVIVOR. The longest liver of two or more persons.

There is no presumption of survivorship in the case of those who perish in a common disaster; 8 H. L. C. 183; Young Women's Christian Home v. French, 187 U. S. 401, 23 Sup. Ct. 184, 47 L. Ed. 233. Actual survivorship being unascertainable, descent and distribution take the same course as if the deaths had been simultaneous; id., where a testator gave her property to her only son, but "in the event of my becoming the survivor . . . of my son," then to a charitable home. The mother and the son died in a shipwreck. The will was construed to give the property to the home, on the ground that the intent was that it should take it if the son did not.

The primary meaning of survive is outlive. Where a testator left the residue of his property to trustees in trust to divide it equally between such of the children of A & B "as shall survive me and shall live to attain the age of 21 years on their attaining such an age," it was held that children born during the lifetime of the testator and who were living at his death were alone entitled to share; Knight v. Knight, 14 C. L. R. 86, High Court of Australia 1912.

Under an insurance policy, one who has a prima facie right to the proceeds of the policy necessarily wins; 16 Harv. L. R. 369. In some cases it is held if the insured cannot alter the policy, the beneficiary's interest is vested and his representative prevails; if the policy can be altered the representative of the insured wins. U. S. Casualty Co. v. Kacer, 169 Mo. 301, 69 S. W. 370, 58 L. R. A. 436, 92 Am. St. Rep. 641. The real question, it is said, should be whether the condition that the beneficiary should survive the insured is in form precedent or subsequent. If the former, his representative must prove actual survivorship; if the latter, he need not; 16 Harv. L. R. 368, citing Fuller v. Linzee, 135 Mass. 468; Cowman v. Rogers, 73 Md. 403, 21 Atl. 64, 10 L. R. A. 550.

See DEATH.

In cases of partnership, the surviving partner is entitled to have all the effects of the partnership, and is bound to pay all the debts owing by the firm; Gow, Partn. 157. He is, however, bound to account for the surplus to the representatives of his deceased partners, agreeably to their respective rights. See PARTNERSHIP.

A surviving trustee is generally vested with all the powers of all the trustees, and the surviving administrator is authorized to act for the estate as if he had been sole administrator.

The right of survivorship among joint-tenants has been abolished, except as to estates held in trust in many states. For the statutes, see Demb. Land Tit. 27. See ESTATES OF JOINT-TENANCY. In Connecticut it never existed; 1 Swift, Dig. 102; Washb. R. P.; nor has it ever been recognized in Ohio, Kansas, Nebraska, or Idaho; Demb. Land Tit. 198. As to survivorship among legatees, see 1 Turn. & R. 413; 3 Russ. 217.

SUS' PER COLL'. In English Law. In the English practice, a calendar is made out of attainted criminals, and the judge signs the calendar with their separate judgments in the margin. In the case of a capital felony it is written opposite the prisoner's name, "let him be hanged by the neck," which, when the proceedings were in Latin, was "suspendatur per collum," or, in the abbreviated form, "sus' per coll'." 4 Bla. Com. 403.

SUSPENSE. When a rent, profit à prendre, and the like, are, in consequence of the unity of possession of the rent, etc., of the land out of which they issue, not in esse for a time, they are said to be in suspense, tunc dormiunt; but they may be revived or awakened. Co. Litt. 313 a.

SUSPENSION. A temporary stop of a right, of a law, and the like.

In times of war the right of habeas corpus may be suspended by lawful authority.

The Stock Exchange and many corporations provide for the suspension as well as expulsion of members under certain circumstances; State ex rel. v. Milwaukee Chamber of Com., 47 Wis. 670, 3 N. W. 760; Leech v. Harris, 2 Brews. (Pa.) 571.

See EXPULSION; AMOTION; STOCK EXCHANGE.

Suspension of a right in an estate is a partial extinguishment, or an extinguishment for a time. It differs from an extinguishment in this: a suspended right may be revived; one extinguished is absolutely dead; Bac. Abr. Extinguishment (A).

The suspension of a statute for a limited time operates so as to prevent its operation for the time; but it has not the effect of a repeal; Brown v. Barry, 3 Dall. (U. S.) 365, 1 L. Ed. 638. For plea in suspension, see PLEA; ABATEMENT. Pleas in suspension are not specifically abolished in England by the Judicature Acts, though Ord. xix. rule 13, directs that no plea or defence shall be pleaded in abatement. Moz. & W.

In Ecclesiastical Law. An ecclesiastical censure, by which a spiritual person is either interdicted the exercise of his ecclesiastical function or hindered from receiving the profits of his benefice. It may be partial or total; for a limited time, or forever, when it is called deprivation or amotion. Ayliffe, Parerg. 501.

SUSPENSION OF A RIGHT. The act by which a party is deprived of the exercise of his right for a time.

When a right is suspended by operation of law, the right is revived the moment the bar is removed; but when the right is suspended by the act of the party, it is gone forever. See 1 Rolle, Abr. Extinguishment (L, M).

SUSPENSION OF ARMS. An agreement between belligerents, made for a short time or for a particular place, to cease hostilities between them. See ARMISTICE; TRUCE.

SUSPENSION, PLEAS IN. See PLEAS; SUSPENSION.

SUSPENSIVE CONDITION. One which prevents a contract from going into operation until it has been fulfilled.

SUSPENSORY CONDITIONS. Conditions precedent in a contract which merely suspend the operation of a promise till they are fulfilled. They differ from those conditions precedent the non-fulfilment of which works a breach of the contract. Tiff. Sales 153. See New Orleans v. R. Co., 171 U. S. 312, 18 Sup. Ct. 875, 43 L. Ed. 178.

SUSPICION. The act of suspecting, or the state of being suspected; imagination, generally of something ill; distrust, mistrust, doubt. McCalla v. State, 66 Ga. 348.

SUTLER. One whose employment is to sell provisions and liquor to a camp.

By the articles of war no sutler is permitted to sell any kind of liquor or victuals, or to keep his house or shop open for the entertainment of soldiers, after nine at night, or before the beating of the reveille, or upon Sundays during divine service or sermon, on penalty of being dismissed all future sutling; all sutlers are subject to orders according to the rules and discipline of war.

SUUS HÆRES. See HÆRES.

SUZERAIN (Norman Fr. suz, under, and re or rey, king). A lord who possesses a fief whence other fiefs issue. A tenant in capite or immediately under the king. Note 77 of Butler & Hargrave's notes, Co. Litt. 1. 3.

In International Law. The word has no clear or precise signification. It has been extended to the Mussulman world, and to the control of European Powers through their colonies over imperfectly civilized people; 12 L. Quart. Rev. 223; [1896] P. 122.

In modern times suzerainty is used as descriptive of relations, ill-defined and vague, which exist between powerful and dependent states; its very indefiniteness being its recommendation. Encycl. Br.

It is said that suzerainty is title without corresponding power; protectorate is power without corresponding title. Freund, Pol. Sci. Quart. (1899) p. 28.

While protecting and protected states tend to draw nearer; the reverse is true of suzerain and vassal states; a protectorate is generally the preliminary to incorporation; suzerainty, to separation. Encycl. Br.

By the Treaty of Paris (1856) Turkey was recognized as having suzerainty over certain Danubian principalities. The term was used in the Convention of 1881 between the British government and the South African Republic; but it was omitted in the Convention of 1884. Hershey, Int. L. 106. Crete was recognized by the Powers in 1899 as autonomous, under the suzerainty of the Sultan. Id.

SWANIMOTE. See COURT OF SWANIMOTE.

SWEAR. To take an oath administered by some officer duly empowered.

One may swear who is not duly sworn; and in such case the oath is not administered, but self-imposed, and the swearer incurs no legal liability thereabout; U. S. v. McCaughy, 33 Fed. 168. See JURY; OATH.

To use such profane language as is forbidden by law. This is generally punished by statutory provisions in the several states. See Gaines v. State, 7 Lea (Tenn.) 410, 40 Am. Rep. 64; State v. Chrisp, 85 N. C. 528, 39 Am. Rep. 713. See BLASPHEMY.

SWEDEN. A limited monarchy, the constitution resting primarily on the law of June 6, 1809. The king is irresponsible; the executive power is vested in him alone; all his resolutions, however, must be taken in the presence of his cabinet. The cabinet councillors are appointed by him and are responsible to the parliament (Riksdag). They are eleven in number, one being prime minister, two consultative ministers, and the others heads of departments.

They must be of Swedish birth and adherents of the Lutheran confession. The king has the right of initiative in the Riksdag and of absolute veto and has in certain administrative and administration matters a special legislative right.

The Riksdag consists of two chambers. The members of the first are elected by the representative bodies of the Län and by the municipal councils of some of the rural towns. They are 150 in number and are distributed among the constituencies according to population on a ten years revision. The members of the second chamber number 230, of which 150 are elected from the rural constituencies and 80 from the towns.

The supreme court has a membership of 18 judges and passes sentence in the name of the king, who is nominally the highest judicial authority. There are 119 rural judicial districts, which may be divided into judicial divisions, in each of which is a court consisting of a judge and 12 unpaid assessors elected by the people. Seven form a quorum. If unanimously of a different opinion from the judge, they can outvote him. There are three higher courts between these and the supreme court.

The dissolution of the union between Sweden and Norway was approved by the Riksdag of Sweden on October 19, 1905.

SWEEPSTAKES. The sum of the stakes for which the subscribers agree to pay for each horse nominated. Stone v. Clay, 61 Fed. 889, 10 C. C. A. 147. A free handicap sweepstake is not a stake race; id. See HORSE-RACE.

SWINDLER. A cheat; one guilty of defrauding divers persons. 1 Term 748.

Swindling is usually applied to a transaction where the guilty party procures the delivery to him, under a pretended contract, of the personal property of another, with the felonious design of appropriating it to his own use; 2 Russ. Cr. 130; Stevenson v. Hayden, 2 Mass. 406; as where a purchaser tendered a twenty-dollar gold-piece in payment for goods, supposing it was a silver dollar and the seller knowing his mistake returned him change for a dollar, the offence was held to be swindling; Jones v. Methvin, 97 Ga. 449, 25 S. E. 318.

The terms cheat and swindler are not actionable unless spoken of the plaintiff in relation to his business; Odg. Lib. & Sl. 61; Odiorne v. Bacon, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 185; Herr v. Bamberg, 10 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 128. The words "you are living by imposture," spoken of a person with the intention of imputing that he is a swindler, are not actionable per se; 8 C. B. 142. See LIBEL.

SWITZERLAND. A republic of Europe. It is a confederation of 22 cantons, which are sovereign states, except so far as they have given up their rights to the federal government. The legislative and executive functions are vested in a federal assembly of two chambers, a state council of forty-four members chosen by the cantons, two for each, and the national council of one hundred and sixty-seven deputies chosen by representation on the basis of population for three years. It meets at Bern. The chief executive authority is deputed to a federal council of seven members chosen by the federal assembly. The president and vice-president of the federal council, who are elected for the term of one year, are the first magistrates of the republic.

The Bundesgericht consists (since 1904) of nineteen full members and nine substitutes elected for six years by the federal assembly; every two years the federal parliament elects the president and vice-president of the federal tribunal; it adjudicates in the last instance all points in dispute between the federal governments and the individual cantons, and is a high court of appeal. It is divided into a civil and criminal court.

SWORN BROTHERS. In Old English Law. Persons who, by mutual oaths, covenanted to share in each other's fortunes.

SWORN CLERKS IN CHANCERY. Officers who had charge of records, and performed other duties in connection with the court of chancery. Abolished in 1842.

SYB AND SOM. A Saxon form of greeting, meaning peace and safety. T. L.

SYLLABUS. An abstract; a head note. The brief statement of the point or points decided, prefixed to the printed report of a case. The head note of a reported case is a thing upon which much skill and thought is required to express in clear, concise language the principle of law to be deduced, or the decision to which it is prefixed, or the facts and circumstances which bring the case in hand within the same principle or rule of law or of practice. 17 C. B. 459.

Unless the headnote is given special force by statute or rule of court, the opinion is to be looked to for the original and authentic grounds of the decision; Burbank v. Ernst, 232 U. S. 162, 34 Sup. Ct. 299, 58 L. Ed. —. If made under a statute, the opinion may be examined to ascertain the scope of the decision; Ohio Tax Cases, 232 U. S. 576, 34 Sup. Ct. 372, 58 L. Ed. —. It should be used only as a guide to the decision, even if prepared by the court itself; Brief Making, by Fille and others, Cooley's Ed. 116.

The duty of framing the syllabus of its opinions cannot be imposed upon a court except by constitutional provision; Ex parte Griffiths, 118 Ind. 83, 20 N. E. 513, 3 L. R. A. 398, 10 Am. St. Rep. 107.

In West Virginia it is the law of the case, whatever may be the reasoning of the opinion of the court; Kuhn v. Coal Co., 215 U. S. 356, 30 Sup. Ct. 140, 54 L. Ed. 228.

A collection. The word, in the sense of a catalogue or list, is used of a collection of eighty condemned propositions addressed by Pope Pius IX to all the Catholic episcopate, December 8, 1864. It gave rise to the most violent polemics; the Ultramontane party was loud in its praise, while the liberals treated it as a declaration of war by the church on modern society and civilization. Encycl. Br.

SYLVA CÆDUA. In Ecclesiastical Law. Wood of any kind which was kept on purpose to be cut, and which being cut grew again from the stem or root. 4 Reeve, Hist. Eng. L. 90.

SYMBOLIC DELIVERY. The delivery of some thing as a representation or sign of the delivery of some other.

Where an actual delivery of goods cannot be made, a symbolical delivery of some particular thing, as standing for the whole, will vest the property equally with an actual delivery; Gibson v. Stevens, 8 How. (U. S.) 399, 12 L. Ed. 1123; Atwell v. Miller, 6 Md. 10, 61 Am. Dec. 294; Vining v. Gilbreth, 39 Me. 496; Packard v. Dunsmore, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 282.

In 2 Poll. & Maitl. 84, symbolic delivery in the ancient German conveyance is thus described: The essence of the transaction may be that one man shall quit, and another shall take, possession of the land, but this must be done in formal fashion and before witnesses. The number and complexities of the scenes may vary in different times and tribes. All the symbols and ceremonies are not the same in any one age or district. The two men, each with his witnesses, appear upon the land, a knife is produced, a sod of turf is cut, the twig of a tree is broken off, and the turf and twig are handed to the donee, and thus the land passes from hand to hand. The knife may also be delivered and retained by the donee. Perhaps its point would be broken off or its blade twisted, that it may differ from other knives. But, before this, the donor has taken from his hand the war glove which would protect it in battle and the donee assumes it; his hand is vested or invested; it is the vestita manus that will fight in defense of this land; with it he grasps the turf and twig. All the talk about investiture and being vested with land goes back, it is said, to this ceremony. Then the donor must solemnly forsake the land. Perhaps he is expected to leap over the encircling hedge; or some renunciatory gesture with his fingers (curvatis digitis) is demanded of him. Maybe he will have to pass over to the donee the mysterious rod or festuca, which has great contractual efficacy. In time some of these ceremonies could be transacted away from the land. It is not always convenient for the parties to visit the land, particularly when one of them is a dead saint. The reliquary that contains him may be taken to the field, or the field must come to the saint. The turf and twig can be brought with it and placed with the knife upon the shrine. The twig planted in a convent garden or a sod from a churchyard will do, or a knife, without any sod, or a glove, or indeed any small thing that lies handy, for the symbolical significance of those articles is becoming obscure, and the thing deposited is now thought of as a gauge or wed (vadum), by which the donor can be constrained to deliver possession of the land.

SYMBOLIUM ANIMÆ. See SOUL SCOT.

SYNALLAGMATIC CONTRACT. In Civil Law. A contract by which each of the contracting parties binds himself to the other: such are the contracts of sale, hiring, etc. Pothier, Obl. 9.

SYNDIC. In French Law. The assignee of a bankrupt. So in Louisiana.

One who is chosen to conduct the affairs and attend to the concerns of a body corporate or community. In this sense the word corresponds to director or manager. Rodman Notes to Code de Com. p. 351; La. Civ. Code. art. 429; Dalloz, Dict. Syndic.

SYNDICATE. A university committee. A combination of persons or firms united for the purpose of enterprises too large for individuals to undertake; or a group of financiers who buy up the shares of a company in order to sell them at a profit by creating a scarcity. Moz. & W.

An association of individuals, formed for the purpose of conducting and carrying out some particular business transaction, ordinarily of a financial character, in which the members are mutually interested. Hambleton v. Rhind, 84 Md. 456, 36 Atl. 597, 40 L. R. A. 216. It is said to be, as respects the persons composing it, a partnership. Id. But this is rather too broadly expressed. It would seem rather a joint adventure, which see.

See 40 L. R. A. (Md.) 216; PROMOTERS.

SYNDICUS (Gr. σύν, with, δικη, cause). One chosen by a university, municipality, etc., to defend its cause. Calv. Lex. See SYNDIC.

SYNGRAPH (Gr. σύν, with, γράφω, to write). A deed, bond, or other instrument of writing, under the hand and seal of all the parties. It was so called because the parties wrote together.

Formerly such writings were attested by the subscription and crosses of the witnesses; afterwards, to prevent frauds and concealments, they made deeds of mutual covenant in a script and rescript, or in a part and counterpart, and in the middle between the two copies they wrote the word syngraphus in large letters, which, being cut through the parchment and one being delivered to each party, on being afterwards put together proved their authenticity.

Deeds thus made were denominated syngraphs by the canonists, and by the common-lawyers chirographs. 2 Bla. Com. 296.

SYNOD. An ecclesiastical assembly, which may be general, national, provincial, or diocesan.

SYNODALES TESTES. See SIDESMEN.

SYSTEMATIZED DELUSION. One based on a false premise, pursued by a logical process of reasoning to an insane conclusion; there being one central delusion around which other aberrations of the mind converge; Taylor v. McClintock, 87 Ark. 243, 112 S. W. 405. See INSANITY.

T. Every person convicted of felony short of murder, and admitted to benefit of clergy, was at one time marked with this letter upon the brawn of the thumb. Abolished by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. Whart. Dict.

TABELLA (Lat.). In Civil Law. A small table on which votes were often written. Cicero, in Rull. 2. 2. Three tables were given to the judges, one with the letter A for Abolutio, one with C for Condemnatio, and one with N. L. for Non Liquet, not proven. Calvinus, Lex.

TABELLIO. In Roman Law. An officer among the Romans, who reduced to writing, and into proper form, agreements, contracts, wills, and other instruments, and witnessed their execution.

The term tabellio is derived from the Latin tabula, seu tabella, which, in this sense, signified those tables or plates covered with wax which were then used instead of paper. 8 Toullier, n. 53.

Tabelliones differed from notaries in many respects: they had judicial jurisdiction in some cases, and from their judgments there were no appeals. Notaries were then the clerks or aiders of the tabelliones; they received the agreements of the parties, which they reduced to short notes; and these contracts were not binding until they were written in extenso, which was done by the tabelliones. Jacob, Law Dict. Tabellion.

TABLE. A synopsis in which many particulars are brought together in a general view. See LIFE TABLES. As to the Law of the Twelve Tables, see CODE.

TABLE-RENTS. Rents paid to bishops and other ecclesiastics, appropriated to their table or housekeeping. Jacob.

TABLEAU OF DISTRIBUTION. In Louisiana. A list of creditors of an insolvent estate, stating what each is entitled to. Taylor v. Hollander, 4 Mart. N. S. (La.) 535.

TABULA IN NAUFRAGIO (Lat. a plank in a wreck). A figurative term used to denote the power of a third mortgagee, who, having obtained his mortgage without any knowledge of a second mortgage, may acquire the first incumbrance, and squeeze out and have satisfaction before the second. 2 Ves. Ch. 573. "It may be fairly said that the doctrine survives only in the unjust and much-criticised English rule of tacking"; Ames, Lect. Leg. Hist. 269. See TACKING; PURCHASER FOR VALUE WITHOUT NOTICE. The use of the expression is attributed to Sir Matthew Hale; see 2 P. Wms. 491.

TABULÆ. In Civil Law. Contracts and written instruments of all kinds, especially wills. So called because originally written on tablets and with wax. Calvinus.

TAC. A kind of customary payment by a tenant. Blount, Ten. 155.

TAC FREE. Free from payments, etc.; e. g. "tac free de omnibus propriis porcis suis infra metas de C," i. e. paying nothing for his hogs running within that limit. Jacob.

TACIT. That which, although not expressed, is understood from the nature of the thing or from the provision of the law; implied.

TACIT LAW. A law which derives its authority from the common consent of the people without any legislative enactment. 1 Bouvier, Inst. 120.

TACKING. In English Law. The union of securities given at different times, so as to prevent any intermediate purchaser's claiming title to redeem or otherwise discharge one lien which is prior, without redeeming or discharging other liens also which are subsequent, to his own title. Jeremy, Eq. Jur. 188; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 412.

It is an established doctrine in the English chancery that a bona fide purchaser without any notice of a defect in his title at the time of the purchase may lawfully buy any mortgage, or incumbrance, and if he can defend by those at law his adversary shall have no help in equity to set those incumbrances aside, for equity will not disarm such a purchaser. And as mortgagees are considered in equity as purchasers pro tanto, the same doctrine has extended to them, and a mortgagee who has advanced his money without notice of any prior incumbrance may, by getting an assignment of a statute, judgment, or recognizance, protect himself from any incumbrance subsequent to such statute, judgment, or recognizance, though prior to his mortgage; that is, he will be allowed to tack or unite his mortgage to such old security, and will by that means be entitled to recover all moneys for which such security was given, together with the money due on his mortgage, before the prior mortgagees are entitled to recover anything; 2 Cruise, Dig. t. 15, c. 5, s. 27; 1 Vern. 188. The source and origin of the English doctrine is the case of Marsh v. Lee, 2 Ventr. 337; 1 Ch. Cas. 162; 1 Wh. & T. L. C. Eq. 611, notes. This case and the doctrine founded upon it has been the subject of severe criticism; Langd. Eq. Pl. 191. Lord Ch. J. Holt is said to have been one of the first to benefit by the right of tacking; see Holt v. Mill, 2 Vern. 279.

Tacking was abolished by sec. 7 of the Vendor and Purchaser Act, Stat. 37 & 38 Vict. c. 78, but that section is repealed by sec. 129 of the Land Title and Transfer Act of 38 & 39 Vict. c. 87; Moz. & W. See 1 Pingr. Mortg. § 477.

In England a mortgagee who holds several distinct mortgages under the same mortgagor, redeemable, not by express contract, but only by virtue of the equity of redemption, may, within certain limits and against certain persons, consolidate them, that is, treat them as one, and decline to be redeemed as to any, unless he is redeemed as to all; 6 App. Cas. 698. See Brett's L. Cas. Mod. Eq. 216. It is there termed consolidation of mortgages, and the principle is laid down that the courts lean against any extension of the doctrine; 6 App. Cas. 698, which is cited as the leading case, and as practically overruling L. R. 4 Eq. 537, which was overruled in 14 Ch. D. 699.

The high-water mark of the doctrine is said to be represented by Vint v. Padget, where it was held that if mortgages of different lands to secure different debts are made to, or come into the hands of, the same person, the mortgagee cannot redeem either without redeeming both, or he may enforce the payment of the amount of both debts out of the land covered by either; and this is true though he bought the mortgages with notice of an outstanding second mortgage; 2 De G. & J. 611. This case is said to have been cited but not approved in [1896] App. Cas. 187, affirming [1895] 1 Ch. 51, which affirmed [1894] 2 Ch. 328, where it was held that when the owner of different properties mortgages them to different persons, and the mortgages afterward become united under one title, the holder of the mortgages has a right to refuse to be redeemed as to one without payment of all, not only as against the mortgagor, but also as against a person in whom the equities of redemption of all the properties have been vested by one deed, whether from the mortgagor or mesne assignee, although the assignment is made before the mortgages become united in title.

In American Law. This doctrine is inconsistent with the laws of the several states, which require the recording of mortgages; and does not exist to any extent; Peabody v. Patten, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 517; Brayee v. Bank, 14 Ohio 318; Anderson v. Neff, 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 208; Dyer v. Graves, 37 Vt. 375; Parkist v. Alexander, 1 Johns. ch. (N. Y.) 399; Bisph. Eq. § 159. A rule apparently analogous may, however, be found in those cases where a mortgage is given to secure future advances, and where the mortgagee is allowed to recover sums subsequently advanced, as against a mesne mortgage; Bisph. Eq. § 159, where the cases are collected; but the future advances to be protected must be without notice of the intervening incumbrance; id.; Shirras v. Caig, 7 Cra. (U. S.) 45, 3 L. Ed. 260; unless the advances are made under a binding agreement; Crane v. Deming, 7 Conn. 387; Appeal of Moroney, 24 Pa. 372; Farnum v. Burnett, 21 N. J. Eq. 87; and the recording of the latter is a sufficient notice; Spader v. Lawler, 17 Ohio 371, 49 Am. Dec. 461; Shirras v. Caig, 7 Cra. (U. S.) 45.

Though, for the reasons stated, the subject of tacking as to mortgages or liens is not a very practical one in this country, the term is used in a number of other connections, as of possessions, disabilities, or items in accounts or other dealings. In these several cases the purpose of the proposed tacking is to avoid the bar of a statute of limitations.

Tacking Successive Possessions. On the issue of adverse possession, the various holdings of the different claimants in the chain of title may be added together; Frost v. Courtis, 172 Mass. 401, 52 N. E. 515; Lantry v. Wolff, 40 Neb. 374, 68 N. W. 494; and so may successive possessions of different tenants in common; Woodruff v. Roysden, 105 Tenn. 491, 58 S. W. 1066, 80 Am. St. 905; or that of father-in-law followed by son-in-law; St. Louis v. Keitley, 29 Mo. 593, note. The possessions may be tacked: Of grantor and grantee; Harris v. McGovern, 99 U. S. 161, 25 L. Ed. 317; (but not if the grantor have no color of title; Morrison v. Craven, 120 N. C. 327, 26 S. E. 940); of decedent and his heirs and representatives; Wickes v. Wickes, 98 Md. 307, 56 Atl. 1017; Brucke v. Hubbard, 74 S. C. 144, 54 S. E. 249; the possession of the tenant of premises which were occupied under adverse possession and which he afterwards purchased, and that of a tenant who had been in possession prior to and during his occupancy and who attorned to him and paid him rent; Houston v. Finnigan (Tex.) 85 S. W. 470.

To permit of such tacking there must be privity of estate; Zweibel v. Myers, 69 Neb. 294, 95 N. W. 597; Jarrett v. Stevens, 36 W. Va. 445, 15 S. E. 177; they must be connected through the chain of title; Murray v. Pannaci, 67 N. J. Eq. 724, 57 Atl. 1132; Johnston v. Case, 131 N. C. 491, 42 S. E. 957. To constitute continuous adverse possession by tacking that of successive owners, the privity of estate may rest on a conveyance, parol agreement or understanding; Kepley v. Scully, 185 Ill. 52, 57 N. E. 187; by operation of law, by descent, or voluntary or involuntary transfers from one to another; Nelson v. Trigg, 72 Tenn. (4 Lea) 701; but they must be directly connected. Interrupted and discontinuous periods of possession cannot be tacked together, so as to ripen into a title; Clark v. White, 120 Ga. 957, 48 S. E. 357; and where several persons enter upon land in succession, the several possessions cannot be tacked together so as to make a continuity of possession under the law of adverse title, unless there is privity of estate, or the several titles are connected; Low v. Schaffer, 24 Or. 239, 33 Pac. 678. The possession of the assignee of a dower terminates with the death of the dowress and cannot be added to the subsequent possession of her grantee to enable the latter to set up title by adverse possession against the remainderman; Beaty v. Clymer, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 322, 75 S. W. 540. Under a statute providing that no estate in lands other than leases for a year or less shall be granted except by operation of law or deed in writing, successive possessions may be tacked so as to make up a continuous adverse possession barring recovery without anything more than a parol sale and transfer from one possessor to another; Illinois Steel Co. v. Budzisz, 106 Wis. 499, 81 N. W. 1027, 82 N. W. 534, 48 L. R. A. 830, 80 Am. St. Rep. 54. As against a mere intruder showing no title, the possession of the ancestor of a plaintiff in ejectment and that of the ancestor's tenants may be tacked together to perfect a title by adverse possession; Beam v. Gardner, 18 Pa. Super. Ct. 245, where plaintiff was purchasing the title of the heirs. The grantee of mortgaged premises may add to the time of limitation in his favor that which had run in favor of his grantors in order to make up the aggregate period required to bar the action to foreclose; Paine v. Dodds, 14 N. D. 189, 103 N. W. 931, 116 Am. St. 674.

Tacking Disabilities. One disability cannot be tacked to another to avoid the operation of the statute of limitations; Davis v. Coblens, 174 U. S. 719, 19 Sup. Ct. 832, 43 L. Ed. 1147: as coverture to infancy; Knippenberg v. Morris, 80 Ind. 540; Eager v. Com., 4 Mass. 182; Franklin v. Cunningham, 187 Mo. 184, 86 S. W. 79; Elcan v. Childress, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 193, 89 S. W. 84; or infancy to coverture; Caperton v. Gregory, 11 Grat. (Va.) 505; Lamberida v. Barnum (Tex.) 90 S. W. 698; or lunacy to infancy; Sharp v. Stephens' Committee, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 687, 52 S. W. 977.

Tacking Items in Accounts for Services or Goods Sold and Delivered. This will not be permitted where such items are separated by a material lapse of time. The accounts must be practically continuous. Where payment is claimed for personal service for two periods separated by a break of some years, the former period, being barred, cannot be tacked on to the latter as items in a mutual account current, and there is no liability unless the proof shows that at the beginning of the second period there was an express contract to pay for past as well as future services; Graham v. Stanton, 177 Mass. 321, 58 N. E. 1023; and where a married woman lived on her own farm, which her husband operated and supported the family, and she bought goods prior to 1888 on open account, and the husband purchased seed in 1894, and in the interval barbed wire, giving notes, which were paid, each of the latter purchases was an independent transaction, which could not be tacked to the old account, so as to take that out of the statute of limitations; Moore v. Blackman, 109 Wis. 528, 85 N. W. 429.

TAIL. See ESTATE TAIL.

TAILAGE. See TALLAGE.

TAILLE (Fr.). The equivalent of the English tallage—the typical direct tax in France of the Middle Ages, as tonlieu was the generic term for an indirect tax. See TALLAGE.

TAINT. A conviction of felony, or, the person so convicted. Cowell. See ATTAINT.

TAKE. A technical expression which signifies to be entitled to: as, a devisee will take under the will.

To seize: as, to take and carry away, either lawfully or unlawfully.

In an indictment for larceny, a charge that defendant did feloniously take implies a trespass; State v. Friend, 47 Minn. 449, 50 N. W. 692. Under a statute making it an offence to take up and use a horse without the consent of the owner, the taking a horse bridled, saddled, and hitched to a tree will not constitute the offence; Cochran v. State, 36 Tex. Cr. R. 115, 35 S. W. 968.

The word may be synonymous with arrest; Com. v. Hall, 9 Gray (Mass.) 267, 69 Am. Dec. 285; but take and steal were held not to be synonymous; Stone v. Stevens, 12 Conn. 229, 30 Am. Dec. 611. It has been held equivalent to require. King v. Kent's Heirs, 29 Ala. 542. A devisee takes under a will only when the possession and control of the deviser has ceased; Jersey City v. Banking Co., 41 N. J. L. 70.

Poison administered externally (poison ivy) is not a taking of poison under a benefit certificate; Dent v. Mail Ass'n, 183 Fed. 840.

To retain money illegally collected at Bremen from an immigrant within the excluded classes was held not a taking in the United States; U. S. v. Nord Deutscher Lloyd, 186 Fed. 391.

As to taking silk, see SILK.

In its usual signification the word taken implies a transfer of dominion, possession, or control. Id.

To choose: e. g. ad capiendas assisas, to choose a jury.

To obtain: e. g. to take a verdict in court, to get a verdict.

TAKE UP. An indorser or acceptor is said to take up, or retire, a bill when he discharges his liability upon it. In such a case, the indorser would hold the instrument with all his remedies intact; while the acceptor would extinguish all the remedies on it. One who accepts a lease is also said to take it up.

TAKING. The act of laying hold upon an article, with or without removing the same. See LARCENY; ROBBERY.

It implies a transfer of possession, dominion, or control. A thing is not taken unless such a change of status is effected. In trespass, trover, or replevin the taking is not accomplished until the goods are within the power or control of the defendant. See CONVERSION; TRESPASS; TROVER; REPLEVIN; EMINENT DOMAIN.

TALE. In English Law. The ancient name of the declaration or count. 3 Bla. Com. 293.

TALES (Lat. talīs, such, like). A number of jurors added to a deficient panel sufficient to supply the deficiency. Nesbit v. People, 19 Colo. 441, 36 Pac. 221. See Shields v. Bank, 3 Hun (N. Y.) 477, 479.

A list of such jurymen as were of the tales, kept in the king's bench office in England.

TALES DE CIRCUMSTANTIBUS (Lat. a like number of the bystanders). A sufficient number of jurors selected from the bystanders to supply a deficiency in the panel.

The order of the judge for taking such bystanders as jurors.

Whenever from any cause the panel of jurors is insufficient, the judge may issue the above order, and the officer immediately executes it; see Lee v. Ewaul, 1 N. J. L. 283; Fuller v. State, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 65. See JURY.

TALESMEN. See preceding title.

TALITER PROCESSUM EST. "So it has proceeded;" words formerly used in pleading, by which a defendant, in justifying his conduct by the process of an inferior court, alleged the proceedings in such inferior court. Steph. Pl. 5th ed. p. 369.

TALKING MACHINES. Where records were made by taking a matrix from the commercial records of a manufacturer of talking machines, making copies of them and selling them at about half price, it was held that, aside from any question of infringement of trade mark or imitation of label or deception of the public, the manufacturers of the original records were entitled to an injunction; Fonotipia, Limited, v. Bradley, 171 Fed. 951.

TALLAGE, or TALLIAGE (Fr. tailler, to cut). In English Law. A term used to denote subsidies, taxes, customs, and, indeed, any imposition whatever by the government for the purpose of raising a revenue. Bacon, Abr. Smuggling, etc. (B); Fort. De Laud. 26; Madd. Exch. c. 17; Co. 2d Inst. 531.

A tax upon cities, townships and boroughs granted to the king as a part of the royal revenue. 2 Steph. Com. 622.

The king could permit his boroughs to tallage themselves. The great men of London purchased charters exempting them from tallages, and the whole weight of the burden was thrown on the smaller folk. "Not just once, twice, thrice, or four times have the mayor and aldermen set tallages upon us without special command of the king or the assent and consent of the whole community; they have spared the rich and distrained the poor to the disherison of the king and the destruction of his city"; 1 Poll. & Maitl. 647.

It was arbitrarily exacted, without the consent of parliament, until the right was surrendered by Edward I; Taswell-Langmead, Const. Hist. 122.

TALLAGIUM (perhaps from Fr. taille, cut off). A term including all taxes. Co. 2d Inst. 532; Stat. de tal. non concedendo, temp.

Edw. I.; Stow, Annals 445; 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 311*. Chaucer has tallaigiers for "tax-gatherers."

TALLY (Fr. tailler; It. tagliare, i. e. scindere, to cut off). A stick cut into two parts on each whereof is marked, with notches or otherwise, what is due between debtor and creditor. Hence the tallier of the exchequer is now called the teller. Lex. Constit. 205; Cowell. One party must have one part, and the other the other, and they must match. Tallies in the exchequer were abolished by 23 Geo. III. c. 82, and were ordered to be destroyed in 1834. They were thereupon used in such quantities to heat the stoves in the house of lords that it is supposed they were the cause of the fire which destroyed both houses of parliament.

By the custom of London, sealed tallies were effectual as a deed. Liber Albus 191a. They are admissible by the French and Italian Codes as evidence between traders. It is said that they were negotiable. See Penny Encycl.; Hall, Antiq. of Exch. 118.

TALMUD. A work which embodies the civil and canonical law of the Jewish people.

TAME. Domesticated; reclaimed from a natural state of wildness. See ANIMAL.

TANGIBLE PROPERTY. That which may be felt or touched: it must necessarily be corporeal, but it may be real or personal.

See TAX; SITUS; MOVABLES.

TANISTRY (a thanis). In Irish Law. A species of tenure founded on immemorial usage, by which lands, etc., descended, seniori et dignissimo viro sanguinis et cognominis, i. e. to the oldest and worthiest man of the blood and name. Jacob, Law Dict.

TANTEO. In Spanish Law. Pre-emption. White, N. Recop. b. 2, t. 2, c. 3.

TANTO. In Mexican Law. The right enjoyed by an usufructuary of the property, of buying property at the same price at which the owner offers it to any other person, or is willing to take from another. Civil Code, Mex. art. 992.

TARDE VENIT (Lat.). The name of a return made by the sheriff to a writ, when it came into his hands too late to be executed before the return day.

The sheriff is required to show that he has yielded obedience to the writ, or give a good excuse for his omission; and he may say, quod breve adeo tarde venit quod exequi non potuit. It is usual to return the writ with an indorsement of tarde venit. Com. Dig. Return (D 1).

TARIFF. Customs, duties, toll, or tribute payable upon merchandise to the general government; the rate of customs, etc., also bears this name, and the list of articles liable to duties is also called the tariff.

The present tariff act was approved at 9:10 p. m. October 3, 1913, and took effect on the day following its passage, unless therein otherwise specially provided.

See RECIPROCITY; TAX; PHILIPPINES; STATUTE.

TAVERN. A place of entertainment; a house kept up for the accommodation of strangers. Webster. Originally, a house for the retailing of liquors to be drunk on the spot. Webster. A house licensed to sell liquors in small quantities. In re Schneider, 11 Ore. 288, 8 Pac. 289.

In almost all the states the word has come to mean the same as inn, with no particular reference to the sale of liquors. See 2 Kent 597*, note a; Foster v. State, 84 Ala. 451, 4 South. 833. Tavern has been held to include "hotel"; St. Louis v. Siegrist, 46 Mo. 593; contra, Bonner v. Welborn, 7 Ga. 296.

The enforced proportional contribution of persons and property, levied by the authority of the state for the support of government, and for all public needs. Opinion of the Justices, 58 Me. 591; Cooley, Tax. 1. Burdens or charges imposed by the legislative power of a state upon persons or property, to raise money for public purposes. Perry v. Washburn, 20 Cal. 318. A sum or rate imposed by governmental authority for a public object or purpose. Pettibone v. Smith, 150 Pa. 118, 24 Atl. 693, 17 L. R. A. 423; *Deal v. A pecuniary burden laid upon individuals or property to support the government. New Jersey v. Anderson, 203 U. S. 483, 27 Sup. Ct. 137, 51 L. Ed. 284. See the opinion by Miller, J., in Citizens S. & L. Ass'n v. Topeka, 20 Wall. (U. S.) 655, 22 L. Ed. 455.

A tax is a demand of sovereignty; a toll is a demand of proprietorship; State Freight Tax Case, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 278, 21 L. Ed. 146. Taxes are not "debts"; Perry v. Washburn, 20 Cal. 318; McKeesport v. Fidler, 147 Pa. 532, 23 Atl. 799; City Council of Charleston v. Phosphate Co., 34 S. C. 541, 13 S. E. 845; do not embrace local assessments; New Jersey v. Anderson, 203 U. S. 483, 27 Sup. Ct. 137, 51 L. Ed. 284; Zable v. Orphans' Home, 92 Ky. 89, 17 S. W. 212, 13 L. R. A. 668; New London v. Miller, 60 Conn. 112, 22 Atl. 499; Austin v. Seattle, 2 Wash. 667, 27 Pac. 557; nor are fees required by a statute for filing articles of incorporation a tax; Ashley v. Ryan, 49 Ohio St. 504, 31 N. E. 721. The word "tax" is not infrequently used in a general sense as denoting a burden or charge, and not in the strict legal sense of a charge or burden imposed by the state for the purpose of revenue for its support; New York v. Tax Com'rs, 199 U. S. 1, 25 Sup. Ct. 705, 50 L. Ed. 65, 4 Ann. Cas. 381.

A tax is not a debt; Camden v. Allen, 26 N. J. L. 398; New Jersey v. Anderson, 203 U. S. 483, 27 Sup. Ct. 137, 51 L. Ed. 284; and has none of the incidents of a debt; 21 Harv. L. Rev. 283; technically it is not a debt; Appleton v. Hopkins, 5 Gray (Mass.) 530, per Shaw, C. J. There are cases holding that, in the absence of any other remedy, assumpsit will lie; Baltimore v. Howard, 6 Har. & J. (Md.) 383; but the weight of authority is otherwise; McKeesport v. Fidler, 147 Pa. 532, 23 Atl. 799, following Lane County v. Oregon, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 71, 19 L. Ed. 101; Camden v. Allen, 26 N. J. L. 398. Liability to pay taxes arises from no contractual relation and cannot be enforced by common law proceedings, unless a statute so provides; Schmuck v. Hartman, 222 Pa. 190, 70 Atl. 1001. But in U. S. v. Chamberlin, 219 U. S. 250, 31 Sup. Ct. 155, 55 L. Ed. 204, it was held, in an action to recover the amount of revenue stamps alleged to be due on a conveyance, that an action of debt was maintainable wherever there was due a sum either certain or readily reducible to certainty, distinguishing Lane County v. Oregon, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 71, 19 L. Ed. 101, as holding that the acts making United States notes a legal tender for debts did not apply to state taxes.

Taxes differ from subsidies, in being certain and orderly, and from forced contributions, etc., in that they are levied by authority of law, and by some rule of proportion which is intended to insure uniformity of contribution, and a just apportionment of the burdens of government; Cooley, Tax. 2. No matter how equitable a tax may be, it is void unless legally assessed; Joyner v. School Dist. Number Three, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 567; and, on the other hand, the injustice of a particular tax cannot defeat it when it is demanded under general rules prescribed by the legislature for the general good; Cooley, Tax. 3.

Taxes are classified as direct, which includes "those which are assessed upon the property, person, business, income, etc., of those who pay them; and indirect, or those which are levied on commodities before they reach the consumer, and are paid by those upon whom they ultimately fall, not as taxes, but as part of the market price of the commodity." Cooley, Tax. 61. The latter includes duties, imposts and excises; Pollock v. Trust Co., 157 U. S. 557, 15 Sup. Ct. 673, 39 L. Ed. 759, where it was said: "Although there have been from time to time intimations that there might be some tax which was not a direct taxation, nor included under the words 'duties, imposts and excises,' such a taxation for more than 100 years of national existence has yet remained undiscovered." Quoted in Thomas v. U. S., 192 U. S. 363, 370, 24 Sup. Ct. 305, 48 L. Ed. 481.

Direct taxes within the meaning of the constitution are only capitation taxes and taxes on real estate; Springer v. U. S., 102 U. S. 586.

It was held that the income tax law of 1894 was a direct tax and unconstitutional. The first decision left the constitutional question in doubt, the court being equally divided; Pollock v. Trust Co., 157 U. S. 429, 15 Sup. Ct. 673, 39 L. Ed. 759. On re-argument before a full court the decision was by a majority of one only. The points settled by the opinion of the court were, substantially, these: Direct taxes must be apportioned among the several states in accordance with numbers. Taxes on real estate are direct taxes, and taxes on the rent or income of real estate are the same. Taxes on personal property or on the income of personal property are likewise direct taxes. The act of 1894, so far as it falls on the income of real estate and of personal property, is a direct tax on the property and therefore void, because not apportioned according to representation; Pollock v. Trust Co., 158 U. S. 601, 15 Sup. Ct. 912, 39 L. Ed. 1108.

See infra as to the 16th amendment to the constitution and the Income Tax Act of Oct. 3, 1913.

Excise taxes have been repeatedly sustained by the courts: Thus, on the use of carriages; Hylton v. U. S., 3 Dall. (U. S.) 171, 1 L. Ed. 556; on sales at exchanges or boards of trade; Nicol v. Ames, 173 U. S. 509, 19 Sup. Ct. 522, 43 L. Ed. 786; on the transmission of property from the dead to the living; Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U. S. 41, 20 Sup. Ct. 747, 44 L. Ed. 969; on agreements to sell shares of stock denominated "calls"; Treat v. White, 181 U. S. 264, 21 Sup. Ct. 611, 45 L. Ed. 853; on tobacco manufactured for consumption (between the beginning of manufacture and consumption); Patton v. Brady, 184 U. S. 608, 22 Sup. Ct. 493, 46 L. Ed. 713; on the sales of shares of stock; Thomas v. U. S., 192 U. S. 363, 24 Sup. Ct. 305, 48 L. Ed. 481; on transfers of property intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after the death of the grantor; Keeney v. Comptroller of New York, 222 U. S. 525, 32 Sup. Ct. 105, 56 L. Ed. 299, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1139; on sugar refining; Spreckels S. R. Co. v. McClain, 192 U. S. 397, 24 Sup. Ct. 376, 48 L. Ed. 496; on conducting commercial agencies (unless its effect is to violate a federal statute, such as burdening interstate commerce); U. S. F. & G. Co. v. Kentucky, 231 U. S. 394, 34 Sup. Ct. 122, 58 L. Ed. 283. The internal revenue tax on the sale of liquor is not a tax on property or the profits of the business, but a charge on the business; South Carolina v. U. S., 199 U. S. 437, 26 Sup. Ct. 110, 50 L. Ed. 261, 4 Ann. Cas. 737. The provision of the constitution that "all duties, imposts and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States" refers purely to geographical uniformity, and is synonymous with the expression "operate generally throughout the United States;"

Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U. S. 41, 20 Sup. Ct. 747, 44 L. Ed. 969. These words were used comprehensively to cover customs and excise duties on importations, consumption, manufacture and sale of certain commodities, privileges, particular business transactions, vocations; Thomas v. U. S., 192 U. S. 363, 24 Sup. Ct. 305, 48 L. Ed. 481.

Public Purpose. No tax is valid which is not laid for a public purpose; Citizens' S. & L. Ass'n v. Topeka, 20 Wall. (U. S.) 655, 22 L. Ed. 455, where it was said that there are limitations on the powers of the three branches of the government which grow out of the essential nature of all free governments—implied reservations of individual rights without which the social compact could not exist, and among these is that taxation must be for a public purpose; such are (according to Cooley, Tax. 18) to preserve the public order; to make compensation to public officers, etc.; to erect, etc., public buildings; to pay the expenses of legislation, and of administering the laws, etc.; also, to provide secular instruction; Cooley, Tax., 2d ed. 119-124; Kelly v. Pittsburgh, 104 U. S. 81, 26 L. Ed. 658; but not in a school founded by a charitable bequest, though a majority of the trustees were to be chosen (but from certain religious societies) by the inhabitants of the town; Jenkins v. Andover, 103 Mass. 94. A town may tax itself for the erection of a state educational institution within its limits; Merrick v. Amherst, 12 Allen (Mass.) 500. The support of public charities is a public purpose, and money raised by taxation may be applied to private charitable institutions. Taxation for the purpose of giving or loaning money to private business enterprises is illegal; Lowell v. Boston, 111 Mass. 454, 15 Am. Rep. 39. In some cases, governments have applied public funds to pay equitable claims (upon which no legal right exists), such as for the destruction of private property in war, or for loss incurred in a contract for the construction of a public work; Cooley, Tax. 91. Taxes may be levied for the construction and repair of canals, railroads, highways, roads, etc.; Cooley, Tax. 94; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Otoe Co., 16 Wall. (U. S.) 667, 21 L. Ed. 375; Pine Grove Tp. v. Talcott, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 666, 22 L. Ed. 227; (Miller and Davis, JJ., dissenting in both of these last two cases; see also the opinion, rendered by Miller, J., in Citizens' S. & L. Ass'n v. Topeka, 20 Wall. [U. S.] 655, 22 L. Ed. 455); and the construction of a free bridge in a city; Philadelphia v. Field, 58 Pa. 320; and for the payment of the public debt, if lawfully incurred; and for protection against fire; Kelly v. Pittsburgh, 104 U. S. 81, 26 L. Ed. 658. Taxation to provide municipal gas and water works is lawful; Wells v. Atlanta, 43 Ga. 67; Van Sicklen v. Burlington, 27 Vt. 70; and for the preservation of the public health; Western S. F. Soc. v. Philadelphia, 31 Pa. 175, 72 Am. Dec. 730;

Cooley, Tax. 101. Municipalities may pay money by way of bounties to those who volunteer as soldiers in time of actual or threatened hostility; Speer v. School Directors, 50 Pa. 150; but not to provide amusements for the people, or to celebrate the declaration of independence, etc.; Hood v. Lynn, 1 Allen (Mass.) 103; Hodges v. Buffalo, 2 Den. (N. Y.) 110; the purchase and support of public parks is lawful; Cooley, Tax. 61, 129, 615.

A manufacturing enterprise in a community is not a public purpose; Citizens' S. & L. Ass'n v. Topeka, 20 Wall. (U. S.) 655, 22 L. Ed. 455 a leading case, in which Miller, J., rendered the opinion of the court, and considered also the subject of railroad aid bonds, as well as what is a public purpose. (See BOND as to railroad aid bonds.)

A legislature can authorize a city or town to tax its inhabitants only for public purposes; Opinion of the Justices, 150 Mass. 592, 24 N. E. 1084, 8 L. R. A. 487; Cole v. La Grange, 113 U. S. 1, 5 Sup. Ct. 416, 28 L. Ed. 896; Attorney General v. Eau Claire, 37 Wis. 400; Mather v. Ottawa, 114 Ill. 659, 3 N. E. 216.

A statute providing for a special tax on corporations to establish free scholarships in a state university is unconstitutional; State v. Switzler, 143 Mo. 287, 45 S. W. 245, 40 L. R. A. 280, 65 Am. St. Rep. 653, where the cases as to what is a public purpose are collected. So of loans to aid in rebuilding parts of a city destroyed by fire; Lowell v. Boston, 111 Mass. 454, 15 Am. Rep. 39; Feldman v. Charleston, 23 S. C. 57, 55 Am. Rep. 6; a city water plant; loans by cities in aid of private manufacturing enterprises; Citizens' S. & L. Ass'n v. Topeka, 20 Wall. (U. S.) 655, 22 L. Ed. 455; aid of private educational enterprises; Curtis's Adm'r v. Whipple, 24 Wis. 350, 1 Am. Rep. 187; Jenkins v. Andover, 103 Mass. 94; though no tuition fee is charged; Mullen v. Juenet, 6 Pa. Super. Ct. 1; a bounty for growing forest trees; Deal v. Mississippi County, 107 Mo. 464, 18 S. W. 24, 14 L. R. A. 622; a pension for the blind; Auditor of Lucas County v. State, 75 Ohio St. 114, 78 N. E. 955; so a tax on fire insurance companies premiums (local) for the benefit of disabled firemen; Aetna Fire Ins. Co. v. Jones, 78 S. C. 445, 59 S. E. 148, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1147, 125 Am. St. Rep. 818.

Public purpose in this connection "has no relation to the urgency of the public mind, or to the extent of the public benefit to follow." People v. Salem, 20 Mich. 452, 4 Am. Rep. 400.

It is an essential rule of taxation that the purpose for which a tax is levied "should be one which in an especial manner pertains to the district within which it is proposed that the contribution shall be collected. . . . A state purpose must be accomplished by a state taxation, a county purpose by a county taxation, etc." Cooley, Tax. 104.

Apportionment, which is a necessary element of taxation, is a matter of legislation; Cooley, Tax. 175. Judge Cooley classifies the taxes as specific, ad valorem, and those apportioned by special benefit. He suggests as general principles, that while the districts are discretionary, the basis of apportionment must be applied throughout the district and cannot embrace persons or property outside of it. There may be a diversity in methods of collection; the tax does not fail because the rule of apportionment cannot in all cases be enforced, and exemptions, though permissible, must not be in the nature of special and invidious discriminations against individuals.

While perfect equality is unattainable, only statutes based upon false and unjust principles or producing gross inequality will justify the interposition of the courts. See Grim v. School Dist., 57 Pa. 433, 98 Am. Dec. 237; Walton v. Riley, 85 Ky. 413, 3 S. W. 605. The 14th amendment of the constitution of the United States was not intended to compel the states to adopt an iron rule of equality or prevent classification; it is enough that there is no discrimination in favor of one as against another of the same class; Giozza v. Tiernan, 148 U. S. 657, 13 Sup. Ct. 721, 37 L. Ed. 599.

A tax is uniform when it operates with the same effect in all places where the subject of it is found, and is not wanting in such uniformity because the thing is not equally distributed in all parts of the United States; Head Money Cases, 112 U. S. 580, 5 Sup. Ct. 247, 28 L. Ed. 798. Accordingly a different rule of taxation may be prescribed for railroad companies from that for individuals; State Railroad Tax Cases, 92 U. S. 575, 23 L. Ed. 663.

"The whole argument of a right under the federal constitution to challenge a tax law on the ground of inequality in the burdens resulting from the operation of the law is put at rest by the decision in Bell's Gap R. R. Co. v. Pa., 134 U. S. 232, 10 Sup. Ct. 533, 33 L. Ed. 892." Merchants' Bank v. Pa., 167 U. S. 461, 17 Sup. Ct. 829, 42 L. Ed. 236.

The requirement of uniformity imposed by the constitution on congress in levying excise taxes is not intrinsic, but geographic; Billings v. U. S., 232 U. S. 261, 34 Sup. Ct. 421, 58 L. Ed. —.

"Direct taxes must be apportioned, while indirect taxes must be uniform throughout the United States. But while yielding implicit obedience to these constitutional requirements, it is no part of the duty of this court to lessen, impede or obstruct the exercise of the taxing power by merely abstruse and subtle distinctions as to the particular nature of a specified tax, where such distinction rests more upon the differing theories of political economists than upon the practical nature of the tax itself." Nicol v. Ames, 173 U. S. 509, 19 Sup. Ct. 522, 43 L. Ed. 786.

Double taxation is defined as the requirement that one person or any one subject of taxation shall directly contribute twice to the same burden, while other subjects of taxation belonging to the same class are required to contribute but once; Cooley, Tax. 394, citing McNeill v. Hagerty, 51 Ohio St. 255, 37 N. E. 526, 23 L. R. A. 628; Com. v. R. Co., 150 Pa. 234, 24 Atl. 609; Second Ward S. Bk. v. Milwaukee, 94 Wis. 587, 69 N. W. 359. Double taxation does not exist in a legal sense unless the double tax is levied upon the same property within the same jurisdiction; an excise levied upon earnings from operating property is not a double tax because the property itself is taxed; In re Ohio Tax Cases, 232 U. S. 576, 34 Sup. Ct. 372, 58 L. Ed. —. Where a testator died domiciled in Illinois and that state taxed the succession to his property, it was held that a tax imposed in New York on the transfer of his bank deposit in that state was not invalid; Blackstone v. Miller, 188 U. S. 189, 23 Sup. Ct. 277, 47 L. Ed. 439, where it was said that the power of two states to tax on different and more or less inconsistent principles leads to some hardship; that it may be regretted also that one and the same state should tax on the one hand according to the fact of power, and on the other, at the same time, according to the fiction that, in successions after death, mobilia sequuntur personam and domicile governs the whole; but that such inconsistencies infringe no rule of constitutional law. So also in Hawley v. Malden, 232 U. S. 1, 34 Sup. Ct. 201, 58 L. Ed. —. Mr. Judson, in his work on Taxation, points out that the only relief lies in interstate comity. See also In re Burr's Estate, 16 Misc. 89, 38 N. Y. Supp. 811, and an article by Simeon E. Baldwin in 14 Yale L. J. 134.

Land subject to a mortgage may be taxed for its full value without deduction of the mortgage debt from the valuation either of the land or of the owner's personal property; Paddell v. New York, 211 U. S. 446, 29 Sup. Ct. 139, 53 L. Ed. 275, 15 Ann. Cas. 187, where it is said that long settled habits of a community play an important part in determining questions of constitutional law, and the fact that a method of taxation was enforced for many years before the adoption of the 14th amendment is a reason for not considering that it was overthrown thereby.

Taxing both the property and stock of a corporation is held to be double taxation; Loftin v. Bank, 85 Ind. 341; People v. Com'rs of Assessments, 69 N. Y. 91; but see Macon v. Bank, 59 Ga. 648, and infra; so is taxing a bicycle specially and also as a pleasure vehicle; Chicago v. Collins, 175 Ill. 445, 51 N. E. 907, 49 L. R. A. (N. S.) 408, 67 Am. St. Rep. 224.

In assessing a succession tax upon "property within the jurisdiction," a mortgage to a citizen upon real estate of a nonresident should be deducted; McCurdy v. McCurdy, 197 Mass. 248, 83 N. E. 881, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 329, 14 Ann. Cas. 859; so in Matter of Skinner's Estate, 106 App. Div. 217, 94 N. Y. Supp. 144.

Double taxation is not favored in the law and will not be presumed; State v. R. Co., 215 Mo. 479, 114 S. W. 956; People v. Coleman, 135 N. Y. 231, 31 N. E. 1022; though the legislature may constitutionally impose it; id.; the same property cannot be subjected to a double tax, payable either directly or indirectly by the same person; In re Opinion of the Justices, 76 N. H. 588, 79 Atl. 31. But it has been said, on the contrary, that in the absence of any constitutional provision the power to tax is an inherent right of the sovereign and is limited only by its necessities; Alderman v. Wells, 85 S. C. 507, 67 S. E. 781, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 864, 21 Ann. Cas. 193.

The assessment of personal property permanently located in a state, but belonging to a foreign corporation, is not double taxation though the shares of stock belonging to a resident have also been taxed; Wilkins Co. v. Baltimore City, 103 Md. 293, 63 Atl. 562, 7 Ann. Cas. 1192; nor is it such when property is held by different titles and both the creditor and the debtor are taxed, the one on his security and the other on his property; Myers v. Richmond, 110 Va. 605, 66 S. E. 826.

The taxation of real property and of the rents thereof as income is not double taxation; In re Income Tax Cases, 148 Wis. 456, 134 N. W. 673, 135 N. W. 164; nor is a tax on gross earnings of a corporation and on its franchises in connection with its tangible property; Lincoln T. Co. v. Lincoln, 84 Neb. 327, 121 N. W. 435; nor a tax on the property of a corporation and an excise tax on its right to do business; Ohio R. & W. R. Co. v. Dittey, 203 Fed. 537; nor a tax on a stockholder and also on corporate real property; Appeal of Bulkeley, 77 Conn. 45, 58 Atl. 8; Illinois N. Bk. v. Kinsella, 201 Ill. 31, 66 N. E. 338; contra, as to taxing the property of a corporation and its shares; Dallas County v. Ins. Co., 97 Ark. 254, 133 S. W. 1113; Hunt v. Allen Co., 82 Kan. 824, 109 Pac. 106; East Livermore v. Banking Co., 103 Me. 418, 69 Atl. 306, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 952, 13 Ann. Cas. 631; Tennessee v. Whitworth, 117 U. S. 139, 6 Sup. Ct. 649, 29 L. Ed. 833; First N. Bk. v. Douglas Co., 124 Wis. 15, 102 N. W. 315, 4 Ann. Cas. 34; Stroh v. Detroit, 131 Mich. 109, 90 N. W. 1029.

Where the right of way of a railroad was taxed, it was held that no further tax could be levied in respect thereof; People v. Ferry Co., 257 Ill. 452, 100 N. E. 956.

The assessment of an insurance company on its capital stock, surplus, contingent reserve, gross premiums and tangible property is double taxation; Bankers' L. Ins. Co. v. Lancaster Co., 89 Neb. 469, 131 N. W. 1034. A resident of a state may be taxed on his stock in a foreign corporation, though it pays taxes in its home state; State v. Nelson, 107 Minn. 319, 119 N. W. 1058.

Goods shipped to a state and there otherwise taxable are not exempt because they had been taxed at the seller's domicile; Spaulding v. Adams Co., 140 Pac. 367.

Double taxation was held to be illegal in the absence of special legislative authority therefor; Lewiston W. & P. Co. v. Asotin Co., 24 Wash. 371, 64 Pac. 544. A tax which would amount to double taxation was held void in Detroit Citizens' St. R. Co. v. Common Council, 125 Mich. 673, 85 N. W. 96, 86 N. W. 809, 84 Am. St. Rep. 589; and in People v. Coleman, 135 N. Y. 231, 31 N. E. 1022; the court said it would be "against public policy, the purposes of the laws and natural justice."

Generally, property in order to be subject to taxation must be within the jurisdiction of the taxing power; Buck v. Beach, 206 U. S. 392, 27 Sup. Ct. 712, 51 L. Ed. 1106, 11 Ann. Cas. 732. Presumptively all property within a state is subject to its taxing power; New York v. Tax Com'rs, 199 U. S. 1, 25 Sup. Ct. 705, 50 L. Ed. 65, 4 Ann. Cas. 381.

The power of taxation is exercised upon the assumption of an equivalent rendered to the tax payer in the protection of his person and property, &c. If the taxing power be not in a position to render those services or to benefit the person or property, and such property be wholly within the taxing power of another state, the taxation of such property within the domicile of the owner partakes rather of the nature of an extortion than a tax, and is beyond the power of the legislature; Union Transit Co. v. Kentucky, 199 U. S. 202, 26 Sup. Ct. 36, 50 L. Ed. 150, 4 Ann. Cas. 493.

A state cannot tax tangible property permanently outside of the state and having no situs within the state; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Kansas, 216 U. S. 1, 30 Sup. Ct. 190, 54 L. Ed. 355; and it cannot attain the same end by taxing the enhanced value of the capital stock of a corporation which arises from the value of property beyond its jurisdiction. This would be taxing property without due process of law; Delaware L. & W. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 198 U. S. 341, 25 Sup. Ct. 669, 49 L. Ed. 1077.

It is essential to the validity of a tax that the property shall be within the territorial jurisdiction of the taxing power. Not only is the operation of state laws limited to persons and property within the boundaries of the state, but property which is wholly and exclusively within the jurisdiction of another state receives none of the protection for which the tax is supposed to be the compensation; Union Transit Co. v. Kentucky, 199 U. S. 194, 26 Sup. Ct. 36, 50 L. Ed. 150, 4 Ann. Cas. 493, where it was said that the court knew of no case where a legislature has assumed to impose a tax upon land within the jurisdiction of a foreign state, and that the argument against the taxability of land applies with equal cogency to tangible personal property beyond the jurisdiction. It is not only beyond the sovereignty of the taxing state, but does not and cannot receive protection under its laws.

The rule that the power of a state to impose taxes is limited to property within its territory does not apply in the same degree to federal legislation, since the underlying principle on which such rule is based is that taxes are the consideration for protection afforded, and the federal government has power to afford protection to its citizens, though they may be domiciled and the property located in a foreign country; U. S. v. Billings, 190 Fed. 359.

In regard to tangible property the old rule was mobilia sequuntur personam. For the purposes of taxation, however, it has been held that personal property may be separated from its owner and taxed, even if it is not his own domicile and he is not a citizen of the state which imposes the tax. The same rule applies to intangible property; Buck v. Beach, 206 U. S. 392, 27 Sup. Ct. 712, 51 L. Ed. 1106, 11 Ann. Cas. 732. Intangible property in the nature of a debt may be regarded, for the purposes of taxation, as situated at the domicile of the creditor; id. In In re Whiting's Estate, 150 N. Y. 27, 44 N. E. 715, 34 L. R. A. 232, 55 Am. St. Rep. 640, it was said that this rule or maxim had been repealed.

There is an obvious distinction between tangible and intangible property in the fact that the latter is held secretly, and there is no method by which its existence or ownership can be ascertained in the state of its situs, except, perhaps, in the case of mortgages and shares of stock. So, if the owner be discovered, there is no way by which he can be reached by process in a state other than that of his domicile. In this class of cases the tendency of modern authorities is to apply the maxim mobilia sequuntur personam, and to hold that the property may be taxed at the domicile of the owner as the real situs of the debt, and also more particularly in the case of mortgages, in the state where the property is; Tappan v. Bank, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 490, 22 L. Ed. 189; Kirtland v. Hotchkiss, 100 U. S. 491, 25 L. Ed. 558; Sturges v. Carter, 114 U. S. 511, 5 Sup. Ct. 1014, 29 L. Ed. 240; Kidd v. Alabama, 188 U. S. 730, 23 Sup. Ct. 401, 47 L. Ed. 669. If this occasionally results in double taxation, it more frequently happens that this class of property escapes altogether; Union Transit Co. v. Kentucky, 199 U. S. 194, 26 Sup. Ct. 36, 50 L. Ed. 150, 4 Ann. Cas. 493.

State taxation of credits arising out of loans made in the regular course of business by the local agent of a foreign insurance company to its policy holders is not forbidden by the fourteenth amendment, where the loans were negotiated, the notes signed, the security taken, the interest collected, and the debts paid within the state, because the promissory notes which are the evidences of such credits are kept in the home office at all times when not needed in the state; Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. New Orleans, 205 U. S. 395, 27 Sup. Ct. 499, 51 L. Ed. 853; affirming 115 La. 698, 39 South. 846, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1240, 116 Am. St. Rep. 179.

The arguments in favor of the taxation of intangible property at the domicile of the owner have no application to tangible property. The fact that such property is visible, easily found, and difficult to conceal, and the tax readily collectible, is so cogent an argument for its taxation at its situs that of late there is a general consensus of opinion that it is taxable in the state where it is permanently located and employed, and where it receives its entire protection, irrespective of the domicile of the owner; Brown v. Houston, 114 U. S. 622, 5 Sup. Ct. 1091, 29 L. Ed. 257; Coe v. Errol, 116 U. S. 517, 6 Sup. Ct. 475, 29 L. Ed. 715; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Attorney General, 125 U. S. 530, 8 Sup. Ct. 961, 31 L. Ed. 790; Pittsburg & S. Coal Co. v. Bates, 156 U. S. 577, 15 Sup. Ct. 415, 39 L. Ed. 538; Old Dominion S. S. Co. v. Virginia, 198 U. S. 299, 25 Sup. Ct. 686, 49 L. Ed. 1059, 3 Ann. Cas. 1100.

In Buck v. Beach, 206 U. S. 392, 27 Sup. Ct. 712, 51 L. Ed. 1106, 11 Ann. Cas. 732, where neither the person assessed nor the debtor was a resident of, or present in, the taxing state, and wherein no business was done by the owner of the notes or his agent relating in any way to the capital evidenced by the notes assessed for taxation, it was held that the mere presence of evidences of debt could not amount to the presence of property within the state, though such notes had been sent to an agent in Indiana for the express purpose of evading taxation in Ohio. On the ground that the assessment was made upon property which was never within the jurisdiction of Indiana, the tax was held to be a taking without due process of law (Mr. Justice Day dissenting).

It is undoubtedly true that by the generally acknowledged principles of public law, personal chattels follow the person of the owner, and that, upon his death, they are to be distributed according to the law of his domicile, and, in general, any transfer of chattels good by the law of his own domicile will be good elsewhere. But this rule is a legal fiction, adopted from considerations of general convenience and policy, for the benefit of commerce and to enable persons to dispose of property at their decease, agreeably to their wishes, without their being embarrassed by their want of knowledge in relation to the laws of the country where the same is situated. But even this doctrine is to be received and understood with this limitation, that there is no positive law of the country where the property is in fact which contravenes the law of his domicile; for, if there is, the law of the owner's domicile must yield to the law of the state where the property is in fact situated; Catlin v. Hull, 21 Vt. 152, cited and followed in New Orleans v. Stempel, 175 U. S. 309, 20 Sup. Ct. 110, 44 L. Ed. 174.

The state of origin remains the situs of personal property, though it occasionally is sent to foreign parts; a state may tax its own corporation for all its property in the state during the year, even if every item should be taken into another state for a year and then brought back (here it did not appear that any specific cars or any average of cars were so continuously in another state as to be taxable there); New York v. Miller, 202 U. S. 584, 26 Sup. Ct. 714, 50 L. Ed. 1155.

Tangible personal property situate within a state may be taxed there without regard to the residence of the owner; People v. Ogdensburgh, 48 N. Y. 390; Maltby v. R. Co., 52 Pa. 140; and the real estate of a non-resident may be taxed where it is situated; Witherspoon v. Duncan, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 210, 18 L. Ed. 339; Turner v. Burlington, 16 Mass. 208.

It is the general rule to assess personalty to the owner where he has his domicile; Barnes v. Woodbury, 17 Nev. 383, 30 Pac. 1068; and sometimes, wherever it may be located in the state, either to the owner, his agent, or person having charge of it, whether the owner is a resident or not; Shriver v. Pittsburg, 66 Pa. 446; Boardman v. Tompkins Co., 85 N. Y. 359; and this rule is sometimes applicable to choses in action; State v. Howard Co. Court, 69 Mo. 454; see infra; vessels are usually assessed at the port where registered; People v. New York County, 58 N. Y. 242; ferryboats, where owned; Mobile v. Baldwin, 57 Ala. 62, 29 Am. Rep. 712; property in a partnership, usually where the business is carried on; Fairbanks v. Kittredge, 24 Vt. 9; and where one carries on a business at a place other than his domicile, it is held to be proper to assess the property to one in charge of the business; Danville B. & T. Co. v. Parks, 88 Ill. 170. Personalty in the hands of a trustee is assessed to him at his domicile; State v. Matthews, 10 Ohio St. 431; but sometimes to the beneficiary, if a resident of the state; Davis v. Macy, 124 Mass. 193; and if the fund is in charge of a court, in the jurisdiction in which it is controlled; State v. Jones, 39 N. J. L. 653. The personalty of a decedent is sometimes assessed to the estate at the place of situs, if the decedent was a non-resident, or at his last domicile, if a resident; McGregor's Ex'rs v. Vanel, 24 Ia. 436; and sometimes to the personal representative at his domicile; State v. Jones, 39 N. J. L. 650; and continues to be so assessed until distributed; Herrick v. Big Rapids, 53 Mich. 554, 19 N. W. 182.

Movables brought into a taxing district after the beginning of the tax year are assessable; and so when brought from one district to another, if not previously, for that year, assessed in the former district; Hammond L. Co. v. Smart, 129 La. 945, 57 South. 277, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 856; contra, Wangler Bros. v. Black Hawk Co., 56 Ia. 384, 9 N. W. 314; Johnson v. Lyon, 106 Ill. 64; see note in 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 856.

The personality of persons under guardianship is sometimes assessed where the ward has his domicile; West Chester School Dist. v. Darlington, 38 Pa. 157; or to the guardian; Louisville v. Sherley, 80 Ky. 71; and this would probably be the rule if the guardian, living in the state, had possession of the property, and the ward were a non-resident; West Chester School Dist. v. Darlington, 38 Pa. 157.

The state may give stock, held by individuals, any situs for the purpose of taxation; American Coal Co. v. Allegany County, 59 Md. 185; and it may provide that the shares of stockholders shall be assessed at the place of corporate business and the tax paid by the corporation for its members; Baltimore v. Ry. Co., 57 Md. 31.

Bank bills and municipal bonds are subject to taxation where found; and so of notes and mortgages; New Orleans v. Stempel, 175 U. S. 309, 20 Sup. Ct. 110, 44 L. Ed. 174.

As to foreign-held bonds, "the power of taxation of a state is limited to persons, property, and business within her jurisdiction; all taxation must relate to one of these subjects." "Bonds issued by a railroad company are property in the hands of the holders, and when held by non-residents of the state in which the company was incorporated, they are property beyond the jurisdiction of the state." Cleveland, P. & A. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 300, 21 L. Ed. 179.

Where an act directs a corporation to retain a percentage of interest due on its indebtedness and to pay it to the state, it is a tax on the bondholder; Bell's Gap R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 134 U. S. 232, 10 Sup. Ct. 533, 33 L. Ed. 892; an act which directs employers of aliens to retain a certain sum from their daily wages and pay it to the state is a tax on the alien and void; Fraser v. McConway & Co., 82 Fed. 257.

In a line of cases, the supreme court has held that notes, bonds, and mortgages may acquire a situs at the place where they are held; New Orleans v. Stempel, 175 U. S. 309, 20 Sup. Ct. 110, 44 L. Ed. 174; Blackstone v. Miller, 188 U. S. 189, 23 Sup. Ct. 277, 47 L. Ed. 439; Scottish U. & N. Ins. Co. v. Bowland, 196 U. S. 611, 25 Sup. Ct. 345, 49 L. Ed. 619.

Personal property of a citizen and resident of one state, consisting of mortgages in another state, is taxable in the latter state; Bristol v. Washington County, 177 U. S. 133, 20 Sup. Ct. 585, 44 L. Ed. 701. Mortgages on land in a state may be taxed by it to the mortgagees in the county where the land lies, though owned by residents of another state and in their possession; Savings & L. Soc. v. Multnomah County, 169 U. S. 421, 18 Sup. Ct. 392, 42 L. Ed. 803.

Mortgage notes made and payable in Ohio and secured by a mortgage on Ohio property, the owner whereof resides in New York, are not taxable in Indiana where they are for safe keeping; Buck v. Beach, 206 U. S. 392, 27 Sup. Ct. 712, 51 L. Ed. 1106, 11 Ann. Cas. 732. This case is distinguished in Wheeler v. New York, 233 U. S. 434, 440, 34 Sup. Ct. 607, 58 L. Ed. —.

A bank deposit of a non-resident is taxable at the situs of the bank; New Orleans v. Stempel, 175 U. S. 309, 20 Sup. Ct. 110, 44 L. Ed. 174.

A state may tax property in the form of credits evidenced by notes or obligations held within the state, in the hands there of an agent of a foreign corporation carrying on a permanent business there; State Board of Assessors v. Comptor National D'Escompte de Paris, 191 U. S. 388, 24 Sup. Ct. 109, 48 L. Ed. 232.

Bonds deposited by a foreign insurance company with a state insurance commissioner, may be taxed by the state; Scottish U. & N. Ins. Co. v. Bowland, 196 U. S. 611, 25 Sup. Ct. 345, 49 L. Ed. 619.

A tax imposed by a state upon tangible property within its limits, the owner of which is a non-resident, is not a personal charge against the owner, but must be enforced against the property; People v. Chenango Co., 11 N. Y. 563; Dow v. First Parish in Sudbury, 5 Metc. (Mass.) 73; and such personalty cannot be taxed unless it has an actual situs within the state so as to be under the protection of its laws; Augusta v. Dunbar, 50 Ga. 387.

The rule or fiction of law that personal property, more especially choses in action, has no situs away from the domicile of the owner at which it is deemed to be present, originated, according to Savigny, in Rome, and acquired the designation of mobilia personam sequuntur; but its applicability to property was never held to extend beyond Roman territory. Subsequently it became a device of international comity which, it has been declared, was subsequently "adopted from considerations of general convenience and policy and for the benefit of commerce." It was never invented with a view to its being used as a rule to govern and define the application and scope of taxation, nor was it intended to have any other meaning than that, for the purpose of the sale and distribution of property, any act, agreement, or authority which is sufficient in law where the owner resides, shall pass the property in the place where the property is, more especially to facilitate the distribution of decedents' estates by enabling owners to dispose of their property without embarrassment from their ignorance of the laws of the country where it is; David A. Wells in 52 Pop. Sci. Monthly 356.

In dealing with the intangible interest of a stockholder, there is no question of physical situs, and the jurisdiction to tax such interest is not dependent upon the tangible property of the corporation; Hawley v. Malden, 232 U. S. 1, 34 Sup. Ct. 201, 58 L. Ed. —.

In estimating, for taxation, the value of a telegraph company's property in a state, it may be regarded as part of a system, and it may be taxed, although incorporated by Congress, or engaged in interstate commerce; W. U. Tel. Co. v. Missouri, 190 U. S. 412, 23 Sup. Ct. 730, 47 L. Ed. 1116.

A state may tax the average number of cars (refrigerator) used by a railroad within the state, but owned by a foreign corporation, which has no office or place of business within the state, and employed as vehicles of transportation within the state in the interchange of interstate commerce; American Refrigerator Transit Co. v. Hall, 174 U. S. 70, 19 Sup. Ct. 599, 43 L. Ed. 899; refrigerator cars of a Kentucky corporation, used in Utah, may be taxed in Utah; Union Refrigerator Transit Co. v. Lynch, 177 U. S. 149, 20 Sup. Ct. 631, 44 L. Ed. 708. A foreign corporation (a sleeping car company) may be taxed not only on its tangible property in a state, but on the rights, privileges and franchises; Pullman Co. v. Trapp, 186 Fed. 126, 108 C. C. A. 238.

A tax on the property and business of a railroad operated within the state may be estimated prima facie by gross income computed by adding to the income derived from business within the state the proportion of interstate business equal to the proportion between the road over which the business was carried within the state to the total length of the road over which it was carried; Wisconsin & M. R. Co. v. Powers, 191 U. S. 379, 24 Sup. Ct. 107, 48 L. Ed. 229. In Maine v. R. Co., 142 U. S. 217, 12 Sup. Ct. 121, 163, 35 L. Ed. 994, an annual excise tax for the privilege of exercising its franchise was levied upon any one operating a railroad in the state, fixed by percentages varying up to a certain limit, upon the average gross receipts per mile multiplied by the number of miles within the state, when the road extended outside. The tax was upheld. The estimated gross receipts per mile were said to be made a measure of the value of the property per mile. That the effort of the state was to reach that value and not to fasten on the receipts from transportation, as such, was said to be shown by the fact that the scheme of the statute was to establish a system. The buildings of the railroad and its lands and fixtures outside of its right of way were to be taxed and this excise, with the local tax, were to be in lieu of all taxes. The local tax was not expected to include the additional value gained by the property's being part of a going concern. The excise was an attempt to reach that additional value. The two taxes together may be fairly called a commutation tax; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Texas, 210 U. S. 217, 28 Sup. Ct. 638, 52 L. Ed. 1031.

The requirement that a sleeping car company, as a condition of its right to do intrastate business, shall, in the form of a fee, pay to the state a specified per cent. of its authorized capital, is a violation of the constitution of the United States, in that such a single fee, based on all the property, interests, and business of the company, in and out of that state, is, in effect, a tax both on the interstate business of that company and on its property outside of that state, and compels the company, in order that it may do local business in connection with its interstate business, to waive its constitutional exemption from state taxation on its interstate business and on its property outside of the state; Pullman Co. v. Kansas, 216 U. S. 56, 30 Sup. Ct. 232, 54 L. Ed. 378; to the same effect; Ludwig v. Telegraph Co., 216 U. S. 146, 30 Sup. Ct. 280, 54 L. Ed. 423.

Rolling stock continuously used in a state acquires a situs therein for taxation, and even though it is used exclusively in interstate commerce, it may be subjected in the state to an equal property tax; Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Twombly, 29 Fed. 658; Union P. R. Co. v. Peniston, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 5, 21 L. Ed. 787. It is within the legislative power to establish a situs for personal property elsewhere than at the place in which it is found, and rolling stock used continuously in two states may have a situs in each, but can be taxed in each only upon a fair proportion of the value; Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Twombly, 29 Fed. 658. The continuous use in one state necessary for taxation is not prevented by frequent change of cars from one road to another and the fact that the identical cars are not continuously used in one state; id. It has also been held that its situs for the purpose of taxation is the place where the manager or agent would be taxed in contemplation of law; Dubuque v. R. Co., 39 Ia. 56. Rolling stock is taxable only at the home office of the company; Appeal Tax Court v. R. Co., 50 Md. 274.

The valuation of rolling stock may be apportioned by the court for taxation among the counties through which the road runs, with an assignment to each county of a share proportionate to the length of the road therein; Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Alamance, 84 N. C. 504. Rolling stock held under a car trust company is taxable where the car trust association has its place of business; 24 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 626.

The Adams Express Company owned four million dollars of tangible assets in different states. By combining with that its contracts, franchises and privileges, it created a corporate property of sixteen million dollars. Its intangible property is therefore twelve million dollars; this must be considered as being distributed wherever its tangible property is located and its work done, and to be proportionally taxable there; American Refrigerator Transit Co. v. Hall, 174 U. S. 70, 19 Sup. Ct. 599, 43 L. Ed. 899. Pullman cars employed in Pennsylvania are not exempt from taxation there because, while in use, they may pass across the boundary of the state and return; Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Pennsylvania, 141 U. S. 18, 11 Sup. Ct. 876, 35 L. Ed. 613.

An excise tax on foreign corporations, for the right to do business, of one-fiftieth of one per cent. of the par value of its stock (but not to exceed $2,000), is valid; Keystone Watch Case Co. v. Com., 212 Mass. 50, 98 N. E. 1063.

Vessels, though engaged in interstate commerce and employed in such commerce wholly within the limits of a state, are subject to taxation therein, although they may have been registered or enrolled at a port outside its limits; Old Dominion S. S. Co. v. Virginia, 198 U. S. 299, 25 Sup. Ct. 686, 49 L. Ed. 1059, 3 Ann. Cas. 1100; but in Ayer & Lord Tie Co. v. Kentucky, 202 U. S. 409, 26 Sup. Ct. 679, 50 L. Ed. 1082, 6 Ann. Cas. 205, it was held that the general rule as to vessels plying between states and in the coastwise trade, is that the domicile of the owner is the situs of the vessel for taxation, subject to the exception that where such a vessel has acquired an actual situs in a state other than the owner's domicile, it may be taxed there; and this was followed in Southern P. Co. v. Kentucky, 222 U. S. 64, 32 Sup. Ct. 13, 56 L. Ed. 96, where Old Dominion S. S. Co. v. Virginia, 198 U. S. 299, 25 Sup. Ct. 686, 49 L. Ed. 1059, 3 Ann. Cas. 1100, was distinguished, because there the vessels had for years been continuously and exclusively engaged in navigating Virginia waters, which state had thereby acquired jurisdiction. The owner of a vessel cannot arbitrarily select the place in which it shall be taxed; Southern P. Co. v. Kentucky, 222 U. S. 63, 32 Sup. Ct. 13, 56 L. Ed. 96.

A poll or capitation tax is so called because it is a tax on the poll or person merely, without regard to property or other circumstances; The Head-Money Cases, 18 Fed. 135; Gardner v. Hall, 61 N. C. 21. It is used in some states, as Pennsylvania, to establish a qualification for voting. It was abolished in Massachusetts and in Delaware (by the constitution of 1898) and a registration fee adopted in its stead. It is a direct tax within the meaning of the federal constitution; Pacific Ins. Co. v. Soule, 7

Wall. (U. S.) 433, 19 L. Ed. 95; Veazie Bank v. Fenno, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 533, 19 L. Ed. 482; and cannot be laid by the United States except in proportion to population; Springer v. U. S., 102 U. S. 587, 26 L. Ed. 253. The domicile of the taxable is the place of the imposition of the poll tax; State v. Ross, 23 N. J. L. 517.

One person cannot have two domicils for the purpose of taxation; Richards v. Dagget, 4 Mass. 534; nor can one be abandoned until another is acquired; Borland v. Boston, 132 Mass. 89, 42 Am. Rep. 424. See DOMICIL.

There may be a tax upon occupations even if it duplicates taxes; Cooley, Tax. 385. They are usually by way of license, as distinguished from a tax upon the business authorized by the license to be carried on; Home Ins. Co. v. Augusta, 50 Ga. 530.

Such taxes have been laid on bankers, auctioneers, lawyers; Simmons v. State, 12 Mo. 268, 49 Am. Dec. 131; Ould v. Richmond, 23 Grat. (Va.) 464, 14 Am. Rep. 139; clergymen; Miller v. Kirkpatrick, 29 Pa. 226; peddlers, etc. See License Tax Cases, 5 Wall. (U. S.) 462, 18 L. Ed. 497, as to federal license taxes.

A license fee is a charge for the privilege of carrying on a business or occupation and is not the equivalent or in lieu of a property tax; New York v. Tax Com'rs, 199 U. S. 48, 25 Sup. Ct. 705, 50 L. Ed. 65, 4 Ann. Cas. 381. A privilege tax may both regulate the business under the police power, and produce revenue, if authorized by the law of the state; Bradley v. Richmond, 227 U. S. 477, 33 Sup. Ct. 318, 57 L. Ed. 603. Its reasonableness is within the discrimination of the state; In re Ohio Tax Cases, 232 U. S. 576, 34 Sup. Ct. 372, 58 L. Ed. —. A state may classify occupations and impose different taxes upon different occupations; Kehrer v. Stewart, 197 U. S. 60, 25 Sup. Ct. 403, 49 L. Ed. 663. The classification of merchants selling sewing machines at regular places of business and manufacturers selling by traveling salesmen is not unreasonable; such laws will not be set aside as discriminatory if there is any rational basis for the classification; Singer Sewing Mach. Co. v. Brickell, 233 U. S. 304, 34 Sup. Ct. 493, 58 L. Ed. —. So of grading dairies; Birmingham v. Goldstein, 151 Ala. 473, 44 South. 113, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 568, 125 Am. St. Rep. 33; but not of discriminating between oil wagons and other wagons; Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Hot Springs, 85 Ark. 509, 109 S. W. 293, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1035.

While the amount of the license or fee is usually a question for the taxing power, yet the rule is subject to the limitation that the tax should not be a prohibition of any legitimate business; Fiscal Court, Owen Co., etc., v. F. & A. Cox Co., 132 Ky. 738, 117 S. W. 296, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 83; Morton v. Macon, 111 Ga. 162, 36 S. E. 627, 50 L. R. A. 485. A license tax of $800 on private bankers is valid; Bradley & Co. v. Richmond, 110 Va. 521, 66 S. E. 872; and one of $100; Seattle v. Barto, 31 Wash. 141, 71 Pac. 735; and one of $200 on pawnbrokers; Van Baalen v. People, 40 Mich. 258; and one of $100 on the privilege of selling cigars; Gundling v. Chicago, 177 U. S. 188, 20 Sup. Ct. 633, 44 L. Ed. 725.

As to licensing physicians, see State v. Matthews, 81 S. C. 414, 62 S. E. 695, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 735, 128 Am. St. Rep. 919, 16 Ann. Cas. 182.

The federal corporation tax act (August 5, 1909) provided that every corporation for profit and having a capital stock represented by shares and engaged in business in any state should be subject to pay annually a special excise tax with respect to the carrying on or doing business by such corporation equivalent to one per centum upon the entire net income, over and above five thousand dollars, received by it from all sources, exclusive of amounts received by it as dividends upon stock of other corporation subject to the tax. This act was held valid in Flint v. Tracy Co., 220 U. S. 107, 31 Sup. Ct. 342, 55 L. Ed. 389, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1312 (followed in McCoach v. R. Co., 228 U. S. 295, 33 Sup. Ct. 419, 57 L. Ed. 842), as being an impost or excise tax on the doing of business, and not a direct tax.

It was also there held that it complies with the provision for uniformity throughout the United States, that franchises of corporations are not governmental agencies of the state, and that the tax is properly measured by the entire income of the companies subject to it, notwithstanding a part of such income may be derived from non-taxable property.

While the legislature cannot by a declaration change the real nature of a tax it imposes, its declaration is entitled to weight in construing the statute and determining what the actual nature of the tax is; id. It is an excise tax measured by the corporate income; Stratton's Independence v. Howbert, 231 U. S. 399, 34 Sup. Ct. 136, 58 L. Ed. —; imposed upon the doing of business and not upon the franchises or property of the corporation; McCoach v. R. Co., 228 U. S. 295, 33 Sup. Ct. 419, 57 L. Ed. 842. The act was repealed by the tariff act of 1913.

A trust formed in a state for the purpose of purchasing, improving, holding and selling lands, which does not have perpetual succession, but ends with lives in being and twenty years thereafter, is not within the provisions of the corporation tax law; Eliot v. Freeman, 220 U. S. 178, 31 Sup. Ct. 360, 55 L. Ed. 424. See TRUST ESTATES AS BUSINESS COMPANIES.

The subject matter of a succession tax is the devolution of the estate, or the right to become beneficially entitled to the same; Scholey v. Rew, 23 Wall. (U. S.) 349, 23 L.

Ed. 99; Northern T. Co. v. Rayner, 263 Ill. 222, 104 N. E. 1114; it is not a property tax; id. The taxes upon legacies and distributive shares of personal property which were imposed by the war revenue act of June, 1898 were imposed on the transmission or receipt of such inheritances and legacies, and not upon the right of the state to regulate the devolution of property upon death; Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U. S. 41, 20 Sup. Ct. 747, 44 L. Ed. 969, where this tax was held to be a duty or excise, as distinguished from a direct tax.

It was imposed on the particular legacies or distributive shares, and not on the whole personal estate. The rate of the tax was determined by the classifications of legatees and was progressively increased according to the amount of the legacies or shares; id. The opinion contains a historical review of the subject.

The cases upholding the constitutionality of such taxes are said to be based upon two principles: 1. An inheritance tax is not one on property, but one on the succession. 2. The right to take property by devise or descent is a creature of the law and not a natural right—a privilege; and therefore the authority which confers it may impose conditions upon it. From these principles it is deduced that the states may tax the privilege, discriminate between relatives, and between them and strangers, and grant exemptions, and are not precluded from this power by the provisions of state constitutions requiring uniformity and equality of taxation; Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U. S. 41, 20 Sup. Ct. 747, 44 L. Ed. 969; Strode v. Com., 52 Pa. 181; Schoolfield's Ex'r v. Lynchburg, 78 Va. 366; State v. Dalrymple, 70 Md. 294, 17 Atl. 82, 3 L. R. A. 372; State v. Hamlin, 86 Me. 495, 30 Atl. 76, 25 L. R. A. 632, 41 Am. St. Rep. 569; State v. Alston, 94 Tenn. 674, 30 S. W. 750, 28 L. R. A. 178; In re Wilmerding's Estate, 117 Cal. 281, 49 Pac. 181; Minot v. Winthrop, 162 Mass. 113, 38 N. E. 512, 26 L. R. A. 259; Gelsthorpe v. Furnell, 20 Mont. 299, 51 Pac. 267, 39 L. R. A. 170.

Such acts may discriminate between collateral and lineal relatives; Billings v. Illinois, 188 U. S. 97, 23 Sup. Ct. 272, 47 L. Ed. 400; and may tax undistributed estates of persons who died before the enactment; Cahen v. Brewster, 203 U. S. 543, 27 Sup. Ct. 174, 51 L. Ed. 310, 8 Ann. Cas. 215; and a sliding scale is valid; Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U. S. 109, 20 Sup. Ct. 747, 44 L. Ed. 969. But an act taxing only estates over $20,000 was held unequal and void; State v. Ferris, 53 Ohio St. 314, 41 N. E. 579, 30 L. R. A. 218. See an article in 34 Amer. L. Reg. (N. S.) 179, by Luther E. Hewitt.

A state may impose a graduated tax on transfers of personal property by an instrument taking effect on the grantor's death, without violating the equal protection clause; Keeney v. New York, 222 U. S. 525, 32 Sup.

Ct. 105, 56 L. Ed. 299, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1139; an Illinois testator's deposit in a New York bank and his credits there may be subjected by New York to an inheritance tax; Blackstone v. Miller, 188 U. S. 189, 23 Sup. Ct. 277, 47 L. Ed. 439. Inheritance taxes on tangible chattels, both at the domicile of the owner and at their situs, are constitutional; Callahan v. Woodbridge, 171 Mass. 595.

A New Hampshire testator bequeathed stock in a corporation incorporated in Massachusetts and other states; it was held that the value of this stock, for the purpose of a succession tax to be paid in Massachusetts, is limited to the value of the franchise and property in Massachusetts which it specifically represents; Kingsbury v. Chapin, 196 Mass. 533, 82 N. E. 700, 13 Ann. Cas. 738.

The New York inheritance tax act, imposing a transfer tax upon property within the state belonging to non-residents at the time of death, is valid as to promissory notes, the makers of which are non-residents of the state; Wheeler v. New York, 233 U. S. 434, 34 Sup. Ct. 607, 58 L. Ed. —.

In Iowa it was held that a herd of cattle within the state of Missouri, belonging to a resident of Iowa, was not subject to an inheritance tax upon his decease; Weaver's Estate v. State, 110 Ia. 328, 81 N. W. 603.

Where a testator died domiciled in Illinois, leaving property consisting in part of a debt due him in New York and in part of a net sum held on deposit account by a trust company of that state, it was held that, although the whole succession had been taxed in Illinois, the New York tax on the transfer was also valid, and that the fact that two states, dealing each with its own law of succession, both of which have to be invoked by the party claiming rights, have taxed the right which they respectively confer, gives no ground for complaint on constitutional grounds; Blackstone v. Miller, 188 U. S. 189, 23 Sup. Ct. 277, 47 L. Ed. 439.

When land in another state is directed by will to be sold, it is not thereby subjected to succession tax of that other state; In re Shoenberger's Estate, 221 Pa. 112, 70 Atl. 579, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 291, 128 Am. St. Rep. 737.

A provision in a will for the care of testator's grave is not subject to collateral inheritance tax; Morrow v. Durant, 140 Ia. 437, 118 N. W. 781, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 474, 17 Ann. Cas. 850. But where the gift was to a cemetery company to be used for that purpose, it was held subject to the tax; In re Fay's Estate, 62 Misc. 154, 116 N. Y. Supp. 423; Long's Estate, 22 Pa. Super. Ct. 370. See note to 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 474.

A state inheritance tax may be levied on the exercise of a power of appointment as though the estate belonged to the person exercising the power, and, although the power was created prior to the act, it does not deprive the appointee of his property without due process of law; Chanler v. Kelsey, 205

U. S. 466, 27 Sup. Ct. 550, 51 L. Ed. 882.

A state can lay an inheritance tax or transfer tax on United States bonds; Plummer v. Coler, 178 U. S. 115, 20 Sup. Ct. 829, 44 L. Ed. 998; Succession of Levy, 115 La. 377, 39 South. 37, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1180, 5 Ann. Cas. 871. A state may tax its own bonds or those of its municipalities, and this does not impair the obligation of the contract; Orr v. Gilman, 183 U. S. 278, 22 Sup. Ct. 213, 46 L. Ed. 196; though issued tax free; Com. v. Herman, 16 W. N. C. (Pa.) 210.

A state inheritance tax imposed upon a legacy to the United States is not invalid as an attempt to tax the property of the United States, since it is imposed upon the legacy before it reaches the hands of the government; U. S. v. Perkins, 163 U. S. 625, 16 Sup. Ct. 1073, 41 L. Ed. 287. So also In re Harriot's Estate, 145 N. Y. 543, 40 N. E. 246. The United States may levy an inheritance tax on a bequest to a city or state; Snyder v. Bettman, 190 U. S. 249, 23 Sup. Ct. 803, 47 L. Ed. 1035.

On the death of a non-resident intestate, his estate immediately passes to his next of kin, and the right of the state to inheritance tax vests at once; In re Ramsdill's Estate, 190 N. Y. 492, 83 N. E. 584, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 946; but on the death of a testator it is otherwise; see 21 Harv. L. Rev. 435.

No inheritance tax can be collected when a legatee renounces; In re Stone's Estate, 132 Ia. 136, 109 N. W. 455, 10 Ann. Cas. 1033; contra, In re Frank's Estate, 9 Pa. Co. Ct. 662.

For the inheritance tax laws of all the states, see Bancroft, Inheritance Taxes (1911).

The war revenue (1898) stamp duty imposed on sales of corporate stock is in the category of duties, imposts and excises, and is not a direct tax; Thomas v. U. S., 192 U. S. 363, 24 Sup. Ct. 305, 48 L. Ed. 481.

The New York State tax of two cents a share on transfers of stock made within the state does not violate the equal protection clause of the 14th amendment; nor does it deprive non-resident owners of stock transferring, in New York, shares of non-resident corporations, of their property without due process of law; nor does it interfere with interstate commerce; New York v. Reardon, 204 U. S. 152, 27 Sup. Ct. 188, 51 L. Ed. 415, 9 Ann. Cas. 736.

Income Tax. The 16th amendment of the federal constitution, 1913, gave the power to levy a tax on incomes from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several states, and without regard to any census or enumeration. The act of congress of October 3, 1913, imposes a tax of one per cent. per annum upon the entire net income, in excess of $3,000 in case of unmarried persons and of $4,000 in the case of married persons, arising from all sources in the preceding calendar year. The tax is assessed on every citizen having such income, whether residing at home or abroad, and on every person residing in the United States, though not a citizen thereof. The act imposes a like tax upon the net income from all property owned, and every business, etc., carried on in the United States by persons residing elsewhere. In addition to this tax, which is called in the act "the normal income tax," there is also imposed upon the net income of every individual an additional income tax, called in the act "the additional income tax," of one per cent. per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $20,000 and does not exceed $50,000, two per cent. per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $50,000 and does not exceed $75,000, three per cent. per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $75,000 and does not exceed $100,000, four per cent. per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $100,000 and does not exceed $250,000, five per cent. per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $250,000 and does not exceed $500,000, and six per cent. per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $500,000.

The provisions of the act for the ascertainment and assessment of these taxes are too elaborate to permit even a brief statement of them in this place.

Income in the federal constitution and income tax act is used in its common or ordinary meaning, and not in its technical or economic sense; Van Dyke v. Milwaukee, 146 N. W. 812.

Where a tax is within the legitimate authority of the federal government, it may be measured in part by the income from property not in itself taxable. A distinction exists between an attempt to tax property beyond the reach of the taxing power and to measure a legitimate tax by income derived in part at least from the use of such property; Flint v. Stone Tracy Co., 220 U. S. 107, 31 Sup. Ct. 342, 55 L. Ed. 389, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1312.

It has been held in Indiana that life insurance policies are not taxable, as there is no statute regulating it, or any manner of assessing for valuing such policies; State Board of Tax Com'rs v. Holliday, 150 Ind. 216, 49 N. E. 14, 42 L. R. A. 826.

The proceeds of a life policy issued by a New York corporation to a resident of New Jersey, who always kept it in the latter state, is not subject to a New York inheritance tax on "property within the state;" it appeared that at the death of the insured the company had sufficient assets in New Jersey to pay the policy; In re Gordon's Estate, 186 N. Y. 471, 79 N. E. 722, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1089. It is said that the difficulty of imposing general property taxes on life insurance policies does not apply to inheritance taxes; 20 Harv. L. Rev. 423, citing In re Knoedler's Estate, 140 N. Y. 377, 35 N. E. 601.

Patent rights are not taxable; Com. v. Pet- ty, 96 Ky. 452, 29 S. W. 291, 29 L. R. A. 786; Com. v. Mfg. Co., 151 Pa. 265, 24 Atl. 1107, 1111; nor trade-marks; Com. v. Warehouse Co., 132 Ky. 521, 116 S. W. 766, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 30, 136 Am. St. Rep. 186, 18 Ann. Cas. 1156; nor the good will of a newspaper; Hart v. Smith, 159 Ind. 182, 64 N. E. 661, 58 L. R. A. 949, 95 Am. St. Rep. 280.

A state may not tax agencies of the federal government; Farmers' Bank v. Minnesota, 232 U. S. 516, 34 Sup. Ct. 354, 58 L. Ed. — (bonds issued by a municipality of a territory of the United States); or the property of a bank in which United States bonds are included; Home Sav. Bk. v. Des Moines, 205 U. S. 503, 27 Sup. Ct. 571, 51 L. Ed. 901; Farmers' Bank v. Minnesota, 232 U. S. 516, 34 Sup. Ct. 354, 58 L. Ed. —; or the obligations of the United States; Plummer v. Coler, 178 U. S. 115, 20 Sup. Ct. 829, 44 L. Ed. 998; or United States revenue stamps; Palfrey v. Boston, 101 Mass. 329, 3 Am. Rep. 364; or the salary of a federal officer; Dobbins v. Erie Co., 16 Pet. (U. S.) 435, 10 L. Ed. 1022; or the Bank of the United States; McCulloch v. Md., 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 316, 4 L. Ed. 579; but stock in a national bank may be taxed to the owner; note 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 584; or its real estate, but not both; Frederick Co. v. Bank, 48 Md. 117. The Bank of the United States is not a private corporation, but a public one created for national purposes, and therefore beyond the taxing power of a state; Osborn v. Bank, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 738, 6 L. Ed. 204; so is land of the United States; Van Brocklin v. Tennessee, 117 U. S. 155, 6 Sup. Ct. 670, 29 L. Ed. 845; and also where it has sold real estate reserving the legal title till all payments are made and conditions performed; Mint Realty Co. v. Philadelphia, 218 Pa. 104, 66 Atl. 1130, 11 Ann. Cas. 388. (But it is otherwise where all the conditions precedent to a sale thereof have been perfected, but the legal title remains in the United States; McDaniel v. Traylor, 196 U. S. 423, 25 Sup. Ct. 369, 49 L. Ed. 533); so of public lands located under a warrant, but the equitable title has not passed; Sargent v. Herrick, 221 U. S. 404, 31 Sup. Ct. 574, 55 L. Ed. 787. A state cannot tax the franchises of a telegraph company received from the United States to use military and post roads; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Wright, 185 Fed. 250, 107 C. C. A. 356; but see Western U. Tel. Co. v. Trapp, 186 Fed. 114, 108 C. C. A. 226; so also the operations of the Union Pacific Railroad, which was chartered by congress; but its property may be taxed; Union P. R. Co. v. Peniston, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 5, 21 L. Ed. 787. The states have no power to tax franchises conferred by congress without its permission; California v. R. Co., 127 U. S. 1, 8 Sup. Ct. 1073, 32 L. Ed. 150. They may tax liquor in a United States bonded warehouse; Thompson v. Kentucky, 209 U. S. 340, 28 Sup. Ct. 533, 52 L. Ed. 822.

Permanent improvements on lands allotted to Indians in severalty cannot be taxed by a state as personal property; U. S. v. Rickert, 188 U. S. 432, 23 Sup. Ct. 478, 47 L. Ed. 532; proceeds of the sale of allotted lands by Indian heirs of allottees are exempt; U. S. v. Thurston Co., 143 Fed. 287, 74 C. C. A. 425.

A state may not impose a tax which is in any way a burden on interstate commerce; and a tax on telegraphic messages sent out of the state is unconstitutional; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Texas, 105 U. S. 460, 26 L. Ed. 1067; see Leloup v. Port of Mobile, 127 U. S. 640, 8 Sup. Ct. 1383, 32 L. Ed. 311; so is a state tax on freight transported from state to state; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 232, 21 L. Ed. 146; but a state may impose a privilege tax upon corporations engaged in interstate commerce for carrying on that part of their business which is wholly within the taxing state. This rule does not permit the taxing of Pullman cars running through a state, but those operated wholly within a state may be taxed; Allen v. Car Co., 191 U. S. 171, 24 Sup. Ct. 39, 48 L. Ed. 134.

A state may tax personal property employed in interstate or foreign commerce, like other personal property within its jurisdiction; Pullman's P. C. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 141 U. S. 18, 11 Sup. Ct. 876, 35 L. Ed. 613; followed in Old Dominion S. S. Co. v. Virginia, 198 U. S. 305, 25 Sup. Ct. 686, 49 L. Ed. 1059, 3 Ann. Cas. 1100. A state may tax property (here of an unincorporated express company) within a state, although used in interstate commerce, and may measure its value by the gross receipts and impose a tax on such value, if the same is in lieu of all taxes upon the property; U. S. Express Co. v. Minnesota, 223 U. S. 335, 32 Sup. Ct. 211, 56 L. Ed. 459. A statute taxing a telegraph company upon its property within the state, at such a proportion of the whole value of its capital stock as the length of its lines within the state bears to the length of all its lines everywhere, deducting the value of its real estate and machinery subject to local taxation within the state, is constitutional; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Taggart, 163 U. S. 1, 16 Sup. Ct. 1054, 41 L. Ed. 49.

While interstate commerce cannot itself be taxed, the receipts of property or capital employed therein may be taken as the measure of a lawful state tax, and where a foreign corporation carries on a purely local business, the state may impose an excise tax upon it for the privilege of carrying on such business and measure the same by the authorized capital of the corporation; Baltic Min. Co. v. Massachusetts, 231 U. S. 68, 34 Sup. Ct. 15, 58 L. Ed. —, distinguishing Western U. Tel. Co. v. Kansas, 216 U. S. 1, 30 Sup. Ct. 190, 54 L. Ed. 355, and Southern Ry. Co. v. Greene, 216 U. S. 400, 30 Sup. Ct. 287, 54 L. Ed. 536, 17 Ann. Cas. 1247.

An ordinance imposing an annual license fee on poles and wires of telegraph, telephone and electric light companies is not obnoxious to the commerce clause; Western U. Tel. Co. v. New Hope, 187 U. S. 419, 23 Sup. Ct. 204, 47 L. Ed. 240.

While a state may not directly tax imported goods or the right to sell them, or impose license fees on importers for the privilege of selling, so long as the goods remain in the original packages and are unincorporated into the general property, yet when mingled with the other property in the state, such goods are subject to the taxing power of the state; New York v. Wells, 208 U. S. 14, 28 Sup. Ct. 193, 52 L. Ed. 370; Norfolk & W. Ry. Co. v. Sims, 191 U. S. 441, 24 Sup. Ct. 151, 48 L. Ed. 254; American S. & W. Co. v. Speed, 192 U. S. 500, 24 Sup. Ct. 365, 48 L. Ed. 538.

Where a foreign manufacturer has a permanent place of business in this country for the sale of imported articles, although the bulk of the proceeds may be sent abroad, such proceeds as cash in bank and notes receivable, retained here and used in the business, become capital invested in business in the state and are subject to state taxation; New York v. Wells, 208 U. S. 14, 28 Sup. Ct. 193, 52 L. Ed. 370.

Grain was shipped from Western to Eastern points under through bills of lading which allowed warehousing in Chicago for inspection and testing; Illinois taxed the grain in warehouse as personal property and such tax was held constitutional; Bacon v. Illinois, 227 U. S. 504, 33 Sup. Ct. 299, 57 L. Ed. 615.

Where an assessment was made upon the capital stock of a Pennsylvania corporation, and a part of such stock was represented by certain coal, mined in Pennsylvania, but stored in New York and there awaiting sale, it was held that, however temporary the stay of the coal might be in the particular foreign states where it was resting at the time of the appraisement, it was definitely and forever beyond the jurisdiction of Pennsylvania and could not be taxed there, even though it was conceded that a tax on the corporate stock is a tax on the assets of the corporation issuing such stock; Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 198 U. S. 341, 25 Sup. Ct. 669, 49 L. Ed. 1077.

A tax on the seller is a tax on the goods; Kehrer v. Stewart, 197 U. S. 60, 25 Sup. Ct. 403, 49 L. Ed. 663. A state cannot impose a privilege tax on the agent of a packing house as to goods shipped to him from another state merely to distribute to purchasers from his principal; but it can on his domestic business; nor is it void because it is laid on the agent, so that it cannot be apportioned between the two periods of business; id.

No state can compel an individual or corporation to pay for the privilege of engaging in interstate commerce; this does not prevent a state from imposing ordinary property taxes upon property having a situs within its territory and so employed, and the franchise of a corporation so employed is, as a part of its property, subject to state taxation, providing, at least, that it was not derived from the United States. Telegraph companies engaged in interstate commerce are subject to police supervision, and the municipality may, in addition to ordinary property taxation, subject such corporations to reasonable charges for the expenses thereof. Reasonableness will depend on all the circumstances of the case; Atlantic & P. Tel. Co. v. Philadelphia, 190 U. S. 160, 23 Sup. Ct. 817, 47 L. Ed. 995.

There is a presumption that the state legislature intended to tax only that which it had the power to tax, and a state license tax, if void in part, may be sustained so far as it relates to business intrastate; Singer Sewing Machine Co. v. Alabama, 233 U. S. 304, 34 Sup. Ct. 493, 58 L. Ed. —.

A railroad bridge across a navigable river forming the boundary line between two states is not, by reason of being an instrument of interstate commerce, exempt from taxation by either state upon the part within its boundaries; Pittsburgh, C., C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Board of Public Works, 172 U. S. 32, 19 Sup. Ct. 90, 43 L. Ed. 354; so of a bridge over the Ohio river; Henderson B. Co. v. Henderson, 173 U. S. 620, 19 Sup. Ct. 553, 43 L. Ed. 823.

The federal constitution provides that no state shall, without consent of congress, (1) lay any imposts or duties on exports or imports, except what may be necessary for executing its inspection laws. See Woodruff v. Parham, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 123, 19 L. Ed. 382; (2) lay any duties of tonnage. Under this clause a tax on vessels at a certain sum per ton is forbidden; Cannon v. New Orleans, 20 Wall. (U. S.) 577, 22 L. Ed. 417.

The constitution of the United States does not profess in all cases to protect property from unjust and oppressive taxation by the states. That is left to the state constitutions and state laws; New Orleans C. & L. R. Co. v. New Orleans, 143 U. S. 192, 12 Sup. Ct. 406, 36 L. Ed. 121.

The United States cannot tax the salary of a state officer; Collector v. Day, 11 Wall. 113, 20 L. Ed. 122; or the income of a municipal corporation; Pollock v. Trust Co., 157 U. S. 429, 15 Sup. Ct. 673, 39 L. Ed. 759; or bonds issued by a state, or by one of its municipal bodies under its authority, and held by private corporations; Mercantile Bank v. New York, 121 U. S. 138, 162, 7 Sup. Ct. 826, 30 L. Ed. 895; Plummer v. Coler, 178 U. S. 115, 20 Sup. Ct. 829, 44 L. Ed. 998; or impose a stamp tax upon a bond which a state required as a prerequisite to the right to sell liquor; Ambrosini v. U. S., 187 U. S. 1, 23 Sup. Ct. 1, 47 L. Ed. 49. But when South Carolina went into the liquor business, it did so as a private undertaking and was subject to the internal revenue tax thereon; South Carolina v. U. S., 199 U. S. 437, 26 Sup. Ct. 110, 50 L. Ed. 261, 4 Ann. Cas. 737 (White, Peckham and McKenna, JJ., dissenting).

For a letter from Taney, C. J., to Secretary Chase protesting against a tax on the salaries of judges, see 157 U. S. 701.

As to exemptions from taxation: In the absence of any constitutional provision, the right to make exemptions is included in the right to apportion taxes; City of Indianapolis v. Sturdevant, 24 Ind. 391; the federal constitution does not prohibit them; New York v. Tax Com'rs, 199 U. S. 1, 25 Sup. Ct. 705, 50 L. Ed. 65, 4 Ann. Cas. 381.

A contract of exemption from taxation must be clear and unambiguous; City of St. Louis v. Ry. Co., 210 U. S. 266, 28 Sup. Ct. 630, 52 L. Ed. 1054; exemption is never presumed; New York v. Tax Com'rs, 199 U. S. 41, 25 Sup. Ct. 705, 50 L. Ed. 65, 4 Ann. Cas. 381; exemption acts, if doubtful, are construed in favor of the public; Spokane Valley L. & W. Co. v. Kootenai Co., 199 Fed. 481; Commonwealth's Appeal, 127 Pa. 435, 17 Atl. 1094; being in derogation of common right; Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Thomas, 132 U. S. 174, 10 Sup. Ct. 68, 33 L. Ed. 302. The rule that they must be strictly construed against the exemption applies not only to the extent of the legislative grant, but also to the power of the legislature to make it. Berryman v. Board of Trustees, 222 U. S. 334, 32 Sup. Ct. 147, 56 L. Ed. 225. Exemptions are not favored by the courts; People v. Commissioners, 76 N. Y. 64; property exempted from taxation must be of a public nature and for a public purpose. Where the general use is of a public nature the right to exemption is not impaired by the fact that part of the property is used for producing revenue, as in the case of a public library, and statutory exemption is not impaired by the fact that part of a library building is a theatre or hall occasionally let to outside parties; People v. Sayles, 23 Misc. 1, 50 N. Y. Supp. 8.

The legislature of a state may grant to a corporation a perpetual exemption from taxation; Herrick v. Randolph, 13 Vt. 525; Landon v. Litchfield, 11 Conn. 251; O'Donnell v. Bailey, 24 Miss. 386; but privileges which may exempt a corporation from the burdens common to individuals do not necessarily flow from their charter, but must be expressed in it or they do not exist; Marshall, C. J., in Providence Bank v. Billings, 4 Pet. (U. S.) 514, 7 L. Ed. 939.

A state may bind itself by a contract, based upon a consideration, to refrain from exercising the right of taxation in a particular case; Tomlinson v. Branch, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 460, 21 L. Ed. 189; Humphrey v. Pegues, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 244, 21 L. Ed. 326; Atwater v. Woodbridge, 6 Conn. 223, 16 Am. Dec. 46, note. Immunity from taxation is not in itself transferable. It must be considered as a personal privilege not extending beyond the immediate grantee, unless otherwise expressly declared; Pickard v. R. Co., 130 U. S. 637, 9 Sup. Ct. 640, 32 L. Ed. 1051.

A charter of a railway conferring all the powers and privileges conferred by act on another company does not include a right to exemption belonging to such other company; Wright v. Banking Co., 216 U. S. 420, 30 Sup. Ct. 242, 54 L. Ed. 544. A right of exemption belonging to a railroad company does not survive a foreclosure sale at which the state bought in the property; Great Northern R. Co. v. Minnesota, 216 U. S. 206, 30 Sup. Ct. 344, 54 L. Ed. 446.

A distinction between an exemption contained in a special charter, and general encouragement to all persons to engage in a certain class of enterprises, is well settled; the latter is a mere announcement of a policy of the state, and not a contract with a company coming under its provisions; Wisconsin & M. R. Co. v. Powers, 191 U. S. 379, 24 Sup. Ct. 107, 48 L. Ed. 229.

Where the exemption is by contract with the state (as in the Dartmouth College Case, 4 Wheat. [U. S.] 518, 4 L. Ed. 629), it is beyond the power of the state to abrogate. To make such a contract there must be a consideration. If the law be a mere offer of a bounty, it may be withdrawn at any time, notwithstanding the recipients may have incurred expense upon the faith of such offers; Grand Lodge F. & A. M. v. New Orleans, 166 U. S. 143, 17 Sup. Ct. 523, 41 L. Ed. 951. Thus in Welch v. Cook, 97 U. S. 541, an act exempted from general taxation for ten years property that might be employed in the District of Columbia for manufacturing purposes; it was held to be merely a bounty and liable at any time to be withdrawn. So the perpetual exemption in Christ Church v. Philadelphia Co., 24 How. (U. S.) 300, 16 L. Ed. 602, was held revocable at the pleasure of the sovereign. The same test as to what constitutes public purposes should be applied in exempting property from taxation as in levying taxes; 18 Harv. L. Rev. 386.

The exemption of corporate capital does not necessarily include the exemption of shareholders on their stock; New Orleans v. Bank, 167 U. S. 404, 17 Sup. Ct. 905, 42 L. Ed. 202. A grant of a franchise subject to paying a license fee does not, of itself, exempt the property itself from taxation; New York v. Tax Com'rs, 199 U. S. 48, 25 Sup. Ct. 705, 50 L. Ed. 65, 4 Ann. Cas. 381; and the imposition of an occupation tax does not exclude the right to tax a vehicle used therein; Newport v. Fitzer, 131 Ky. 544, 115 S. W. 742, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 279. An exemption, when contrary to the constitution of a state, cannot be obtained in the guise of a contract; Forshaw v. Laynan, 182 Fed. 193, 104 C. C. A. 559.

The state may exempt property from taxation for state purposes that is subject to taxation for municipal purposes; Covington Gas Light Co. v. Covington, 92 Ky. 312, 17 S. W. 808. It has full power to exempt any class of property as it may deem best, according to its views of public policy; Wilkins Co. v. Baltimore, 103 Md. 293, 63 Atl. 562, 7 Ann. Cas. 1192; as stock and securities of building associations; National L. & I. Co. v. Detroit, 136 Mich. 451, 99 N. W. 380.

The legislature may exempt property from taxation in whole, or for all except specified levies on any class of property, unless prohibited by constitutional provisions, so long as it affords to all property equal protection of the laws and makes no unequal or unfair discrimination in taxing different kinds or classes of property; but all property of the same kind and in the same condition, used for the same purposes and afforded equal protection of the law, must be submitted to the same taxation; Pryor v. Bryan, 11 Okl. 357, 66 Pac. 348, affirmed Foster v. Pryor, 189 U. S. 325, 23 Sup. Ct. 549, 47 L. Ed. 835.

The power of exemption seems to imply the power of discrimination, and in tax, as in other matters, classification is within the legislative power, and it may be even to a greater extent. The state is not bound to rigid equality by the equal protection clause of the constitution; classification simply must not be exercised in clear and hostile discrimination between particular classes and persons; Citizens' Telephone Co. v. Fuller, 229 U. S. 322, 33 Sup. Ct. 833, 57 L. Ed. 1206.

Generally public property is exempt from taxation, and this extends to assessments for public improvements; St. Louis v. Brown, 155 Mo. 545, 56 S. W. 298; so of crown lands, [1902] 2 K. B. 73. Public schools generally are exempt, both from taxation and local assessments; Pittsburg v. Subdistrict School, 204 Pa. 635, 54 Atl. 463, 61 L. R. A. 183; Witter v. School Dist., 121 Cal. 350, 53 Pac. 905, 66 Am. St. Rep. 33. But they are not exempt from assessments; Chicago v. Chicago, 207 Ill. 37, 69 N. E. 580.

Lands belonging to a state are exempt; State v. Stevenson, 6 Idaho 367, 55 Pac. 886; but a leasehold interest in lands belonging to a state may be taxed; Carrington v. People, 195 Ill. 484, 63 N. E. 163; Sexton v. Coahoma Co., 86 Miss. 380, 38 South. 636; so a wharf and warehouse on tide lands held under contract of purchase from the state are taxable; Gray's Harbor Co. v. Chehalis County, 23 Wash. 369, 63 Pac. 233.

Public parks are exempt; Herman v. Omaha, 75 Neb. 489, 106 N. W. 593; and city halls and court houses; 1 Cooley, Tax. 263; a building and a stock of liquors, owned by a municipal corporation and operated by it as a dispensary are public property and exempt from taxation; Walden v. Whigham, 120 Ga. 646, 48 S. E. 159; property of a county held for a public use is exempt; Camden Co. v. Collins, 60 N. J. L. 367, 37 Atl. 623, affirmed Collins v. Camden Co., 61 N. J. L. 695, 43 Atl. 1097. The property of a city used in connection with its fire department, and also public parks of the city, are exempt from taxation by the state; City of Owensboro v. Com., 105 Ky. 344, 49 S. W. 320, 44 L. R. A. 202; in the absence of statute, municipal water works and lighting plants are exempt; West Hartford v. Water Com'rs, 44 Conn. 360; Board of County Com'rs v. Wellington, 66 Kan. 590, 72 Pac. 216, 60 L. R. A. 850; Smith v. Nashville, 88 Tenn. 464, 12 S. W. 924, 7 L. R. A. 469.

Property purchased by a municipal corporation for public purposes is not subject to taxation for state purposes; Gachet v. New Orleans, 52 La. Ann. 813, 27 South. 348; Somerville v. Waltham, 170 Mass. 160, 48 N. E. 1092.

Buildings erected on leased premises by a lessee holding under a lease from a town for a fixed term, which requires the lessee to expend a large sum during the first year within the town, "either in the construction of railroads or improvements" on the premises, and stipulates that in default of the payment of rent the town may re-enter and occupy all the improvements thereon, are part of the real estate, and are not assessable against the lessee; In re Long Beach Land Co., 101 App. Div. 159, 91 N. Y. Supp. 503; that the buildings were erected for the lessee's business does not change the rule, nor make them the lessee's property; id.

Dispensaries operated by county or municipal authorities are not exempt from taxation; Sheffield v. Dispensary in Blakely, 111 Ga. 1, 36 S. E. 302; wharf property of a city is not; Commonwealth v. Louisville (Ky.) 47 S. W. 865; or property held by a city as trustee; St. Louis v. Wenneker, 145 Mo. 230, 47 S. W. 105, 68 Am. St. Rep. 561. Where the owner of land held it in trust for a city for park purposes, and prior to the acceptance and improvement thereof received the rents from its use as a ball ground, he was properly charged with state and county taxes thereon; Elliott v. Louisville, 123 Ky. 278, 90 S. W. 990.

Where land is necessary for the franchises of a public corporation, it will not be locally taxed unless the legislative intent is perfectly clear; Philadelphia v. Traction Co., 208 Pa. 159, 57 Atl. 354.

The act of congress of July, 1870, provides for the issue of United States bonds and that they and the interest thereon shall be exempt from taxation. This exemption covers bonds and every incident thereto, including premiums above par which such bonds command in the market; R. I. Hospital Trust Co. v. Armington, 21 R. I. 33, 41 Atl. 570.

Government bonds are not subject to taxation, although the money or property obtained by a pledge of such bonds is not exempt; Hooper v. State, 141 Ala. 111, 37 South. 662; by act of August 13, 1894, United States legal tender notes and coin may be taxed by a state; this includes United States notes commonly called greenbacks, United States treasury notes, and gold and silver certificates; Howard Sav. Inst. v. Newark, 63 N. J. L. 547, 44 Atl. 654.

A railroad right of way is exempt, it paying a tax on gross earnings in return for exemption; Patterson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 99 Minn. 454, 109 N. W. 993; so in Boston v. R. Co., 170 Mass. 95, 49 N. E. 95.

The exemption of charitable and other institutions extends to a common school; Watson v. Cowles, 61 Neb. 216, 85 N. W. 35; a medical college; Omaha Medical College v. Rush, 22 Neb. 449, 35 N. W. 222; a school for boys; Englewood School v. Chamberlain, 55 N. J. L. 292, 26 Atl. 913; a private military school; Montclair Academy v. Bowden, 64 N. J. St. Francis Academy*, 233 Ill. 26, 84 N. E. 55.

Charging tuition at schools does not usually preclude exemption; Nashville v. Ward, 16 Lea (Tenn.) 27; Linton v. Cobb Institute, 117 Ga. 678, 45 S. E. 53; see notes in 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 164, 171; nor does using a school for a residence; Cassiano v. Ursuline Academy, 64 Tex. 673; Yale University v. New Haven, 71 Conn. 316, 42 Atl. 87, 43 L. R. A. 490 (Yale University, where buildings were leased as dormitories). Where the property of colleges is exempt if "occupied by them or their officers for the purposes for which they were incorporated," a building used for a student's dining hall, the president's house, and certain houses leased to professors (Harvard University) are exempt; Harvard College v. Cambridge Assessors, 175 Mass. 145, 55 N. E. 844, 48 L. R. A. 547. Under the same statute, houses leased to professors (Williams College) were held not exempt; Williams College v. Williamstown Assessors, 167 Mass. 505, 46 N. E. 394. In the later of these two cases the houses were used for professorial duties and the statute was more liberally construed. Where a university's land and buildings were exempt, this does not exempt their lessees, who have erected buildings thereon; Jetton v. University of the South, 208 U. S. 489, 28 Sup. Ct. 375, 52 L. Ed. 584. A church and its auxiliary charitable societies, in one of which beneficiaries were required to pay for admission and turn over their property to it, are charitable organizations; Carter v. Whitcomb, 74 N. H. 482, 69 Atl. 779, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 733, and note.

Little Sisters of the Poor*, 29 Ohio St. 201. A corporation without capital stock, the income of which is not divided among its members, organized to provide a home for working girls at moderate cost, is exempt; *Franklin Square House v. A tax may be levied upon the owner of mineral rights in lands while the surface is taxed to the owner of the fee; Downman v. Texas, 231 U. S. 353, 34 Sup. Ct. 62, 58 L. Ed. —.

Lands in a harbor under water, but forming part of the limits of a municipality, are taxable; Leary v. Jersey City, 189 Fed. 419.

The right to lay taxes cannot be delegated by the legislature to any other department of the government; St. Louis v. Clemens, 52 Mo. 133; Hydes v. Joyes, 4 Bush (Ky.) 464, 96 Am. Dec. 311; except that municipal corporations may be authorized to levy local taxes; Cooley, Tax. 62; St. Louis v. Laughlin, 49 Mo. 559; St. Louis v. Bank, 49 Mo. 574; Appeal of Butler, 73 Pa. 448.

The state may undoubtedly require the payment of taxes in kind, that is, in products, or in gold or silver bullion, etc.; Cooley, Tax. 12. See Perry v. Washburn, 20 Cal. 318; Lane Co. v. Oregon, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 71, 19 L. Ed. 101.

The constitutional guaranty which declares that no person shall be deprived of property, etc., except by the judgment of his peers or the law of the land does not necessarily apply to the collection of taxes; Harper v. Elberton, 23 Ga. 566; Cooley, Tax. 37; Miller, Const. 105; taxes have been said to be recoverable, not only without a jury, but without a judge; Harris v. Wood, 6 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 641. Though differing from procedure in courts of justice, the general system of procedure for the levy and collection of taxes established in this country is due process of law; Kelly v. Pittsburgh, 104 U. S. 78, 26 L. Ed. 658.

"It has frequently been held by this court, when asked to review tax proceedings in state courts, that due process of law is afforded litigants if they have an opportunity to question the validity or the amount of an assessment or charge before the amount is determined, or at any subsequent proceedings to enforce its collection, or at any time before final judgment is entered. Walker v. Sauvinet, 92 U. S. 90, 23 L. Ed. 678; Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97, 24 L. Ed. 616; Spencer v. Merchant, 125 U. S. 345, 8 Sup. Ct. 921, 31 L. Ed. 763; Allen v. Georgia, 166 U. S. 138, 17 Sup. Ct. 525, 41 L. Ed. 949; Orr v. Gilman, 183 U. S. 278, 22 Sup. Ct. 213, 46 L. Ed. 196." Gallup v. Schmidt, 183 U. S. 300, 22 Sup. Ct. 162, 46 L. Ed. 207.

The power to tax is vested entirely in the legislative department. No matter how oppressive taxation may be, the judiciary cannot interfere on that account; Veazie Bank v. Fenno, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 533, 19 L. Ed. 482; Daily v. Swope, 47 Miss. 367.

The courts are without authority to avoid an act of congress lawfully exerting the taxing power, though it might appear to be exercised unwisely or oppressively, nor can they inquire into the levying of a tax within its constitutional power; McCray v. U. S., 195 U. S. 27, 24 Sup. Ct. 769, 49 L. Ed. 78, 1 Ann. Cas. 561. Equity can only correct abuses in assessing taxes by invidious assessments when injury has been done; Tacoma R. & P. Co. v. Pierce Co., 193 Fed. 90.

In order to invoke the powers of a court of equity to restrain the collection of illegal taxes, the case must be brought within the well recognized foundations of equitable jurisdiction, and the mere error or excess in valuation, or hardship or injustice of the law, or any grievance which can be remedied by a suit at law, either before or after payment of taxation, will not justify such interposition; State Railroad Tax Cases, 92 U. S. 575, 23 L. Ed. 663; Arkansas B. & L. Ass'n v. Madden, 175 U. S. 269, 20 Sup. Ct. 119, 44 L. Ed. 159; and it must clearly appear not only that the tax is illegal, but that the property owner has no adequate remedy at law, and that there are special circumstances bringing the case under some recognized head of equity jurisdiction; Pittsburgh, C., C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Board of Pub. Works, 172 U. S. 32, 19 Sup. Ct. 90, 43 L. Ed. 354. An apparent exception to this rule has been said to have been established by certain cases, but this exception is only recognized when there is a state statute authorizing an injunction or when inequality of valuation is the result of a statute designed to discriminate injuriously against any particular class of persons or species of property; German Nat. Bank v. Kimball, 103 U. S. 732, 26 L. Ed. 469, where the cases are analyzed.

Equity will restrain the collection of taxes illegally imposed, but there must be some equitable ground for relief besides the illegality of the tax; Allen v. Car Co., 139 U. S. 658, 11 Sup. Ct. 682, 35 L. Ed. 303. Such ground may be liability to irreparable injury or to vexatious litigation; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Cheyenne, 113 U. S. 525, 5 Sup. Ct. 601, 28 L. Ed. 1098. Where there is a statutory remedy, it is exclusive; but if the statute leaves open to judicial inquiry all jurisdictional questions, the decision of an administrative board does not preclude a resort to judicial remedies; Ogden City v. Armstrong, 168 U. S. 239, 18 Sup. Ct. 98, 42 L. Ed. 444. If a remedy is provided, as by a board of equalization, redress there must first be sought; Altschul v. Gittings, 86 Fed. 200.

Equity will not stop an assessing officer from performing his statutory duty for fear he may perform it wrongfully, until an assessment has actually been made; First Nat. Bank v. Albright, 208 U. S. 548, 28 Sup. Ct. 349, 52 L. Ed. 614.

See, as to a remedy in equity, a note in 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 685.

Taxes become a lien on property only by statute; Linn v. O'Neil, 55 N. J. L. 58, 25 Atl. 273; Heine v. Levee Com'rs, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 659, 22 L. Ed. 223.

A state may tax property for previous years, where it has escaped taxation; Jackson Lumber Co. v. McCrimmon, 164 Fed. 759; an act for the assessment and collection of back taxes for several years on property that had escaped taxation was upheld in Gallup v. Schmidt, 183 U. S. 300, 22 Sup. Ct. 162, 46 L. Ed. 207, following the decision in the state court.

Recovery Back of Taxes. It was held in Elliott v. Swartwout, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 156, 9 L. Ed. 373: Under the law as it stood at that time, congress having made no special provision, where a collector charged excessive duties and the party paying them, in order to get possession of the goods, accompanied the payment by a declaration to the collector that he intended to sue him to recover back the amount erroneously paid, and a notice not to pay it over to the treasury, an action could be maintained against the collector for the excessive charge.

Taxes illegally assessed and paid may always be recovered back, if the collector understands from the payor that the taxes are regarded as illegal and that suit will be instituted to compel the refunding of them; Ersine v. Van Arsdale, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 75, 21 L. Ed. 63, a case of internal revenue taxes.

The last two cases were cited and followed in Pacific Steam Whaling Co. v. U. S., 187 U. S. 447, 23 Sup. Ct. 154, 47 L. Ed. 253.

Where a state officer receives money for a tax paid under duress with notice of its illegality, he has no right to it and the name of the state does not protect him from suit; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. O'Connor, 223 U. S. 280, 32 Sup. Ct. 216, 56 L. Ed. 436, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1050.

The grounds of protest need not be set out; Whitford, Bartlett & Co. v. Clarke, 80 Atl. 257; there must be a distinct and definite protest against paying the particular tax, on the ground of its illegality. The form may not be material; Rogers v. Greenbush, 58 Me. 390, 4 Am. Rep. 292; it is enough if the tax collector was notified in writing that the taxes claimed were illegal and void, and that suit would be brought to recover back the amount paid; Shoup v. Willis, 2 Idaho (Hasb.) 120, 6 Pac. 124. The grounds need not be set out in an action to recover back internal revenue taxes; Stewart v. Barnes, 153 U. S. 456, 14 Sup. Ct. 849, 38 L. Ed. 781; Herold v. Kahn, 159 Fed. 608, 86 C. C. A. 598. In respect of custom duties, more formality is required. See a note in 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 476, where the cases are collected.
